There is likewise an awkwardness of expression and words, most carefully to be avoided; such as false English, bad pronunciation, old sayings, and common proverbs; which are so many proofs of having kept bad and low company. For example; if, instead of saying that tastes are different, and that every man has his own peculiar one, you should let off a proverb, and say, That what is one man's meat is another man's poison; or else, Everyone as they like, as the good man said when he kissed his cow; everybody would be persuaded that you had never kept company with anybody above footmen and housemaids.

Attention will do all this; and without attention, nothing is to be done; want of attention, which is really want of thought, is either folly or madness. You should not only have attention to everything, but a quickness of attention, so as to observe, at once, all the people in the room; their motions, their looks, and their words, and yet without staring at them, and seeming to be an observer, this quick and unobserved observation is of infinite advantage in life, and is to be acquired with care; and, on the contrary, what is called absence, which is a thoughtlessness, and want of attention about what is doing, makes a man so like either a fool or a madman, that, for my part, I see no real difference. A fool never has thought; a madman has lost it; and an absent man is, for the time, without it.

Adieu! Direct your next to me, Chez Monsieur Chabert, Banquier, à Paris; and take care I find the improvements I expect, at my return.

STYLE (From Letter CCIII)

I have written to you so often of late upon good breeding, address, les manières liantes,<sup>1</sup> the graces, etc. that I shall confine this letter to another subject, pretty near akin to them, and which, I am sure, you are full as deficient in; I mean, style.

Style is the dress of thoughts; and let them be ever so just, if your style is homely, coarse, and vulgar, they will appear to as much disadvantage, and be as ill received as your person, though ever so well proportioned, would, if dressed in rags, dirt, and tatters. It is not every understanding that can judge of matter; but every ear can and does judge more or less of style; and were I either to speak or write to the public, I should prefer moderate matter, adorned with all the beauties and elegancies of style, to the strongest matter in the world, ill-worded and ill-delivered. Your business is Negotiation abroad, and Oratory in the House of Commons at home. What figure can you make in either case if your style be inelegant, I do not say bad? Imagine yourself writing an office-letter to a Secretary of State, which letter is to be read by the whole Cabinet Council, and very possibly afterwards laid before Parliament; any one barbarism, solecism, or vulgarism in it would, in a very few days, circulate through the whole kingdom to your disgrace and ridicule. For instance; I will suppose you had written the following letter from the Hague; to the Secretary of State at London; and leave you to suppose the consequences of it.

<sup>1</sup> Pleasing manners.

My Lord—I had last night, the honour of your Lordship's letter of the 24th; and will set about doing the orders contained therein; and if so be that I can get that affair done by the next post, I will not fail for to give your Lordship an account of it by next post. I have told the French Minister, as how, that if that affair be not soon concluded, your Lordship would think it all long of him; and that he must have neglected for to have wrote to his Court about it. I must beg leave to put your Lordship in mind, as how, that I am now full three quarters in arrear; and if so be that I do not very soon receive at least one half year, I shall cut a very bad figure; for this here place is very dear. I shall be vastly beholden to your Lordship for that there mark of your favour; and so I rest, or remain, Your, etc.

You will tell me, possibly that this is a caricatura of an illiberal and inelegant style; I will admit it: but I assure you, at the same time, that a despatch with less than half these faults would blow you up forever. It is by no means sufficient to be free from faults in speaking and writing; you must do both correctly and elegantly. In faults of this kind it is not ille optimus qui minimis urgetur;<sup>2</sup> but he is unpardonable that has any at all, because it is his own fault: he need only attend to, observe, and imitate the best authors.

It is a very true saying, that a man must be born a poet, but that he may make himself an orator; and the very first principle of an orator is, to speak his own language, particularly, with the utmost purity and elegance. A man will be forgiven, even great errors, in a foreign language; but in his own even the least slips are justly laid hold of and ridiculed.

<sup>2</sup> He is the best who is the least burdened.

A person of the House of Commons, speaking two years ago upon naval affairs, asserted that we had then the finest navy upon the face of the yearth. This happy mixture of blunder and vulgarism, you may easily imagine, was matter of immediate ridicule; but I can assure you that it continues so still, and will be remembered as long as he lives and speaks. Another, speaking in defence of a gentleman upon whom a censure was moved, happily said that he thought that gentleman was more liable to be thanked and rewarded, than censured. You know, I presume, that liable can never be used in a good sense.

You have with you three or four of the best English authors, Dryden, Atterbury,<sup>3</sup> and Swift; read them with the utmost care, and with a particular care to their language, and they may possibly correct that curious infelicity of diction, which you acquired at Westminster. Mr. Harte<sup>4</sup> excepted, I will admit that you have met with very few English abroad who could improve your style; and with many, I dare say, who speak as ill as yourself, and it may be worse; you must therefore take the more pains, and consult your authors and Mr. Harte the more. I need not tell you how attentive the Romans and Greeks, particularly the Athenians were to this object. It is also a study among the Italians and the French, witness their respective Academies and Dictionaries, for improving and fixing their languages. To our shame be it spoken, it is less attended to here than in any polite country; but that is no reason why you should not attend to it; on the contrary it will distinguish you the more. Cicero says, very truly, that it is glorious to excel other men in that very article, in which men excel brutes, speech.

Constant experience has shown me, that great purity and elegance of style, with a graceful elocution, cover a multitude of faults in either a speaker or a writer. For my own part, I confess (and I believe most people are of my mind) that if a speaker should ungracefully mutter or stammer out to me the sense of an angel, deformed by barbarisms and solecisms, or larded with vulgarisms, he should never speak to me a second time, if I could help it. Gain the heart, or you gain nothing; the eyes and the ears are only the road to the heart. Merit and knowledge will not gain hearts though they will secure them when gained. Pray have that truth ever in your mind. Engage the eyes by your address, air, and motions; soothe the ears by the elegance and harmony of your diction; the heart will certainly follow, and the whole man or woman will as certainly follow the heart. I must repeat it to you over and over again, that with all the knowledge which you may have at present or hereafter acquire, and with all the merit that ever man had, if you have not a graceful address, liberal and engaging manners, a prepossessing air, and a good degree of eloquence in speaking and writing, you will be nobody; but will have the daily mortification of seeing people, with not one-tenth part of your merit or knowledge, get the start of you and disgrace you both in company and in business.

<sup>3</sup> Francis Atterbury (1662–1732), a prominent preacher, and clever writer and controversialist. He was the friend of Pope, Swift, Bolingbroke, and other distinguished men of his time.

<sup>4</sup> Walter Harte (c. 1707–1774), who was tutor to Chesterfield's son. He wrote various poems and essays, and a History of Gustavus Adolphus.

Henry Fielding

1707-1754

PARTRIDGE AT THE PLAY

(From Tom Jones, 1749)

Mr. Jones having spent three hours in reading and kissing the aforesaid letter,<sup>1</sup> and being at last, in a state of good spirits, from the last-mentioned considerations, he agreed to carry an appointment, which he had before made, into execution. This was, to attend Mrs. Miller, and her younger daughter, into the gallery at the playhouse and to admit Mr. Partridge<sup>2</sup> as one of the company. For as Jones had really that taste for humour which many affect, he expected to enjoy much entertainment in the criticisms of Partridge, from whom he expected the simple dictates of nature, unimproved, indeed, but likewise unadulterated, by art.

In the first row then of the first gallery did Mr. Jones, Mrs. Miller, her youngest daughter, and Partridge, take their places. Partridge immediately declared it was the finest place he had ever been in. When the first music was played he said, "It was a wonder how so many fiddlers could play at one time, without putting one another out." While the fellow was lighting the upper candles, he cried out to Mrs. Miller, "Look, look, Madam, the very picture of the man in the end of the common-prayer book before the gunpowder-treason service." Nor could he help observing with a sigh, when all the candles were lighted, "That here were candles enow burnt in one night, to keep an honest poor family for a whole twelve-month."

<sup>1</sup> i. e., a letter from Sophia Western, with whom Tom Jones, the hero of the story, is in love.

<sup>2</sup> A country barber and schoolmaster, who has become the follower and companion of Tom Jones.

As soon as the play, which was Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, began, Partridge was all attention, nor did he break silence till the entrance of the ghost; upon which he asked Jones, "What man was that in the strange dress; something," said he, "like what I have seen in a picture. Sure it is not armour, is it?" Jones answered, "That is the ghost." To which Partridge replied, with a smile, "Persuade me to that, sir, if you can. Though I can't say I ever actually saw a ghost in my life, yet I am certain I should know one if I saw him, better than that comes to. No, no, sir, ghosts don't appear in such dresses as that, neither." In this mistake, which caused much laughter in the neighbourhood of Partridge, he was suffered to continue, till the scene between the ghost and Hamlet, when Partridge gave that credit to Mr. Garrick,<sup>3</sup> which he had denied to Jones, and fell into so violent a trembling, that his knees knocked against each other. Jones asked him what was the matter, and whether he was afraid of the warrior upon the stage? "O la! sir," said he, "I perceive now it is what you told me. I am not afraid of anything; for I know it is but a play. And if it was really a ghost, it could do one no harm at such a distance, and in so much company; and yet if I was frightened, I am not the only person." "Why, who," cries Jones, "dost thou take to be such a coward here besides thyself?" "Nay, you may call me coward, if you will; but if that little man there upon the stage is not frightened, I never saw any man frightened in my life. Ay, ay: go along with you! Ay, to be sure! Who's fool then? Will you? Lud have mercy upon such foolhardiness!—Whatever happens, it is good enough for you.—Follow you? I'd follow the devil as soon. Nay, perhaps it is the devil—for they say he can put on what likeness he pleases.—Oh! here he is again.—No farther! No, you have gone far enough already; farther than I'd have gone for all the king's dominions." Jones offered to speak, but Partridge cried, "Hush, hush! dear sir, don't you hear him?" And during the whole speech of the ghost, he sat with his eyes partly fixed on the ghost and partly on Hamlet, and with his mouth open; the same passions which succeeded each other in Hamlet, succeeding likewise in him.

When the scene was over Jones said, "Why, Partridge, you exceed my expectations. You enjoy the play more than I conceived possible."

<sup>3</sup> David Garrick (1717-79), the friend of Johnson, Reynolds, and Goldsmith, and the greatest English actor of his time. Garrick began his career on the stage in 1741, his Richard III, produced in that year, was immediately successful; he played many and varied parts, and retired from the stage in 1776.

"Nay, sir," answered Partridge, "if you are not afraid of the devil, I can't help it; but to be sure, it is natural to be surprised at such things, thought I know there is nothing in them; not that it was the ghost that surprised me, neither; for I should have known that to be only a man in a strange dress; but when I saw the little man so frightened himself, it was that which took hold of me." "And dost thou imagine then, Partridge," cries Jones, "that he was really frightened?" "Nay, sir," said Partridge, "did not you yourself observe afterwards, when he found it was his own father's spirit, and how he was murdered in the garden, how his fear forsook him by degrees, and he was struck dumb with sorrow as it were, just as I should have been, had it been my own case? But hush! O la! what noise is that? There he is again—Well, to be certain, though I know there is nothing at all in it, I am glad I am not down yonder, where those men are." Then turning his eyes upon Hamlet, "Ay, you may draw your sword; what signifies a sword against the power of the devil?"

During the second act, Partridge made very few remarks. He greatly admired the fineness of the dresses; nor could he help observing upon the king's countenance. "Well," said he, "how people may be deceived by faces? Nulla fides fronti<sup>4</sup> is, I find, a true saying. Who would think, by looking in the king's face, that he had ever committed a murder?" He then enquired after the ghost; but Jones, who intended he should be surprised, gave him no other satisfaction, than "that he might possibly see him again soon, and in a flash of fire."

Partridge sat in fearful expectation of this; and now, when the ghost made his next appearance, Partridge cried out, "There, sir, now; what say you now? is he frightened now, or no? As much frightened as you think me, and, to be sure, nobody can help some fears. I would not be in so bad a condition as What's his name, squire Hamlet, is there, for all the world. Bless me! what's become of the spirit? As I am a living soul, I thought I saw him sink into the earth." "Indeed, you saw right," answered Jones. "Well, well," cried Partridge, "I know it is only a play: and besides, if there was anything in all that, Madam Miller would not laugh so; for as to you, sir, you would not be afraid, I believe, if the devil was here in person. There, there, ay, no wonder you are in such a passion, shake the vile wretch to pieces. If she was my own mother, I would serve her so. To be sure all duty to a mother is forfeited by such wicked doings. Ay, go about your business, I hate the sight of you."

Our critic was now pretty silent till the play, which Hamlet introduces before the king. This he did not at first understand, till Jones explained it to him; but he no sooner entered into the spirit of it, than he began to bless himself that he had never committed murder. Then turning to Mrs. Miller, he asked her, "If she did not imagine the king looked as if he was touched; though he is," said he, "a good actor, and doth all he can to hide it. Well, I would not have so much to answer for as that wicked man there hath, to sit upon a much higher chair than he sits upon. No wonder he run away; for your sake I'll never trust an innocent face again."

The grave digging scene next engaged the attention of Partridge, who expressed much surprise at the number of skulls thrown upon the stage. To which Jones answered, "That it was one of the most famous burial-places about town." "No wonder then," cried Partridge, "that the place is haunted. But I never saw in my life a worse grave-digger. I had a sexton, when I was clerk, that should have dug three graves while he is digging one. The fellow handles a spade as if it was the first time he had ever had one in his hand. Ay, ay, you may sing. You had rather sing than work, I believe." Upon Hamlet's taking up the skull, he cried out, "Well, it is strange to see how fearless some men are: I never could bring myself to touch anything belonging to a dead man, on any account. He seemed frightened enough too, at the ghost, I thought. Nemo omnibus horis sapit.<sup>5</sup>"

Little more worth remembering occurred during the play, at the end of which Jones asked him, "Which of the players he had liked best?" To this he answered with some appearance of indignation at the question, "The king without doubt." "Indeed, Mr. Partridge," says Mrs. Miller, "you are not of the same opinion with the town; for they are all agreed, that Hamlet is acted by the best player who ever was on the stage." "He the best player!" cries Partridge, with a contemptuous sneer, "why, I could act as well as he myself. I am sure if I had seen a ghost, I should have looked in the very same manner, and done just as he did. And then, to be sure, in that scene, as you call it, between him and his mother, where you told me he acted so fine, why, Lord help me, any man, that is, any good man, that had such a mother, would have done just exactly the same. I know you are only joking with me; but indeed, Madam, though I was never at a play in London, yet I have seen acting before in the country; and the king for my money; he speaks all his words distinctly, half as loud again as the other. Anybody may see he is an actor."

<sup>4</sup> Do not trust in the face.

<sup>5</sup> No one is wise at all times.

Thus ended the adventure of the playhouse, where Partridge had afforded great mirth, not only to Jones and Mrs. Miller, but to all who sat within hearing, who were more attentive to what he said, than to anything that 10 passed on the stage.

He durst not go to bed all that night, for fear of the ghost; and for many nights after sweated two or three hours before he went to sleep, with the same apprehensions, and waked 15 several times in great horrors, crying out, "Lord have mercy upon us! There it is."

Samuel Johnson

1709-1784

THE LADY'S MISERY IN A SUMMER RETIREMENT

(The Rambler, No. 124, Saturday, May 25, 1751)

The season of the year is now come, in which the theatres are shut, and the card-tables forsaken; the regions of luxury are for a while 30 unpeopled, and pleasure leads out her votaries to groves and gardens, to still scenes and erratic<sup>1</sup> gratifications. Those who have passed many months in a continual tumult of diversion; who have never opened their eyes in the morning but upon some new appointment; nor slept at night without a dream of dances, music, and good hands, or of soft sighs, and humble supplications; must now retire to distant provinces, where the syrens of flattery 40 are scarcely to be heard, where beauty sparkles without praise or envy, and wit is repeated only by the echo.

As I think it one of the most important duties of social benevolence, to give warning of 45 the approach of calamity, when, by timely prevention, it may be turned aside, or, by preparatory measures, be more easily endured, I cannot feel the increasing warmth, or observe the lengthening days, without considering the condition of my fair readers, who are now preparing to leave all that has so long filled up their hours, all from which they have been accustomed to hope for delight; and who, till 'ashion proclaims the liberty of returning to 55 the seats of mirth and elegance, must endure the rugged 'squire, the sober housewife, the loud huntsman, or the formal parson, the roar of obstreperous jollity, or the dulness of prudential instruction; without any retreat, but to the gloom of solitude, where they will 5 yet find greater inconveniences, and must learn, however unwillingly, to endure themselves.

In winter, the life of the polite and gay may be said to roll on with a strong and rapid current; they float along from pleasure to pleasure, without the trouble of regulating their own motions, and pursue the course of the stream in all the felicity of inattention; content that they find themselves in progression, and careless whether they are going. But the months of summer are a kind of sleeping stagnation, without wind or tide, where they are left to force themselves forward by their own labour, and to direct their passage by 20 their own skill; and where, if they have not some internal principle of activity, they must be stranded upon shallows, or lie torpid in a perpetual calm.

There are, indeed, some to whom this universal dissolution of gay societies affords a 25 welcome opportunity of quitting, without disgrace, the post which they have found themselves unable to maintain; and of seeming to retreat only at the call of nature, from assemblies where, after a short triumph of uncontested superiority, they are overpowered by some new intruder of softer elegance, or sprightlier vivacity. By these, hopeless of victory, and yet ashamed to confess a conquest,<sup>2</sup> the summer is regarded as a release from the fatiguing service of celebrity, a dismission to more certain joys, and a safer empire. They now solace themselves with the influence which they shall obtain, where they have no rival to fear; and with the lustre which they shall effuse, when nothing can be seen of brighter splendour. They imagine, while they are preparing for their journey, the admiration with which the rustics will crowd 40 about them; plan the laws of a new assembly; or contrive to delude provincial ignorance with a fictitious mode. A thousand pleasing expectations swarm in the fancy; and all the approaching weeks are filled with distinctions, honours, and authority.

But others, who have lately entered the world, or have yet had no proofs of its inconstancy and desertion, are cut off, by this cruel interruption, from the enjoyment of their 55 prerogatives, and doomed to lose four months in unactive obscurity. Many complaints do vexation and desire extort from those exiled tyrants of the town, against the unexorable sun, who pursues his course without any regard to love or beauty; and visits either tropic<sup>3</sup> at the stated time, whether shunned or courted, deprecated or implored.

<sup>1</sup> Lat. errare, to wander, then to stray, hence literally, the pleasure of roaming.

<sup>2</sup> Conquest has here a passive sense; ashamed to confess that they have been conquered.

To them who leave the places of public resort in the full bloom of reputation, and withdraw from admiration, courtship, submission, and applause; a rural triumph can give nothing equivalent. The praise of ignorance, and the subjection of weakness, are little regarded by beauties who have been accustomed to more important conquests, and more valuable panegyrics. Nor indeed should the powers which have made havoc in the theatres, or borne down rivalry in courts, be degraded to a mean attack upon the untravelled heir, or ignoble contest with the ruddy milk-maid.

How then must four long months be worn away? Four months, in which there will be no routs,<sup>4</sup> no shews, no ridottos;<sup>5</sup> in which visits must be regulated by the weather, and assemblies will depend upon the moon! The Platonists<sup>6</sup> imagine, that the future punishment of those who have in this life debased their reason by subjection to their senses, and have preferred the gross gratifications of lewdness and luxury, to the pure and sublime felicity of virtue and contemplation, will arise from the predominance and solicitations of the same appetites, in a state which can furnish no means of appeasing them. I cannot but suspect that this month, bright with sun-shine, and fragrant with perfumes; this month, which covers the meadow with verdure, and decks the gardens with all the mixtures of colorific radiance; this month, from which the man of fancy expects new infusions of imagery, and the naturalist new scenes of observation; this month will chain down multitudes to the Platonic penance of desire without enjoyment, and hurry them from the highest satisfactions, which they have yet learned to conceive, into a state of hopeless wishes, and pining recollection, where the eye of vanity will look round for admiration to no purpose, and the hand of avarice shuffle cards in a bower with ineffectual dexterity.

From the tediousness of this melancholy suspension of life, I would willingly preserve those who are exposed to it, only by inexperience; who want not inclination to wisdom or virtue, though they have been dissipated by negligence, or misled by example; and who would gladly find the way to rational happiness, though it should be necessary to struggle with habit, and abandon fashion. To these many arts of spending time might be recommended, which would neither sadden the present hour with weariness, nor the future with repentance.

It would seem impossible to a solitary speculatist,<sup>7</sup> that a human being can want employment. To be born in ignorance with a capacity of knowledge, and to be placed in the midst of a world filled with variety, perpetually pressing upon the senses, and irritating curiosity, is surely a sufficient security against the languishment of inattention. Novelty is indeed necessary to preserve eagerness and alacrity; but art and nature have stores inexhaustible by human intellects; and every moment produces something new to him, who has quickened his faculties by diligent observation.

Some studies, for which the country and the summer afford particular opportunities, I shall perhaps endeavour to recommend in a future essay; but if there be any apprehension<sup>8</sup> not apt to admit unaccustomed ideas, or any attention so stubborn and inflexible, as not easily to comply with new directions, even these obstructions cannot exclude the pleasure of application; for there is a higher and nobler employment, to which all faculties are adapted by him who gave them. The duties of religion, sincerely and regularly performed, will always be sufficient to exalt the meanest, and to exercise the highest understanding. That mind will never be vacant, which is frequently recalled, by stated duties, to meditations on eternal interests; nor can any hour be long, which is spent in obtaining some new qualification for celestial happiness.

LETTER TO LORD CHESTERFIELD<sup>1</sup>

"My Lord,

"February 7, 1755.

"I have been lately informed, by the proprietor of the World, that two papers, in which my Dictionary is recommended to the public,

<sup>1</sup> A philosopher, a theorizer; almost obs.

<sup>2</sup> I. e., any whose apprehension is not apt, etc.

<sup>3</sup> Johnson began his Dictionary in 1747, and did not complete and publish it until 1755. The preparation of so large a book was expensive as well as laborious, and Johnson made some effort to secure the patronage of Lord Chesterfield for his important undertaking. Johnson's overtures were rejected in a manner that, to his sturdy and independent temper, seemed insulting. Shortly before the publication of the Dictionary, Chesterfield wrote two notices of the forthcoming book, whereupon Johnson addressed him in the famous letter, which has been called The Declaration of Independence for Authors v. Chesterfield, p. 379, n. 1.

<sup>4</sup> Noisy entertainments.

<sup>5</sup> Dancing parties: an Italian word.

<sup>6</sup> For the Platonic doctrine of future rewards and punishments see Jowett's translation of the Phaedo, near the close, § 131. Cf. also the close of the Republic. Milton's Comus, lines 461-475, and the Spectator, No. 90.

were written by your Lordship. To be so distinguished, is an honour, which, being very little accustomed to favours from the great, I know not well how to receive, or in what terms to acknowledge.

"When, upon some slight encouragement, I first visited your Lordship, I was overpowered, like the rest of mankind, by the enchantment of your address, and could not forbear to wish that I might boast myself Le vainqueur du vainqueur de la terre;—that I might obtain that regard for which I saw the world contending; but I found my attendance so little encouraged, that neither pride nor modesty would suffer me to continue it. When I had once addressed your Lordship in public, I had exhausted all the art of pleasing which a retired and uncourtly scholar can possess. I had done all that I could; and no man is well pleased to have his all neglected, be it ever so little.

"Seven years, my Lord, have now past, since I waited in your outward rooms, or was repulsed from your door; during which time I have been pushing on my work through difficulties, of which it is useless to complain, and have brought it, at last, to the verge of publication, without one act of assistance, one word of encouragement, or one smile of favour. Such treatment I did not expect, for I never had a Patron before.

"The shepherd in Virgil grew at last acquainted with Love, and found him a native of the rocks.

"Is not a Patron, my Lord, one who looks with unconcern on a man struggling for life in the water, and, when he has reached ground, encumbers him with help? The notice which you have been pleased to take of my labours, had it been early, had been kind, but it has been delayed till I am indifferent, and cannot enjoy it; till I am solitary, and cannot impart it; till I am known, and do not want it. I hope it is no very cynical asperity not to confess obligations where no benefit has been received, or to be unwilling that the public should consider me as owing that to a Patron, which Providence has enabled me to do for myself.

"Having carried on my work thus far with so little obligation to any favourer of learning, I shall not be disappointed though I should conclude it, if less be possible, with less; for I have been long wakened from that dream of hope, in which I once boasted myself with much exultation, my Lord,

"Your Lordship's most humble

"Most obedient servant,

"SAMUEL JOHNSON."

COLLINS

(From Lives of the Poets, 1779-81)

William Collins was born<sup>1</sup> at Chichester, on the twenty-fifth day of December, about 1720. His father was a hatter of good reputation. He was in 1733, as Dr. Warton<sup>2</sup> has kindly informed me, admitted scholar of Winchester College,<sup>3</sup> where he was educated by Dr. Burton. His English exercises were better than his Latin.

He first courted the notice of the public by some verses to a "Lady weeping," published in "The Gentleman's Magazine."

In 1740, he stood first in the list of the scholars to be received in succession at New College, but unhappily there was no vacancy. He became a Commoner<sup>4</sup> of Queen's College, probably with a scanty maintenance; but was, in about half a year, elected a Demy<sup>5</sup> of Magdalen College, where he continued till he had taken a Bachelor's degree, and then suddenly left the University; for what reason I know not that he told.

He now (about 1744) came to London a literary adventurer, with many projects in his head, and very little money in his pocket. He designed many works; but his great fault was irresolution; or the frequent calls of immediate necessity broke his scheme, and suffered him to pursue no settled purpose. A man doubtful of his dinner, or trembling at a creditor, is not much disposed to abstracted meditation, or remote inquiries. He published proposals for a "History Of The Revival Of Learning;" and I have heard him speak with great kindness of Leo the Tenth,<sup>6</sup> and with keen resentment of his tasteless successor. But probably not a page of his history was ever written. He planned several tragedies, but he only planned them. He wrote now and then odes and other poems; and did something, however little.

About this time I fell into his company. His appearance was decent and manly; his knowledge considerable, his views extensive, his conversation elegant, and his disposition

<sup>1</sup> Collins was born Dec. 25th, 1721.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Joseph Warton (1722-1800), was a schoolfellow of Collins at Winchester, and his life-long friend.

<sup>3</sup> Winchester School, or the College of St. Mary Winton, one of the leading English public schools. It was founded towards the end of the 14th century, by William of Wykeham, who was also the founder of New College, Oxford. A certain number of New College scholarships are open to the Winchester students.

<sup>4</sup> Queen's College, Oxford. A Commoner at Oxford is a student who does not depend on the endowment for support, but pays for his own board.

<sup>5</sup> A Demy is the holder of one of certain scholarships at Magdalen (one of the most beautiful of the Oxford colleges); the Demys are so called because their allowance was about half that of a Fellow.

<sup>6</sup> Pope from 1513-21, distinguished for his encouragement of art and letters, when the Renaissance was at its height.

cheerful. By degrees I gained his confidence; and one day was admitted to him when he was immured by a bailiff,<sup>7</sup> that was prowling in the street. On this occasion recourse was had to the booksellers, who, on the credit of a translation of Aristotle's "Poetics," which he engaged to write with a large commentary, advanced as much money as enabled him to escape into the country. He showed me the guineas safe in his hand. Soon afterwards his uncle, Mr. Martin, a lieutenant-colonel, left him about two thousand pounds; a sum which Collins could scarce think exhaustible, and which he did not live to exhaust. The guineas were then repaid, and the translation neglected. 15

But man is not born for happiness. Collins, who, while he studied to live, felt no evil but poverty, no sooner lived to study than his life was assailed by more dreadful calamities, disease, and insanity.

Having formerly written his character,<sup>8</sup> while perhaps it was yet more distinctly impressed upon my memory, I shall insert it here.

"Mr. Collins was a man of extensive literature, and of vigorous faculties. He was acquainted not only with the learned tongues, but with the Italian, French, and Spanish languages. He had employed his mind chiefly on the works of fiction, and subjects of fancy; and, by indulging some peculiar habits of thought, was eminently delighted with those flights of imagination which pass the bounds of nature, and to which the mind is reconciled only by a passive acquiescence in popular traditions. He loved fairies, genii, giants, and 35 monsters; he delighted to rove through the meanders<sup>9</sup> of enchantment, to gaze on the magnificence of golden palaces, to repose by the waterfalls of Elysian gardens.

"This was however the character rather of 40 his inclination than his genius; the grandeur of wildness, and the novelty of extravagance, were always desired by him, but not always attained. Yet, as diligence is never wholly lost, if his efforts sometimes caused harshness and obscurity, they likewise produced in happier moments sublimity and splendour. This idea which he had formed of excellence led him to oriental fictions and allegorical imagery, and perhaps, while he was intent upon description, he did not sufficiently cultivate sentiment. His poems are the productions of a mind not deficient in fire, nor unfurnished with knowledge either of books or life, but somewhat obstructed in its progress by deviation in quest of mistaken beauties.

<sup>7</sup> i. e., for his debts. The "Debtors' Act" in 1869 abolished imprisonment for debt in England.

<sup>8</sup> Johnson's Character of Collins appeared in the Political Calendar, 1763, and was inserted as part of the Life in 1781.

<sup>9</sup> i. e., the mazes, or windings; from the river Meander in Asia Minor, noted for its tortuous course.

"His morals were pure, and his opinions pious; in a long continuance of poverty, and 5 long habits of dissipation, it cannot be expected that any character should be exactly uniform. There is a degree of want by which the freedom of agency is almost destroyed; and long association with fortuitous companions will at last relax the strictness of truth, and abate the fervour of sincerity. That this man, wise and virtuous, as he was, passed always unentangled through the snares of life, it would be prejudice and temerity to affirm; but it may be said that at least he preserved the source of action unpolluted, that his principles were never shaken, that his distinctions of right and wrong were never confounded, and that his faults had nothing of malignity or design, but proceeded from some 20 unexpected pressure, or casual temptation.

"The latter part of his life cannot be remembered but with pity and sadness. He languished some years under that depression of mind which enchains the faculties without destroying them, and leaves reason the knowledge of right without the power of pursuing it. These clouds which he perceived gathering on his intellects,<sup>10</sup> he endeavoured to disperse by travel, and passed into France; but found himself constrained to yield to his malady, and returned. He was for some time confined in a house of lunatics, and afterwards retired to the care of his sister in Chichester, where death, in 1756,<sup>11</sup> came to his relief.

"After his return from France, the writer of this character paid him a visit at Islington, where he was waiting for his sister, whom he had directed to meet him: there was then nothing of disorder discernible in his mind by any but himself; but he had withdrawn from study, and travelled with no other book than an English Testament, such as children carry to the school: when his friend took it into his hand, out of curiosity to see what companion a Man of Letters had chosen, 'I have but one book,' said Collins, 'but that is the best.'"

Such was the fate of Collins, with whom I once delighted to converse, and whom I yet remember with tenderness.

50 He was visited at Chichester, in his last illness, by his learned friends, Dr. Warton and his brother; to whom he spoke with disapprobation of his Oriental Eclogues,<sup>12</sup> as not sufficiently expressive of Asiatic manners, and called them his Irish Eclogues. He showed them at the same time, an ode inscribed to Mr. John Home,<sup>13</sup> on the superstitions of the Highlands; which they thought superior to his other works, but which no search has yet found.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>10</sup> Plural, like "wits." The 18th century writers sometimes used the plural where we use the singular.

<sup>11</sup> Johnson is wrong in the date. Collins died June 12th, 1759.

<sup>12</sup> Published as Persian Eclogues in 1742, and republished as Oriental Eclogues in 1757. Dr. Francis Warton's "brother" was Thomas Warton, author of the History of English Poetry.

His disorder was no alienation of mind, but general laxity and feebleness, a deficiency rather of his vital than his intellectual powers. What he spoke wanted neither judgment nor spirit; but a few minutes exhausted him, so that he was forced to rest upon the couch, till a short cessation restored his powers, and he was again able to talk with his former vigour.

The approaches of this dreadful malady he began to feel soon after his uncle's death; and, with the usual weakness of men so diseased, eagerly snatched that temporary relief with which the table and the bottle flatter and seduce. But his health continually declined, and he grew more and more burthensome to himself.

To what I have formerly said of his writings may be added, that his diction was often harsh, unskillfully laboured, and injudiciously selected. He affected the obsolete when it was not worthy of revival; and he puts his words out of the common order, seeming to think, with some later candidates for fame, that not to write prose is certainly to write poetry. His lines commonly are of slow motion, clogged and impeded with clusters of consonants. As men are often esteemed who cannot be loved, so the poetry of Collins may sometimes extort praise when it gives little pleasure.

Mr. Collins's first<sup>15</sup> production is added here from the "Poetical Calendar."

TO MISS AURELIA C——R, ON HER WEEPING AT HER SISTER'S WEDDING

Cease, fair Aurelia, cease to mourn;
Lament not Hannah's happy state;
You may be happy in your turn,
And seize the treasure you regret.

With Love united Hymen stands,
And softly whispers to your charms,—
"Meet but your lover in my bands, You'll find your sister in his arms."

THE CHARACTER OF POPE

(From the same)

The person of Pope is well known not to have been formed by the nicest model. He has, in his account of the "Little Club,"<sup>1</sup> compared himself to a spider, and by another is described as protuberant behind and before. He is said to have been beautiful in his infancy; but he was of a constitution originally feeble and weak; and, as bodies of a tender frame are easily distorted, his deformity was probably in part the effect of his application. His stature was so low,<sup>2</sup> that, to bring him to a level with common tables, it was necessary to raise his seat. But his face was not displeasing, and his eyes were animated and vivid.

<sup>13</sup> John Home (1722–1808), a Scotch clergyman who was censured by his presbytery for writing plays.

<sup>14</sup> It was first published in 1788, and has since been included in the editions of Collins's poetry.

<sup>15</sup> Published in the Gentleman's Magazine for January, 1739, while Collins was still at school.

By natural deformity, or accidental distortion, his vital functions were so much disordered, that his life was "long disease."<sup>3</sup> His most frequent assailment was the headache, which he used to relieve by inhaling the steam of coffee, which he very frequently required.

Most of what can be told concerning his petty peculiarities was communicated by a female domestic of the Earl of Oxford,<sup>4</sup> who knew him perhaps after the middle of life. He was then so weak as to stand in perpetual need of female attendance; extremely sensible of cold, so that he wore a kind of fur doublet,<sup>5</sup> under a shirt of very coarse warm linen with fine sleeves. When he rose, he was invested in bodice made of stiff canvas, being scarcely able to hold himself erect till they were laced, and he then put on a flannel waistcoat. One side was contracted. His legs were so slender, that he enlarged their bulk with three pair of stockings, which were drawn on and off by the maid; for he was not able to dress or undress himself, and neither went to bed nor rose without help. His weakness made it very difficult for him to be clean.

His hair had fallen almost all away; and he used to dine sometimes with Lord Oxford, privately, in a velvet cap. His dress of ceremony was black, with a tie-wig,<sup>6</sup> and a little sword.

The indulgence and accommodation which his sickness required, had taught him all the unpleasing and unsocial qualities of a valetudinarian man. He expected that every thing should give way to his ease or humour; as a child, whose parent will not hear her cry, has an unresisted dominion in the nursery.

<sup>1</sup> A club of men under five feet in height, described by Pope in the Guardian, Nos. 91 and 92.

<sup>2</sup> Pope was 4 ft. 6 in. in height.

<sup>3</sup> Pope's own expression (v. p. 305, supra):

"The muse but served to ease some friend, not wife,
To help me through this long disease my life."

Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, 1, 131.

<sup>4</sup> Edward Harley, Second Earl of Oxford, friend, admirer, and correspondent of Pope.

<sup>5</sup> The doublet, originally an outer coat, had become an undergarment in King Charles's time.

<sup>6</sup> A wig that has the hair gathered and tied at the back with a ribbon.

*C'est que l'enfant toujours est homme,
C'est que l'homme est toujours enfant.*<sup>7</sup>

When he wanted to sleep he "nodded in company;" and once slumbered at his own table while the Prince of Wales was talking of poetry.<sup>8</sup>

The reputation which his friendship gave procured him many invitations; but he was a very troublesome inmate. He brought no servant, and had so many wants, that a numerous attendance was scarcely able to supply them. Wherever he was he left no room for another, because, he exacted the attention, and employed the activity, of the whole family. His errands were so frequent and frivolous, that the footmen in time avoided and neglected him; and the Earl of Oxford discharged some of the servants for their resolute refusal of his messages. The maids, when they had neglected their business, alleged that they had been employed by Mr. Pope. One of his constant demands was of coffee in the night, and to the woman that waited on him in his chamber he was very burthensome: but he was careful to recompense her want of sleep; and Lord Oxford's servant declared, that in the house where her business was to answer his call, she would not ask for wages.

He had another fault, easily incident to those who, suffering much pain, think themselves entitled to what pleasures they can snatch. He was too indulgent to his appetite: he loved meat highly seasoned and of strong taste; and, at the intervals of the table, amused himself with biscuits and dry conserves. If he sat down to a variety of dishes, he would oppress his stomach with repletion; and though he seemed angry when a dram was offered him, did not forbear to drink it. His friends, who knew the avenues to his heart, pampered him with presents of luxury, which he did not suffer to stand neglected. The death of great men is not always proportioned to the lustre of their lives. Hannibal, says Juvenal, did not perish by the javelin or the sword; the slaughters of Cannæ were revenged by a ring.<sup>9</sup> The death of Pope was imputed by some of his friends to a silver saucepan, in which it was his delight to heat potted<sup>10</sup> lampreys.<sup>11</sup>

That he loved too well to eat, is certain; but

<sup>7</sup> There is always a man in the infant,
There is always an infant in the man.

<sup>8</sup> This occurred after the accession of George II. in 1727, when Frederick (who died before his father in 1751) was Prince of Wales. He frequently dined at Pope's house.

<sup>9</sup> Hannibal after the Carthaginian campaign became a fugitive in Asia Minor. Fearing arrest and death, he took poison which he always carried with him in a ring. So that it may be said the ring, in causing the death of Hannibal avenged the slaughter of Cannæ.

<sup>10</sup> Preserved.

<sup>11</sup> The lamprey, when full grown resembles an eel, and is considered a delicacy.

that his sensuality shortened his life will not be hastily concluded, when it is remembered that a conformation so irregular lasted six and fifty years, notwithstanding such persevering diligence of study and meditation.

In all his intercourse with mankind, he had great delight in artifice, and endeavoured to attain all his purposes by indirect and unsuspected methods, "He hardly drank tea without a stratagem."<sup>12</sup> If, at the house of friends, he wanted any accommodation, he was not willing to ask for it in plain terms, but would mention it remotely as something convenient; though, when it was procured, he soon made it appear for whose sake it had been recommended. Thus he teased Lord Orrery<sup>13</sup> till he obtained a screen. He practised his arts on such small occasions, that Lady Bolingbroke used to say, in a French phrase, that "he played the politician about cabbages and turnips." His unjustifiable impression of the "Patriot King,"<sup>14</sup> as it can be imputed to no particular motive, must have proceeded from his general habit of secrecy and cunning; he caught an opportunity of a sly trick, and pleased himself with the thought of outwitting Bolingbroke.

In familiar or convivial conversation, it does not appear that he excelled. He may be said to have resembled Dryden, as being not one that was distinguished by vivacity in company. It is remarkable, that so near his time,<sup>15</sup> so much should be known of what he has written, and so little of what he has said: traditional memory retains no sallies of railery, nor sentences of observation; nothing either pointed or solid, either wise or merry. One apothegm only stands upon record. When an objection, raised against his inscription for Shakespeare,<sup>16</sup> was defended by the authority

<sup>12</sup> Attributed to Lady Mary Wortley Montague. V. p. 390, n. 19.

<sup>13</sup> John Boyle, the fifth Earl of Orrery, (1707-62) was the friend of Swift, Pope, and Johnson.

<sup>14</sup> A political essay written by Henry St. John, first Viscount Bolingbroke (1678-1751). "The Patriots" was a name given to a faction of the Whig party in the reigns of George I. and George II. opposed to the rule of Walpole. Bolingbroke, after the failure of the Pretender's cause, had affiliated himself with them, and wrote The Patriot King in defence of their principles. Not deeming it wise at the time to publish the essay broadcast, he entrusted the manuscript to Pope, who was to have a few copies printed for distribution among Bolingbroke's friends, and Pope, according to Johnson, "assured him that no more had been printed than were allowed." When, soon after Pope's death, it was discovered that 1500 copies had been printed and secretly kept by the printer at Pope's request, Bolingbroke's indignation knew no bounds, and he publicly attacked the memory of his former friend.

<sup>15</sup> Pope died 1744. The Lives of the Poets appeared in 1781.

<sup>16</sup> "When Dr. Meade once urged to our author the authority of Patrick, the dictionary-maker, against the latinity of the expression, 'amor publicus,' which he had used in an inscription, he replied that he would allow a dictionary-maker to understand a single word, but not two words put together." Warton.

of "Patrick,"<sup>17</sup> he replied—horresco referens<sup>18</sup>—that "he would allow the publisher of a Dictionary to know the meaning of a single word, but not of two words put together."

He was fretful and easily displeased, and allowed himself to be capriciously resentful. He would sometimes leave Lord Oxford silently, no one could tell why, and was to be courted back by more letters and messages than the footmen were willing to carry. The table was indeed infested by Lady Mary Wortley,<sup>19</sup> who was the friend of Lady Oxford, and who, knowing his peevishness, could by no intreaties be restrained from contradicting him, till their disputes were sharpened to such asperity, that one or the other quitted the house.

He sometimes condescended to be jocular with servants or inferiors; but by no merit, either of others or his own, was he ever so excited to laughter.

Of his domestic character, frugality was a part eminently remarkable. Having determined not to be dependent, he determined not to be in want, and therefore wisely and magnanimously rejected all temptations to expense unsuitable to his fortune. This general care must be universally approved; but it sometimes appeared in petty artifices of parsimony, such as the practice of writing his compositions on the back of letters, as may be seen in the remaining copy of the "Iliad,"<sup>20</sup> by which perhaps in five years five shillings were saved; or in a niggardly reception of his friends, and scantiness of entertainment, as, when he had two guests in his house, he would set at supper a single pint upon the table; and, having himself taken two small glasses, would retire; and say, "Gentlemen, I leave you to your wine." Yet he tells his friends, that "he has a heart for all, a house for all, and whatever they may think, a fortune for all."

He sometimes, however, made a splendid dinner, and is said to have wanted no part of the skill or elegance which such performances require. That this magnificence should be often displayed, that obstinate prudence with which he conducted his affairs would not permit: for his revenue, certain and casual, amounted only to about eight hundred pounds a year, of which however he declares himself able to assign one hundred to charity.

<sup>17</sup> Samuel Patrick (1684–1748), a classical scholar, and editor of Greek and Latin dictionaries.

<sup>18</sup> "I shudder to relate."

<sup>19</sup> Lady Mary Wortley (Montague) 1689–1762. A brilliant member of the literary circle to which Pope belonged. She was a leader in London society, a friend of Queen Caroline, she wrote poetry, and is remembered for her Letters.

<sup>20</sup> Preserved in the British Museum.

Of this fortune, which, as it arose from public approbation, was very honourably obtained, his imagination seems to have been too full; it would be hard to find a man, so well entitled to notice by his wit, that ever delighted so much in talking of his money. In his letters, and in his poems, his garden and his grotto,<sup>21</sup> his quincunx<sup>22</sup> and his vines, or some hints of his opulence, are always to be found. The great topic of his ridicule is poverty; the crimes with which he reproaches his antagonists are their debts, their habitation in the Mint,<sup>23</sup> and their want of a dinner. He seems to be of an opinion not very uncommon in the world, that to want money is to want every thing.

Next to the pleasure of contemplating his possessions, seems to be that of enumerating the men of high rank with whom he was acquainted, and whose notice he loudly proclaims not to have been obtained by any practices of meanness or severity; a boast which was never denied to be true, and to which very few poets have ever aspired. Pope never set genius to sale, he never flattered those whom he did not love, nor praised those whom he did not esteem. Savage<sup>24</sup> however remarked, that he began a little to relax his dignity when he wrote a distich for his "Highness's dog."<sup>25</sup>

His admiration of the great seems to have increased in the advance of life. He passed over peers and statesmen to inscribe his "Iliad" to Congreve,<sup>26</sup> with a magnanimity of which the praise had been complete, had his friend's virtue been equal to his wit. Why he was chosen for so great an honour, it is not now possible to know; there is no trace in literary history of any particular intimacy between them. The name of Congreve appears in the Letters among those of his other friends, but without any observable distinction or consequence.

To his latter works, however, he took care to annex names dignified with titles, but was not very happy in his choice: for, except Lord

<sup>21</sup> The grotto at Twickenham was a tunnel decorated with shells, looking glasses, and minerals, connecting Pope's grounds which lay on either side of the London road.

<sup>22</sup> Groups of five trees (Lat. quincunx) planted in squares, one at each corner, and one in the middle.

<sup>23</sup> A building in Southwark, London, where debtors formerly found shelter, and immunity from arrest.

<sup>24</sup> Richard Savage (1698–1743), a poet who is remembered chiefly through Johnson's Life of Savage.

<sup>25</sup> "I am his Highness dog at Kew, Pray tell me, Sir, whose dog are you?"

<sup>26</sup> Congreve (1670–1792), writer of comedies that reflect the brilliancy, the wit, but also the coarseness and moral callousness of the Augustan age. Macaulay has explained why Pope should have dedicated his Iliad to Congreve. Whigs and Tories had vied in their patronage of the translation, and to avoid offence to either party it was necessary to find some person who was at once eminent and neutral. Congreve united these requisites.

Bathurst,<sup>27</sup> none of his noble friends were such as that a good man would wish to have his intimacy with them known to posterity; he can derive little honour from the notice of Cobham,<sup>28</sup> Burlington,<sup>29</sup> or Bolingbroke.

Of his social qualities, if an estimate be made from his Letters, an opinion too favourable cannot easily be formed; they exhibit a perpetual and unclouded effulgence of general benevolence, and particular fondness. There is nothing but liberality, gratitude, constancy, and tenderness. It has been so long said as to be commonly believed, that the true characters of men may be found in their Letters, and that he who writes to his friend lays his heart open before him. But the truth is, that such were the simple friendships of the Golden Age, and are now the friendships only of children. Very few can boast of hearts which they dare lay open to themselves, and of which, by whatever accident exposed, they do not shun a distinct and continued view; and, certainly, what we hide from ourselves we do not show to our friends. There is, indeed, no transaction which offers stronger temptation to fallacy and sophistication than epistolary intercourse. In the eagerness of conversation the first emotions of the mind often burst out before they are considered; in the tumult of business, interest and passion have their genuine effect; but a friendly Letter is a calm and deliberate performance in the cool of leisure, in the stillness of solitude, and surely no man sits down to depreciate by design his own character.

Friendship has no tendency to secure veracity; for by whom can a man so much wish to be thought better than he is, as by him whose kindness he desires to gain or keep? Even in writing to the world there is less constraint; the author is not confronted with his reader, and takes his chance of approbation among the different dispositions of mankind; but a Letter is addressed to a single mind, of which the prejudices and partialities are known; and must therefore please, if not by favouring them, by forbearing to oppose them.

To charge those favourable representations, which men give of their own minds, with the guilt of hypocritical falsehood, would show more severity than knowledge. The writer commonly believes himself. Almost every man's thoughts, while they are general, are right; and most hearts are pure, while temptation is away. It is easy to awaken generous sentiments in privacy; to despise death when there is no danger; to glow with benevolence when there is nothing to be given. While such ideas are formed they are felt; and self-love does not suspect the gleam of virtue to be the meteor of fancy.

If the letters of Pope are considered merely as compositions, they seem to be premeditated and artificial. It is one thing to write, because there is something which the mind wishes to discharge; and another to solicit the imagination, because ceremony or vanity require something to be written. Pope confesses his early Letters to be vitiated with affectation and ambition: to know whether he disentangled himself from those perverters of epistolary integrity, his book and his life must be set in comparison.

One of his favourite topics is contempt of his own poetry. For this, if it had been real, he would deserve no commendation; and in this he was certainly not sincere, for his high value of himself was sufficiently observed; and of what could he be proud but of his poetry? He writes, he says, when he has "just nothing else to do;" yet Swift complains that he was never at leisure for conversation because he had "always some poetical scheme in his head." It was punctually required that his writing-box should be set upon his bed before he rose; and Lord Oxford's domestic related, that, in the dreadful winter of 1740,<sup>30</sup> she was called from her bed by him four times in one night, to supply him with paper, lest he should lose a thought.

He pretends insensibility to censure and criticism, though it was observed by all who knew him that every pamphlet disturbed his quiet, that his extreme irritability laid him open to perpetual vexation; but he wished to despise his critics, and therefore hoped that he did despise them.

As he happened to live in two reigns<sup>31</sup> when the Court paid little attention to poetry, he nursed in his mind a foolish disesteem of King, and proclaims that "he never sees Courts." Yet a little regard shown him by the Prince of Wales melted his obduracy; and he had not

<sup>27</sup> Allen Bathurst (1682-1775), first Earl Bathurst, a prominent Tory statesman, a friend of Pope and Swift.

<sup>28</sup> Sir Richard Temple, Viscount Cobham (1669-1749), a statesman and soldier, who broke with Walpole and the King as a result of his opposition to the South Sea Company.

<sup>29</sup> Richard Boyle, third Earl of Burlington (1695-1753), celebrated for his cultivation of the Italian style of architecture.

<sup>30</sup> In the Gentleman's Magazine of January 3rd, 1740, we read, "This month the frost, which began the 26th of last, grew more severe than has been known since the memorable winter of 1715-16." "The Thames represented a snowy field." "The rivers Severn, Tyne, the Avon by Bristol, the rivers of Forth, Tay, etc. in Scotland, and the Liffey by Dublin, were all frozen up like the Thames."

<sup>31</sup> The greater part of Pope's literary career was included within the reigns of the first two Georges (1714-27-60). Neither George I, who could not speak English, nor George II, were patrons of literature.

much to say when he was asked by his Royal Highness, "How he could love a Prince while he disliked Kings?"

He very frequently professes contempt of the world, and represents himself as looking on mankind sometimes with gay indifference, as on emmets<sup>32</sup> of a hillock, below his serious attention; and sometimes with gloomy indignation, as on monsters more worthy of hatred than of pity. These were dispositions apparently counterfeited. How could he despise those whom he lived by pleasing, and on whose approbation his esteem of himself was super-structed? Why should he hate those to whose favour he owed his honour and his ease? Of things that terminate in human life, the world is the proper judge; to despise its sentence, if it were possible, is not just; and if it were just, is not possible. Pope was far enough from this unreasonable temper: he was sufficiently a fool to Fame, and his fault was, that he pretended to neglect it. His levity and his sullenness were only in his Letters; he passed through common life sometimes vexed, and sometimes pleased with the natural emotions of common men.

His scorn of the Great is repeated too often to be real; no man thinks much of that which he despises; and as falsehood is always in danger of inconsistency, he makes it his boast at another time that he lives among them.

It is evident that his own importance swells often in his mind. He is afraid of writing, lest the clerks of the Post-office should know his secrets; he has many enemies; he considers himself as surrounded by universal jealousy; "after many deaths, and many dispersions, two or three of us," says he, "may still be brought together, not to plot, but to divert ourselves, and the world too, if it pleases;" and they can live together, and "show what friends wits may be, in spite of all the fools in the world." All this while it was likely that the clerks did not know his hand: he certainly had no more enemies than a public character like his inevitably excites; and with what degree of friendship the wits might live, very few were so much fools as ever to enquire.

Some part of this pretended discontent he learned from Swift, and expresses it, I think, most frequently in his correspondence with him. Swift's resentment was unreasonable, but it was sincere; Pope's was the mere mimicry of his friend, a fictitious part which he began to play before it became him. When he was only twenty-five years old, he related that "a glut of study and retirement had thrown him on the world," and that there was danger lest "a glut of the world should throw him back upon study and retirement." To this Swift answered, with great propriety, that Pope had not yet acted or suffered enough in the world, to have become weary of it. And, indeed, it must have been some very powerful reason that can drive back to solitude him who has once enjoyed the pleasures of society.

In the letters both of Swift and Pope there appears such narrowness of mind, as makes them insensible of any excellence that has not some affinity with their own, and confines their esteem and approbation to so small a number, that whoever should form his opinion of their age from their representation, would suppose them to have lived among ignorance and barbarity, unable to find among their contemporaries either virtue or intelligence, and persecuted by those that could not understand them.

When Pope murmurs at the world, when he professes contempt of fame, when he speaks of riches and poverty, of success and disappointment, with negligent indifference, he certainly does not express his habitual and settled resentments, but either wilfully disguises his own character, or, what is more likely, invests himself with temporary qualities, and sallies out in the colours of the present moment. His hopes and fears, his joys and sorrows, acted strongly upon his mind; and, if he differed from others, it was not by carelessness; he was irritable and resentful; his malignity to Phillips,<sup>33</sup> whom he had first made ridiculous, and then hated for being angry, continued too long. Of his vain desire to make Bentley<sup>34</sup> contemptible, I never heard any adequate reason. He was sometimes wanton in his attacks; and, before Chandos,<sup>35</sup> Lady Wortley, and Hill,<sup>36</sup> was mean in his retreat.

The virtues which seem to have had most of his affection were liberality and fidelity of friendship, in which it does not appear that he was other than he describes himself. His fortune did not suffer his charity to be splendid and conspicuous; but he assisted Dodsley<sup>37</sup> with a hundred pounds, that he might open a shop; and, of the subscription of forty pounds

<sup>32</sup> Ambrose Phillips (1671-1749) a writer of pastorals. He was known as Nabby-Pamby Phillips and Pope retained the name for him as being appropriate to his feeble style of poetry.

<sup>34</sup> Richard Bentley (1662-1742), one of the foremost classical scholars of his time. Pope attacked Bentley in his Satires, but Bentley's scholarship was proof against such attacks.

<sup>35</sup> In his poem on False Taste, Pope had criticised the house, furniture, and gardens of "Timon," generally believed to represent the Duke of Chandos, who had hospitably entertained him.

<sup>36</sup> Aaron Hill (1685-1750) was one of the pigmy authors satirized in The Dunciad.

<sup>37</sup> A publisher whom Pope assisted, being pleased with his poem The Toy Shop.

<sup>32</sup> An older form of ant.

a year that he raised for Savage,<sup>38</sup> twenty were paid by himself. He was accused of loving money; but his love was eagerness to gain, not solicitude to keep it.

In the duties of friendship he was zealous and constant; his early maturity of mind commonly united him with men older than himself, and therefore, without attaining any considerable length of life, he saw many companions of his youth sink into the grave; but it does not appear that he lost a single friend by coldness or by injury;<sup>39</sup> those who loved him once, continued their kindness. His ungrateful mention of Allen in his will, was the effect of his adherence to one whom he had known much longer, and whom he naturally loved with greater fondness.<sup>40</sup> His violation of the trust reposed in him by Bolingbroke could have no motive inconsistent with the warmest affection; he either thought the action so near to indifferent that he forgot it, or so laudable that he expected his friend to approve it. . . .

Integrity of understanding and nicety of discernment were not allotted in a less proportion to Dryden than to Pope. The rectitude of Dryden's mind was sufficiently shown by the dismissal<sup>41</sup> of his poetical prejudices, and the rejection of unnatural thoughts and rugged numbers. But Dryden never deserved to apply all the judgment that he had. He wrote, and professed to write, merely for the people; and when he pleased others, he contented himself. He spent no time in struggles to rouse latent powers; he never attempted to make that better which was already good, nor often, to mend what he must have known to be faulty. He wrote, as he tells us with very little consideration; when occasion or necessity called upon him, he poured out what the present moment happened to supply, and, when once it had passed the press, ejected it from his mind; for, when he had no pecuniary interest, he had no further solicitude.

Pope was not content to satisfy; he desired to excel, and therefore always endeavoured to do his best; he did not court the candour,<sup>42</sup> but dared the judgment of his reader, and expecting no indulgence from others, he showed none

<sup>38</sup> Savage had rendered Pope some service by procuring information concerning the "dunces" whom Pope attacked in his satire.

<sup>39</sup> Johnson apparently overlooked the quarrel of Pope with Addison.

<sup>40</sup> The one whom Pope loved with a greater fondness was Martha Blount, whom but for his physical weakness he would have married. Pope was under obligations to Mr. Allen of Bath, and Martha Blount refused to accept any legacy from Pope unless he would promise to first make good in his will what he owed Mr. Allen. Pope accordingly left £150 to Mr. Allen, that being what he thought he owed him.

<sup>41</sup> In present use "dismissal."

<sup>42</sup> Candour in 18th century use meant indulgence, kindness, and not honesty and openness, as now.

to himself. He examined lines and words with minute and punctilious observation, and re-touched every part with indefatigable diligence, till he had left nothing to be forgiven.

For this reason he kept his pieces very long in his hands, while he considered and reconsidered them. The only poems which can be supposed to have been written with such regard to the times as might hasten their publication, were the two satires of "Thirty-eight;"<sup>43</sup> of which Dodsley told me that they were brought to him by the author, that they might be fairly copied. "Almost every line," he said, "was then written twice over; I gave him a clean transcript, which he sent some time afterwards to me for the press, with almost every line written twice over a second time."

His declaration, that his care for his works ceased at their publication, was not strictly true. His parental attention never abandoned them; what he found amiss in the first edition, he silently corrected in those that followed. He appears to have revised the "Iliad," and freed it from some of its imperfections; and the "Essay on Criticism" received many improvements after its first appearance. It will seldom be found that he altered without adding clearness, elegance, or vigour. Pope had perhaps the judgment of Dryden; but Dryden certainly wanted the diligence of Pope.

In acquired knowledge, the superiority must be allowed to Dryden, whose education was more scholastic, and who, before he became an author, had been allowed more time for study with better means of information. His mind has a larger range, and he collects his images and illustrations from a more extensive circumference of science. Dryden knew more of man in his general nature, and Pope in his local manners. The notions of Dryden were formed by comprehensive speculation; and those of Pope by minute attention. There is more dignity in the knowledge of Dryden, and more certainty in that of Pope.

Poetry was not the sole praise of either; for both excelled likewise in prose; but Pope did not borrow his prose from his predecessor. The style of Dryden is capricious and varied; that of Pope is cautious and uniform. Dryden observes<sup>44</sup> the motions of his own mind; Pope constrains his mind to his own rules of composition. Dryden is sometimes vehement and rapid; Pope is always smooth, uniform, and gentle. Dryden's page is a natural field, rising into inequalities, and diversified by the varied exuberance of abundant vegetation;

<sup>43</sup> Now known as the Epilogue to the Satires, but first entitled One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirty-eight, from the year of publication.

<sup>44</sup> I. e., obeys, follows. Cf. observe a rule.

Pope's is a velvet lawn, shaven by the scythe, and levelled by the roller.

Of genius, that power which constitutes a poet; that quality without which judgment is cold, and knowledge is inert; that energy which collects, combines, amplifies, and animates; the superiority must, with some hesitation, be allowed to Dryden. It is not to be inferred, that of this poetical vigour Pope had only a little, because Dryden had more; for every 10 other writer since Milton must give place to Pope; and even of Dryden it must be said, that, if he has brighter paragraphs, he has not better poems. Dryden's performances were always hasty, either excited by some external occasion, or extorted by domestic necessity; he composed without consideration, and published without correction. What his mind could supply at call, or gather in one excursion, was all that he sought, and all that he gave. The dilatory caution of Pope enabled him to condense his sentiments, to multiply his images, and to accumulate all that study might produce, or chance might supply. If the flights of Dryden therefore are higher, Pope 25 continues longer on the wing. If of Dryden's fire the blaze is brighter, of Pope's the heat is more regular and constant. Dryden often surpasses expectation, and Pope never falls below it. Dryden is read with frequent astonishment, and Pope with perpetual delight. 30

This parallel will, I hope, when it is well considered, be found just; and if the reader should suspect me, as I suspect myself, of some partial fondness for the memory of Dryden, let him not too hastily condemn me; for 35 meditation and inquiry may, perhaps, show him the reasonableness of my determination.

Laurence Sterne

1713-1764

MR. SHANDY ON HIS SON'S DEATH

(From Tristram Shandy, 1759-67)

And a chapter it shall have, and a devil of a one too;—so look to yourselves.

'Tis either Plato, or Plutarch, or Seneca, or 50 Xenophon, or Epictetus, or Theophrastus, or Lucian,—or some one, perhaps, of later date; either Cardan or Budæus, or Petrarch, or Stella,—or possibly it may be some divine or father of the church; St. Austin, or St. Cyprian, or Bernard—who affirms that it is an irresistible and natural passion to weep for the loss of our friends or children;—and Seneca (I'm positive) tells us somewhere that such griefs evacuate themselves best by that particular channel: and, accordingly, we find that David wept for his son Absalom, Adrian for his Antinous, Niobe for her children, and 5 that Apollodorus and Crito both shed tears for Socrates before his death.

My father managed his afflictions otherwise; and indeed differently from most men, either ancient or modern; for he neither wept it away as the Hebrews and the Romans,—nor slept it off, as the Laplanders,—nor hanged it, as the English,—nor drowned it, as the Germans; nor did he curse nor damn it, nor excommunicate it, nor rhyme it, nor lillibullero<sup>1</sup> it 15 —He got rid of it however.

Will your worships give me leave to squeeze in a story between these two pages?

When Tully<sup>2</sup> was bereft of his dear daughter Tullia, at first he laid it to his heart,—he listened to the voice of nature, and modulated his own unto it.—O, my Tullia!—my daughter! my child!—Still, still, still, it was, O, my Tullia! —my Tullia! Methinks I see my Tullia, I hear my Tullia, I talk with my Tullia.—But as soon as he began to look into the stores of philosophy, and consider how many excellent things might be said upon the occasion,—nobody upon earth can conceive, says the great orator, how happy, how joyful it made me.

My father was as proud of his eloquence as Marcus Tullius Cicero could be for his life; and, for aught I am convinced of to the contrary, at present, with as much reason: it was, indeed, his strength,—and his weakness too.—His strength, for he was by nature eloquent; and his weakness, for he was hourly a dupe to it; and, provided an occasion in life would but permit him to show his talents, or say either a wise thing, a witty, or a shrewd one—(bating 40 the case of a systematic misfortune)—he had all he wanted. A blessing which tied up my father's tongue, and a misfortune which set it loose with a good grace, were pretty equal: sometimes, indeed, the misfortune was the better of the two; for instance, where the pleasure of the harangue was as ten, and the pain of the misfortune was as five,—my father gained half in half; and consequently was as well again off as if it had never befallen him. . . . Now let us go back to my brother's death.

Philosophy has a fine saying for everything.—For Death, it has an entire set: the misery was they all at once rushed so into my father's head that 'twas difficult to string them together, so as to make anything of a consistent show out of them,—He took them as they came.

<sup>1</sup> i. e., make a popular song about it. Lillibullero was the name of a song directed against the Irish Roman Catholics, and immensely popular in England during the Revolution of 1688.

<sup>2</sup> Cicero.

"'Tis an inevitable chance,—the first statute in Magna Charta;—it is an everlasting act of parliament, my dear brother,—All must die."

"If my son could not have died, it had been matter of wonder, not that he is dead.

"Monarchs and princes dance in the same ring with us.

"To die is the great debt and tribute due unto nature, tombs and monuments, which should perpetuate our memories, pay it themselves; and the proudest pyramid of them all, which Wealth and Science have erected, has lost its apex, and stands obtruncated in the travellers' horizon."—(My father found he got great ease, and went on.) "Kingdoms and provinces, and towns and cities, have they not their periods? and when those principles and powers which at first cemented and put them together have performed their several evolutions, they fall back"—Brother Shandy, said my uncle Toby, laying down his pipe at the word evolutions—Revolutions, I meant quoth my father—by Heaven! I meant revolutions, brother Toby;—evolutions is nonsense—'Tis not nonsense,—said my uncle Toby—But is it not nonsense to break the thread of such a discourse upon such an occasion? cried my father;—do not, dear Toby, continued he, taking him by the hand, do not—do not, I beseech thee, interrupt me at this crisis. My uncle Toby put his pipe in his mouth.

"Where is Troy and Mycenæ, and Thebes, and Delos, Persepolis and Agrigentum?" continued my father, taking up his book of post-roads,<sup>3</sup> which he had laid down.—"What is become, brother Toby, of Nineveh and Babylon, of Cizycum and Mitylene? the fairest towns that ever the sun rose upon are now no more; the names only are left; and those (for many of them are wrong spelt) are falling themselves by piecemeal to decay, and in length of time will be forgotten, and involved with everything in a perpetual night. The world itself, brother Toby, must,—must come to an end.

"Returning out of Asia, when I sailed from Ægina towards Megara," (When can this have been, thought my uncle Toby,) "I began to view the country round about. Ægina was behind me, Megara was before, Pyræus on the right hand, Corinth on the left. What flourishing towns, now prostrate upon the earth! Alas! Alas! said I to myself, that man should disturb his soul for the loss of a child, when so much as this lies awfully buried in his presence! Remember, said I to myself again,—remember thou art a man."

<sup>3</sup> A book for travellers, giving the roads, stopping places, etc. The reader has been told earlier in the chapter that Mr. Shandy was "busy calculating the expense of his riding post from Calais to Paris, and so on to Lyons," when he received the account of his son's death. He is pictured as sitting with a map, "and a book of post-roads" before him, and a pair of compasses in his hand.

5 Now, my uncle Toby knew not that this last paragraph was an extract of Servius Sulpicius's consolatory letter to Tully:—he had as little skill, honest man, in the fragments as he had in the whole pieces of antiquity:—and as my father, whilst he was concerned in the Turkey trade, had been three or four different times in the Levant, in one of which he had stayed a whole year and a half at Zant, my uncle Toby naturally concluded that, in some one of these periods, he had taken a trip across the Archipelago into Asia; and that all this sailing affair, with Ægina behind, and Megara before, and Pyræus on the right hand, etc., was nothing more than the true course of my father's voyage and reflections. —'Twas certainly in his manner;—and many an undertaking critic would have built two stories higher upon worse foundations. And pray, brother, quoth my uncle Toby, laying the end of his pipe upon my father's hand, in a kindly way of interruption—but waiting till he had finished the account,—What year of our Lord was this?—"Twas no year of our Lord, replied my father—That's impossible, cried my uncle Toby—Simpleton! said my father,—'twas forty years before Christ was born.

My uncle Toby had but two things for it; either to suppose his brother to be the Wandering Jew,—or that his misfortunes had disordered his brain. "May the Lord of heaven and earth protect him and restore him," said my uncle Toby, praying silently for my father, and with tears in his eyes.

My father placed the tears to a proper account, and went on with his harangue with great spirit.

"There is not such great odds, brother Toby, betwixt good and evil, as the world imagines." (This way of setting off, by the bye, was not likely to cure my uncle Toby's suspicions.)—"Labour, sorrow, grief, sickness, want, and woe, are the sources of life."—Much good may it do them,—said my uncle Toby to himself.

"My son is dead!"—so much the better;—'tis a shame in such a tempest, to have but one anchor.

"But he is gone forever from us! be it so.—He is got from under the hands of his barber before he was bald;—he is but risen from a feast before he was surfeited;—from a banquet before he had got drunken.

"The Thracians wept when a child was born,"—(And we were very near it, quoth my uncle Toby) "and feasted and made merry when a man went out of the world; and with reason—Death opens the gates of fame, and shuts the gate of envy after it;—it unlooses the chain of the captive;—and puts the bondsman's task into another man's hands.

"Shew me the man who knows what life is, who dreads it,—and I'll shew thee a prisoner who dreads his liberty."—

Is it not better, my dear brother Toby—(for 10 mark—our appetites are but diseases)—is it not better not to hunger at all, than to eat?—not to thirst at all than to take physic to cure it?

Is it not better to be freed from cares and 15 agues,—from love and melancholy,—and the other hot and cold fits of life, than, like a galled traveller who comes weary to his inn, to be bound to begin his journey afresh?

There is no terror, brother Toby, in its looks 20 but what it borrows from groans and convulsions—and the blowing of noses and the wiping away of tears with the bottom of curtains in a dying man's room.—Strip it of these,—what is it?—'Tis better in battle than in bed, said 25 my uncle Toby.—Take away its hearses, its mutes, and its mourning, its plumes, escutcheons, and other mechanic aids—What is it?—Better in battle? Continued my father, smiling, for he had absolutely forgotten my brother 30 Bobby—it is terrible no way—for consider, brother Toby,—when we are—death is not;—and when death is—we are not.—My uncle Toby laid down his pipe, to consider the proposition; my father's eloquence was too rapid to 35 stay for any man;—away it went—and hurried my uncle Toby's ideas along with it.

For this reason, continued my father, 'tis worthy to recollect how little alteration, in great men, the approaches of death have made—40 Vespasian died in a jest,—Galba with a sentence;—Saptimus Severus in a despatch;—Tiberius in dissimulation;—and Caesar Augustus in a compliment—I hope 'twas a sincere one,—quoth my uncle Toby.

'Twas to his wife,—said my father.

THE STARLING

(From A Sentimental Journey,<sup>1</sup> 1768)

But you don't consider, Eugenius, said I, that before I have been three days in Paris, I shall take care to say or do something or other for which I shall get clapped up into the Bastile, and that I shall live there a couple of months entirely at the King of France's expense—I beg pardon, said Eugenius drily; 5 really I had forgotten that resource.

<sup>1</sup> The Sentimental Journey Through France and Italy purported to be an account of the travels of a certain person named Yorick, the descendant of Yorick the fellow of infinite wit," in Hamlet. But Yorick, says Sir Walter Scott is "Sterne himself." Eugenius is Yorick's friend and adviser, and has just offered to lend him money.

Now the event that I had treated gaily came seriously to my door.

Is it folly, or nonchalance, or philosophy or pertinacity;—or what is it in me, that after all, when La Fleur had gone down stairs, and I was quite alone, I could not bring down my mind to think of it otherwise than I had then spoken of it to Eugenius?

And as for the Bastile—the terror is in the word.—Make the most of it you can, said I to myself, the Bastile is but another word for a tower;—and a tower is but another word for a house you can't get out of.—Mercy on the gouty! for they are in it twice a year.—But with nine livres a day, and pen and ink and paper and patience, albeit a man can't get out, he may do very well within,—at least for a month or six weeks; at the end of which, if he is a harmless fellow, his innocence appears, 25 and he comes out a better and wiser man than he went in.

I had some occasion (I forget what) to step into the court-yard, as I settled this account; and remember I walked down stairs in no small triumph with the conceit of my reasoning.—Beshrew the sombre pencil! said I, vauntingly—40 for I envy not its power, which paints the evils of life with so hard and deadly a colouring. The mind sits terrified at the objects she has magnified herself, and blackened; reduce them to their proper size and hue, she overlooks them.—'Tis true, said I, correcting the proposition—the Bastile is not an evil to be despised. But strip it of its towers—fill up the foss—un-45 barricade the doors—call it simply a confinement, and suppose 'tis some tyrant of a dis-temper—and not a man, which holds you in it—the evil vanishes, and you bear the other half without complaint.

45 I was interrupted in the hey-day of this soliloquy, with the voice which I took to be of a child, which complained "it could not get out."—I looked up and down the passage, and, seeing neither man, woman, nor child, 50 I went out without further attention.

In my return back through the passage, I heard the same words repeated twice over; and, looking up, I saw it was a starling hung in a little cage—"I can't get out—I can't get out—I can't get out," said the starling. I stood looking at the bird; and to every person who came through the passage, it ran fluttering to the side towards which they approached it, with the same lamentation of his captivity,—

"I can't get out," said the starling—God help thee! said I,—but I'll let thee out, cost what it will, so I turned about the cage to get the door; it was twisted and double twisted so fast with wire there was no getting it open without pulling the cage to pieces.—I took both hands to it.

The bird flew to the place where I was attempting his deliverance, and, thrusting his head through the trellis, pressed his breast against it, as if impatient. I fear, poor creature, said I, I cannot set thee at liberty.—"No," said the starling; "I can't get out—I can't get out."

I vow I never had any affections more tenderly awakened; nor do I remember an incident in my life where the dissipated spirits, to which my reason had been a bubble, were so rudely call'd home. Mechanical as the notes were, yet so true in tune to nature were they chanted, that in one moment they overthrew all my systematic reasonings upon the Bastille; and I heavily walked upstairs, unsaying every word I had said in going down them.

Disguise thyself as thou wilt, still, Slavery, said I, still thou art a bitter draught! and, though thousands in all ages have been made to drink of thee, thou art no less bitter on that account. 'Tis thou, thrice sweet and gracious goddess, addressing myself to Liberty, whom all, in public or in private, worship, whose taste is grateful, and will ever be so, till Nature herself shall change. No tint of words can spot thy snowy mantle, no chymic power turn thy sceptre into iron;—with thee to smile upon him as he eats his crust, the swain is happier than his monarch, from whose Court thou art exiled. Gracious Heaven! cried I, kneeling down upon the last step but one in my ascent, grant me but health, thou great Bestower of it, and give me but this fair goddess as my companion,—and shower down thy mitres, if it seem good unto thy Divine Providence, upon those heads which are aching for them.

Oliver Goldsmith

1728-1774

IMPRESSIONS OF A CHINESE TRAVELLER

(From Citizen of the World, (1760-61) Letter II)

From Lien Chi Altangi, to —, Merchant in Amsterdam, Friend of my Heart, London.

May the wings of peace rest upon thy dwelling, and the shield of conscience preserve thee from vice and misery! For all thy favours accept my gratitude and esteem, the only tributes a poor philosophic wanderer can return. Sure, fortune is resolved to make me unhappy, when she gives others a power of testifying their friendship by actions, and leaves me only words to express the sincerity of mine.

1 These letters, afterwards collected and entitled The

My passage by sea from Rotterdam to England was more painful to me than all the journeys I ever made on land. I have traversed the immeasurable wilds of Mogul Tartary; felt all the rigours of Siberian skies; I have had my repose a hundred times disturbed by invading savages, and have seen, without shrinking, the desert sands rise like a troubled ocean all around me; against these calamities I was armed with resolution; but in my passage to England, though nothing occurred that gave the mariners any uneasiness, to one who was never at sea before, all was a subject of astonishment and terror. To find the land disappear, to see our ship mount the waves, swift as an arrow from the Tartar bow, to hear the wind howling through the cordage, to feel a sickness which depresses even the spirits of the brave; these were unexpected distresses, and consequently assaulted me unprepared to receive them.

You men of Europe think nothing of a voyage by sea. With us of China, a man who has been from sight of land is regarded upon his return with admiration. I have known some provinces where there is not even a name for the Ocean. What a strange people, therefore, am I got amongst, who have founded an empire on this unstable element, who build cities upon billows that rise higher than the mountains of Tipertala, and make the deep more formidable than the wildest tempest.

Such accounts as these, I must confess, were my first motives for seeing England. These induced me to take a journey of seven hundred painful days, in order to examine its opulence, buildings, sciences, arts, and manufactures, on the spot. Judge then my disappointment upon entering London, to see no signs of that opulence so much talked of abroad: wherever I turn, I am presented with a gloomy solemnity in the houses, the streets, and the inhabitants; none of that beautiful gilding which makes a principle ornament in Chinese architecture. The streets of Nankin are sometimes strewed with gold-leaf; very different are those of

Citizen of the World, were first published serially in a paper called the Public Ledger. They are a remarkable plea for a tolerant and sympathetic attitude toward remote and alien nations, and they maintain that underneath all superficial differences men everywhere are essentially the same. "The truth is," says Goldsmith in his preface, "the Chinese and we are pretty much alike. Different degrees of refinement, and not of distance, mark the distinctions among mankind."

London; in the midst of their pavements, a great lazy puddle moves lazily along; heavy laden machines, with wheels of unwieldy thickness, crowd up every passage; so that a stranger, instead of finding time for observation, is often happy if he has time to escape from being crushed to pieces.

The houses borrow very few ornaments from architecture; their chief decoration seems to be a paltry piece of painting hung out at their doors or windows; at once a proof of their indigence and vanity: their vanity, in each having one of those pictures exposed to public view: and their indigence, in being unable to get them better painted. In this respect, the fancy of their painters is also deplorable. Could you believe it? I have seen five black lions and three blue boars in less than a circuit of half a mile; and yet you know that animals of these colours are no where to be found except in the wild imaginations of Europe.

From these circumstances in their buildings, and from the dismal looks of the inhabitants, I am induced to conclude that the nation is actually poor; and that, like the Persians, they make a splendid figure everywhere but at home. The proverb of Xixofou is, that a man's riches may be seen in his eyes; if we judge of the English by this rule, there is not a poorer nation under the sun.

I have been here but two days, so will not be hasty in my decisions. Such letters as I shall write to Fipsihi in Moscow, I beg you'll endeavour to forward with all diligence; I shall send them open, in order that you may take copies or translations, as you are equally versed in the Dutch and Chinese languages. Dear friend, think of my absence with regret, as I sincerely regret yours; even while I write, I lament our separation. Farewell.

Letter III

From Lien Chi Altangi, to the care of Fipsihi, resident in Moscow, to be forwarded by the Russian caravan to Fum Hoam, First President of the Ceremonial Academy at Pekin in China.

Think not, O thou guide of my youth! that absence can impair my respect, or interposing trackless deserts blot your reverend figure from my memory. "The farther I travel I feel the pain of separation with stronger force; Those ties that bind me to my native country and you, are still unbroken. By every remove, I only drag a greater length of chain.

Could I find aught worth transmitting from so remote a region as this to which I have wandered, I should gladly send it; but, instead of this, you must be contented with a renewal of my former professions, and an imperfect account of a people with whom I am as yet superficially acquainted. The remarks of a man who has been but three days in the country, can only be those obvious circumstances which force themselves upon the imagination. I consider myself here as a newly created being introduced into a new world; every object strikes with wonder and surprise. The imagination, still unsated, seems the only active principle of the mind. The most trifling occurrences give pleasure, till the gloss of novelty is worn away. When I have ceased to wonder, I may possibly grow wise; I may then call the reasoning principle to my aid, and compare those objects with each other, which were before examined without reflection.

Behold me then in London, gazing at the strangers, and they at me; it seems they find somewhat absurd in my figure; and had I been never from home, it is possible I might find an infinite fund of ridicule in theirs; but by long travelling I am taught to laugh at folly alone, and to find nothing truly ridiculous but villany and vice.

When I had just quitted my native country, and crossed the Chinese wall, I fancied every deviation from the customs and manners of China was a departing from nature. I smiled at the blue lips and red foreheads of the Tonguese;<sup>1</sup> and could hardly contain when I saw the Daures<sup>2</sup> dress their heads with horns. The Ostiacs<sup>3</sup> powdered with red earth; and the Calmuck<sup>4</sup> beauties, tricked out in all the finery of sheepskin, appeared highly ridiculous: but I soon perceived that the ridicule lay not in them but in me; that I falsely condemned others for absurdity, because they happened to differ from a standard originally founded in prejudice or partiality.

I find no pleasure therefore in taxing the English with departing from nature in their external appearance, which is all I yet know of their character: it is possible they only endeavour to improve her simple plan, since every extravagance in dress proceeds from a desire of becoming more beautiful than nature made us; and this is so harmless a vanity, that I not only pardon but approve it. A desire to be more excellent than others, is what actually makes us so; and as thousands find a livelihood

<sup>1</sup> The people of the Tonga, or Friendly Islands, in the South Pacific.

<sup>2</sup> The people of Dauria, a mountainous region of south-eastern Siberia, on the Chinese frontier.

<sup>3</sup> A people of western Siberia of Finnish stock.

<sup>4</sup> A nomadic people of Mongolian stock, now dwelling in certain parts of China, Siberia, and Russia.

in society by such appetities, none but the ignorant inveigh against them.

You are not insensible, most reverend Fum Hoam, what numberless trades, even among the Chinese, subsist by the harmless pride of each other. Your nose-borers, feet-swathers, tooth-stainers, eyebrow-pluckers, would all want bread, should their neighbours want vanity. These vanities, however, employ much fewer hands in China than in England; and a fine gentleman or a fine lady here, dressed to the fashion, seems scarcely to have a single limb that does not suffer some distortion from art.

To make a fine gentleman, several trades are required, but chiefly a barber. You have undoubtedly heard of the Jewish champion, whose strength lay in his hair. One would think that the English were for placing all wisdom there. To appear wise, nothing more is requisite here than for a man to borrow hair from the heads of all his neighbours, and clap it like a bush on his own; the distributors of law and physic stick on such quantities, that it is almost impossible, even in idea, to distinguish between the head and the hair.

Those whom I have been now describing affect the gravity of the lion; those I am going to describe, more resemble the pert vivacity of smaller animals. The barber, who is still master of the ceremonies, cuts their hair close to the crown; and then with a composition of meal and hog's-lard, plasters the whole in such a manner as to make it impossible to distinguish whether the patient wears a cap or a plaster; but, to make the picture more perfectly striking, conceive the tail of some beast, a greyhound's tail, or a pig's tail, for instance, appended to the back of the head, and reaching down to the place where tails in other animals are generally seen to begin; thus bethailed and bepowdered, the man of taste fancies he improves in beauty, dresses up his hard-featured face in smiles, and attempts to look hideously tender. Thus equipped, he is qualified to make love, and hopes for success more from the powder on the outside of his head, than the sentiments within.

Yet when I consider what sort of a creature the fine lady is to whom he is supposed to pay his addresses, it is not strange to find him thus equipped in order to please. She is herself every whit as fond of powder, and tails, and hog's-lard, as he. To speak my secret sentiments, most reverend Fum, the ladies here are horribly ugly; I can hardly endure the sight of them; they no way resemble the beauties of China; the Europeans have quite a different idea of beauty from us. When I reflect on the small-footed perfections of an Eastern beauty, how is it possible I should have eyes for a woman whose feet are ten inches long? I shall never forget the beauties of my native city of Nanfew. How very broad their faces! how very short their noses! how very little their eyes! how very thin their lips! how very black their teeth! the snow on the tops of Bao is not fairer than their cheeks; and their eyebrows are small as the line by the pencil of Quamsi. Here a lady with such perfections would be frightful; Dutch and Chinese beauties, indeed, have some resemblance, but English women are entirely different; red cheeks, big eyes, and teeth of a most odious whiteness, are not only seen here, but wished for; and then they have such masculine feet, as actually serve some for walking!

Yet uncivil as nature has been, they seem resolved to outdo her in unkindness; they use white powder, blue powder, and black powder, for their hair, and a red powder for the face on some particular occasions.

They like to have the face of various colours, as among the Tartars of Koreki, frequently sticking on, with spittle, little black patches on every part of it, except on the tip of the nose, which I have never seen with a patch. You'll have a better idea of their manner of placing these spots, when I have finished the map of an English face patched up to the fashion, which shall shortly be sent to increase your curious collection of paintings, medals, and monsters.

But what surprises more than all the rest is what I have just now been credibly informed by one of this country. "Most ladies here," says he, "have two faces; one face to sleep in, and another to show in company: the first is generally reserved for the husband and family at home; the other put on to please strangers abroad: the family face is often indifferent enough, but the out-door one looks something better; this is always made at the toilet, where the looking-glass and toad-eater<sup>s</sup> sit in council, and settle the complexion of the day."

I can't ascertain the truth of this remark; however, it is actually certain, that they wear more clothes within doors than without; and I have seen a lady, who seemed to shudder at a breeze in her own apartment, appear half naked in the streets.

The English seem as silent as the Japanese, yet vainer than the inhabitants of Siam. Upon my arrival, I attributed that reserve to modesty, which I now find has its origin in pride. Condescend to address them first, and you are sure of their acquaintance: stoop to flattery, and you conciliate their friendship and esteem. They bear hunger, cold, fatigue, and all the miseries of life without shrinking; danger only calls forth their fortitude; they even exult in calamity; but contempt is what they cannot bear. An Englishman fears contempt more than death; he often flies to death as a refuge from its pressure; and dies when he fancies the world has ceased to esteem him.

<sup>s</sup> Toady: an obsequious attendant.

Pride seems the source not only of their 10 national vices, but of their national virtues also. An Englishman is taught to love his king as his friend, but to acknowledge no other master than the laws which he himself has contributed to enact. He despises those na- 15 tions, who, that one may be free, are all content to be slaves; who first lift a tyrant into terror, and then shrink under his power as if delegated from Heaven. Liberty is echoed in all their assemblies; and thousands might 20 be found ready to offer up their lives for the sound, though perhaps not one of all the number understands its meaning. The lowest mechanic, however, looks upon it as his duty to be a watchful guardian of his country's 25 freedom, and often uses a language that might seem haughty, even in the mouth of the great emperor, who traces his ancestry to the moon. A few days ago, passing by one of their prisons, I could not avoid stopping in order to listen 30 to a dialogue which I thought might afford me some entertainment. The conversation was carried on between a debtor through the grate of his prison, a porter, who had stopped to rest his burden, and a soldier at the window. 35 The subject was upon a threatened invasion from France,* and each seemed extremely anxious to rescue his country from the impending danger. "For my part," cries the prisoner, "the greatest of my apprehensions 40 is for our freedom; if the French should conquer, what would become of English liberty? My dear friends, Liberty is the Englishman's prerogative; we must preserve that at the expense of our lives; of that the French shall 45 never deprive us; it is not to be expected that men who are slaves themselves would preserve our freedom should they happen to conquer."—"Ay, slaves," cries the porter, "they are all slaves, fit only to carry burdens, every one of 50 them. Before I would stoop to slavery, may this be my poison (and he held the goblet in his hand), may this be my poison—but I would sooner list for a soldier."

The soldier, taking the goblet from his 55 friend, with much awe fervently cried out,

* The Seven Years War (1756-67) in which England and France were involved as antagonists. France and England were opposed at this time in America (French and Indian War) and in India.

"It is not so much our liberties as our religion, that would suffer by such a change; ay, our religion, my lads. May the devil sink me into flames (such was the solemnity of his adjuration), if the French should come over, but our religion would be utterly undone." So saying, instead of a libation, he applied the goblet to his lips, and confirmed his sentiments with a ceremony of the most persevering devotion.

A VISIT TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY

(Letter XIII. from the same)

I am just returned from Westminster Abbey, the place of sepulture for the philosophers, heroes, and kings of England. What a gloom do monumental inscriptions and all the venerable names of deceased merit inspire! Im- 15agine a temple marked with the hand of antiquity, solemn as religious awe, adorned with all the magnificence of barbarous profusion, dim windows, fretted pillars, long colonnades, and dark ceilings. Think then, what were my sensations at being introduced to such a scene. I stood in the midst of the temple, and threw 20 my eyes round on the walls filled with the statues, the inscriptions, and the monuments of the dead.

Alas, I said to myself, how does pride attend the puny child of dust even to the grave! Even humble as I am, I possess more consequence in the present scene than the greatest hero of them all; they have toiled for an hour 25 to gain a transient immortality, and are at length retired to the grave, where they have no attendant but the worm, none to flatter but the epitaph.

As I was indulging such reflections, a gentleman dressed in black, perceiving me to be a stranger, came up, entered into conversation, and politely offered to be my instructor and guide through the temple. If any monument, said he, should particularly excite your curios- 30ity, I shall endeavour to satisfy your demands. I accepted with thanks the gentleman's offer, adding, that "I was come to observe the policy, the wisdom, and the justice of the English, in conferring rewards upon deceased merit. If adulation like this, continued I, be properly 35 conducted, as it can in no ways injure those who are flattered, so it may be a glorious incentive to those who are now capable of enjoying it. It is the duty of every good government to turn this monumental pride to its own advantage, to become strong in the aggregate from the weakness of the individual. If none but the truly great have a place in this awful repository, a temple like this will give the finest lessons of morality, and be a strong incentive to true ambition. I am told, that none have a place here but characters of the most distinguished merit." The man in black seemed impatient at my observations, so I discontinued my remarks, and we walked on together to take a view of every particular monument in order as it lay.

As the eye is naturally caught by the finest objects, I could not avoid being particularly curious about one monument which appeared more beautiful than the rest; that, said I to my guide, I take to be the tomb of some very great man. By the peculiar excellence of the workmanship, and the magnificence of the design, this must be a trophy raised to the memory of some king who has saved his country from ruin, or lawgiver, who has reduced his fellow-citizens from anarchy into just subjection.—It is not requisite, replied my companion smiling, to have such qualifications in order to have a very fine monument here. More humble abilities will suffice. What, I suppose then, the gaining two or three battles, or the taking half a score towns, is thought a sufficient qualification? Gaining battles, or taking towns, replied the man in black, may be of service; but a gentleman may have a very fine monument here without ever seeing a battle or a siege. This then is the monument of some poet, I presume, of one whose wit has gained him immortality? No, sir, replied my guide, the gentleman who lies here never made verses; and as for wit, he despised it in others, because he had none himself. Pray tell me then in a word, said I peevishly, what is the great man who lies here particularly remarkable for? Remarkable, sir! said my companion; why, sir, the gentleman that lies here is remarkable, very remarkable—for a tomb in Westminster Abbey. But, head of my Ancestors! how has he got here? I fancy he could never bribe the guardians of the temple to give him a place. Should he not be ashamed to be seen among company, where even moderate merit would look like infamy? I suppose, replied the man in black, the gentleman was rich, and his friends, as is usual in such a case, told him he was great. He readily believed them; the guardians of the temple, as they got by the self-delusion, were ready to believe him too; so he paid his money for a fine monument; and the workman, as you see, has made him one the most beautiful. Think not, however, that this gentleman is singular in his desire of being buried among the great; there are several others in the temple, who, hated and shunned by the great while alive, have come here, fully resolved to keep them company now they are dead.

<sup>1</sup> Allusion to the ancestor-worship of the Chinese.

As we walked along to a particular part of the temple, there, says the gentleman, pointing with his finger, that is the poet's corner;<sup>2</sup> there you see the monuments of Shakespeare, and Milton, and Prior, and Drayton.<sup>3</sup> Drayton, I replied, I never heard of him before, but I have been told of one Pope,<sup>4</sup> is he there? It is, time enough, replied my guide, these hundred years, he is not long dead, people have not done hating him yet. Strange, cried I, Can any be found to hate a man, whose life was wholly spent in entertaining and instructing his fellow creatures? Yes, says my guide, they hate him for that very reason. There are a set of men called answerers of books, who take upon them to watch the republic of letters, and distribute reputation by the sheet; they are incapable of giving pleasure themselves, and hinder those that would. These answerers have no other employment but to cry out Dunce, and Scribbler, to praise the dead, and revile the living, to grant a man of confessed abilities some small share of merit, to applaud twenty blockheads in order to gain the reputation of candour, and to revile the moral character of the man whose writings they cannot injure. Such wretches are kept in pay by some mercenary bookseller, or more frequently, the bookseller himself takes this dirty work off their hands, as all that is required is to be very abusive and very dull; every Poet of any genius is sure to find such enemies, he feels, though he seems to despise their malice; they make him miserable here, and in the pursuit of empty fame, at last he gains solid anxiety.

Has this been the case with every poet I see here? cried I.—Yes, with every mother's son of them, replied he, except he happened to be born a mandarine.<sup>5</sup> If he has much money, he may buy reputation from your book-answerers, as well as a monument from the guardians of the temple. But are there not some men of distinguished taste, as in China, who are willing to patronise men of merit and soften the rancour of malevolent dulness?

<sup>2</sup> In the south-transsept of the Abbey. Cf. Irving's description in his Sketch Book.

<sup>3</sup> If burial in the Abbey conveyed a true title to fame, then Prior and Drayton, minor poets, would be more famous than Shakespeare and Milton, neither of whom are buried in Westminster Abbey, though they have monuments there.

<sup>4</sup> Pope was buried in the aisle of the parish church at Twickenham, not, however, on account of the hate of his contemporaries, but because he desired to rest near his parents. His epitaph, written by himself, bears this superscription: "For one that would not be buried in Westminster Abbey."

<sup>5</sup> A Chinese official entitled to wear the "button." (See Cent. Dict. "Button" 3.) Here applied to members of the English nobility by the Chinese traveller.

I own there are many, replied the man in black, but, alas! sir, the book-answers crowd about them, and call themselves the writers of books; and the patron is too indolent to distinguish; thus poets are kept at a distance, while their enemies eat up all their rewards at the mandarine's table.

Leaving this part of the temple, we made up to an iron gate,<sup>6</sup> through which my companion told me we were to pass in order to see the monuments of the kings. Accordingly I marched up without further ceremony, and was going to enter, when a person who held the gate in his hand, told me I must pay first. I was surprised at such a demand; and asked the man whether the people of England kept a show? whether the paltry sum he demanded was not a national reproach? whether it was not more to the honour of the country to let their magnificence or their antiquities be openly seen, than thus meanly to tax a curiosity which tended to their own honour? As for your questions, replied the gate-keeper, to be sure they may be very right, because I don't understand them, but, as for that there three-pence, I farm it<sup>7</sup> from one, who rents it from another, who hires it from a third, who leases it from the guardians of the temple, and we all must live. I expected upon paying here to see something extraordinary, since what I had seen for nothing filled me with so much surprise; but in this I was disappointed; there was little more within than black coffins, rusty armour, tattered standards, and some few slovenly figures in wax.<sup>8</sup> I was sorry I had paid, but I comforted myself by considering it would be my last payment. A person attended us, who, without once blushing, told an hundred lies; he talked of a lady who died by pricking her finger,<sup>9</sup> of a king with a golden head,<sup>10</sup> and twenty such pieces of absurdity; Look ye there, gentlemen, says he, pointing to an old oak chair,<sup>11</sup> there's a curiosity for ye;

in that chair the kings of England were crowned, you see also a stone underneath, and that stone is Jacob's pillow. I could see no curiosity either in the oak chair or the stone; could I, indeed, behold one of the old kings of England seated in this, or Jacob's head laid upon the other, there might be something curious in the sight; but in the present case, there was no more reason for my surprise, than if I should pick a stone from their streets, and call it a curiosity, merely because one of the kings happened to tread upon it as he passed in a procession.

From hence our conductor led us through several dark walks and winding ways, uttering lies, talking to himself, and flourishing a wand which he held in his hand. He reminded me of the black magicians of Kobi.<sup>12</sup> After we had been almost fatigued with a variety of objects, he, at last, desired me to consider attentively a certain suit of armour, which seemed to show nothing remarkable. This armour, said he, belonged to General Monk.<sup>13</sup> Very surprising, that a general should wear armour. And pray, added he, observe this cap, this is General Monk's cap. Very strange indeed, very strange, that a general should have a cap also! Pray, friend, what might this cap have cost originally? That, sir, says he, I don't know, but this cap is all the wages I have for my trouble. A very small recompense truly, said I. Not so very small, replied he, for every gentleman puts some money into it, and I spend the money. What, more money! still more money! Every gentleman gives something, sir. I'll give thee nothing, returned I; the guardians of the temple should pay you your wages, friend, and not permit you to squeeze thus from every spectator. When we pay our money at the door to see a show, we never give more as we are going out. Sure the guardians of the temple can never think they get enough. Show me the gate; if I stay longer, I may probably meet with more of those ecclesiastical beggars.

Thus leaving the temple precipitately, I returned to my lodgings, in order to ruminate over what was great, and to despise what was mean in the occurrences of the day.

<sup>6</sup> The south gate of the "ambulatory" separating the kings' tombs from the body of the church. A fee of 6d. is still charged for admission to the chapels, which are only shown to visitors by a vergier.

<sup>7</sup> Pay for the right to collect it.

<sup>8</sup> It was formerly customary to place in the Abbey wax effigies of famous personages buried there. These effigies had been carried on a chariot before the body at the funeral.

<sup>9</sup> The figure of Elizabeth Russell, referred to by the Spectator (329) as "that martyr to good housewifery, who died by the prick of a needle."

<sup>10</sup> One of the kings, whose head had been stolen toward the end of Henry VIIIth's reign.

<sup>11</sup> The famous coronation chair.

<sup>12</sup> Kobi or Gobi is a great desert in the northern part of China.

<sup>13</sup> General Monk, the restorer of the Stuarts, is buried in Henry VIIIth's Chapel.

Edmund Burke

1729-1797

WARREN HASTINGS<sup>1</sup>

(From Speech in Opening the Impeachment.
Fourth Day: Tuesday, February 19, 1788)

My Lords,<sup>2</sup> you have heard the proceedings of the court before which Gunga Govind Sing<sup>3</sup> 10 in which Debi Sing had this province of Dinagore,<sup>4</sup> that consequences of a horrid and atrocious nature, though not to so great an extent, followed from it. I will just beg leave to state to your Lordships, that the kingdom 15 of Bahar is annexed to the kingdom of Bengal; that this kingdom was governed by another Provincial Council; that he turned out that Provincial Council, and sold that government to two wicked men:<sup>5</sup> one of no fortune at all, 20 and the other of a very suspicious fortune; one a total bankrupt, the other justly excommunicated for his wickedness in his country, and then in prison for misdemeanors in a subordinate situation of government. Mr. Hastings destroyed the Council that imprisoned him; and, instead of putting one of the best and most reputable of the natives to govern it, he takes out of prison this excommunicated wretch, hated by God and man,—this bankrupt, this man of evil and desperate character, 25 this mismanager of the public revenue in an inferior station; and, as he had given Bengal to Gunga Govind Sing,<sup>6</sup> he gave this province to Rajahs Kelleram and Cullian Sing. It was 30 done upon this principle, that they would increase and very much better the revenue. These men seemed to be as strange instruments for improving a revenue as ever were chosen, I suppose, since the world began.

Perhaps their merit was giving a bribe of 40 40,000l.<sup>7</sup> to Mr. Hastings. How he disposed of it I don't know. He says, "I disposed of it to the public, and it was in a case of emergency." You will see in the course of this business the 45 falsehood of that pretence: for you will see, though the obligation is given for it as a round sum of money, that the payment was not accomplished till a year after; that therefore it

<sup>1</sup> In 1786 Burke presented to the House of Commons twenty-two articles charging Hastings with high crimes and misdemeanors. A year later the House appointed a committee of nine prosecutors, of which Burke was chairman. In Feb., 1788, the trial began before the House of Lords. After the charges had been read, Burke made the opening speech, from the conclusion of which this selection is taken.

<sup>2</sup> i. e. members of the House of Lords, which was sitting as a court to hear the impeachment of Warren Hastings, Governor-General of British India from 1773-85. The East-India Company, chartered by Parliament, controlled the English trade and part of the government of India, especially after the Great Mogul, or King of India, turned over to it the financial management of the three great provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa. The Company was controlled by the Court of Proprietors, or stockholders, who chose a Court of Directors. These were supposed to administer the affairs of the company, but the real power rested in the Supreme Council in India, appointed by Parliament in 1773, and later by the directors. It consisted of the Governor-General, Warren Hastings, and four other members. Hastings was therefore responsible to Parliament for maladministration.

<sup>3</sup> In 1773 Hastings abolished the local Councils of Revenue in the six Provinces of Bengal, Bahar, Orissa, Madras, Bombay, Benccolen, and appointed a general committee of Revenue composed of four members. This committee was really subservient to its secretary, Gunga Govind Sing, a native who had been appointed by Hastings in spite of his reputation for dishonesty.

<sup>4</sup> The operation of such a system, was to decrease the revenues by impoverishing the country.

<sup>5</sup> V. note 2, supra.

<sup>6</sup> A dispute about the succession of Rajahs (princes) in this independent Province was submitted to Hastings, who decided in favour of a child, and assuming an unjust authority, appointed as guardian or steward one of Gunga's men named Debi Sing. The Rajah's income was at once decreased, a large revenue was paid to the East India Company and probably a still larger one to Debi Sing, for by cruel persecution he exacted a land tax of 600 per cent per annum.

<sup>7</sup> Rajahs Kelleram and Cullian Sing, whom Burke mentions further on,—both friends of Gunga Govind Sing.

<sup>8</sup> V. note 3, supra.

<sup>9</sup> Hastings received many bribes, some of which he ostentatiously turned into the country's treasury.

could not answer any immediate exigence of the Company. Did it answer in an increase of the revenue? The very reverse. Those persons who had given this bribe of 40,000*l.* at the end of that year were found 80,000*l.* in debt<sup>10</sup> to the Company. The Company always loses, when Mr. Hastings takes a bribe; and when he proposes an increase of the revenue, the Company loses often double. But I hope and trust your Lordships will consider this idea of a monstrous rise of rent, given by men of desperate fortunes and characters, to be one of the grievances instead of one of the advantages of this system.

It has been necessary to lay these facts before you (and I have stated them to your Lordships far short of their reality, partly through my infirmity, and partly on account of the odiousness of the task of going through things that disgrace human nature), that you may be enabled fully to enter into the dreadful consequences which attend a system of bribery and corruption in a Governor-General. On a transient view, bribery is rather a subject of disgust than horror,—the sordid practice of a venal, mean, and abject mind; and the effect of the crime seems to end with the act. It looks to be no more than the corrupt transfer of property from one person to another,—at worst a theft. But it will appear in a very different light, when you regard the consideration for which the bribe is given,—namely, that a Governor-General, claiming an arbitrary power<sup>11</sup> in himself, for that consideration delivers up the properties, the liberties, and the lives, of an whole people to the arbitrary discretion of any wicked and rapacious person, who will be sure to make good from their blood the purchase he has paid for his power over them. It is possible that a man may pay a bribe merely to redeem himself from some evil. It is bad, however, to live under a power whose violence has no restraint except in its avarice. But no man ever paid a bribe for a power to charge and tax others, but with a view to oppress them. No man ever paid a bribe for the handling of the public money, but to speculate from it. When once such offices become thus privately and corruptly venal, the very worst men will be chosen (as Mr. Hastings has in fact constantly chosen the very worst); because none but those who do not scruple the use of any means are capable, consistently with profit, to discharge at once the rigid demands of a severe public revenue and the private bribes of a rapacious chief magistrate. Not only the worst men will be thus chosen, but they will be restrained by no dread whatsoever in the execution of their worst oppressions. Their protection is sure. The authority that is to restrain, to control, to punish them is previously engaged; he has his retaining fee for the support of their crimes. Mr. Hastings never dared, because he could not, arrest oppression in its course, without drying up the source of his own corrupt emolument. Mr. Hastings never dared, after the fact, to punish extortion in others, because he could not, without risking the discovery of bribery in himself. The same corruption, the same oppression, and the same impunity will reign through all the subordinate gradations.

<sup>10</sup> i. e., they had not paid in the stated amount of revenue for their Province.

<sup>11</sup> Hastings claimed arbitrary power, laying stress on the great distance between India and England.

A fair revenue may be collected without the aid of wicked, violent, and unjust instruments. But when once the line of just and legal demand is transgressed, such instruments are of absolute necessity; and they comport themselves accordingly. When we know that men must be well paid (and they ought to be well paid) for the performance of honorable duty, can we think that men will be found to commit wicked, rapacious, and oppressive acts with fidelity and disinterestedness for the sole emolument of dishonest employers? No: they must have their full share of the prey, and the greater share, as they are the nearer and more necessary instruments of the general extortion. We must not, therefore, flatter ourselves, when Mr. Hastings takes 40,000*l.* in bribes for Dinagepore and its annexed provinces,<sup>12</sup> that from the people nothing more than 40,000*l.* is extorted. I speak within compass, four times forty must be levied on the people; and these violent sales, fraudulent purchases, confiscations, inhuman and unutterable tortures, imprisonment, irons, whips, fines, general despair, general insurrection, the massacre of the officers of revenue by the people, the massacre of the people by the soldiery, and the total waste and destruction of the finest provinces in India, are things of course,—and all a necessary consequence involved in the very substance of Mr. Hastings's bribery.

I therefore charge Mr. Hastings with having destroyed, for private purposes, the whole system of government by the six Provincial Councils, which he had no right to destroy.

I charge him with having delegated to others<sup>13</sup> that power which the act of Parliament had directed him to preserve unalienably in himself.

I charge him with having formed a committee<sup>14</sup> to be mere instruments and tools, at the enormous expense of 62,000*l.* per annum.

<sup>12</sup> Edrackpore and Rungpore.

<sup>13</sup> i. e., to the Committee of Revenue, the power of controlling the Revenue.

I charge him with having appointed a person their dewan<sup>15</sup> to whom these Englishmen were to be subservient tools,—whose name, to his own knowledge, was, by the general voice of India, by the general recorded voice of the Company, by recorded official transactions, by everything that can make a man known, abhorred, and detested, stamped with infamy; and with giving him the whole power which he had thus separated from the Council-General, and from the Provincial Councils.

I charge him with taking bribes of Gunga Govind Sing.

I charge him with not having done that bribe-service which fidelity even in iniquity requires at the hands of the worst of men.

I charge him with having robbed those people<sup>16</sup> of whom he took the bribes.

I charge him with having fraudulently alienated the fortunes of widows.

I charge him with having, without right, title, or purchase, taken the lands of orphans, and given them to wicked persons under him.

I charge him with having removed the natural guardians<sup>17</sup> of a minor Rajah, and with having given that trust to a stranger, Debi Sing, whose wickedness was known to himself and all the world, and by whom the Rajah, his family, and dependants were cruelly oppressed.

I charge him with having committed to the management of Debi Sing three great provinces;<sup>18</sup> and thereby with having wasted the country, ruined the landed interest, cruelly harassed the peasants, burnt their homes, seized their crops, tortured and degraded their persons, and destroyed the honor of the whole female race of that country.

In the name of the Commons of England, I charge all this villany upon Warren Hastings, in this last moment of my application to you.

My Lords, what is it that we want here to a great act of national justice? Do we want a cause, my Lords? You have the cause of oppressed princes, of undone women of the first rank, of desolated provinces, and of wasted kingdoms.

Do you want a criminal, my Lords? When was there so much iniquity ever laid to the charge of any one? No, my Lords, you must not look to punish any other such delinquent from India. Warren Hastings was not left substance enough in India to nourish such another delinquent.

<sup>14</sup> i. e., of revenue, consisting of four men with salaries, amounting to 62,000 l. The cost of living in India made salaries large. Hastings received 25,000 l. and residences.

<sup>15</sup> Steward, Gunga Govind Sing.

<sup>16</sup> By renting their lands to Gunga.

<sup>17</sup> i. e. his uncle and his mother.

<sup>18</sup> Dinapore, Edrackpore, and Rungpore.

My Lords, is it a prosecutor you want? You have before you the Commons of Great Britain as prosecutors; and I believe, my Lords, that the sun, in his beneficent progress round the world, does not behold a more glorious sight than that of men, separated from a remote people by the material bounds and barriers of Nature, united by the bond of a social and moral community,—all the Commons of England resenting, as their own, the indignities and cruelties that are offered to all the people of India.

Do we want a tribunal? My Lords, no example of antiquity, nothing in the modern world, nothing in the range of human imagination, can supply us with a tribunal like this. My Lords, here we see virtually, in the mind's eye, that sacred majesty of the crown, under whose authority you sit, and whose power you exercise. We see in that invisible authority, what we all feel in reality and life, the beneficent powers and protecting justice of his Majesty. We have here the heir-apparent to the crown, such as the fond wishes of the people of England wish an heir-apparent of the crown to be. We have here all the branches of the royal family, in a situation between majesty and subjection, between the sovereign and the subject,—offering a pledge in that situation for the support of the rights of the crown and the liberties of the people, both which extremities they touch. My Lords, we have a great hereditary peerage here,—those who have their own honor, the honor of their ancestors and of their posterity to guard, and who will justify, as they have always justified, that provision in the Constitution by which justice is made an hereditary office. My Lords, we have here a new nobility, who have risen and exalted themselves by various merits,—by great military services which have extended the fame of this country from the rising to the setting sun. We have those who, by various civil merits and various civil talents, have been exalted to a situation which they well deserve, and in which they will justify the favor of their sovereign, and the good opinion of their fellow-subjects, and make them rejoice to see those virtuous characters that were the other day upon a level with them now exalted above them in rank, but feeling with them in sympathy what they felt in common with them before. We have persons exalted from the practice of the law, from the place in which they administered high, though subordinate, justice, to a seat here, to enlighten with their knowledge and to strengthen with their votes those principles which have distinguished the courts in which they have presided.

My Lords, you have here also the lights of our religion, you have the bishops of England. My Lords, you have that true image of the primitive Church, in its ancient form, in its ancient ordinances, purified from the superstitions and the vices which a long succession of ages will bring upon the best institutions. You have the representatives of that religion which says that their God is love, that the very vital spirit of their institution is charity,—a religion which so much hates oppression, that, when the God whom we adore appeared in human form, He did not appear in a form of greatness and majesty, but in sympathy with the lowest of the people, and thereby made it a firm and ruling principle that their welfare was the object of all government, since the Person who was the Master of Nature chose to appear Himself in a subordinate situation. These are the considerations which influence them, which animate them, and will animate them, against all oppression,—knowing that He who is called first among them, and first among us all, both of the flock that is fed and of those who feed it, made Himself “the servant of all.”<sup>20</sup>

My Lords, these are the securities which we have in all the constituent parts of the body of this House. We know them, we reckon, we rest upon them, and commit safely the interests of India and of humanity into your hands. Therefore it is with confidence, that, ordered by the Commons,

I impeach Warren Hastings, Esquire, of high crimes and misdemeanors.

I impeach him in the name of the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament assembled, whose Parliamentary trust he has betrayed.

I impeach him in the name of all the Commons of Great Britain, whose national character he has dishonored.

I impeach him in the name of the people of India, whose laws, rights, and liberties he has subverted, whose properties he has destroyed, whose country he has laid waste and desolate.

I impeach him in the name and by virtue of those eternal laws of justice which he has violated.

I impeach him in the name of human nature itself, which he has cruelly outraged, injured, and oppressed, in both sexes, in every age, rank, situation, and condition of life.

<sup>20</sup> I. Cor., ix., 19, referring there to St. Paul and not to Christ.

REFLECTIONS ON THE REVOLUTION IN FRANCE

(1790)

(Selections)

On the forenoon of the fourth of November last,<sup>1</sup> Doctor Richard Price,<sup>2</sup> a Non-Conforming minister of eminence, preached at the Dissenting meeting-house of the Old Jewry,<sup>3</sup> to his club<sup>4</sup> or society, a very extraordinary miscellaneous sermon, in which there are some good moral and religious sentiments, and not ill expressed, mixed up with a sort of porridge of various political opinions and reflections: but the Revolution in France is the grand ingredient in the caldron. I consider the address transmitted<sup>5</sup> by the Revolution Society to the National Assembly, through Earl Stanhope,<sup>6</sup> as originating in the principles of the sermon, and as a corollary from them. . . .

Before I read that sermon, I really thought I had lived in a free country; and it was an error I cherished, because it gave me a greater liking to the country I lived in. I was, indeed, aware that a jealous, ever-waking vigilance, to guard the treasure of our liberty, not only from invasion, but from decay and corruption, was our best wisdom and our first duty. However, I considered that treasure rather as a possession to be secured than as a prize to be contended for. I did not discern how the present time came to be so very favourable to all exertions<sup>7</sup> in the cause of freedom. The present time differs from any other only by the circumstance of what is doing in France. If the example of that nation is to have an influence on this, I can easily conceive why some of their proceedings which have an unpleasant aspect, and are not quite reconcilable to humanity, generosity, good faith, and justice, are palliated with so much milky good-nature towards the actors, and borne with so much heroic fortitude towards the sufferers. It is certainly not prudent to discredit the authority of an example we mean to follow.

<sup>1</sup> The Reflections were published in November, 1790, in the form of a letter to Mr. Dupont, “a young gentleman at Paris.”

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Richard Price (1723–91), wrote on political and financial questions and is best known as the author of the scheme for redeeming the national debt by a permanent sinking fund, adopted by Pitt in 1786.

<sup>3</sup> An old London street, so called from the synagogue which stood there.

<sup>4</sup> i. e., the Revolution Society. It was formed in commemoration of the English Revolution of 1688, but it sympathized with the French Revolution.

<sup>5</sup> An address of sympathy to the National Assembly of France.

<sup>6</sup> Charles Stanhope, third Earl Stanhope (1753–1816), chairman of the Revolution Society.

<sup>7</sup> Dr. Price had invited the consideration of his hearers “to the favorableness of the present times to all exertions in the cause of liberty.”

But allowing this, we are led to a very natural question:—What is that cause of liberty, and what are those exertions in its favour, to which the example of France is so singularly auspicious? Is our monarchy to be annihilated, with all the laws, all the tribunals, and all the ancient corporations of the kingdom? Is every landmark of the country to be done away in favour of a geometrical and arithmetical constitution?<sup>8</sup> Is the House of Lords to be voted useless? Is Episcopacy to be abolished? Are the Church lands to be sold to Jews and jobbers, or given to bribe new-invented municipal republics<sup>9</sup> into a participation in sacrilege? Are all the taxes to be voted grievances, and the revenue reduced to a patriotic contribution or patriotic presents? Are silver shoe-buckles to be substituted in the place of the land-tax and the malt-tax, for the support of the naval strength of this kingdom. Are all orders, ranks, and distinctions to be confounded, that out of universal anarchy, joined to national bankruptcy, three or four thousand democracies<sup>10</sup> should be formed into eighty-three, and that they may all, by some sort of unknown attractive power, be organized into one? For this end is the army to be seduced from its discipline and its fidelity, first by every kind of debauchery, and then by the terrible precedent of a donative<sup>11</sup> in the increase of pay? Are the curates to be seduced from their bishops by holding out to them the delusive hope of a dole out of the spoils of their own order? Are the citizens of London to be drawn from their allegiance by feeding them at the expense of their fellow-subjects? Is a compulsory paper currency to be substituted in the place of the legal coin of this kingdom? Is what remains of the plundered stock of public revenue to be employed in the wild project of maintaining two armies to watch over and to fight with each other? If these are the ends and means of the Revolution Society, I admit that they are well assorted; and France may furnish them for both with precedents in point.<sup>12</sup> . . .

It is now sixteen or seventeen years since I saw the queen of France, then the Dauphiness,<sup>13</sup> at Versailles; and surely never lighted on this orb, which she hardly seemed to touch, a more delightful vision. I saw her just above the horizon, decorating and cheering the elevated sphere she just began to move in,—glittering like the morning-star, full of life and splendour and joy. Oh! what a revolution! and what an heart must I have, to contemplate without emotion, that elevation, and that fall! Little did I dream, when she added titles of veneration to those of enthusiastic, distant, respectful love, that she should ever be obliged to carry the sharp antidote against disgrace concealed in that bosom! little did I dream that I should have lived to see such disasters fallen upon her in a nation of gallant men, in a nation of men of honour, and of cavaliers! I thought ten thousand swords must have leaped from their scabbards to avenge even a look that threatened her with insult. But the age of chivalry is gone. That of sophisters, economists, and calculators has succeeded; and the glory of Europe is extinguished forever. Never, never more, shall we behold that generous loyalty to rank and sex, that proud submission, that dignified obedience, that subordination of the heart, which kept alive, even in servitude itself, the spirit of an exalted freedom! The unbought grace of life, the cheap defence of nations, the nurse of manly sentiment and heroic enterprise, is gone! It is gone, that sensibility of principle, that chastity of honour, which felt a stain like a wound, which inspired courage whilst it mitigated ferocity, which ennobled whatever it touched, and under which vice itself lost half its evil by losing all its grossness!

This mixed system of opinion and sentiment had its origin in the ancient chivalry; and the principle, though varied in its appearance by the varying state of human affairs, subsisted and influenced through a long succession of generations, even to the time we live in. If it should ever be totally extinguished, the loss, I fear, will be great. It is this which has given its character to modern Europe. It is this which has distinguished it under all its forms of government, and distinguished it to its advantage, from the states of Asia, and possibly from those states which flourished in the most brilliant periods of the antique world. It was this, which, without confounding ranks, had produced a noble equality, and handed it down through all the gradations of social life. It was this opinion which mitigated kings into companions, and raised private men to be fellows with kings. Without force or opposition, it subdued the fierceness of pride and power; it obliged sovereigns to submit to the soft collar of social esteem, compelled stern authority to submit to elegance, and gave a

<sup>8</sup> On the abolition of the old provinces by the National Assembly, France was divided into eighty-three departments.

<sup>9</sup> i. e., self-governing republics.

<sup>10</sup> i. e., the English municipalities. Burke, with many others, thought that France would break up into a number of independent republics.

<sup>11</sup> A gratuity.

<sup>12</sup> Every one of Burke's questions is suggested by some specific proceeding or occurrence in France, and for a full understanding of this passage they should be looked up.

<sup>13</sup> Marie Antoinette.

domination, vanquisher of laws, to be subdued by manners.

But now all is to be changed. All the pleasing illusions which make power gentle and obedience liberal, which harmonized the different shades of life, and which by a bland assimilation incorporated into politics the sentiments which beautify and soften private society, are to be dissolved by this new conquering empire of light and reason. All the decent drapery of life is to be rudely torn off. All the superadded ideas furnished from the wardrobe of a moral imagination, which the heart owns and the understanding ratifies, as necessary to cover the defects of our naked, shivering nature, and to raise it to dignity in our own estimation, are to be exploded as a ridiculous, absurd, and antiquated fashion.

On this scheme of things, a king is but a man, a queen is but a woman, a woman is but an animal,—and an animal not of the highest order. All homage paid to the sex in general as such, and without distinct views, is to be regarded as romance and folly. Regicide, and parricide, and sacrilege, are but fictions of superstition, corrupting jurisprudence by destroying its simplicity. The murder of a king, or a queen, or a bishop, or a father, are only common homicide,—and if the people are by any chance or in any way gainers by it, a sort of homicide much the most pardonable, and into which we ought not to make too severe a scrutiny. . . .

I flatter myself that I love a manly, moral, regulated liberty, as well as any gentleman of that society, be he who he will; and perhaps I have given as good proofs of my attachment to that cause, in the whole course of my public conduct. I think I envy liberty as little as they do to any other nation. But I cannot stand forward, and give praise or blame to anything which relates to human actions and human concerns on a simple view of the object, as it stands stripped of every relation, in all the nakedness and solitude of metaphysical abstraction. Circumstances (which with some gentlemen pass for nothing) give in reality to every political principle its distinguishing colour and discriminating effect. The circumstances are what render every civil and political scheme beneficial or noxious to mankind. Abstractedly speaking, government, as well as liberty, is good; yet could I, in common sense, ten years ago, have felicitated France on her enjoyment of a government, (for she then had a government), without inquiry what the nature of that government was, or how it was administered? . . .

Society is, indeed, a contract.<sup>14</sup> Subordinate contracts for objects of mere occasional interest may be dissolved at pleasure; but the state ought not to be considered as nothing better than a partnership agreement in a trade of pepper and coffee, calico or tobacco, or some other such low concern, to be taken up for a little temporary interest, and to be dissolved by the fancy of the parties. It is to be looked on with other reverence; because it is not a partnership in things subservient only to the gross animal existence of a temporary and perishable nature. It is a partnership in all science, a partnership in all art, a partnership in every virtue and in all perfection. As the ends of such a partnership cannot be obtained in many generations, it becomes a partnership not only between those who are living, but between those who are living, those who are dead, and those who are to be born. Each contract of each particular state is but a clause in the great primeval contract of eternal society, linking the lower with the higher natures, connecting the visible and invisible world, according to a fixed compact sanctioned by the inviolable oath which holds all physical and all moral natures each in their appointed place.

A LETTER TO A NOBLE LORD<sup>1</sup>

(1795)

(Abridged)

My Lord,<sup>2</sup>—I could hardly flatter myself with the hope that so very early in the season I should have to acknowledge obligations to the Duke of Bedford and to the Earl of Lauderdale. These noble persons have lost no time in conferring upon me that sort of honour which it is alone within their competence, and which it is certainly most congenial to their nature and their manners, to bestow.

<sup>14</sup> Burke adapts to his own use some of the ideas of Rousseau's celebrated book, Le Contrat Social, published in 1762. Locke and Rousseau thought that society was formed by a definite conscious act, that it was a contract or convention between governors and governed. Burke admits the principle of the contract, but makes a profounder application of it.

<sup>1</sup> In 1794, after the trial of Hastings, Burke prepared to retire from Parliament, being then in his sixty-fourth year. His son, Richard Burke, was nominated and elected to succeed his father, and arrangements were made to raise the elder Burke to the peerage. But in August, 1794, before he had taken his seat in the House, Richard Burke died, and Edmund Burke retired to his estate at Beaconsfield a broken man, with no further desire for the peerage, which his son's death made him regard as a hollow and useless honor. Pitt, who knew that Burke was in financial straits, had procured a pension of twenty-five hundred pounds a year for him from the Crown. The grant was opposed by the Duke of Bedford, and the Earl of Lauderdale on the ground that it was not sanctioned by Parliament. Their attack was answered by Burke in A Letter to a Noble Lord.

<sup>2</sup> Burke's Letter is addressed to Earl Fitz-William (1748-1833), a leader of the Irish Whigs, nephew and heir to the Marquis of Rockingham, under whom Burke had entered public life.

To be ill spoken of, in whatever language they speak, by the zealots of the new sect<sup>3</sup> in philosophy and politics, of which these noble persons think so charitably, and of which others think so justly, to me is no matter of uneasiness or surprise. To have incurred the displeasure of the Duke of Orleans<sup>4</sup> or the Duke of Bedford, to fall under the censure of the Citizen Brissot,<sup>5</sup> or of his friend the Earl of Lauderdale, I ought to consider as proofs, not the least satisfactory, that I have produced some part of the effect I proposed by my endeavours. I have laboured hard to earn what the noble Lords are generous enough to pay. Personal offence I have given them none. The part they take against me is from zeal to the cause. It is well,—it is perfectly well. I have to do homage to their justice. I have to thank the Bedfords and the Lauderales for having so faithfully and so fully acquitted towards me whatever arrear of debt was left undischarged by the Priestleys and the Paines.<sup>6</sup> . . .

In one thing I can excuse the Duke of Bedford for his attack upon me and my mortuary pension.<sup>7</sup> He cannot readily comprehend the transaction he condemns. What I have obtained was the fruit of no bargain, the production of no intrigue, the result of no compromise, the effect of no solicitation. The first suggestion of it never came from me, mediately or immediately, to his Majesty or any of his ministers. It was long known that the instant my engagements would permit it, and before the heaviest of all calamities<sup>8</sup> had forever condemned me to obscurity and sorrow, I had resolved on a total retreat. I had executed that design. I was entirely out of the way of serving or of hurting any statesman or any party, when the ministers so generously and so nobly carried into effect the spontaneous bounty of the crown. Both descriptions<sup>9</sup> have acted as became them. When I could no longer serve them, the ministers have considered my situation. When I could no longer hurt them, the revolutionists have trampled on my infirmity. My gratitude, I trust is equal to the manner in which the benefit was conferred. It came to me, indeed, at a time of life, and in a state of mind and body, in which no circumstance of fortune could afford me any real pleasure. But this was no fault in the royal donor, or in his ministers, who were pleased, in acknowledging the merits of an invalid servant of the public, to assuage the sorrows of a desolate old man.

It would ill become me to boast of anything. It would as ill become me, thus called upon, to depreciate the value of a long life spent with unexampled toil in the service of my country. Since the total body of my services, on account of the industry which was shown in them, and the fairness of my intentions, have obtained the acceptance of my sovereign, it would be absurd in me to range myself on the side of the Duke of Bedford and the Corresponding Society,<sup>10</sup> or, as far as in me lies, to permit a dispute on the rate at which the authority appointed by our Constitution<sup>11</sup> to estimate such things has been pleased to set them.

Loose libels ought to be passed by in silence and contempt. By me they have been so always. I knew, that, as long as I remained in public, I should live down the calumnies of malice and the judgments of ignorance. If I happened to be now and then in the wrong, (as who is not?) like all other men, I must bear the consequence of my faults and my mistakes. The libels of the present day are just of the same stuff as the libels of the past. But they derive an importance from the rank of the persons they come from, and the gravity of the place where they were uttered. In some way or other I ought to take some notice of them. To assert myself thus traduced is not vanity or arrogance. It is a demand of justice; it is a demonstration of gratitude. If I am unworthy, the ministers are worse than prodigal. On that hypothesis, I perfectly agree with the Duke of Bedford.

For whatever I have been (I am now no more) I put myself on my country. I ought to be allowed a reasonable freedom, because I stand upon my deliverance;<sup>12</sup> and no culprit ought to plead in irons. Even in the utmost latitude of defensive liberty, I wish to preserve all possible decorum. Whatever it may be in the eyes of these noble persons themselves, to me their situation calls for the most profound respect. If I should happen to trespass a little, which I trust I shall not, let it always be sup-

<sup>3</sup> The sympathizers with the French Revolution.

<sup>4</sup> A wealthy French aristocrat, who joined the ranks of the Revolutionists.

<sup>5</sup> Jean Pierre Brissot, a leader of the moderate Republicans in France, who were called Brissotins or Girondists. Lauderdale made his acquaintance in 1792.

<sup>6</sup> The more radical sympathizers with the Revolution.

<sup>7</sup> A pension given to one who is as good as dead.

<sup>8</sup> The death of his only son Richard to whom Burke would have transmitted the peerage had he obtained it.

<sup>9</sup> I. e., the ministers of the Crown and the members of the party whom Burke had "hurt," viz. the Revolutionists.

<sup>10</sup> The London Corresponding Society was a political organization with liberal principles.

<sup>11</sup> I. e., the King and the ministers; a fling at the French constitution.

<sup>12</sup> I. e., I insist upon my legal right to be heard; I appeal to the jury of public opinion.

posed that a confusion of characters may produce mistakes,—that, in the masquerades of the grand carnival of our age, whimsical adventures happen, odd things are said and pass off. If I should fail a single point in the high respect I owe to those illustrious persons, I cannot be supposed to mean the Duke of Bedford and the Earl of Lauderdale of the House of Peers, but the Duke of Bedford and the Earl of Lauderdale of Palace Yard,<sup>13</sup>—the Dukes and Earls of Brentford.<sup>14</sup> There they are on the pavement; there they seem to come nearer to my humble level, and, virtually at least, to have waived their high privilege. . . .

His Grace thinks I have obtained too much. I answer, that my exertions, whatever they have been, were such as no hopes of pecuniary reward could possibly excite; and no pecuniary compensation can possibly reward them. Between money and such services, if done by abler men than I am, there is no common principle of comparison: they are quantities incommensurable. Money is made for the comfort and convenience of animal life. It cannot be a reward for what mere animal life must, indeed, sustain, but never can inspire. With submission to his Grace, I have not had more than sufficient.<sup>15</sup> As to any noble use, I trust I know how to employ as well as he a much greater fortune than he possesses. In a more confined application, I certainly stand in need of every kind of relief and easement much more than he does. When I say I have not received more than I deserve, is this the language I hold to your Majesty? No! Far, very far, from it! Before that presence I claim no merit at all. Everything towards me is favour and bounty. One style to a gracious benefactor; another to a proud and insulting foe. . . .

I was not, like his Grace of Bedford, swaddled and rocked and dandled into a legislator: "Nitor in adversum"<sup>16</sup> is the motto for a man like me. I possessed not one of the qualities nor cultivated one of the arts, that recommend men to the favour and protection of the great. I was not made for a minion or a tool. As little did I follow the trade of winning the hearts by imposing on the understandings of the people.

<sup>13</sup> The Palace Yard is a courtyard outside the Houses of Parliament. Hence, by Bedford and Lauderdale of the Palace Yard, Burke means they should be regarded simply as men, and not as members of the House of Peers; considered outside or apart from their official position.

<sup>14</sup> In The Rehearsal, a farce by the Duke of Buckingham, the Two Kings of Brentford always appear together and do exactly the same thing. Brentford is a little village near London, and the ludicrous incongruity of the title has made the Two Kings of Brentford a byword.

<sup>15</sup> Whatever may be our theory of Edmund Burke's financial resources and speculations, it is certain that from 1769 he was never free from the annoyance of debt.

<sup>16</sup> I make my way against adverse circumstance. Ovid, Meta. II, 72.

At every step of my progress in life, (for in every step was I traversed and opposed,) and at every turnpike<sup>17</sup> I met, I was obliged to show my passport, and again and again to prove my sole title to the honour of being useful to my country, by a proof that I was not wholly unacquainted with its laws, and the whole system of its interests both abroad and at home. Otherwise, no rank, no toleration even, for me. I had no arts but manly arts. On them I have stood, and, please God, in spite of the Duke of Bedford and the Earl of Lauderdale, to the last gasp will I stand. . . .

The Duke of Bedford conceives that he is obliged to call the attention of the House of Peers to his Majesty's grant to me, which he considers as excessive<sup>18</sup> and out of all bounds.

I know not how it has happened, but it really seems, that, whilst his Grace was meditating his well-considered censure upon me, he fell into a sort of sleep. Homer nods,<sup>19</sup> and the Duke of Bedford may dream, and as dreams (even his golden dreams) are apt to be ill-pieced and incongruously put together, his Grace preserved his idea of reproach to me, but took the subject-matter from the crown grants to his own family. This is "the stuff of which his dreams are made."<sup>20</sup> In that way of putting things together his Grace is perfectly in the right. The grants to the House of Russell<sup>21</sup> were so enormous as not only to outrage economy, but even to stagger credibility. The Duke of Bedford is the leviathan<sup>22</sup> among all the creatures of the crown. He tumbles about his unwieldy bulk, he plays and frolics in the ocean of the royal bounty. Huge as he is, and whilst "he lies floating many a rood," he is still a creature. His ribs, his fins, his whalebone, his blubber, the very spiracles through which he spouts a torrent of brine<sup>23</sup> against his origin, and covers me all over with the spray, everything of him and about him is from the throne. Is it for him to question the dispensation of the royal favour?

I really am at a loss to draw any sort of

<sup>17</sup> Originally it meant a kind of turn stile made of pikes to obstruct the passage of an enemy, and Burke had in mind this early meaning.

<sup>18</sup> The grant was 2500£.

<sup>19</sup> In allusion to Horace's well-known line in the Ars Poetica, 359, "Sometimes even the good Homer nods."

<sup>20</sup> "We are such stuff as dreams are made on." Tempest IV, i, 157.

<sup>21</sup> John Russell, the founder of the house of Russell, was a gentleman of the chamber to Henry VIII, and was awarded large grants out of the plunder of the monasteries.

<sup>22</sup> "That sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all His works Created hugest that swims the ocean stream."

Par. Lost, I, 201.

<sup>23</sup> All that the Duke of Dedford possessed was derived from Crown grants to his ancestors; in opposing a similar grant to Burke, the Duke therefore "spouted against his origin."

parallel between the public merits of his Grace, by which he justifies the grants he holds, and these services of mine, on the favourable construction of which I have obtained what his Grace so much disapproves. In private life I have not at all the honour of acquaintance with the noble Duke; but I ought to presume, and it costs me nothing to do so, that he abundantly deserves the esteem and love of all who live with him. But as to public service, why, truly, it would not be more ridiculous for me to compare myself, in rank, in fortune, in splendid descent, in youth, strength, or figure, with the Duke of Bedford, than to make a parallel between his services and my attempts to be useful to my country. It would not be gross adulation, but uncivil irony, to say that he has any public merit of his own to keep alive the idea of the services by which his vast landed pensions were obtained. My merits, whatever they are, are original and personal: his are derivative. It is his ancestor, the original pensioner, that has laid up this inexhaustible fund of merit which makes his Grace so very delicate and exceptionable about the merit of all other grantees of the crown. Had he permitted me to remain in quiet, I should have said, "'Tis his estate: that's enough. It is his by law: what have I to do with it or its history?" He would naturally have said, on his side, "'Tis this man's fortune. He is as good now as my ancestor was two hundred and fifty years ago. I am a young man with very old pensions; he is an old man with very young pensions: that's all."

Why will his Grace, by attacking me, force me reluctantly to compare my little merit with that which obtained from the crown those prodigies of profuse donation by which he tramples on the mediocrity of humble and laborious individuals? I would willingly leave him to the Herald's College,<sup>24</sup> which the philosophy of the sans culottes,<sup>25</sup> (prouder by far than all the Garters, and Norroys, and Clarencieux, and Rouge Dragons, that ever pranced in a procession of what his friends call aristocrats and despots) will abolish with contumely and scorn. These historians, recorders, and blazoners of virtues and arms, differ wholly from that other description of historians, who never assign any act of politicians to a good motive. These gentle historians, on the contrary, dip their pens in nothing but the milk of human kindness. They seek no further for merit than the preamble of a patent<sup>27</sup> or the inscription on a tomb. With them every man created a peer is first an hero ready-made. They judge of every man's capacity for office by the offices he has filled; and the more offices, the more ability. Every general officer with them is a Marlborough,<sup>28</sup> every statesman a Burleigh,<sup>29</sup> every judge a Murray<sup>30</sup> or a Yorke.<sup>31</sup> They, who alive, were laughed at or pitied by all their acquaintance, make as good a figure as the best of them in the pages of Guillim,<sup>32</sup> Edmondson, and Collins.<sup>33</sup> To these recorders so full of good-nature to the great and prosperous, I would willingly leave the first Baron Russell and Earl of Bedford, and the merits of his grants. But the aulnager,<sup>34</sup> the weigher, the meter of grants, will not suffer us to acquiesce in the judgment of the prince reigning at the time when they were made. They are never good to those who earn them. Well, then, since the new grantees have war made on them by the old, and that the word of the sovereign is not to be taken, let us turn our eyes to history, in which great men have always a pleasure in contemplating the heroic origin of their house.

The first peer of the name, the first purchaser of the grants,<sup>35</sup> was a Mr. Russell, a person of an ancient gentleman's family, raised by being a minion of Henry the Eighth. As there generally is some resemblance of character to create these relations, the favourite was in all likelihood much such another as his master. The first of those immoderate grants was not taken from the ancient demesne of the crown, but from the recent confiscation of the ancient nobility of the land. The lion, having sucked the blood of his prey, threw the offal carcass to the jackal in waiting. Having tasted once the food of confiscation, the favourites became fierce and ravenous. This worthy favourite's first grant was from the lay nobility.<sup>36</sup> The second, infinitely improving on the enormity of the first, was from

<sup>27</sup> The official document granting the privileges of nobility.

<sup>28</sup> Duke of Marlborough (1650-1722), the victor of Blenheim, Oudenarde, and Malplaquet.

<sup>29</sup> Lord Burleigh (1520-88), a famous Elizabethan statesman.

<sup>30</sup> William Murray, Earl of Mansfield (1705-93), the founder of English commercial law.

<sup>31</sup> Philip Yorke (1690-1764), first Earl of Hardwicke, a celebrated judge of George II's reign.

<sup>32</sup> Guillim and Edmondson. Members of the College of Heralds.

<sup>33</sup> Collins compiled a Peerage of England.

<sup>34</sup> A royal officer who examined cloth and affixed a seal in guaranty of its quality or measure (Cent. Diet). The office existed until the reign of William III.

<sup>35</sup> A legal phrase, here signifying the first in the family to hold the grants.

<sup>36</sup> King Henry VIII gave to his favorite the manor of Amersham in Bucks, part of the estate of the Duke of Buckingham who was executed for treason in 1521.

<sup>24</sup> Heralds College or College of Arms, was instituted in the 15th century in England for the purpose of granting armorial bearings and tracing and preserving genealogies.

<sup>25</sup> Without breeches, a name given in derision to the French rabble.

<sup>26</sup> Macbeth, I, v. 19.

the plunder of the church. In truth, his Grace is somewhat excusable for his dislike to a grant like mine, not only in its quantity, but in its kind, so different from his own.

Mine was from a mild and benevolent sovereign: his from Henry the Eighth.

Mine had not its fund in the murder of any innocent person of illustrious rank, or in the pillage of any body of unoffending men. His grants were from the aggregate and consolidated funds of judgments iniquitously legal,<sup>37</sup> and from possessions voluntarily surrendered by the lawful proprietors with the gibbet at their door.

The merit of the grantee whom he derives from was that of being a prompt and greedy instrument of a levelling tyrant, who oppressed all descriptions of his people, but who fell with particular fury on everything that was great and noble. Mine has been in endeavouring to screen every man, in every class, from oppression, and particularly in defending the high and eminent, who, in the bad times of confiscating princes, confiscating chief governors, or confiscating demagogues, are the most exposed to jealousy, avarice, and envy.

The merit of the original grantee of his Grace's pensions was in giving his hand to the work, and partaking the spoil, with a prince who plundered a part of the national Church of his time and country. Mine was in defending the whole of the national Church of my own time and my own country, and the whole of the national Churches of all countries, from the principles and the examples which lead to ecclesiastical pillage, thence to a contempt of all prescriptive titles, thence to the pillage of all property, and thence to universal desolation.

The merit of the origin of his Grace's fortune was in being a favourite and chief adviser to a prince who left no liberty to their native country.<sup>38</sup> My endeavour was to obtain liberty for the municipal country<sup>39</sup> in which I was born, and for all descriptions and denominations in it. Mine was to support with unrelaxing vigilance every right, every privilege, every franchise, in this my adopted, my dearer, and more comprehensive country; and not only to preserve those rights in this chief seat of empire, but in every nation, in every land, in every climate, language, and religion, in the vast domain that still is under the protection, and the larger that was once under the protection, of the British crown.<sup>40</sup>

His founder's merits were, by arts in which he served his master and made his fortune, to bring poverty, wretchedness, and depopulation on his country. Mine were under a benevolent prince, in promoting the commerce, manufactures, and agriculture, of his kingdom,—in which his Majesty shows an eminent example, who even in his amusements is a patriot, and in hours of leisure an improver of his native soil.

His founder's merit was the merit of a gentleman raised by the arts of a court and the protection of a Wolsey to the eminence of a great and potent lord. His merit in that eminence was, by instigating a tyrant to injustice, to provoke a people to rebellion. My merit was to awaken the sober part of the country, that they might put themselves on their guard against any one potent lord, or any greater number of potent lords, or any combination of great leading men of any sort, if ever they should attempt to proceed in the same courses, but in the reverse order,—that is, by instigating a corrupted populace to rebellion, and, through that rebellion, introducing a tyranny yet worse than the tyranny which his Grace's ancestor supported, and of which he profited in the manner we behold in the despotism of Henry the Eighth.

The political merit of the first pensioner of his Grace's house, was that of being concerned as a councillor of state in advising, and in his person executing, the conditions of a dishonourable peace with France,<sup>41</sup>—the surrendering the fortress of Boulogne, then our outguard on the Continent. By that surrender, Calais, the key of France, and the bridle in the mouth of that power, was not many years afterwards finally lost. My merit has been in resisting the power and pride of France, under any form of its rule; but in opposing it with the greatest zeal and earnestness, when that rule appeared in the worst form it could assume,—the worst indeed which the prime cause and principle of all evil could possibly give it. It was my endeavour by every means to excite a spirit in the House, where I had the honour of a seat, for carrying on with early vigour and decision the most clearly just and necessary war that this or any nation ever carried on, in order to save my country from the iron yoke of its power, and from the more dreadful contagion of its principles,—to preserve, while

<sup>37</sup> Probably an allusion to the great sums of money amassed by Henry VII through the "iniquitously legal" proceedings of Empson and Dudley, and inherited by Henry VIII.

<sup>38</sup> Loose grammar. Their refers to Henry VIII and Russell.

<sup>39</sup> Ireland. Burke evidently means a land which is a separate and distinct country, but not a sovereign nation, like England.

<sup>40</sup> An allusion to the loss of the American colonies.

<sup>41</sup> Boulogne, which had been taken by Henry VIII in 1544, was restored to the French in 1550. The loss of Calais in 1558 is said to have caused Queen Mary's death.

they can be preserved, pure and untainted, the ancient, inbred integrity, piety, good nature, and good humour of the people of England,<sup>42</sup> from the dreadful pestilence which, beginning in France, threatens to lay waste the whole moral and in a great degree the whole physical world, having done both in the focus of its most intense malignity.

The labours of his Grace's founder merited the "curses, not loud, but deep,"<sup>43</sup> of the Commons of England, on whom he and his master had effected a complete Parliamentary Reform,<sup>44</sup> by making them, in their slavery and humiliation, the true and adequate representatives of a debased, degraded, and undone people. My 15 merits in having had an active, though not always an ostentatious share, in every one act, without exception, of undisputed constitutional utility in my time and in having supported, on all occasions, the authority, 20 the efficiency, and the privileges of the Commons of Great Britain. I ended my services by a recorded and fully reasoned assertion on their own journals of their constitutional rights, and a vindication of their constitutional con- 25 duct. I laboured in all things to merit their inward approbation, and (along with the assistants of the largest, the greatest, and best of my endeavours) I received their free, unbiassed, public, and solemn thanks.

Thus stands the account of the comparative merits of the crown grants which compose the Duke of Bedford's fortune as balanced against mine. In the name of common sense, why should the Duke of Bedford think that 35 none but the House of Russell are entitled to the favour of the crown? Why should he imagine that no king of England has been capable of judging of merit but King Henry the Eighth? Indeed, he will pardon me, he is a little mis- 40 taken: all virtue did not end in the first Earl of Bedford; all discernment did not lose its vision when his creator closed his eyes. Let him remit his rigour on the disproportion between merit and reward in others, and they 45 will make no inquiry into the origin of his fortune. They will regard with much more satisfaction, as he will contemplate with infinitely more advantage, whatever in his pedigree has been dulcified by an exposure to the influence 50 of heaven in a long flow of generations from the hard, acidulous, metallic tincture of the spring. It is little to be doubted that several of his forefathers in that long series have degenerated into honour and virtue. Let the Duke of Bedford (I am sure he will) reject with scorn and horror, the counsels of the lecturers, those 5 wicked panders to avarice and ambition, who would tempt him, in the troubles of his country, to seek another enormous fortune from the forfeitures of another nobility and the plunder of another Church. Let him (and I trust that 10 yet he will) employ all the energy of his youth and all the resources of his wealth to crush rebellious principles which have no foundation in morals, and rebellious movements that have no provocation in tyranny.

Then will be forgot the rebellions which, by a doubtful priority in crime, his ancestor had provoked and extinguished. On such a conduct in the noble Duke, many of his countrymen might, and with some excuse might, 20 give way to the enthusiasm of their gratitude, and, in the dashing style of some of the old declaimers, cry out, that, if the Fates had found no other way<sup>45</sup> in which they could give a Duke of Bedford and his opulence as props 25 to a tottering world, then the butchery of the Duke of Buckingham might be tolerated; it might be regarded even with complacency, whilst in the heir of confiscation they saw the sympathizing comforter of the martyrs, who 30 suffer under the cruel confiscation of this day, whilst they beheld with admiration his zealous protection of the virtuous and loyal nobility of France, and his manly support of his brethren, the yet standing nobility and gentry of his 35 native land. Then his Grace's merit would be pure and new and sharp, as fresh from the mint of honour. As he pleased, he might reflect honour on his predecessors, or throw it forward on those who were to succeed him. He might be the propagator of the stock of 40 honour, or the root of it, as he thought proper.

Had it pleased God to continue to me<sup>46</sup> the hopes of succession, I should have been, according to my mediocrity and the mediocrity 45 of the age I live in, a sort of founder of a family: I should have left a son, who, in all the points in which personal merit can be viewed, in science, in erudition, in genius, in taste, in honour, in generosity, in humanity, in every 50 liberal sentiment and every liberal accomplishment, would not have shown himself inferior to the Duke of Bedford, or to any of those whom he traces in his line. His Grace very soon would have wanted all plausibility in his 55 attack upon that provision which belonged

<sup>42</sup> When Burke speaks of good nature and good humour he means something more substantial and inward than mere good nature and good humour, and places these attributes together with integrity and piety in the very citadel of character.

<sup>43</sup> Macbeth, V. iii. 27.

<sup>44</sup> An ironical allusion to the attacks upon his own parliamentary reforms, made by the Duke of Bedford.

<sup>45</sup> Burke has in mind a passage from Lucan's Pharsalia, I. 33.

"But if our Fates severely have decreed
No way but this for Nero to succeed, etc."

<sup>46</sup> The death of Burke's only son destroyed these hopes.

more to mine than to me. He would soon have supplied every deficiency, and symmetrized every disproportion. It would not have been for that successor to resort to any stagnant, wasting reservoir of merit in me, or in any ancestry. He had in himself a salient, living spring of generous and manly action. Every day he lived he would have repurchased the bounty of the crown, and ten times more, if ten times more he had received. He was made a public creature, and had no enjoyment whatever but in the performance of some duty. At this exigent moment the loss of a finished man is not easily supplied.

But a Disposer whose power we are little able to resist, and whose wisdom it behooves us not at all to dispute, has ordained it in another manner, and (whatever my querulous weakness might suggest) a far better. The storm has gone over me; and I lie like one of those old oaks which the late hurricane has scattered about me. I am stripped of all my honours, I am torn up by the roots, and lie prostrate on the earth. There, and prostrate there, I most unfeignedly recognize the Divine justice, and in some degree submit to it. But whilst I humble myself before God I do not know that it is forbidden to repel the attacks of unjust and inconsiderate men. The patience of Job is proverbial. After some of the convulsive struggles of our irritable nature, he submitted himself, and repented in dust and ashes. But even so, I do not find him blamed for reprehending, and with a considerable degree of verbal asperity, those ill-natured neighbours of his who visited his dunghill to read moral, political, and economical lectures on his misery. I am alone. I have none to meet my enemies in the gate.<sup>47</sup> Indeed, my lord, I greatly deceive myself, if in this hard season<sup>48</sup> I would give a peck of refuse wheat for all that is called fame and honour in the world. This is the appetite but of a few. It is a luxury, it is a privilege, it is an indulgence for those who are at their ease. But we are all of us made to shun disgrace, as we are made to shrink from pain and poverty and disease. It is an instinct; and under the direction of reason, instinct is always in the right. I live in an inverted order. They who ought to have succeeded me are gone before me. They who should have been to me as posterity are in the place of ancestors. I owe to the dearest relation (which ever must subsist in memory) that act of piety which he would have performed to me: I owe it to him to show that he was not descended, as the Duke of Bedford would have it, from an unworthy parent.

The crown has considered me after long service: the crown has paid the Duke of Bedford by advance. He has had a long credit for any service which he may perform hereafter. He is secure, and long may he be secure, in his advance, whether he performs any services or not. But let him take care how he endangers the safety of that Constitution which secures his own utility or his own insignificance, or how he discourages those who take up even puny arms to defend an order of things which, like the sun of heaven, shines alike on the useful and the worthless. His grants are engrained in the public law of Europe, covered with the lawful hoar of innumerable ages. They are guarded by the sacred rules of prescription,<sup>49</sup> found in that full treasury of jurisprudence from which the jejune and penury of our municipal law has by degrees been enriched and strengthened. This prescription I had my share<sup>50</sup> (a very full share) in bringing to its perfection. The Duke of Bedford will stand as long as prescriptive law endures,—as long as the great, stable laws of property, common to us with all civilized nations, are kept in their integrity, and without the smallest intermixture of the laws, maxims, principles, or precedents of the Grand Revolution. They are secure against all changes but one. The whole Revolutionary system, institutes,<sup>51</sup> digest, code, novels, text, gloss, comment, are not only the same, but they are the very reverse, and the reverse fundamentally, of all the laws on which civil life has hitherto been upheld in all the governments of the world. The learned professors of the Rights of Man regard prescription not as a title to bar all claim set up against old possession, but they look on prescription as itself a bar against the possessor and proprietor. They hold an immemorial possession to be no more than a long continued and therefore an aggravated injustice.

Such are their ideas, such their religion, and such their law. But as to our country and our race, as long as the well-compacted structure

<sup>49</sup> In law a title or right accruing from long continued use or possession.

<sup>50</sup> Burke assisted in the passage of an act known as Sir George Temple's Nullem Tempus Act, according to which undisputed possession of land for sixty years constituted in itself a deed to the land which even the Crown could not assail or annul.

<sup>51</sup> Legal terms. The collection of Roman Laws made by the Emperor Justinian (A. D. 529 and known as the Justinian Code, consisted of the Pandects or Digest) (abstracts of legal opinions), the Institutes or Laws, and the Novels (supplemental ordinances or constitutions). The whole formed the Corpus Juris Civilis, or Civil Law. A gloss is a marginal note upon the text of the laws.

<sup>47</sup> Psalms, cxxvii, 3-5, "Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord; . . . they shall speak with thine enemies in the gate."

<sup>48</sup> It was a period of great financial depression. In 1795 Burke had published Thoughts and Details on Scarcity.

of our Church and State, the sanctuary, the holy of holies of that ancient law, defended by reverence, defended by power, a fortress at once and a temple, shall stand inviolate on the brow of the British Sion,—as long as the British monarchy, not more limited than fenced by the orders of the state, shall, like the proud Keep of Windsor, rising in the majesty of proportion, and girt with the double belt of its kindred and coeval towers, as long as this awful structure shall oversee and guard the subjected land,—so long the mounds and dikes of the low, fat, Bedford level<sup>52</sup> will have nothing to fear from all the pickaxes of all the levellers of France. As long as our sovereign lord the king, and his faithful subjects, the lords and commons of this realm,—the triple cord which no man can break,—the solemn, sworn, constitutional frank-pledge<sup>53</sup> of this nation,—the firm guarantees of each other's being and each other's rights,—the joint and several securities, each in its place and order, for every kind and every quality of property and of dignity,—as long as these endure, so long the Duke of Bedford is safe, and we are all safe together,—the high from the blights of envy and the spoliations of rapacity, the low from the iron hand of oppression and the insolent spurn of contempt. Amen! and so be it! and so it will be,—

*Dum domus Æneæ Capitolî immobili saxum
Accolet, imperiumque pater Romanus habebit.*<sup>54</sup>

But if the rude inroad of Gallic tumult,<sup>55</sup> with its sophistical rights of man to falsify the ac-

<sup>52</sup> "The great Bedford level which comprises upward of 300,000 acres and extends into six counties, with its principle area in Cambridgeshire, is the largest tract of fen-land in the Kingdom." Duke of Bedford: The Story of a Great Agricultural Estate.

<sup>53</sup> Among the early English each household in a tithing or aggregation of ten families was responsible for the offences of the other households and bound to give satisfaction for any injury done. This system of common responsibility was known as a frank-pledge, or the pledge of freemen. Burke represents the Crown, the Parliament, and the People, the "triple cord which no man can break," as bound to each other by a similar pledge of mutual obligation and responsibility.

<sup>54</sup> As long as the house of Æneas holds the immovable rock

Of the Capitol hill, and the grand old Roman continues to rule.

Æn. IX. 448, 449.

<sup>55</sup> An allusion to the story of Brennus the Gaul, whose night attack upon the Capitol (390 B. C.) was frustrated by the cackling of the geese of Juno and the bravery of Manlius Capitolinus. After a six-months' siege the garrison bought Brennus off with one thousand pounds of gold. When the gold was being weighed, a Roman tribune, according to the story, remonstrated against the use of false weights by the Gauls. Brennus threw his sword into the scale with the exclamation Væ victis! (Woe to the conquered!). In Burke's pregnant allusion the English Constitution is the Capitol endangered by the Gallic invasion of revolutionary ideas. The French theories of the "Rights of Man" are the "false weights" and the Reign of Terror, with its violence and bloodshed, is the sword thrown into the scale.

count, and its sword as a make-weight to throw into the scale, shall be introduced into our city by a misguided populace, set on by proud great men, themselves blinded and intoxicated by a frantic ambition, we shall all of us perish and be overwhelmed in a common ruin. If a great storm blow on our coast, it will cast the whales on the strand, as well as the periwinkles.<sup>56</sup> His Grace will not survive the poor grantee he despises,—no, not for a twelve-month. If the great look for safety in the services they render to this Gallic cause, it is to be foolish even above the weight of privilege allowed to wealth. If his Grace be one of these whom they endeavour to proselytize, he ought to be aware of the character of the sect whose doctrines he is invited to embrace. With them insurrection is the most sacred of revolutionary duties to the state. Ingratitude to benefactors is the first of revolutionary virtues. Ingratitude is, indeed, their four cardinal virtues<sup>57</sup> compacted and amalgamated into one; and he will find it in everything that has happened since the commencement of the philosophic Revolution to this hour. If he pleads the merit of having performed the duty of insurrection against the order he lives in, (God forbid he ever should!) the merit of others will be to perform the duty of insurrection against him. If he pleads (again God forbid he should, and I do not suspect he will) his ingratitude to the crown for its creation of his family, others will plead their right and duty to pay him in kind. They will laugh, indeed they will laugh, at his parchment and his wax. His deeds will be drawn out with the rest of the lumber of his evidence-room, and burnt to the tune of Ça ira<sup>58</sup> in the courts of Bedford<sup>59</sup> (then Equal-ity) House.

William Cowper

1731-1800

LETTERS FROM OLNEY

TO THE REV. WILLIAM UNWIN<sup>1</sup>

October 31, 1779.

MY DEAR FRIEND—I wrote my last letter merely to inform you that I had nothing to

<sup>56</sup> Sea-anails.

<sup>57</sup> In ancient philosophy were justice, prudence, temperance, and fortitude.

<sup>58</sup> The opening words of a popular song of the French Revolution, meaning "That will go."

<sup>59</sup> The London mansion of the Duke of Bedford, which formerly occupied the north side of Bloomsbury Square. It was torn down by the Duke of Bedford soon after the publication of Burke's letter and Russell Square laid out on its site.

<sup>1</sup> One of Cowper's dearest friends. He was the son of Rev. Morley and Mary Unwin, who exercised a great and helpful influence on Cowper's life.

say, in answer to which you have said nothing. I admire the propriety of your conduct, though I am a loser by it. I will endeavour to say something now, and shall hope for something in return.

I have been well entertained with Johnson's biography,<sup>2</sup> for which I thank you: with one exception, and that a swinging one, I think he has acquitted himself with his usual good sense and sufficiency. His treatment of Milton 10 is unmerciful to the last degree. A pensioner<sup>3</sup> is not likely to spare a republican, and the Doctor, in order, I suppose to convince his royal patron of the sincerity of his monarchical principles, has belaboured that great poet's 15 character with the most industrious cruelty. As a man, he has hardly left him the shadow of one good quality. Churlishness in his private life, and a rancorous hatred of everything royal in his public, are the two colours with 20 which he has smeared all the canvas. If he had any virtues, they are not to be found in the Doctor's picture of him, and it is well for Milton that some sourness in his temper is the only vice with which his memory has been 25 charged; it is evident enough that if his biographer could have discovered more he would not have spared him. As a poet, he has treated him with severity enough, and has plucked one or two of the most beautiful feathers out of 30 his Muse's wing, and trampled them under his great foot. He has passed sentence of condemnation upon Lycidas, and has taken occasion, from that charming poem, to expose to ridicule (what is indeed ridiculous enough) 35 the childish trattlement of pastoral compositions, as if Lycidas was the prototype and pattern of them all. The liveliness of the description, the sweetness of the numbers, the classical spirit of antiquity, that prevails in it, 40 go for nothing. I am convinced, by the way, that he has no ear for poetical numbers, or that it was stopped by prejudice against the harmony of Milton's. Was there ever anything so delightful as the music of the Paradise 45 Lost? It is like that of a fine organ, has the fullest and the deepest tones of majesty, with all the softness and elegance of the Dorian flute; variety without end, and never equalled, unless perhaps by Virgil. Yet the Doctor 50 has little or nothing to say upon this copious theme, but talks something about the unfitness of the English language for blank verse, and how apt it is, in the mouth of some readers, to degenerate into declamation. Oh! I could thrash his old jacket till I made his pensioner jingle in his pockets.

I could talk a good while longer, but I have 5 no room. Our love attends yourself, Mrs. Unwin, and Miss Shuttleworth, not forgetting the two miniature pictures at your elbow. Yours affectionately, W. C.

TO THE REV. JOHN NEWTON<sup>1</sup>

May 3, 1780.

Dear Sir—You indulge me in such a variety of subjects, and allow me such a latitude of excursion in this scribbling employment, that I have no excuse for silence. I am much obliged to you for swallowing such boluses as I send you, for the sake of my gilding, and verily believe I am the only man alive from whom they would be welcome to a palate like yours. I wish I could make them more splendid than they are, more alluring to the eye at least, if not more pleasing to the taste; but my gold-leaf is tarnished, and has received such a tinge from the vapours that are ever brooding over my mind, that I think that no small proof of your partiality to me that you will read my letters. I am not fond of long-winded metaphors; I have always observed that they halt at the latter end of their progress, and so does mine. I deal much in ink, indeed, but not such ink as is employed by poets and writers of essays. Mine is a harmless fluid, and guilty of no deceptions but such as may prevail without the least injury to the person imposed on. I 35 draw mountains, valleys, woods, and streams, and ducks, and dab-chicks.<sup>2</sup> I admire them myself, and Mrs. Unwin admires them; and her praise and my praise put together are fame enough for me. Oh! I could spend whole days and moonlight nights in feeding upon a lovely prospect! My eyes drink the rivers as they flow. If every human being upon the earth could think, for one quarter of an hour, as I have done for many years, there might perhaps be many miserable men among them, but not an unawakened one would be found, from the Arctic to the Antarctic circle. At present, the difference between them and me is greatly to their advantage. I delight in baubles, and know them to be so; for rested in, and viewed without a reference to their Author, what is the earth, what are the planets, what is the sun itself but a bauble? Better for a man never to have seen them, or to see them with the eyes of a brute, stupid and unconscious of what he beholds, than not to be able to say,

<sup>1</sup> Dr. Samuel Johnson's Life of Milton, which appeared 55 in 1779. It was one of the biographical prefaces which Johnson had agreed to furnish for an edition of the English Poets. These prefaces, collected and published by themselves, are known as Johnson's Lines of the Poets.

<sup>2</sup> In 1762 Johnson was granted a pension of £300 a year.

<sup>1</sup> John Newton (1725–1807), an English clergyman and hymn writer, who was joint-author with Cowper of the Olney Hymns.

<sup>2</sup> A newly hatched chick.

"The Maker of all these wonders is my friend." Their eyes have never been opened to see that they are trifles; mine have been, and will be till they are closed forever. They think a fine estate, a large conservatory, a hothouse rich as a West Indian garden, things of consequence: visit them with pleasure, and muse upon them with ten times more. I am pleased with a frame of four lights, doubtful whether the few pines it contains will ever be worth a 10 farthing; amuse myself with a greenhouse which Lord Bute's gardener could take upon his back and walk away with; and when I have paid it the accustomed visit, and watered it, and given it air, I say to myself—"This is not 15 mine, 'tis a plaything lent me for the present; I must leave it soon." W. C.

TO THE SAME

August 21, 1780.

The following occurrence ought not to be passed over in silence, in a place where so few notable ones are to be met with. Last Wednesday night, while we were at supper, between the hours of eight and nine, I heard an unusual 25 noise in the back parlour, as if one of the hares was entangled, and endeavouring to disengage herself. I was just going to rise from the table when it ceased. In about five minutes a voice on the outside of the parlour door inquired 30 if one of my hares had got away. I immediately rushed into the next room, and found that my poor favorite Puss<sup>1</sup> had made her escape. She had gnawed in sunder the strings of the lattice-work, with which I thought I had sufficiently 35 secured the window, and which I preferred to any other sort of blind, because it admitted plenty of air. From thence I hastened to the kitchen, where I saw the redoubtable Thomas Freeman, who told me, that having seen her, 40 just after she dropped into the street, he attempted to cover her with his hat, but she screamed out, and leaped directly over his head. I then desired him to pursue as fast as possible, and added Richard Coleman to the 45 chase, as being nimbler, and carrying less weight than Thomas; not expecting to see her again, but desirous to learn, if possible, what became of her. In something less than an hour Richard returned, almost breathless, 50 with the following account. That soon after he began to run, he left Tom behind him, and came in sight of a most numerous hunt of men, women, children, and dogs; and that he did his best to keep back the dogs, and presently outstripped the crowd, so that the race was at 55 last disputed between himself and Puss—she ran right through the town, and down the lane that leads to Dropshort—a little before she came to the house, he got the start and turned her; she pushed for the town again, and soon after she entered it sought shelter in Mr. Wagstaff's tanyard, adjoining to old Mr. Drake's—Sturge's harvest men were at supper, and saw her from the opposite side of the way. There she encountered the tan-pits full of water; and while she was struggling out of one pit and plunging into another, and almost drowned, one of the men drew her out by the ears and secured her. She was then well washed in a bucket, to get the lime out of her coat, and brought home in a sack at ten o'clock.

<sup>1</sup> i. e., one of his pet hares.

This frolic cost us four shillings, but you may believe we did not grudge a farthing of it. The poor creature received only a little hurt in one of her claws, and in one of her ears, and is now almost as well as ever.

I do not call this an answer to your letter, but such as it is I send it, presuming upon that interest which I know you take in my minutest concerns, which I cannot express better than in the words of Terence, a little varied—Nihil 25 mei a te alienum putas.<sup>2</sup>

Yours, my dear friend, W. C.

TO THE SAME (EXTRACT)

June 12, 1793.

As to myself, I have always the same song to sing—well in body, but sick in spirit: sick 30 nigh unto death.

"Seasons return, but not to me returns
God, or the sweet approach of heavenly day,
Or sight of cheering truth, or pardon seal'd,
Or joy, or hope; or Jesus' face divine;
But cloud,"<sup>1</sup> etc.

I could easily set my complaint to Milton's tune, and accompany him through the whole passage, on the subject of a blindness more deplorable than his; but time fails me.

Edward Gibbon

1737–1794

GIBBON IS INSPIRED TO WRITE
HIS HISTORY(From Autobiography)

June, 1765.

The pilgrimage to Italy, which I now accomplished, had long been the object of my curious <sup>2</sup> "You think nothing which concerns me unimportant to you." A modification of the oft-quoted passage in Terence: Homo sum: humani nihil a me alienum puto (I am a man: I consider nothing alien to me which concerns humanity).

<sup>1</sup> A significant paraphrase of Par. Lost, III. 41–45. V. p. 223, supra.

devotion. The passage of Mount Cenis, the regular streets of Turin, the Gothic cathedral of Milan, the scenery of the Boromean Islands, the marble palaces of Genoa, the beauties of Florence, the wonders of Rome, the curiosities of Naples, the galleries of Bologna, the singular aspect of Venice, the amphitheatre of Verona, and the Palladian architecture of Vicenza, are still present to my imagination. I read the Tuscan writers on the banks of the Arno; but my conversation was with the dead rather than the living, and the whole College of Cardinals was of less value in my eyes than the transfiguration of Raphael, the Apollo of the Vatican, or the massy greatness of the Coliseum. It was at Rome, on the fifteenth of October, 1764, as I sat musing amidst the ruins of the Capitol, while the barefooted friars were singing vespers in the temple of Jupiter, that the idea of writing the decline and fall of the City first started to my mind. After Rome has kindled and satisfied the enthusiasm of the Classic pilgrim, his curiosity for all meaner objects insensibly subsides.

BOETHIUS

(From The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, 1776-88)

The senator Boethius<sup>1</sup> is the last of the Romans whom Cato or Tully could have acknowledged for their countryman. As a wealthy orphan, he inherited the patrimony and honors of the Anician family, a name ambitiously assumed by the kings and emperors of the age; and the appellation of Manlius asserted his genuine or fabulous descent from a race of consuls and dictators, who had repulsed the Gauls from the Capitol, and sacrificed their sons to the discipline of the republic. In the youth of Boethius, the studies of Rome were not totally abandoned; a Virgil is now extant, corrected by the hand of a consul; and the professors of grammar, rhetoric, and jurisprudence, were maintained in their privileges and pensions by the liberality of the Goths. But the erudition of the Latin language was insufficient to satiate his ardent curiosity; and Boethius is said to have employed eighteen laborious years in the schools of Athens, which were supported by the zeal, the learning and the diligence of Proclus and his disciples. The reason and piety of their Roman pupil were fortunately saved from the contagion of mystery and magic, which polluted the groves of the academy; but he imbibed the spirit, and imitated the method of his dead and living masters, who attempted to reconcile the strong and subtle sense of Aristotle with the devout contemplation and sublime fancy of Plato. After his return to Rome, and his marriage with the daughter of his friend, the patrician Symmachus, Boethius still continued, in a palace of ivory and marble, to prosecute the same studies. The church was edified by his profound defence of the orthodox creed against the Arian, the Eutychian, and the Nestorian heresies; and the Catholic unity was explained or exposed in a formal treatise by the indifference of three distinct though consubstantial persons. For the benefit of his Latin readers, his genius submitted to teach the first element of the arts and sciences of Greece. The geometry of Euclid, the music of Pythagoras, the arithmetic of Nicomachus, the mechanics of Archimedes, the astronomy of Ptolemy, the theology of Plato, and the logic of Aristotle, with the commentary of Porphyry, were translated and illustrated by the indefatigable pen of the Roman senator. And he alone was esteemed capable of describing the wonders of art, a sun-dial, a water-clock, or a sphere which represented the motions of the planets. From these abstruse speculations, Boethius stooped, or to speak more truly he rose to the social duties of public and private life; the indigent were relieved by his liberality; and his eloquence, which flattery might compare to the voice of Demosthenes or Cicero, was uniformly exerted in the cause of innocence and humanity. Such conspicuous merit was felt and rewarded by a discerning prince; the dignity of Boethius was adorned with the titles of consul and patrician, and his talents were usefully employed in the important station of master of the offices. Notwithstanding the equal claims of the East and West, his two sons were created, in their tender youth, the consuls of the same year. On the memorable day of their inauguration, they proceeded in solemn pomp from their palace to the forum amidst the applause of the senate and people; and their joyful father, the true consul of Rome, after pronouncing an oration in the praise of his royal benefactor, distributed a triumphal largess in the games of the circus. Prosperous in his fame and fortunes, in his public honors and private alliances, in the cultivation of science and the consciousness of virtue, Boethius might have been styled happy, if that precarious epithet could be safely applied before the last term of the life of man.

<sup>1</sup> Anician Manlius Severinus Boethius (c. 475-524 A. D.), author of The Consolation of Philosophy. He was consul in 510, and was put to death on a charge of treason by Theodoric the Ostrogoth, who ruled over the kingdom of the East-Goths (which included Italy), 493-527 A. D.

A philosopher, liberal of his wealth and parsimonious of his time, might be insensible to the common allurements of ambition, the thirst of gold and employment. And some credit may be due to the asseveration of Boethius, that he had reluctantly obeyed the divine Plato, who enjoins every virtuous citizen to rescue the state from the usurpation of vice and ignorance. For the integrity of his public conduct he appeals to the memory of his country. His authority had restrained the pride and oppression of the royal officers, and his eloquence had delivered Paulinus from the dogs of the palace.<sup>2</sup> He had always pitied, and often relieved, the distress of the provincials, whose fortunes were exhausted by public and private rapine; and Boethius alone had courage to oppose the tyranny of the Barbarians, elated by conquest, excited by avarice, and, as he complains, encouraged by impunity. In these honorable contests his spirit soared above the consideration of danger, and perhaps of prudence; and we may learn from the example of Cato, that a character of pure and inflexible virtue is the most apt to be misled by prejudice, to be heated by enthusiasm, and to confound private enmities with public justice. The disciple of Plato might exaggerate the infirmities of nature, and the imperfections of society; and the mildest form of a Gothic kingdom, even the weight of allegiance and gratitude, must be insupportable to the free spirit of a Roman patriot. But the favor and fidelity of Boethius declined in just proportion with the public happiness; and an unworthy colleague was imposed, to divide and control the power of the master of the offices. In the last gloomy season of Theodoric, he indignantly felt that he was a slave; but as his master had only power over his life, he stood without arms and without fear against the face of an angry Barbarian, who had been provoked to believe that the safety of the senate was incompatible with his own. The senator Albinus<sup>3</sup> was accused and already convicted on the presumption of hoping, as it was said, the liberty of Rome. "If Albinus be criminal," exclaimed the orator, "the senate and myself are all guilty of the same crime. If we are innocent, Albinus is equally entitled to the protection of the laws." These laws might not have punished the simple and barren wish of an unattainable blessing; but they would have shown less indulgence to the rash confession of Boethius, that had he known of a conspiracy, the tyrant never should. The advocate of Albinus was soon involved in the danger and perhaps the guilt of his client; their signature (which they denied as a forgery) was affixed to the original address, inviting the emperor<sup>4</sup> to deliver Italy from the Goths; and three witnesses of honorable rank, perhaps of infamous reputation, attested the treasonable designs of the Roman patrician. Yet his innocence must be presumed, since he was deprived by Theodoric of the means of justification, and rigorously confined in the tower of Pavia, while the senate, at the distance of five hundred miles, pronounced a sentence of confiscation and death against the most illustrious of its members. At the command of the Barbarians, the occult science of a philosopher was stigmatized with the names of sacrilege and magic. A devout and dutiful attachment to the senate was condemned as criminal by the trembling voices of the senators themselves; and their ingratitude deserved the wish or prediction of Boethius, that, after him none should be found guilty of the same offence.

<sup>2</sup> The attacks of Boethius on corruption and misgovernment, aroused the enmity of the evil men who finally ruined him. His protection of the wealthy Paulinus from the avarice and rapacity of certain men at Court was calculated to provoke these palatine canes (dogs of the palace), as Boethius calls them, to measures of revenge.

<sup>3</sup> His defence of Albinus was one of the chief causes of the downfall of Boethius. By saving Albinus from punishment, Boethius incurred the hatred of a certain informer named Cyprianus.

While Boethius, oppressed with fetters, expected each moment the sentence or the stroke of death, he composed, in the tower of Pavia, the Consolation of Philosophy; a golden volume, not unworthy of the leisure of Plato or Tully, but which claims incomparable merit from the barbarism of the times and the situation of the author. The celestial guide, whom he had so long invoked at Rome and Athens, now condescended to illumine his dungeon, to revive his courage, and to pour into his wounds her salutary balm. She taught him to compare his long prosperity and his recent distress, and to conceive new hopes from the inconstancy of fortune. Reason had informed him of the precarious condition of her gifts; experience had satisfied him of their real value; he had enjoyed them without guilt; he might resign them without a sigh, and calmly disdain the impotent malice of his enemies, who had left him happiness, since they had left him virtue. From the earth, Boethius ascended to heaven in search of the Supreme Good; explored the metaphysical labyrinth of chance and destiny, of prescience and free will, of time and eternity; and generously attempted to reconcile the perfect attributes of the Deity with the apparent disorders of his moral and physical government. Such topics of consolation so obvious, so vague, or so abstruse, are ineffectual to subdue the feelings of human nature. Yet the sense of misfortune may be diverted by the labor of thought; and the sage who could artfully combine in the same work the various riches of philosophy, poetry, and eloquence, must already have possessed the intrepid calmness which he affected to seek. Suspense, the worst of evils, was at length determined by the ministers of death, who executed, and perhaps exceeded, the inhuman mandate of Theodoric. A strong cord was fastened round the head of Boethius, and forcibly tightened, till his eyes almost started from their sockets; and some mercy may be discovered in the milder torture of beating him with clubs till he expired. But his genius survived to diffuse a ray of knowledge over the darkest ages of the Latin world; the writings of the philosopher were translated by the most glorious of the English kings,<sup>5</sup> and the third emperor by the name of Otho removed to a more honorable tomb the bones of a Catholic saint,<sup>6</sup> who from his Arian persecutors, had acquired the honors of martyrdom, and the fame of miracles.

<sup>4</sup> Justin I, Emperor of the Byzantine, or Eastern, Empire, 518-527.

THE CAUSES OF THE RUIN OF ROME

(From the same)

After a diligent inquiry, I can discern four principal causes of the ruin of Rome, which continued to operate in a period of more than a thousand years. I. The injuries of time and nature. II. The hostile attacks of the Barbarians and Christians. III. The use and abuse of the materials. And, IV. The domestic quarrels of the Romans. I. The art of man is able to construct monuments far more permanent than the narrow span of his own existence; yet these monuments like himself, are perishable and frail; and in the boundless annals of time, his life and his labors must equally be measured as a fleeting moment. Of a simple and solid edifice, it is not easy, however, to circumscribe the duration. As the wonders of ancient days, the pyramids, attracted the curiosity of the ancients; a hundred generations, the leaves of autumn, have dropped into the grave; and after the fall of the Pharaohs and Ptolemies, the Cæsars and caliphs, the same pyramids stand erect and unshaken above the floods of the Nile. A complex figure of various and minute parts is more accessible to injury and decay; and the silent lapse of time is often accelerated by hurricanes and earthquakes, by fires and inundations. The air and earth have doubtless been shaken; and the lofty turrets of Rome have tottered from their foundations; but the Seven Hills do not appear to be placed on the great cavities of the globe; nor has the city, in any age, been exposed to the convulsions of nature, which, in the climate of Antioch, Lisbon, or Lima,<sup>1</sup> have crumbled in a few moments the works of ages into dust. Fire is the most powerful agent of life and death: the rapid mischief may be kindled and propagated by the industry or negligence of mankind; and every period of the Roman annals is marked by the repetition of similar calamities. A memorable conflagration, the guilt or misfortune of Nero's reign, continued, though with unequal fury, either six, or nine days. Innumerable buildings, crowded in close and crooked streets, supplied perpetual fuel for the flames; and when they ceased, four only of the fourteen regions were left entire; three were totally destroyed, and seven were deformed by the relics of smoking and lacerated edifices. In the full meridian of empire, the metropolis arose with fresh beauty from her ashes, yet the memory of the old deplored their irreparable losses, the arts of Greece, the trophies of victory, the monuments of primitive or fabulous antiquity. In the days of distress and anarchy, every wound is mortal, every fall irretrievable; nor can the damage be restored either by the public care of government, or the activity of private interest. Yet two causes may be alleged, which render the calamity of fire more destructive to a flourishing than a decayed city. 1. The more combustible materials of brick, timber, and metals, are first melted or consumed; but the flames may play without injury or effect on the naked walls, and massy arches, that have been despoiled of their ornaments. 2. It is among the common and plebeian habitations, that a mischievous spark is most easily blown to a conflagration; but as soon as they are devoured, the greater edifices, which have resisted or escaped, are left as so many islands in a state of solitude and safety. From her situation, Rome is exposed to the danger of frequent inundations. Without excepting the Tyber, the rivers that descend from either side of the Apennine have a short and irregular course; a shallow stream in the summer heats; an impetuous torrent, when it is swelled in the spring or winter, by the fall of rain, and the melting of the snows. When the current is repelled from the sea by adverse winds, when the ordinary bed is inadequate to the weight of waters, they rise above the banks, and overspread, without limits or control, the plains and cities of the adjacent country. Soon after the triumph of the first Punic war, the Tyber was increased by unusual rains; and the inundation, surpassing all former measure of time and place, destroyed all the buildings that were situate below the hills of Rome. According to the variety of ground, the same mischief was produced by different means; and the edifices were either swept away by the sudden impulse, or dissolved and undermined by the long continuance, of the flood. Under the reign of Augustus, the same calamity was renewed, the lawless river overturned the palaces and temples on its banks; and, after the labors of the emperor in cleansing and widening the bed that was encumbered with ruins, the vigilance of his successors was exercised by similar dangers and designs. The project of diverting into new channels the Tyber itself, or some of the dependent streams, was long opposed by superstition and local interests; nor did the use compensate the toil and cost of the tardy and imperfect execution. The servitude of rivers is the noblest and most important victory which man has obtained over the licentiousness of nature; and if such were the ravages of the Tyber under a firm and active government what could oppose, or who can enumerate, the injuries of the city, after the fall of the Western empire? A remedy was at length produced by the evil itself: the accumulation of rubbish and earth, that has been washed down from the hills, is supposed to have elevated the plain of Rome, fourteen or fifteen feet, perhaps, above the ancient level; and the modern city is less accessible to the attacks of the river. . . .

<sup>5</sup> Alfred, The Great. V. p. 21, supra.

<sup>6</sup> "After his death Boethius came to be regarded by the church of Rome as a martyr for the orthodox faith, and was canonized as St. Severinus. Many works on doctrinal theology have been attributed to him, but modern scholars are not agreed as to his authorship of them, nor even as to his having been a Christian at all." W. J. Sedgefield.

<sup>1</sup> Antioch has suffered repeatedly from earthquakes; Lisbon was nearly destroyed by earthquake in 1755, some twenty years before Gibbon began to publish his History; Lima suffered severely from an earthquake in 1746.

IV. I have reserved for the last, the most potent and forcible cause of destruction, the domestic hostilities of the Romans themselves. Under the dominion of the Greek and French emperors, the peace of the city was disturbed by accidental, though frequent, seditions: it is from the decline of the latter, from the beginning of the tenth century, that we may date the licentiousness of private war, which violated with impunity the laws of the Code and the Gospel, without respecting the majesty of the absent sovereign, or the presence and person of the vicar of Christ. In a dark period of five hundred years, Rome was perpetually afflicted by the sanguinary quarrels of the nobles and the people, the Guelphs and the Ghibelines;<sup>2</sup> the Colonna and Ursini;<sup>3</sup> and if much has escaped the knowledge, and much is unworthy of the notice, of history, I have exposed in the two preceding chapters the causes and effects of the public disorders. At such a time, when every quarrel was decided by the sword, and none could trust their lives or properties to the impotence of law, the powerful citizens were armed for safety, or offence, against the domestic enemies whom they feared or hated. Except Venice alone, the same dangers and designs were common to all the free republics of Italy; and the nobles usurped the prerogative of fortifying their houses, and erecting strong towers, that were capable of resisting a sudden attack. The cities were filled with these hostile edifices, and the example of Lucca, which contained three hundred towers; her law, which confined their height to the measure of fourscore feet, may be extended with suitable latitude to the more opulent and populous states. The first step of the senator Brancalcione<sup>4</sup> in the establishment of peace and justice, was to demolish (as we have already seen) one hundred and forty of the towers of Rome; and, in the last days of anarchy and discord, as late as the reign of Martin the Fifth,<sup>5</sup> forty-four still stood in one of the thirteen or fourteen regions of the city. To this mischievous purpose the remains of antiquity were most readily adapted: the temples and arches afforded a broad and solid basis for the new structures of brick and stone; and we can name the modern towers that were raised on the triumphal monuments of Julius Cæsar, Titus, and the Antonines. With some slight alterations, a theatre, an amphitheatre, a mausoleum, was transformed into a strong and spacious citadel. I need not repeat that the mole of Adrian has assumed the title and form of the Castle of St. Angelo, the Septizonium<sup>6</sup> of Severus was capable of standing against a royal army; the sepulcher of Metella has sunk under its outworks; the theatres of Pompey and Marcellus were occupied by the Savelli and Ursini families; and the rough fortress has been gradually softened to the splendor and elegance of an Italian

<sup>2</sup> The names of two great contending parties in Germany and Italy during the Middle Ages. The Guelphs were the popular party, and were on the side of the Pope; the Ghibelines were the aristocratic and imperial party, and were on the side of the Emperor.

<sup>3</sup> Two noble and influential Italian families whose long rivalry is closely related to Italian history. The Colonna were identified with the Ghibeline party, while the Ursini were allied with the Guelphs.

<sup>4</sup> Dandolo Brancalcione was elected podestà, or senator, of Rome in 1253. He repressed the nobles, and forced Pope Innocent IV to recognize the popular power.

<sup>5</sup> Pope from 1417-1431.

<sup>6</sup> The Septizonium (Lat. septem-zona), the name given to the monument of the Emperor Septimus Severus.

palace. Even the churches were encompassed with arms and bulwarks, and the military engines on the roof of St. Peter's were the terror of the Vatican and the scandal of the Christian world. Whatever is fortified will be attacked; and whatever is attacked, may be destroyed. Could the Romans have wrested from the Popes the castle of St. Angelo, they had resolved by a public decree to annihilate that monument of servitude. Every building of defense was exposed to a siege; and in every siege the arts and engines of destruction were laboriously employed. After the death of Nicholas the Fourth,<sup>7</sup> Rome, without a sovereign, or a senate, was abandoned six months to the fury of civil war. "The houses," says a cardinal and poet of the times, "were crushed by the weight and velocity of enormous stones; the walls were perforated by the strokes of the battering-ram; the towers were involved in fire and smoke; and the assailants were stimulated by rapine and revenge." The work was consummated by the tyranny of the laws; and the factions of Italy alternately exercised a blind and thoughtless vengeance on their adversaries, whose houses and castles they razed to the ground. In comparing the days of foreign, with the ages of domestic, hostility, we must pronounce, that the latter have been far more ruinous to the city; and our opinion is confirmed by the evidence of Petrarch. "Behold," says the laureate, "the relics of Rome, the image of her pristine greatness! neither time nor the Barbarian can boast the merit of this stupendous destruction; it was perpetrated by her own citizens, by the most illustrious of her sons; and your ancestors (he writes to a noble Annibaldi) have done with battering ram what the Punic hero could not accomplish with the sword. The influence of the two last principles of decay must in some degree be multiplied by each other; since the houses and towers, which were subverted by civil war, required a new and perpetual supply from the monuments of antiquity.

These general observations may be separately applied to the amphitheatre of Titus, which has obtained the name of the Coliseum, either from its magnitude, or from Nero's colossal statue; an edifice, had it been left to time and nature, which might perhaps have claimed an eternal duration. The curious antiquaries, who have computed the numbers and seats, are disposed to believe, that above the upper row of stone steps the amphitheatre was encircled and elevated with several stages of wooden galleries, which were repeatedly consumed by fire, and restored by the emperors.

<sup>7</sup> Pope Nicholas IV, died 1292.

Whatever was precious, or portable, or profane, the statues of gods and heroes, and the costly ornaments of sculpture which were cast in brass, or overspread with leaves of silver and gold, became the first prey of conquest or fanaticism, of the avarice of the Barbarians or the Christians. In the massy stones of the Coliseum, many holes are discerned; and the two most probable conjectures represent the various accidents of its decay. These stones were connected by solid links of brass or iron, nor had the eye of rapine overlooked the value of the baser metals; the vacant space was converted into a fair or market; the artisans of the Coliseum are mentioned in an ancient survey; and the chasms were perforated or enlarged to receive the poles that supported the shops or tents of the mechanic trades. Reduced to its naked majesty, the Flavian amphitheatre was contemplated with awe and admiration by the pilgrims of the North; and their rude enthusiasm broke forth in a sublime proverbial expression which is recorded in the eighth century, in the fragments of the venerable Bede: "As long as the Coliseum stands, Rome shall stand; when the Coliseum falls, Rome will fall; when Rome falls, the world will fall." In the modern system of war, a situation commanded by three hills would not be chosen for a fortress, but the strength of the walls and arches could resist the engines of assault; a numerous garrison might be lodged in the enclosure; and while one faction occupied the Vatican and the Capitol, the other was entrenched in the lateran and the Coliseum. . .

The use of the amphitheatre was a rare, perhaps a singular, festival; the demand for the materials was a daily and continual want which the citizens could gratify without restraint or remorse. In the fourteenth century, a scandalous act of concord secured to both factions the privilege of extracting stones from the free and common quarry of the Coliseum; and Poggius laments, that the greater part of these stones had been burnt to lime by the folly of the Romans. To check this abuse, and to check the nocturnal crimes that might be perpetrated in the vast and gloomy recess, Eugenius the Fourth<sup>8</sup> surrounded it with a wall; and, by a charter long extant, granted both the ground and edifice to the monks of an adjacent convent. After his death, the wall was overthrown in a tumult of the people; and had they themselves respected the noblest monument of their fathers, they might have justified the resolve that it should never be degraded to private property. The inside was damaged: but in the middle of the sixteenth century, an era of taste and learning, the exterior circumference of one thousand six hundred and twelve feet was still entire and inviolate; a triple elevation of fourscore arches, which rose to the height of one hundred and eight feet. Of the present ruin, the nephews of Paul the third<sup>9</sup> are the guilty agents; and every traveller who views the Farnese palace may curse the sacrilege and luxury of these upstart princes. A similar reproach is applied to the Barberini; and the repetition of injury might be dreaded from every reign, till the Coliseum was placed under the safeguard of religion by the most liberal of the pontiffs, Benedict the Fourteenth,<sup>10</sup> who consecrated a spot which persecution and fable had stained with the blood of so many Christian martyrs.

<sup>8</sup> Pope, 1431-1447.

When Petrarch first gratified his eyes with a view of those monuments, whose scattered fragments so far surpass the most eloquent descriptions, he was astonished at the supine indifference of the Romans themselves; he was humbled rather than elated by the discovery, that, except his friend Rienzi,<sup>11</sup> and one of the Colonna, a stranger of the Rhone, was more conversant with the antiquities than the nobles and natives of the metropolis. . . .

But the clouds of barbarism were gradually dispelled; and the peaceful authority of Martin the Fifth and his successors restored the ornaments of the city as well as the order of the ecclesiastical state. The improvements of Rome, since the fifteenth century, have not been the spontaneous produce of freedom and industry. The first and most natural root of a great city is the labor and populousness of the adjacent country, which supplies the materials of subsistence, of manufactures, and of foreign trade. But the greater part of the Campagna of Rome is reduced to a dreary and desolate wilderness: the overgrown estates of the princes and the clergy are cultivated by the lazy hands of indigent and hopeless vassals; and the scanty harvests are confined or exported for the benefit of a monopoly. A second and more artificial cause of the growth of a metropolis is the residence of a monarch, the expense of a luxurious court, and the tributes of dependent provinces. . . . The ecclesiastical revenues were more decently employed by the popes themselves in the pomp of the Catholic worship; but it is superfluous to enumerate their pious foundations of altars, chapels and churches, since these lesser stars are eclipsed by the sun of the Vatican, by the dome of St. Peter, the most glorious structure that ever has been applied to the use of religion. The fame of Julius the Second, Leo the Tenth, and Sixtus the Fifth, is accompanied by the superior merit of Bramante and Fontana, of Raphael and Michael Angelo; and the same munificence which had been displayed in palaces and temples was directed with equal zeal to revive and emulate the labors of antiquity. Prostrate obelisks were raised from the ground, and erected in the most conspicuous places, of the eleven aqueducts of the Cæsars and consuls, three were restored; the artificial rivers were conducted over a long series of old, or of new arches, to discharge into marble basins a flood of salubrious and refreshing waters; and the spectator, impatient to ascend the steps of St. Peter's, is detained by a column of Egyptian granite, which rises between two lofty and perpetual fountains, to the height of one hundred and twenty feet. The map, the description, the monuments of ancient Rome, have been elucidated by the diligence of the antiquarian and the student and the footsteps of heroes, the relics, not of superstition, but of empire, are devoutly visited by a new race of pilgrims from the remote, and once savage, countries of the North.

Of these pilgrims, and of every reader, the attention will be excited by a History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire; the greatest, perhaps, and most awful scene in the history of mankind. The various causes and progressive effects are connected with many of the events most interesting in human annals: the artful policy of the Cæsars, who long maintained the name and image of a free Republic; the disorders of military despotism; the rise, establishment, and sects of Christianity; the foundation of Constantinople; the division of the monarchy; the invasions and settlements of the Barbarians of Germany and Scythia; the institutions of the civil law; the character and religion of Mahomet; the temporal sovereignty of the popes; the restoration and decay of the Western empire of Charlemagne; the crusades of the Latins in the East; the conquests of the Saracens and Turks; the ruin of the Greek empire; the State and revolutions of Rome in the middle age. The historian may applaud the importance and variety of his subject; but while he is conscious of his own imperfections, he must often accuse the deficiency of his materials. It was among the ruins of the Capitol that I first conceived the idea of a work which has amused and exercised near twenty years of my life, and which, however inadequate to my own wishes, I finally deliver to the curiosity and candor of the public.

<sup>9</sup> Alessandro Farnese, Pope, 1534-1549.

<sup>10</sup> Benedict XIV, who was Pope from 1740-58, was noted for his learning, and for his encouragement of literature, science, and art. He rebuilt churches, and was interested in the architectural ruins of ancient Rome.

<sup>11</sup> Cola di Rienzi (c. 1313-54), the Italian patriot, lived and died in Rome, his native city.

Lausanne, June 27, 1787.

James Boswell

1740-1795

BOSWELL'S FIRST MEETING WITH DR. JOHNSON

(From Life of Johnson, 1791)

This is to me a memorable year; for in it I had the happiness to obtain the acquaintance of that extraordinary man whose memoirs I am now writing; an acquaintance which I shall ever esteem as one of the most fortunate circumstances in my life. Though then but two-and-twenty, I had for several years read his works with delight and instruction, and had the highest reverence for their author, which had grown up in my fancy into a kind of mysterious veneration, by figuring to myself a state of solemn elevated abstraction, in which I supposed him to live in the immense metropolis of London. Mr. Gentleman, a native of Ireland, who passed some years in Scotland as a player, and as an instructor in the English language, a man whose talents and worth were depressed by misfortunes, had given me a representation of the figure and manner of DICTIONARY JOHNSON! as he was then generally called; and during my first visit to London, which was for three months in 1760, Mr. Derrick the poet,<sup>1</sup> who was Gentleman's friend and countryman, flattered me with hopes that he would introduce me to Johnson, an honour of which I was very ambitious. But he never found an opportunity; which made me doubt that he had promised to do what was not in his power; till Johnson some years afterwards told me, "Derrick, sir, might very well have introduced you. I had a kindness for Derrick, and am sorry he is dead."

In the summer of 1761 Mr. Thomas Sheridan<sup>2</sup> was at Edinburgh, and delivered lectures upon the English Language and Public Speaking to large and respectable audiences. I was often in his company, and heard him frequently expatiate on Johnson's extraordinary knowledge, talents, and virtues, repeat his pointed sayings, describe his particularities, and boast of his being his guest sometimes till two or three in the morning. At his house I hoped to have many opportunities of seeing the sage, as Mr. Sheridan obligingly assured me I should not be disappointed.

When I returned to London in the end of 1762, to my surprise and regret I found an irreconcilable difference had taken place between Johnson and Sheridan. A pension of two hundred pounds a year had been given to Sheridan. Johnson, who, as has been already mentioned, thought slightly of Sheridan's art, upon hearing that he was also pensioned, exclaimed, "What! have they given him a pension? Then it is time for me to give up mine." Whether this proceeded from a momentary indignation, as if it were an affront to his exalted merit that a player should be rewarded in the same manner with him, or was the sudden effect of a fit of peevishness, it was unluckily said, and, indeed, cannot be justified. Mr. Sheridan's pension was granted to him not as a player, but as a sufferer in the cause of Government, when he was manager of the Theatre Royal in Ireland, when parties ran high in 1753. And it must also be allowed that he was a man of literature, and had considerably improved the arts of reading and speaking with distinctness and propriety. . . .

Mr. Thomas Davies the actor, who then kept a bookseller's shop in Russell Street, Covent Garden, told me that Johnson was very much his friend, and came frequently to his house, where he more than once invited me to meet him; but by some unlucky accident or other he was prevented from coming to us.

Mr. Thomas Davies was a man of good understanding and talents, with the advantage of a liberal education. Though somewhat pompous, he was an entertaining companion; and his literary performances have no inconsiderable share of merit. He was a friendly and very hospitable man. Both he and his wife (who has been celebrated for her beauty), though upon the stage for many years, maintained an uniform decency of character: and Johnson esteemed them, and lived in as easy an intimacy with them as with any family he used to visit. Mr. Davies recollected several of Johnson's remarkable sayings, and was one of the best of the many imitators of his voice and manner while relating them. He increased my impatience more and more to see the extraordinary man whose works I highly valued, and whose conversation was reported to be so peculiarly excellent.

At last, on Monday, the 16th of May, when I was sitting in Mr. Davies's back parlour, after having drunk tea with him and Mrs. Davies, Johnson unexpectedly came into the shop; and Mr. Davies having perceived him through the glass door in the room in which we were sitting, advancing towards us,—he announced his awful approach to me, somewhat in the manner of an actor in the part of Horatio, when he addresses Hamlet on the appearance of his father's ghost, "Look, my lord, it comes." I found that I had a very perfect idea of Johnson's figure, from the portrait of him painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds soon after he had published his Dictionary, in the attitude of sitting in his easy chair in deep meditation; which was the first picture his friend did for him, which Sir Joshua very kindly presented to me, and from which an engraving has been made for this work. Mr. Davies mentioned my name, and respectfully introduced me to him. I was much agitated; and recollecting his prejudice against the Scotch, of which I had heard much, I said to Davies, "Don't tell where I come from." "From Scotland," cried Davies roughly. "Mr. Johnson (said I), I do indeed come from Scotland, but I cannot help it." I am willing to flatter myself that I meant this as light pleasantry to soothe and conciliate him, and not as a humiliating abasement at the expense of my country. But however that might be, this speech was somewhat unlucky; for with that quickness of wit for which he was so remarkable, he seized the expression "come from Scotland," which I used in the sense of being of that country; and, as if I had said that I had come away from it, or left it, retorted, "That, sir, I find, is what a very great many of your countrymen cannot help." This stroke stunned me a good deal; and when we had sat down I felt myself not a little embarrassed and apprehensive of what might come next. He then addressed himself to Davies: "What do you think of Garrick? He has refused me an order for the play for Miss Williams, because he knows the house will be full, and that an order would be worth three shillings." Eager to take any opening to get into conversation with him, I ventured to say, "O, sir, I cannot think Mr. Garrick would grudge such a trifle to you." "Sir, (said he, with a stern look) I have known David Garrick longer than you have done; and I know no right you have to talk to me on the subject." Perhaps I deserved this check; for it was rather presumptuous in me, an entire stranger, to express any doubt of the justice of the animadversion upon his old acquaintance and pupil. I now felt myself much mortified, and began to think that the hope which I had long indulged of obtaining his acquaintance was blasted. And, in truth, had not my ardour been uncommonly strong, and my resolution uncommonly persevering, so rough a reception might have deterred me for ever from making any further attempts. Fortunately, however, I remained upon the field not wholly discomfited; and was soon rewarded by hearing some of his conversation. . . .

<sup>1</sup> Samuel Derrick (1721-1769), a minor poet and writer. He edited the works of Dryden, but he is best known by his Letters, which were commended by Johnson.

<sup>2</sup> Thomas Sheridan (1721-1788), the second of his name to gain distinction, was an Irish actor, elocutionist, and author. He wrote a life of Swift, and an English Dictionary, was at one time manager of a theater in Dublin, and in 1745 acted with Garrick. He was the father of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, the dramatist.

I was highly pleased with the extraordinary vigour of his conversation, and regretted that I was drawn away from it by an engagement at another place. I had, for a part of the evening, been left alone with him, and had ventured to make an observation now and then, which he received very civilly; so that I was satisfied that though there was a roughness in his manner there was no ill-nature in his disposition. Davies followed me to the door, and when I complained to him a little of the hard blows which the great man had given me, he kindly took upon him to console me by saying, "Don't be uneasy. I can see he likes you very well."

A few days afterwards I called on Davies, and asked him if he thought I might take the liberty of waiting on Mr. Johnson at his chambers in the Temple. He said I certainly might, and that Mr. Johnson would take it as a compliment. So upon Tuesday the 24th of May, . . . I boldly repaired to Johnson. His chambers were on the first floor of No. 1 Inner Temple Lane, and I entered with an impression given me by the Rev. Dr. Blair<sup>3</sup> of Edinburgh, who had been introduced to him not long before, and described his having "found the Giant in his den;" an expression which, when I came to be pretty well acquainted with Johnson, I repeated to him, and he was diverted at this picturesque account of himself. . . . He received me very courteously; but it must be confessed that his apartment, and furniture, and morning dress were sufficiently uncouth. His brown suit of clothes looked very rusty; he had on a little old shrivelled unpowdered wig, which was too small for his head; his shirt-neck and knees of his breeches were loose; his black worsted stockings ill drawn up; and he had a pair of unbuckled shoes by way of slippers. But all these slovenly particularities were forgotten the moment he began to talk. Some gentlemen, whom I do not recollect, were sitting with him; and when they went away I also rose; but he said to me, "Nay, don't go." "Sir (said I), I am afraid that I intrude upon you.

<sup>3</sup> Hugh Blair (1718–1800), minister of the High Church, Edinburgh, professor of rhetoric and belles lettres in the University of Edinburgh, and author of Lectures on Rhetoric, a once famous book.

It is benevolent to allow me to sit and hear you." He seemed pleased with this compliment, which I sincerely paid him, and answered, "Sir, I am obliged to any man who visits me." . . . When I rose a second time he again pressed me to stay, which I did.

He told me that he generally went abroad at four in the afternoon, and seldom came home until two in the morning. I took the liberty to ask if he did not think it wrong to live thus, and not make more use of his great talents. He owned it was a bad habit. On reviewing, at the distance of many years, my journal of this period, I wonder how, at my first visit, I ventured to talk to him so freely, 15 and that he bore it with so much indulgence.

Before we parted he was so good as to promise to favour me with his company one evening at my lodgings; and as I took my leave, shook me cordially by the hand. It is almost needless to add, that I felt no little elation at having now so happily established an acquaintance of which I had been so long ambitious.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH

(From the same)

As Dr. Oliver Goldsmith will frequently appear in this narrative, I shall endeavour to make my readers in some degree acquainted with his singular character. He was a native of Ireland, and a contemporary with Mr. Burke at Trinity College, Dublin, but did not then give much promise of future celebrity. 35 He, however, observed to Mr. Malone, that "though he made no great figure in mathematics, which was a study in much repute there, he could turn an Ode of Horace into English better than any of them." He afterwards studied physic at Edinburgh, and upon the Continent, and, I have been informed, was enabled to pursue his travels on foot, partly by demanding at Universities to enter the lists as a disputant, by which, according 45 to the custom of many of them, he was entitled to the premium of a crown, when luckily for him his challenge was not accepted; so that, as I once observed to Dr. Johnson, he disputed his passage through Europe. He then came to England, and was employed successively in the capacities of an usher to an academy, a corrector of the press, a reviewer, and a writer for a newspaper. He had sagacity enough to cultivate assiduously the acquaintance of Johnson, and his faculties were gradually enlarged by the contemplation of such a model. To me and many others it appeared that he studiously copied the manner of Johnson, though, indeed, upon a smaller scale.

At this time<sup>1</sup> I think he had published nothing with his name, though it was pretty generally known that one Dr. Goldsmith was the author of An Inquiry into the Present State of Polite Learning in Europe, and of The Citizen of the World,<sup>2</sup> a series of letters supposed to be written from London by a Chinese. No man had the art of displaying with more advantage as a writer whatever literary acquisitions he made. "Nihil quod tetigit non ornavit."<sup>3</sup> His mind resembled a fertile, but thin soil. There was a quick, but not a strong vegetation, of whatever chanced to be thrown upon it. No deep root could be struck. The oak of the forest did not grow there; but the elegant shrubbery and the fragrant parterre appeared in gay succession. It has been generally circulated and believed that he was a mere fool in conversation; but in truth this has been greatly exaggerated. He had, no doubt, a more than common share of that hurry of ideas which we often find in his countrymen, and which sometimes produces a laughable confusion in expressing them. He was very much what the French call un étourdi,<sup>4</sup> and from vanity and eager desire of being conspicuous wherever he was, he frequently talked carelessly without knowledge of the subject, or even without thought. His person was short, his countenance coarse and vulgar, his deportment that of a scholar awkwardly affecting the easy gentleman. Those who were in any way distinguished excited envy in him to so ridiculous an excess that the instances of it are hardly credible. When accompanying two beautiful young ladies with their mother on a tour in France, he was seriously angry that more attention was paid to them than to him; and once at the exhibition of the Fantoccini<sup>5</sup> in London, when those that sat next him observed with what dexterity a puppet was made to toss a pike, he could not bear that it should have such praise, and exclaimed with some warmth, "Pshaw! I can do it better myself."

He, I am afraid, had no settled system of any sort, so that his conduct must not be strictly scrutinised; but his affections were social and generous, and when he had money he gave it away very liberally. His desire of

<sup>1</sup> i. e., 1763.

<sup>2</sup> The Inquiry was published in 1759; Goldsmith also published The Bee, a collection of essays, in the same year. For The Citizen of the World, v. p. 397, supra.

<sup>3</sup> He touched nothing that he did not adorn: from Dr. Johnson's epitaph on Goldsmith in Westminster Abbey.

<sup>4</sup> A giddy-goose, a rattle-pate.

<sup>5</sup> Puppets. (Ital. fantoccino, a little doll, or puppet.)

imaginary consequence predominated over his attention to truth. When he began to rise into notice, he said he had a brother who was Dean of Durham, a fiction so easily detected, that it was wonderful how he should have been so inconsiderate as to hazard it. He boasted to me at this time of the power of his pen in commanding money, which I believe was true in a certain degree, though in the instance he gave he was by no means correct. He told me that he had sold a novel for four hundred pounds. This was his Vicar of Wakefield. But Johnson informed me, that he had made the bargain for Goldsmith, and the price was sixty pounds. "And, sir (said he), a sufficient price too, when it was sold; for then the fame of Goldsmith had not been elevated, as it afterwards was, by his Traveller; and the bookseller had such faint hopes of profit by his bargain, that he kept the manuscript by him a long time, and did not publish it till after the Traveller had appeared. Then, to be sure, it was accidentally worth more money."

Mrs. Piozzi<sup>6</sup> and Sir John Hawkins<sup>7</sup> have strangely misstated the history of Goldsmith's situation and Johnson's friendly interference, when this novel was sold. I shall give it authentically from Johnson's own exact narration:—

"I received one morning a message from poor Goldsmith that he was in great distress, and as it was not in his power to come to me, begging that I would come to him as soon as possible. I sent him a guinea, and promised to come to him directly. I accordingly went as soon as I was drest, and found that his landlady had arrested him for his rent, at which he was in a violent passion. I perceived that he had already changed my guinea, and had got a bottle of Madeira and a glass before him. I put the cork into the bottle, desired he would be calm, and began to talk to him of the means by which he might be extricated. He then told me that he had a novel ready for the press, which he produced to me. I looked into it, and saw its merit; told the landlady I should soon return, and, having gone to a bookseller, sold it for sixty pounds. I brought Goldsmith the money, and he discharged his rent, not without rating his landlady in a high tone for having used him so ill."

<sup>6</sup> Hester Lynch Salisbary (1741–1821), a friend of Johnson, who met her in 1764, shortly after her marriage to Henry Thrale. In 1784 she married an Italian musician named Piozzi. She published a book of anecdotes and correspondence relating to Johnson.

<sup>7</sup> One of Johnson's executors, and author of a life of Johnson.

POETS OF THE ROMANTIC SCHOOL

Thomas Gray

1716–1771

ODE ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE

(1747)

Ye distant spires, ye antique towers,
That crown the watry glade,
Where grateful Science still adores
Her HENRY'S<sup>1</sup> holy Shade;
And ye, that from the stately brow
Of WINDSOR'S heights th' expanse below
Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,
Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along
His silver-winding way:

Ah, happy hills, ah, pleasing shade,
Ah, fields below'd in vain,
Where once my careless childhood stray'd,
A stranger yet to pain!
I feel the gales, that from ye blow,
A momentary bliss bestow,
As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
My weary soul they seem to soothe,
And, redolent of joy and youth,
To breathe a second spring.

Say, father THAMES, for thou hast seen
Full many a sprightly race
Disporting on thy margin green
The paths of pleasure trace,
Who foremost now delight to cleave
With pliant arm thy glassy wave?
The captive linnet which enthrall?
What idle progeny succeed
To chase the rolling circle's speed,
Or urge the flying ball?

While some on earnest business bent
Their murmur'ring labours ply
'Gainst graver hours, that bring constraint,
To sweeten liberty:
Some bold adventurers disdain
The limits of their little reign,
And unknown regions dare descry:
Still as they run they look behind,
They hear a voice in every wind,
And snatch a fearful joy.

Gay hope is theirs by fancy fed,
Less pleasing when possess'd;
The tear forgot as soon as shed,
The sunshine of the breast:
Theirs buxom health of rosy hue,
Wild wit, invention ever-new,
And lively cheer of vigour born;
The thoughtless day, the easy night,
The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
That fly th' approach of morn.

<sup>1</sup> Henry VI, who founded Eton College in 1440.

Alas, regardless of their doom
 The little victims play!
 No sense have they of ills to come,
 Nor care beyond to-day:
 Yet see how all around 'em wait
 The Ministers of human fate,
 And black Misfortune's baleful train!
 Ah, show them where in ambush stand
 To seize their prey the murtherous band!
 Ah, tell them, they are men!

55

60

These ears, alas! for other notes repine;
 A different object do these eyes require:
 My lonely anguish melts no heart but mine;
 And in my breast the imperfect joys expire.
 Yet morning smiles the busy race to cheer,
 And new-born pleasure brings to happier
 men:
 The fields to all their wonted tribute bear:
 To warm their little loves the birds complain:
 I fruitless mourn to him that cannot hear,
 And weep the more, because I weep in vain.

5

10

ELEGY WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY CHURCHYARD

(1751)

The curfew tolls the knell of parting<sup>1</sup> day,
 The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea,
 The plowman homeward plods his weary way,
 And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight,
 And all the air a solemn stillness holds,
 Save where the beetle wheels his droning flight,
 And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds:

5

Save that from yonder ivy-mantled tower,
 The moping owl does to the moon complain
 Of such as, wandering near her secret bower,
 Molest her ancient solitary reign.

10

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's
 shade
 Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap,
 Each in his narrow cell forever laid
 The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

15

The breezy call of incense-breathing Morn,
 The swallow twittering from the straw-built
 shed,
 The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,
 No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed.<sup>2</sup>

20

For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn,
 Or busy housewife ply her evening care:
 No children run to lisp their sire's return,
 Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield,
 Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke:

25

How jocund did they drive their team afield!
 How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke!

Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
 Their homely joys, and destiny obscure;
 Nor Grandeur hear with a disdainful smile
 The short and simple annals of the poor.

30

<sup>1</sup> Here = dying.<sup>2</sup> This is to be understood literally: it does not mean the grave.

SONNET

ON THE DEATH OF MR. RICHARD WEST<sup>1</sup>

In vain to me the smiling mornings shine,
 And reddening Phoebus lifts his golden fire:
 The birds in vain their amorous descant join;
 Or cheerful fields resume their green attire:

<sup>1</sup> A fellow-student of Gray's at Eton, and one of his most intimate friends. West died at the age of 25, June 1st, 1742, and the sonnet on his death was written in the following August.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike th' inevitable hour. 35
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye Proud, impute to these the fault,
If Mem'ry o'er their tomb no trophies raise,
Where through the long-drawn aisle and fretted vault
The pealing anthem swells the note of praise. 40

Can storied urn or animated bust
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can Honour's voice provoke<sup>3</sup> the silent dust,
Or Flatt'ry soothe the dull cold ear of death?

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid 45
Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire;
Hands, that the rod of empire might have sway'd,
Or waked to ecstasy the living lyre.

But Knowledge to their eyes her ample page
Rich with the spoils of time did ne'er unroll;
Chill Penury repress'd their noble rage, 51
And froze the genial current of the soul.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathom'd caves of ocean bear:
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen, 55
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Some village Hampden, that with dauntless
breast
The little tyrant of his fields withstood,
Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood. 60

Th' applause of list'ning senates to command,
The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
And read their hist'ry in a nation's eyes,

Their lot forbad: nor circumscrib'd alone 65
Their growing virtues, but their crimes confin'd;

Forbad to wade through slaughter to a throne,
And shut the gates of mercy on mankind,

The struggling pangs of conscious truth to hide,
To quench the blushes of ingenuous shame,
Or heap the shrine of Luxury and Pride 71
With incense kindled at the Muse's flame.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray;
Along the cool sequester'd vale of life 75
They kept the noiseless tenor of their way.

Yet ev'n these bones from insult to protect
Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture
deck'd,
Implores the passing tribute of a sigh. 80

<sup>3</sup> Call forth, summon.

Their name, their years, spelt by th' unletter'd muse,
The place of fame and elegy supply:
And many a holy text around she strews,
That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who to dumb Forgetfulness a prey, 85
This pleasing anxious being e'er resign'd,
Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
Nor cast one longing ling'ring look behind?

On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
Some pious drops the closing eye requires; 90
E'en from the tomb the voice of Nature cries,
E'en in our ashes live their wonted fires.

For thee,<sup>4</sup> who mindful of th' unhonour'd dead,
Dost in these lines their artless tale relate;
If chance, by lonely contemplation led, 95
Some kindred spirit shall inquire thy fate,—

Haply some hoary-headed Swain may say,
"Oft have we seen him at the peep of dawn
Brushing with hasty steps the dew away
To meet the sun upon the upland lawn. 100

"There at the foot of yonder nodding beech,
That wreathes its old fantastic roots so high,
His listless length at noontide would he stretch,
And pore upon the brook that babbles by.

"Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn, 105
Mutt'ring his wayward fancies he would rove,
Now drooping, woful-wan; like one forlorn,
Or craz'd with care, or cross'd in hopeless
love.

"One morn I missed him on the custom'd hill,
Along the heath, and near his fav'rite tree; 110
Another came; nor yet beside the rill,
Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was he:

"The next, with dirges due in sad array Slow through the church-way path we saw him borne:

Approach and read (for thou canst read) the lay, 115
Grav'd on the stone beneath yon aged thorn."

THE EPITAPH

Here rests his head upon the lap of Earth
A Youth, to Fortune and to Fame unknown;
Fair Science<sup>5</sup> frown'd not on his humble birth,
And Melancholy mark'd him for her own. 120

Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere,
Heav'n did a recompense as largely send:
He gave to Mis'ry all he had, a tear,
He gain'd from heav'n ('twas all he wish'd) a friend.

No farther seek his merits to disclose, 125
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
(There they alike in trembling hope repose),
The bosom of his Father and his God.

<sup>4</sup> i. e., Gray himself. <sup>5</sup> Kind, or gracious, learning.

THE BARD<sup>1</sup>
(From Odes, 1757)

I. 1

"Ruin seize thee, ruthless King!
Confusion on thy banners wait,
Tho' fann'd by Conquest's crimson wing
They mock the air with idle state.
Helm, nor Hauberk's twisted mail, 5
Nor even thy virtues, Tyrant, shall avail
To save thy secret soul from nightly fears,
From Cambria's<sup>2</sup> curse, from Cambria's
tears!"

Such were the sounds, that o'er the crested pride

Of the first Edward scatter'd wild dismay,
As down the steep of Snowdon's shaggy side 11
He wound with toilsome march his long array.

Stout Glo'ster<sup>3</sup> stood aghast in speechless trance:

"To arms!" cried Mortimer,<sup>4</sup> and couch'd his quiv'ring lance.

I. 2

On a rock, whose haughty brow 15
Frowns o'er old Conway's foaming flood,
Robed in the sable garb of woe,
With haggard eyes the Poet stood;

(Loose his beard, and hoary hair
Stream'd, like a meteor, to the troubled air), 20

And with a Master's hand, and Prophet's fire,
Struck the deep sorrows of his lyre.
"Hark, how each giant-oak, and desert cave,

Sighs to the torrent's awful voice beneath!
O'er thee, oh King! their hundred arms they wave, 25

Revenge on thee in hoarser murmurs
breathe;

Vocal no more, since Cambria's fatal day,
To high-born Hoel's<sup>5</sup> harp, or soft Llewellyn's lay."

I. 3

"Cold is Cadwallo's tongue,
That hush'd the stormy main: 30

Brave Urien sleeps upon his craggy bed:
Mountains, ye mourn in vain

Modred, whose magic song
Made huge Plinlimmon bow his cloud-top'd head.

On dreary Arvon's shore<sup>6</sup> they lie, 35

<sup>1</sup> "This ode is founded on a tradition current in Wales that Edward I, when he completed the conquest of that country, ordered all the bards that fell into his hands to be put to death." Gray.

<sup>2</sup> Cambria, the ancient name of Wales.

<sup>3</sup> Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, who had conducted the war in South Wales before joining forces with the king.

<sup>4</sup> Edward de Mortimer, who co-operated with the king in North Wales.

<sup>5</sup> Probably Huwel ab Owain, a bard of the latter 12th century. For many of the other bards, Gray appears simply to have selected appropriate national names, without having any specific Welsh poet in mind.

<sup>6</sup> i. e., on the coast of Carnarvonshire (Arvon = Carnarvon = Caer-yn-Arvon, the camp in Arvon).

Smear'd with gore, and ghastly pale:
Far, far aloof th' affrighted ravens sail;
The famish'd Eagle screams, and passes by.
Dear lost companions of my tuneful art,

Dear, as the light that visits these sad
eyes, 40

Dear, as the ruddy drops that warm my heart, Ye died amidst your dying country's cries—

No more I weep. They do not sleep.
On yonder cliffs, a grisly band,

I see them sit, they linger yet, 45
Avengers of their native land:

With me in dreadful harmony they join,
And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line."

II. 1

"Weave the warp, and weave the woof,
The winding-sheet of Edward's race. 50

Give ample room, and verge enough
The characters of hell to trace.
Mark the year, and mark the night,

When Severn shall re-echo with affright
The shrieks of death, thro' Berkley's roofs that ring, 55

Shrieks of an agonizing King!<sup>7</sup>
She-Wolf of France,<sup>8</sup> with unrelenting fangs,

That tear'st the bowels of thy mangled Mate,
From thee be born, who o'er thy country hangs

The scourge of Heav'n.<sup>9</sup> What Terrors round him wait! 60

Amazement in his van, with Flight combined,
And Sorrow's faded form, and Solitude behind."

II. 2

"Mighty Victor, mighty Lord!
Low on his funeral couch he lies!

No pitying heart, no eye, afford 65
A tear to grace his obsequies.

Is the sable Warriour fled?
Thy son is gone. He rests among the Dead.

The Swarm, that in thy noontide beam were born?

Gone to salute the rising Morn. 70
Fair laughs the Morn, and soft the Zephyr
blows,

While proudly riding o'er the azure realm
In gallant trim the gilded Vessel goes;

Youth on the prow, and Pleasure at the helm;

Regardless of the sweeping Whirlwind's sway,<sup>75</sup>
That, hush'd in grim repose, expects his evening prey."

II. 3

"Fill high the sparkling bowl,
The rich repast prepare,

Reft of a crown, he yet may share the feast:

<sup>7</sup> The Severn flows near to Berkeley Castle, where Edward II was murdered.

<sup>8</sup> The French Princess, Isabelle, wife of Edward II, who allied herself with Mortimer to compass the ruin of her husband.

<sup>9</sup> Edward III.

Close by the regal chair 80
 Fell Thirst and Famine scowl
 A baleful smile upon their baffled Guest.
 Heard ye the din of battle bray,
 Lance to lance, and horse to horse?
 Long years of havoc urge their destined course, 85
 And thro' the kindred squadrons mow their way.
 Ye Towers of Julius,<sup>10</sup> London's lasting shame,
 With many a foul and midnight murther fed, Revere his Consort's faith, his Father's fame,
 And spare the meek Usurper's<sup>11</sup> holy head. 90
 Above, below, the rose of snow,
 Twined with her blushing foe, we spread:
 The bristled Boar<sup>12</sup> in infant gore
 Wallows beneath the thorny shade.
 Now, Brothers, bending o'er th' accursed loom Stamp we our vengeance deep, and ratify his doom." 96

III. 1

"Edward, lo! to sudden fate<sup>13</sup>
 (Weave we the woof. The thread is spun).
 Half of thy heart we consecrate.
 (The web is wove. The work is done). 100
 Stay, oh stay! nor thus forlorn
 Leave me unblest'd, unpitied, here to mourn:
 In yon bright track, that fires the western skies,
 They melt, they vanish from my eyes.
 But oh! what solemn scenes on Snowdon's height 105
 Descending slow their glitt'ring skirts un-
 roll?
 Visions of glory, spare my aching sight,
 Ye unborn Ages, crowd not on my soul!
 No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail.
 All hail, ye genuine Kings, Britannia's Issue, hail!" 110

III. 2

"Girt with many a Baron bold
 Sublime their starry fronts they rear;
 And gorgeous Dames, and Statesmen old
 In bearded majesty, appear.
 In the midst a Form divine!<sup>14</sup> 115
 Her eye proclaims her of the Briton-line;
 Her lion-port, her awe-commanding face,
 Attemper'd sweet to virgin-grace.
 What strings symphonious tremble in the air,
 What strains of vocal transport round her play. 120
 Hear from the grave, great Taliessin,<sup>15</sup> hear;
 They breathe a soul to animate thy clay.
 Bright Rapture calls, and soaring, as she sings, Waves in the eye of Heav'n her many-colour'd wings."

<sup>10</sup> The Tower of London, popularly, but erroneously, supposed to have been built by Julius Cæsar.

<sup>11</sup> Henry VI. His consort was Margaret of Anjou, and his father, Henry V.

<sup>12</sup> The badge of Richard III.

<sup>13</sup> Eleanor, the Queen of Edward I, died suddenly during her husband's absence.

<sup>14</sup> Queen Elizabeth. She is of the Briton-line, being the granddaughter of Henry VII, a descendant of the Welsh, or British, gentleman Owen Tudor.

<sup>15</sup> A famous British bard of the sixth century.

III. 3

"The verse adorn again 125
 Fierce War, and faithful Love,
 And truth severe, by fairy Fiction drest.
 In buskin'd measures move
 Pale Grief, and Pleasing Pain,
 With Horror, Tyrant of the throbbing breast.
 A Voice, as of the Cherub-Choir, 131
 Gales from blooming Eden bear;
 And distant warblings<sup>16</sup> lessen on my ear,
 That lost in long futurity expire.
 Fond impious Man, think'st thou, yon sanguine cloud, 135
 Rais'd by thy breath, has quench'd the Orb of day?
 To-morrow he repairs the golden flood,
 And warms the nations with redoubled ray.
 Enough for me: With joy I see
 The different doom our Fates assign. 140
 Be thine Despair, and scepter'd Care,
 To triumph, and to die, are mine."
 He spoke, and headlong from the mountain's
 height
 Deep in the roaring tide he plung'd to endless night.

William Collins

1721-1759

ODE TO EVENING

(From Odes, 1746)

If aught of oaten stop<sup>1</sup> or pastoral song,
 May hope, chaste eve, to soothe thy modest ear,
 Like thy own solemn springs,
 Thy springs, and dying gales,

O nymph reserved, while now the bright-haired
 sun, 5
 Sits in yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts,
 With brede ethereal wove,
 O'erhang his wavy bed:

Now air is hushed, save where the weak-eyed bat
 With short, shrill shriek, flits by on leathern wing; 10
 Or where the beetle winds
 His small but sullen horn,

As oft he rises 'midst the twilight path,
 Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum:
 Now teach me, maid composed, 15
 To breathe some softened strain,

Whose numbers, stealing through thy darkening vale,
 May, not unseemly, with its stillness suit,
 As, musing slow, I hail
 Thy genial loved return! 20

<sup>16</sup> i. e., of the poets succeeding Milton, who is referred to in the preceding lines.

<sup>1</sup> Here = the shepherd's pipe of reed, or oaten straw; (Vergil's avena).

For when thy folding star arising shows
His paly circlet, at his warning lamp
The fragrant hours, and elves
Who slept in flowers the day,

And many a nymph who wreathes her brows with sedge, 25
And sheds the freshening dew, and, lovelier still,
The pensive pleasures sweet
Prepare thy shadowy car.

Then lead, calm votaress, where some sheety
lake
Cheers the lone heath, or some time-hallowed pile, 30
Or up-land fallows grey
Reflect its last cool gleam.

But when chill blustering winds, or driving rain,
Forbid my willing feet, be mine the hut,
That from the mountain's side, 35
Views wilds, and swelling floods,

And hamlets brown, and dim-discovered spires;
And hears their simple bell, and marks o'er all Thy dewy fingers draw
The gradual dusky veil. 40

While spring shall pour his showers, as oft he wont,
And bathe thy breathing tresses, meekest eve!
While summer loves to sport
Beneath thy lingering light;

While fallow autumn fills thy lap with leaves; 45
Or winter yelling through the troublous air,
Affrights thy shrinking train,
And rudely rends thy robes;

So long, sure-found beneath the sylvan shed,
Shall fancy, friendship, science, rose-lipp'd health, 50
Thy gentlest influence own,
And hymn thy favorite name!

THE PASSIONS

AN ODE FOR MUSIC

(From the same)

When music, heavenly maid, was young,
While yet in early Greece she sung,
The passions oft, to hear her shell,<sup>1</sup>
Throng'd around her magic cell,
Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting, 5
Possess beyond the muse's painting:
By turns they felt the glowing mind
Disturbed, delighted, raised, refined;
Till once, 'tis said, when all were fired,
Filled with fury, rapt, inspired, 10
From the supporting myrtles round
They snatched her instruments of sound;
And, as they oft had heard apart
Sweet lessons of her forceful art,

Each (for madness ruled the hour) 15
Would prove his own expressive power.
First fear, his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewildered laid,
And back recoiled, he knew not why,
Even at the sound himself had made. 20
Next anger rushed; his eyes on fire,
In lightnings owned his secret stings:
In one rude clash he struck the lyre,
And swept, with hurried hand, the strings.

With woful measures wan despair 25
Low, sullen sounds his grief beguiled;
A solemn, strange, and mingled air;
'Twas sad by fits, by starts 'twas wild.

But thou, O hope, with eyes so fair,
What was thy delightful measure? 30
Still it whispered promised pleasure,
And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail!
Still would her touch the strain prolong;
And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
She called on echo still, through all the song; 35
And, where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft responsive voice was heard at every close,
And hope enchanted smiled, and waved her golden hair.

And longer had she sung;—but, with a frown,
Revenge impatient rose: 40
He threw his blood-stained sword, in thunder,
down;

And with a withering look,
The war-denouncing trumpet took,
And blew a blast so loud and dread,
Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of woe! 45
And, ever and anon, he beat
The doubling drum, with furious heat;
And though sometimes, each dreary pause between,

Dejected pity, at his side,
Her soul-subduing voice applied, 50
Yet still he kept his wild unaltered mien,
While each strained ball of sight seemed bursting from his head.

Thy numbers, jealousy, to naught were fixed;
Sad proof of thy distressful state;
Of differing themes the veering song was mixed; 55
And now it courted love, now raving called on hate.

With eyes upraised, as one inspired,
Pale melancholy sat retired;
And, from her wild sequestered seat, 60
In notes by distance made more sweet,
Poured through the mellow horn her pensive
soul:

And, dashing soft from rocks around,
Bubbling runnels joined the sound;
Through glades and glooms the mingled measure stole,
Or, o'er some haunted stream, with fond delay, 65

Round an holy calm diffusing,
Love of peace, and lonely musing,
In hollow murmurs died away.

<sup>1</sup> Lyre. The primitive lyre was supposed to have been made by stretching strings across the shell of a tortoise.

But O! how altered was its sprightlier tone,
 When cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue,
 Her bow across her shoulder flung, 71
 Her buskins gemmed with morning dew,
 Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket
 rung,
 The hunter's call, to faun and dryad known!
 The oak-crowned sisters, and their chaste-eyed queen, 75
 Satyrs and sylvan boys, were seen,
 Peeping from forth their alleys green:
 Brown exercise rejoiced to hear;
 And sport leapt up, and seized his beechen
 spear.
 Last came joy's ecstatic trial: 80
 He, with viny crown advancing,
 First to the lively pipe his hand address;
 But soon he saw the brisk awakening viol,
 Whose sweet entrancing voice he loved the best;
 They would have thought who heard the strain 85
 They saw, in Tempe's vale, her native
 maids,
 Amidst the festal sounding shades,
 To some unwearied minstrel dancing,
 While, as his flying fingers kissed the strings,
 Love framed with mirth a gay fantastic
 round: 90
 Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound;
 And he, amidst his frolic play,
 As if he would the charming air repay,
 Shook thousand odours from his dewy wings.
 O music! sphere-descended maid, 95
 Friend of pleasure, wisdom's aid!
 Why, goddess! why, to us denied,
 Lay'st thou thy ancient lyre aside?
 As, in that loved Athenian bower,
 You learned an all-commanding power, 100
 Thy mimic soul, O nymph endeared,
 Can well recall what then it heard;
 Where is thy native simple heart,
 Devote to virtue, fancy, art?
 Arise, as in that elder time,<sup>2</sup> 105
 Warm, energetic, chaste, sublime!
 Thy wonders, in that godlike age,
 Fill thy recording sister's page—
 'Tis said, and I believe the tale,
 Thy humblest reed could more prevail, 110
 Had more of strength, diviner rage,
 Than all which charms this laggard age;
 E'en all at once together found,
 Cecilia's mingled world of sound—
 O bid our vain endeavours cease; 115
 Revive the just designs of Greece:
 Return in all thy simple state!
 Confirm the tales her sons relate!

<sup>2</sup> Collins was unaware of the progress which music was making in England at this time, or else chose to ignore it for the sake of his poetic effect. Most of Handel's greatest works were produced between 1739 and 1751, and his Messiah was received with great enthusiasm in London three years before Collins published his Odes.

ODE

WRITTEN IN THE BEGINNING OF THE YEAR 1746<sup>1</sup>

How sleep the brave who sink to rest,
 By all their country's wishes blessed!
 When spring, with dewy fingers cold,
 Returns to deck their hallowed mould,
 She there shall dress a sweeter sod 5
 Than fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is rung;
 By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
 There honour comes, a pilgrim grey,
 To bless the turf that wraps their clay; 10
 And freedom shall awhile repair,
 To dwell, a weeping hermit, there!

DIRGE IN CYMBELINE<sup>1</sup>SUNG BY GUIDERIUS AND ARVIRAGUS OVER FIDELE, SUPPOSED TO BE DEAD(First published in The Gentleman's Magazine, for October, 1749)

To fair Fidele's grassy tomb
 Soft maids and village hindes shall bring
 Each opening sweet of earliest bloom,
 And rifle all the breathing spring.

No wailing ghost shall dare appear 5
 To vex with shrieks this quiet grove;
 But shepherd lads assemble here,
 And melting virgins own their love.

No withered witch shall here be seen;
 No goblins lead their nightly crew: 10
 The female fays shall haunt the green,
 And dress thy grave with pearly dew!

The redbreast oft, at evening hours,
 Shall kindly lend his little aid,
 With hoary moss, and gathered flowers, 15
 To deck the ground where thou art laid.

When howling winds and beating rain,
 In tempests shake the sylvan cell;
 Or 'midst the chase, on every plain,
 The tender thought on thee shall dwell; 20

Each lonely scene shall thee restore;
 For thee the tear be duly shed;
 Beloved till life can charm no more,
 And mourned till pity's self be dead.

Thomas Percy

1729-1811

THE FRIAR OF ORDERS GRAY

It was a friar of orders gray,
 Walked forth to tell his beads,
 And he met with a lady fair,
 Clad in a pilgrim's weeds.

<sup>1</sup> In this year England was at war both on the continent and in Scotland. The Jacobite victory of Falkirk was Jan. 17, 1746, and the crushing Jacobite defeat of Culloden, April 16th of the same year.

<sup>1</sup> V. Cymbeline, Act IV, sc. ii.

- "Now Christ thee save, thou reverend friar! 5
I pray thee tell to me,
If ever at yon holy shrine
My true love thou didst see."
- "And how should I know your true love 10
From many another one?"
"Oh! by his cockle hat<sup>1</sup> and staff,
And by his sandle shoon:<sup>2</sup>
- "But chiefly by his face and mien,
That were so fair to view,
His flaxen locks that sweetly curled,
And eyne of lovely blue."
- "O lady, he is dead and gone!
Lady, he's dead and gone!
And at his head a green grass turf,
And at his heels a stone."
- "Within these holy cloisters long
He languished, and he died,
Lamenting of a lady's love,
And 'plaining of her pride."
- "Here bore him barefaced on his bier 25
Six proper youths and tall;
And many a tear bedewed his grave
Within yon kirkyard wall."
- "And art thou dead, thou gentle youth—
And art thou dead and gone?
And didst thou die for love of me?
Break, cruel heart of stone!"
- "O weep not, lady, weep not so,
Some ghostly counsel seek:
Let not vain sorrow rive thy heart,
Nor tears bedew thy cheek."
- "O do not, do not, holy friar,
My sorrow now reprove;
For I have lost the sweetest youth
That e'er wan<sup>3</sup> lady's love."
- "And now, alas! for thy sad loss
I'll evermore weep and sigh;
For thee I only wished to live,
For thee I wish to die."
- "Weep no more, lady, weep no more;
Thy sorrow is in vain:
For violets plucked the sweetest showers
Will ne'er make grow again."
- "Our joys as winged dreams do fly;
Why then should sorrow last?
Since grief but aggravates thy loss,
Grieve not for what is past."
- "O say not so, thou holy friar!
I pray thee say not so;
For since my true love died for me,
'Tis meet my tears should flow."
- And will he ne'er come again—
Will he ne'er come again?
Ah, no! he is dead, and laid in his grave,
For ever to remain."
- "His cheek was redder than the rose—
The comeliest youth was he:
But he is dead, and laid in his grave,
Alas! and woe is me."
- "Sigh no more, lady, sigh no more,
Men were deceivers ever;
One foot on sea and one on land,
To one thing constant never."
- "Hadst thou been fond, he had been false,
And left thee sad and heavy;
For young men ever were fickle found,
Since summer trees were leafy."
- "Now say not so, thou holy friar,
I pray thee say not so;
My love he had the truest heart—
O he was ever true!"
- "And art thou dead, thou much-loved youth?
And didst thou die for me?
Then farewell home; for evermore
A pilgrim I will be."
- "But first upon my true-love's grave
My weary limbs I'll lay,
And thrice I'll kiss the green grass turf
That wraps his breathless clay."
- "Yet stay, fair lady, rest awhile
Beneath this cloister wall;
The cold wind through the hawthorn blows,
And drizzly rain doth fall."
- "O stay me not, thou holy friar,
O stay me not, I pray;
No drizzly rain that falls on me,
Can wash my fault away."
- "Yet stay, fair lady, turn again,
And dry those pearly tears;
And see, beneath this gown of gray,
Thy own true love appears."
- "Here forced by grief and hopeless love,
These holy weeds I sought;
And here, amid these lonely walls,
To end my days I thought."
- "But haply, for my year of grace
Is not yet passed away,
Might I still hope to win thy love,
No longer would I stay."
- "Now farewell grief, and welcome joy 105
Once more unto my heart;
For since I've found thee, lovely youth,
We never more will part."

<sup>1</sup> Hat bearing a scallop-shell, the sign of a pilgrim.<sup>2</sup> Sandle = shoes.<sup>3</sup> Won.

William Cowper

1731-1800

THE TASK

(1785)

(Selections from BOOK I. THE SOFA)

But though true worth and virtue, in the mild
 And genial soil of cultivated life,
 Thrive most, and may perhaps thrive only there, 680
 Yet not in cities oft: in proud and gay
 And gain-devoted cities. Thither flow,
 As to a common and most noisome sewer,
 The dregs and feculence of every land.
 In cities foul example on most minds 685
 Begets its likeness. Rank abundance breeds
 In gross and pampered cities sloth and lust,
 And wantonness and gluttonous excess.
 In cities vice is hidden with most ease,
 Or seen with least reproach; and virtue, taught 690
 By frequent lapse, can hope no triumph there
 Beyond the achievement of successful flight.
 I do confess them nurseries of the arts,
 In which they flourish most; where, in the beams
 Of warm encouragement, and in the eye 695
 Of public note, they reach their perfect size.
 Such London is, by taste and wealth proclaimed
 The fairest capital of all the world,
 By riot and incontinence the worst.
 There, touched by Reynolds,<sup>1</sup> a dull blank becomes 700
 A lucid mirror, in which Nature sees
 All her reflected features. Bacon<sup>2</sup> there Gives more than female beauty to a stone,
 And Chatham's eloquence to marble lips.
 Nor does the chisel occupy alone 705
 The powers of sculpture, but the style as much;
 Each province of her art her equal care.
 With nice incision of her guided steel
 She ploughs a brazen field, and clothes a soil
 So sterile, with what charms soe'er she will, 710
 The richest scenery and the loveliest forms.
 Where finds Philosophy her eagle eye,
 With which she gazes at yon burning disk
 Undazzled, and detects and counts his spots?
 In London. Where her implements exact, 715
 With which she calculates, computes, and scans
 All distance, motion, magnitude, and now
 Measures an atom, and now girds a world?
 In London. Where has commerce such a mart,
 So rich, so thronged, so drained, and so supplied, 720
 As London, opulent, enlarged, and still Increasing London? Babylon of old
 Not more the glory of the earth than she,
 A more accomplished world's chief glory now.

<sup>1</sup> At this time Sir Joshua Reynolds (1723-1792) was at the height of his fame as a painter.

<sup>2</sup> John Bacon (1740-1799), a distinguished sculptor of the day.

She has her praise. Now mark a spot or two 725
 That so much beauty would do well to purge;
 And show this queen of cities, that so fair
 May yet be foul, so witty yet not wise.
 It is not seemly, nor of good report,
 That she is slack in discipline; more prompt 730
 To avenge than to prevent the breach of law;
 That she is rigid in denouncing death
 On petty robbers, and indulges life
 And liberty, and oftimes honour too,
 To speculators of the public gold; 735
 That thieves at home must hang, but he that puts Into his overgorged and bloated purse
 The wealth of Indian provinces, escapes.
 Nor is it well, nor can it come to good,
 That, through profane and infidel contempt 740
 Of Holy Writ, she has presumed to annul
 And abrogate, as roundly as she may,
 The total ordinance and will of God;
 Advancing Fashion to the post of Truth,
 And centering all authority in modes 745
 And customs of her own, till Sabbath rites
 Have dwindled into unrespected forms,
 And knees and hassocks are well-nigh divorced.
 God made the country, and man made the town:
 What wonder then, that health and virtue, gifts 750
 That can alone make sweet the bitter draught
 That life holds out to all, should most abound
 And least be threatened in the fields and groves?
 Possess ye therefore, ye who, borne about
 In chariots and sedans, know no fatigue 755
 But that of idleness, and taste no scenes
 But such as art contrives, possess ye still
 Your element; there only ye can shine,
 There only minds like yours can do no harm.
 Our groves were planted to console at noon 760
 The pensive wanderer in their shades. At eve
 The moonbeam, sliding softly in between
 The sleeping leaves, is all the light they wish,
 Birds warbling all the music. We can spare
 The splendour of your lamps, they but eclipse
 Our softer satellite. Your songs confound 766
 Our more harmonious notes: the thrush departs
 Scared, and the offended nightingale is mute.
 There is a public mischief in your mirth,
 It plagues your country. Folly such as yours
 Graced with a sword, and worthier of a fan, 771
 Has made, what enemies could ne'er have done,
 Our arch of empire, steadfast but for you,
 A mutilated structure, soon to fall. . . .

BOOK II.—THE TIME-PIECE

Oh for a lodge in some vast wilderness,
 Some boundless contiguity of shade,
 Where rumour of oppression and deceit,
 Of unsuccessful or successful war,
 Might never reach me more! My ear is pained,
 My soul is sick with every day's report 6
 Of wrong and outrage with which earth is filled.
 There is no flesh in man's obdurate heart,
 It does not feel for man; the natural bond
 Of brotherhood is severed as the flax 10

That falls asunder at the touch of fire.

He finds his fellow guilty of a skin
Not coloured like his own, and having power
To enforce the wrong, for such a worthy cause
Dooms and devotes him as his lawful prey. 15
Lands intersected by a narrow frith
Abhor each other. Mountains interposed
Make enemies of nations who had else
Like kindred drops been mingled into one.
Thus man devotes his brother, and destroys; 20
And worse than all, and most to be deplored,
As human nature's broadest, foulest blot,
Chains him, and tasks him, and exacts his sweat

With stripes that Mercy, with a bleeding heart,
Weeps when she sees inflicted on a beast. 25
Then what is man? And what man seeing this,
And having human feelings, does not blush
And hang his head, to think himself a man?
I would not have a slave to till my ground,
To carry me, to fan me while I sleep, 30
And tremble when I wake, for all the wealth
That sinews bought and sold have ever earned.
No: dear as freedom is, and in my heart's
Just estimation prized above all price,
I had much rather be myself the slave 35
And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.

We have no slaves at home.—Then why abroad?
And they themselves once ferried o'er the wave
That parts us, are emancipate and loosed.
Slaves cannot breathe in England;<sup>3</sup> if their lungs 40
Receive our air, that moment they are free;
They touch our country, and their shackles fall.

That's noble, and bespeaks a nation proud
And jealous of the blessing. Spread it then,
And let it circulate through every vein 45
Of all your empire; that where Britain's power
Is felt, mankind may feel her mercy too. . . .

BOOK III.—THE GARDEN

I was a stricken deer that left the herd 108
Long since; with many an arrow deep infix'd
My panting side was charged, when I withdrew 110
To seek a tranquil death in distant shades.
There was I found by One who had Himself Been hurt by the archers. In His side He bore,
And in His hands and feet, the cruel scars.
With gentle force soliciting the darts, 115
He drew them forth, and healed, and bade me live.

Since then, with few associates, in remote
And silent woods I wander, far from those
My former partners of the peopled scene;
With few associates, and not wishing more. 120
Here much I ruminate, as much I may,
With other views of men and manners now
Than once, and others of a life to come. . . .

<sup>3</sup> The question as to whether slaves were legally emancipated by being brought to England was judicially settled in 1772. In a case decided in that year, the court held that every slave, as soon as he landed on English soil, acquired his freedom.

BOOK IV.—THE WINTER'S EVENING

Hark! 'tis the twanging horn! O'er yonder bridge,

That with its wearisome but needful length
Bestrides the wintry flood, in which the moon
Sees her unwrinkled face reflected bright,
He comes, the herald of a noisy world, 5
With spattered boots, strapped waist, and frozen locks,
News from all nations lumbering at his back.
True to his charge, the close-packed load behind,

Yet careless what he brings, his one concern
Is to conduct it to the destined inn, 10
And having dropped the expected bag—pass on.
He whistles as he goes, light-hearted wretch,
Cold and yet cheerful: messenger of grief
Perhaps to thousands, and of joy to some,
To him indifferent whether grief or joy. 15
Houses in ashes, and the fall of stocks,
Births, deaths, and marriages, epistles wet
With tears that trickled down the writer's cheeks

Fast as the periods from his fluent quill,
Or charged with amorous sighs of absent
swains, 20

Or nymphs responsive, equally affect
His horse and him, unconscious of them all.
But oh the important budget! ushered in
With such heart-shaking music, who can say
What are its tidings? have our troops awaked?
Or do they still, as if with opium drugged, 26
Snore to the murmurs of the Atlantic wave?
Is India free?<sup>4</sup> and does she wear her plumed
And jewelled turban with a smile of peace,
Or do we grind her still? The grand debate, 30
The popular harangue, the tart reply,
The logic, and the wisdom, and the wit,
And the loud laugh—I long to know them all;
I burn to set the imprisoned wranglers free,
And give them voice and utterance once again.

Now stir the fire, and close the shutters
fast, 36

Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round,
And while the bubbling and loud hissing urn
Throws up a steamy column, and the cups
That cheer but not inebriate, wait on each, 40
So let us welcome peaceful evening in. . . .

Oh Winter! ruler of the inverted year, 120
Thy scattered hair with sleet like ashes filled, Thy breath congealed upon thy lips, thy cheeks

Fringed with a beard made white with other snows

Than those of age, thy forehead wrapt in clouds,
A leafless branch thy sceptre, and thy throne 125
A sliding car, indebted to no wheels,
But urged by storms along its slippery way;
I love thee, all unlovely as thou seemest,
And dreaded as thou art. Thou holdest the sun
A prisoner in the yet undawning east, 130
Shortening his journey between morn and noon,

<sup>4</sup> The relation of England to India was one of the important political issues of the time. In 1784 Pitt introduced a bill for the Government of India, and in 1786 (a year after the publication of The Task) the trial of Warren Hastings was begun.

And hurrying him, impatient of his stay,
 Down to the rosy west; but kindly still Compensating his loss with added hours
 Of social converse and instructive ease, 135
 And gathering, at short notice, in one group
 The family dispersed, and fixing thought,
 Not less dispersed by daylight and its cares.
 I crown thee King of intimate delights,
 Fireside enjoyments, home-born happiness, 140
 And all the comforts that the lowly roof
 Of undisturbed retirement, and the hours
 Of long uninterrupted evening know. . . . 143
 Come, Evening, once again, season of peace;
 Return, sweet Evening, and continue long!
 Methinks I see thee in the streaky west, 245
 With matron step slow moving, while the Night
 Treads on thy sweeping train; one hand employed

In letting fall the curtain of repose
 On bird and beast, the other charged for man
 With sweet oblivion of the cares of day; 250
 Not sumptuously adorned, nor needing aid,
 Like homely-featured Night, of clustering gems;
 A star or two just twinkling on thy brow
 Suffices thee; save that the moon is thine
 No less than hers, not worn indeed on high 255
 With ostentatious pageantry, but set
 With modest grandeur in thy purple zone,
 Resplendent less, but of an ample round.
 Come then, and thou shalt find thy votary calm,

Or make me so. Composure is thy gift: 260
 And whether I devote thy gentler hours
 To books, to music, or the poet's toil;
 To weaving nets for bird-alluring fruit;
 Or twining silken threads round ivory reels,
 When they command whom man was born to please: 265
 I slight thee not, but make thee welcome
 still. . . .

In such a world, so thorny, and where none 333
 Finds happiness unlighted, or, if found,
 Without some thistly sorrow at its side, 335
 It seems the part of wisdom, and no sin
 Against the law of love, to measure lots
 With less distinguished than ourselves, that thus

We may with patience bear our moderate ills,
 And sympathize with others, suffering more. 340
 Ill fares the traveller now, and he that stalks
 In ponderous boots beside his reeking team.
 The wain goes heavily, impeded sore
 By congregated loads adhering close
 To the clogged wheels; and in its sluggish pace
 Noiseless appears a moving hill of snow, 346
 The toiling steeds expand the nostril wide,
 While every breath, by respiration strong
 Forced downward, is consolidated soon Upon their jutting chests. He, formed to bear 350

The pelting brunt of the tempestuous night,
 With half-shut eyes and puckered cheeks, and teeth

Presented bare against the storm, plods on.
 One hand secures his hat, save when with both
 He brandishes his pliant length of whip, 355

Resounding oft, and never heard in vain.
 Oh happy! and in my account, denied
 The sensibility of pain with which Refinement is endued, thrice happy thou.
 Thy frame, robust and hardy, feels indeed 360
 The piercing cold, but feels it unimpaired.
 The learned finger never need explore
 Thy vigorous pulse; and the unhealthful east,
 That breathes the spleen, and searches every bone
 Of the infirm, is wholesome air to thee. 365
 Thy days roll on exempt from household care;
 Thy waggon is thy wife; and the poor beasts,
 That drag the dull companion to and fro,
 Thine helpless charge, dependent on thy care.
 Ah, treat them kindly! rude as thou appearest,
 Yet show that thou hast mercy, which the great, 371
 With needless hurry whirled from place to place,
 Humane as they would seem, not always show.
 Poor, yet industrious, modest, quiet, neat,
 Such claim compassion in a night like this, 375
 And have a friend in every feeling heart. . . .

BOOK VI.—THE WINTER WALK AT NOON

The night was winter in his roughest mood, 57
 The morning sharp and clear. But now at noon,

Upon the southern side of the slant hills,
 And where the woods fence off the northern blast, 60

The season smiles, resigning all its rage,
 And has the warmth of May. The vault is blue
 Without a cloud, and white without a speck
 The dazzling splendour of the scene below.

Again the harmony comes o'er the vale 65
 And through the trees I view the embattled tower<sup>b</sup>

Whence all the music. I again perceive
 The soothing influence of the wafted strains,
 And settle in soft musings as I tread
 The walk, still verdant, under oaks and elms, 70
 Whose outspread branches overarch the glade.
 The roof, though moveable through all its length

As the wind sways it, has yet well sufficed,
 And intercepting in their silent fall
 The frequent flakes, has kept a path for me. 75
 No noise is here, or none that hinders thought.
 The redbreast warbles still, but is content
 With slender notes, and more than half suppressed:

Pleased with his solitude, and fitting light
 From spray to spray, where'er he rests he shakes 80

From many a twig the pendant drops of ice,
 That tinkle in the withered leaves below.
 Stillness, accompanied with sounds so soft,
 Charms more than silence. Meditation here May think down hours to moments. Here the heart 85

May give a useful lesson to the head,
 And learning wiser grow without his books.
 Knowledge and wisdom, far from being one,

<sup>b</sup> Supposed to refer to the church at Emberton, about a mile from Olney.

Have oftimes no connection. Knowledge dwells
In heads replete with thoughts of other men, 90
Wisdom in minds attentive to their own.
Knowledge, a rude unprofitable mass,
The mere materials with which wisdom builds,
Till smoothed and squared and fitted to its place,
Does but encumber whom it seems to enrich. 95
Knowledge is proud that he has learned so much;
Wisdom is humble that he knows no more. . . .
I would not enter on my list of friends 560 (Though graced with polished manners and fine sense,
Yet wanting sensibility) the man
Who needlessly sets foot upon a worm.
An inadvertent step may crush the snail
That crawls at evening in the public path; 565
But he that has humanity, forewarned,
Will tread aside, and let the reptile live.
The creeping vermin, loathsome to the sight,
And charged perhaps with venom, that intrudes,
A visitor unwelcome, into scenes 570
Sacred to neatness and repose, the alcove,
The chamber, or refectory, may die:
A necessary act incurs no blame.
Not so when, held within their proper bounds,
And guiltless of offence, they range the air, 575
Or take their pastime in the spacious field:
There they are privileged: and he that hunts
Or harms them there is guilty of a wrong,
Disturbs the economy of nature's realm,
Who, when she formed, designed them an abode. 580
The sum is this: if man's convenience, health,
Or safety interfere, his rights and claims
Are paramount, and must extinguish theirs.
Else they are all—the meanest things that are—
As free to live, and to enjoy that life, 585
As God was free to form them at the first,
Who in His sovereign wisdom made them all.
Ye therefore who love mercy, teach your sons
To love it too. The spring-time of our years
Is soon dishonoured and defiled in most 590
By budding ills, that ask a prudent hand
To check them. But, alas! none sooner shoots,
If unrestrained, into luxuriant growth,
Than cruelty, most devilish of them all.
Mercy to him that shows it, is the rule 595
And righteous limitation of its act,
By which Heaven moves in pardoning guilty
man,
And he that shows none, being ripe in years,
And conscious of the outrage he commits,
Shall seek it and not find it in his turn. 600
Distinguished much by reason, and still more
By our capacity of grace divine,
From creatures that exist but for our sake,
Which, having served us, perish, we are held Accountable, and God, some future day, 605
Will reckon with us roundly for the abuse
Of what He deems no mean or trivial trust.
Superior as we are, they yet depend
Not more on human help than we on theirs.

Their strength, or speed, or vigilance, were given 610
In aid of our defects. In some are found
Such teachable and apprehensive parts,
That man's attainments in his own concerns, Matched with the expertness of the brutes in theirs,
Are oftimes vanquished and thrown far behind. . . . 615

THE BASTILLE<sup>1</sup>

(BOOK V. THE WINTER MORNING WALK)

Then shame to manhood, and opprobrious
more
To France than all her losses and defeats,
Old or of later date, by sea or land,
Her house of bondage, worse than that of old
Which God avenged on Pharaoh—the Bastille.<sup>1</sup>
Ye horrid towers, the abode of broken hearts, 81
Ye dungeons, and ye cages of despair,
That monarchs have supplied from age to age
With music such as suits their sovereign ears,
The sighs and groans of miserable men! 85
There's not an English heart that would not leap
To hear that ye were fallen at last; to know
That even our enemies, so oft employed
In forging chains for us, themselves were free.
For he who values liberty confines 90
His zeal for her predominance within
No narrow bounds; her cause engages him
Wherever pleaded. 'Tis the cause of man.
There dwell the most forlorn of human kind,
Immured though unaccused, condemned untried, 95
Cruelly spared, and hopeless of escape.
There, like the visionary emblem seen
By him of Babylon,<sup>2</sup> life stands a stump,
And filleted about with hoops of brass,
Still lives, though all his pleasant boughs are gone, 100
To count the hour-bell, and expect no change;
And ever as the sullen sound is heard,
Still to reflect, that though a joyless note
To him whose moments all have one dull pace,
Ten thousand rovers in the world at large 105
Account it music; that it summons some
To theatre or jocund feast or ball;
The wearied hireling finds it a release
From labour; and the lover, who has chid
Its long delay, feels every welcome stroke 110
Upon his heart-strings, trembling with delight:—
To fly for refuge from distracting thought
To such amusements as ingenious woe Contrives, hard shifting and without her tools:—
To read engraven on the mouldy walls, 115
In staggering types, his predecessor's tale,
A sad memorial, and subjoin his own:—

<sup>1</sup> The Bastille, the famous state prison in Paris, fell before the fury of the mob at the beginning of the French Revolution, 1789.

<sup>2</sup> Nebuchadnezzar, v. Dan. iv., 13–17.

To turn purveyor to an overgorge'd
 And bloated spider, till the pampered pest
 Is made familiar, watches his approach, 120
 Comes at his call, and serves him for a friend:—
 To wear out time in numbering to and fro
 The studs that thick emboss his iron door,
 Then downward and then upward, then aslant,
 And then alternate, with a sickly hope 125
 By dint of change to give his tasteless task
 Some relish, till the sum exactly found
 In all directions, he begins again:—
 Oh comfortless existence! hemmed around
 With woes, which who that suffers would not kneel 130
 And beg for exile, or the pangs of death?
 That man should thus encroach on fellow man,
 Abridge him of his just and native rights,
 Eradicate him, tear him from his hold
 Upon the endearments of domestic life 135
 And social, nip his fruitfulness and use,
 And doom him for perhaps a heedless word
 To barrenness, and solitude, and tears,
 Moves indignation, makes the name of king
 (Of king whom such prerogative can please) 140
 As dreadful as the Manichean god,<sup>3</sup>
 Adored through fear, strong only to destroy.
 'Tis liberty alone that gives the flower
 Of fleeting life its lustre and perfume,
 And we are weeds without it. 145

ON THE RECEIPT OF MY MOTHER'S PICTURE OUT OF NORFOLK

THE GIFT OF MY COUSIN, ANN BODHAM

(c. 1790)

O That those lips had language! Life has passed
 With me but roughly since I heard thee last.
 Those lips are thine—thy own sweet smile I see,
 The same that oft in childhood solaced me;
 Voice only fails, else how distinct they say, 5
 "Grieve not, my child, chase all thy fears away!"
 The meek intelligence of those dear eyes
 (Blessed be the art that can immortalize,
 The art that baffles Time's tyrannic claim
 To quench it) here shines on me still the same. 10
 Faithful remembrancer of one so dear,
 O welcome guest, though unexpected here!
 Who bidst me honour with an artless song,
 Affectionate, a mother lost so long,<sup>1</sup>
 I will obey, not willingly alone, 15
 But gladly, as the precept were her own:
 And, while that face renews my filial grief,
 Fancy shall weave a charm for my relief,
 Shall steep me in Elysian revery,
 A momentary dream, that thou art she. 20
 My mother! when I learnt that thou wast
     dead,
 Say, wast thou conscious of the tears I shed?

<sup>3</sup> Manicheism, a religious sect that arose in Western Asia in the third century, believing that the body must be subdued, taught and rigidly enforced the most extreme asceticism.

<sup>1</sup> Cowper was six years old when his mother died.

Hovered thy spirit o'er thy sorrowing son,
 Wretch even then, life's journey just begun?
 Perhaps thou gavest me, though unfelt, a kiss:
 Perhaps a tear, if souls can weep in bliss— 26
 Ah, that maternal smile! it answers—Yes.
 I heard the bell tolled on thy burial day,
 I saw the hearse that bore thee slow away,
 And, turning from my nursery window, drew 30
 A long, long sigh, and wept a last adieu!
 But was it such? It was.—Where thou art
     gone
 Adieus and farewells are a sound unknown.
 May I but meet thee on that peaceful shore,
 The parting word shall pass my lips no more! 35
 Thy maidens, grieved themselves at my concern,
 Oft gave me promise of thy quick return.
 What ardently I wished I long believed,
 And, disappointed still, was still deceived.
 By expectation every day beguiled, 40
 Dupe of to-morrow even from a child.
 Thus many a sad to-morrow came and went,
 Till, all my stock of infant sorrow spent,
 I learnt at last submission to my lot;
 But, though I less deplored thee, ne'er forgot. 45
 Where once we dwelt our name is heard no
     more,
 Children not thine have trod my nursery floor;
 And where the gardener Robin, day by day,
 Drew me to school along the public way,
 Delighted with my bauble coach, and wrapped
 In scarlet mantle warm, and velvet capped, 51
 'Tis now become a history little known,
 That once we called the pastoral house our own.
 Short-lived possession! But the record fair
 That memory keeps, of all thy kindness there,
 Still outlives many a storm that has effaced 56
 A thousand other themes less deeply traced.
 Thy nightly visits to my chamber made,
 That thou mightst know me safe and warmly
     laid;
 Thy morning bounties ere I left my home, 60
 The biscuit, or confectionary plum;
 The fragrant waters on my cheeks bestowed
 By thy own hand, till fresh they shone and glowed;
 All this, and more endearing still than all,
 Thy constant flow of love, that knew no fall, 65
 Ne'er roughened by those cataracts and breaks
 That humour interposed too often makes;
 All this still legible in memory's page,
 And still to be so to my latest age,
 Adds joy to duty, makes me glad to pay 70
 Such honours to thee as my numbers may;
 Perhaps a frail memorial, but sincere,
 Not scorned in heaven, though little noticed
     here.
 Could Time, his flight reversed, restore the hours,
 When, playing with thy vesture's tissued flowers, 75
 The violet, the pink, and jessamine,
 I pricked them into paper with a pin,
 (And thou wast happier than myself the while,
 Wouldst softly speak, and stroke my head and smile).

Could those few pleasant days again appear, 80
Might one wish bring them, would I wish them
here?

I would not trust my heart—the dear delight
Seems so to be desired, perhaps I might.—
But no—what here we call our life is such,
So little to be loved, and thou so much, 85
That I should ill requite thee to constrain
Thy unbound spirit into bonds again.

Thou, as a gallant bark from Albion's coast
(The storms all weathered and the ocean crossed)

Shoots into port at some well-haven'd isle, 90
Where spices breathe, and brighter seasons
smile,

There sits quiescent on the floods, that show
Her beauteous form reflected clear below,
While airs impregnated with incense play
Around her, fanning light her streamers gay; 95
So thou, with sails how swift! hast reached the shore,

"Where tempests never beat nor billows roar,"
And thy loved consort on the dangerous tide
Of life long since has anchored by thy side.

But me, scarce hoping to attain that rest, 100
Always from port withheld, always distressed—
Me howling blasts drive devious, tempesttossed,

Sails ripped, seams opening wide, and compass
lost,

And day by day some current's thwarting force
Sets me more distant from a prosperous course.
Yet, Oh, the thought that thou art safe, and
he! 106

That thought is joy, arrive what may to me.
My boast is not, that I deduce my birth
From loins enthroned and rulers of the earth;
But higher far my proud pretensions rise— 110
The son of parents passed into the skies!

And now, farewell—Time unrevoked has run
His wonted course, yet what I wished is done.
By contemplation's help, not sought in vain,
I seem to have lived my childhood o'er again;
To have renewed the joys that once were
mine, 116

Without the sin of violating thine:
And, while the wings of Fancy still are free,
And I can view this mimic show of thee,
Time has but half succeeded in his theft— 120
Thy self removed, thy power to soothe me left.

ON THE LOSS OF THE "ROYAL GEORGE"<sup>1</sup>

WRITTEN WHEN THE NEWS ARRIVED, SEPTEMBER, 1782, TO THE MARCH IN "SCIPIO"

Toll for the brave!
The brave that are no more!
All sunk beneath the wave,
Fast by their native shore!

<sup>1</sup>The Royal George was lost off Spithead, Aug. 29, 1792. The ship had been heeled over for repairs. While the crew were at dinner, she was struck by a sudden squall, and, the leeward deck ports being left open, she rapidly filled and sank.

Eight hundred of the brave, 5
Whose courage well was tried,
Had made the vessel heel,
And laid her on her side.

A land-breeze shook the shrouds, 10
And she was overset;
Down went the Royal George,
With all her crew complete.

Toll for the brave!
Brave Kempenfelt is gone;
His last sea-fight is fought; 15
His work of glory done.

It was not in the battle;
No tempest gave the shock;
She sprang no fatal leak;
She ran upon no rock. 20

His sword was in its sheath;
His fingers held the pen,
When Kempenfelt went down
With twice four hundred men.

Weigh the vessel up, 25
Once dreaded by our foes!
And mingle with our cup
The tear that England owes.

Her timbers yet are sound,
And she may float again
Full-charged with England's thunder,
And plough the distant main. 30

But Kempenfelt is gone,
His victories are o'er;
And he and his eight hundred
Shall plough the wave no more. 35

THE CAST-AWAY

(March 20, 1799)

Obscurest night involved the sky,
The Atlantic billows roared,
When such a destined wretch as I,
Washed headlong from on board,
Of friends, of hope, of all bereft, 5
His floating home forever left.

No braver chief could Albion boast
Than he with whom he went,
Nor ever ship left Albion's coast
With warmer wishes sent. 10
He loved them both, but both in vain,
Nor him beheld, nor her again.

Not long beneath the whelming brine,
Expert to swim, he lay;
Nor soon he felt his strength decline, 15
Or courage die away;
But waged with death a lasting strife,
Supported by despair of life.

He shouted: nor his friends had failed
To check the vessel's course,
But so the furious blast prevailed,
That, pitiless perforce,
They left their outcast mate behind, 20
And scudded still before the wind.

Some succor yet they could afford; 25
And such as storms allow,
The cask, the coop, the floated cord,
Delayed not to bestow.
But he (they knew) nor ship nor shore,
What e'er they gave, should visit more. 30

Nor, cruel as it seemed, could he
Their haste himself condemn,
Aware that flight, in such a sea,
Alone could rescue them;
Yet bitter felt it still to die 35
Deserted, and his friends so nigh.

He long survives, who lives an hour
In ocean, self-upheld:
And so long he, with unspent power,
His destiny repelled; 40
And ever, as the minutes flew,
Entreated help, or cried—"Adieu!"

At length, his transient respite past,
His comrades, who before
Had heard his voice in every blast,
Could catch the sound no more: 45
For then, by toil subdued, he drank
The stifling wave, and then he sank.

No poet wept him; but the page
Of narrative sincere,
That tells his name, his worth, his age,
Is wet with Anson's tear:<sup>1</sup>
And tears by bards or heroes shed
Alike immortalize the dead.

I therefore purpose not, or dream, 55
Descanting on his fate,
To give the melancholy theme
A more enduring date:
But misery still delights to trace
Its semblance in another's case. 60

No voice divine the storm allayed,
No light propitious shone,
When, snatched from all effectual aid,
We perished, each alone:
But I beneath a rougher sea, 65
And whelmed in deeper gulfs than he.

William Julius Mickle

1735-1788

THERE'S NAE LUCK ABOUT THE HOUSE!

And are ye sure the news is true?
And are ye sure he's weel?
Is this a time to think o' wark?
Mak haste, lay by your weel;
Is this the time to spin a thread, 5
When Colin's at the door?
Reach down my cloak, I'll to the quay,
And see him come ashore.
For there's nae luck about the house,
There's nae luck at a'; 10

<sup>1</sup> The Castaway is founded on an incident related in Anson's narrative of his Voyage Round the World.

<sup>2</sup> Often called The Mariner's Wife. This poem, a copy

There's little pleasure in the house
When our gudeman's awa'.

And gie to me my bigonet,<sup>2</sup>
My bishop's satin gown;
For I maun tell the baillie's wife 15
That Colin's in the town.

My Turkey<sup>3</sup> slippers maun gae on,
My stockings pearly blue;
It's a' to pleasure our gudeman,
For he's baith leal and true. 20

Rise, lass, and mak a clean fireside,
Put on the muckle pot;
Gie little Kate her button gown,
And Jock his Sunday coat;
And mak their shoon as black as slaes,<sup>4</sup> 25
Their hose as white as snaw;
It's a' to pleasure my gudeman,
For he's been lang awa'.

There's twa fat hens upo' the coop,
Been fed this month and mair; 30
Mak haste and thrav<sup>5</sup> their necks about,
That Colin weel may fare;
And mak our table neat and clean,
Let everything look braw,

For wha tell how Colin fared
When he was far awa'? 35

Sae true his heart, sae smooth his speech,
His breath like caller air;
His very foot has music in't
As he comes up the stair.

And will I see his face again?
And will I hear him speak? 40
I'm downright dizzy wi' the thought,
In troth I'm like to greet!<sup>6</sup>

Since Colin's weel, and weel content,
I hae nae mair to crave; 45
And gin I live to keep him sae,
I'm blest aboon the lave.

And will I see his face again?
And will I hear him speak?
I'm downright dizzy wi' the thought, 50
In troth I'm like to greet.

For there's nae luck about the house,
There's nae luck at a';
There's little pleasure in the house
When our gudeman's awa'. 55

James Beattie

1735-1803

THE MINSTREL (1771-1774)

(Selections)

BOOK I

Ah! who can tell how hard it is to climb
The steep where Fame's proud temple shines
afar;

Ah! Who can tell how many a soul sublime
Has felt the influence of malignant star, of which was found among Mickle's manuscripts has been frequently attributed to Jane Adam, a Scotch school-mistress, and minor poet. <sup>2</sup> A cap, or head-dress.

<sup>3</sup> Turkish.

<sup>4</sup> Sloes,—the fruit of the blackthorn.

<sup>5</sup> Wrang.

<sup>6</sup> Weep.

And waged with Fortune an eternal war; 5
 Check'd by the scoff of Pride, by Envy's frown,
 And Poverty's unconquerable bar,
 In life's low vale remote has pined alone,
 Then dropt into the grave, unpitied and unknown!

And yet the languor of inglorious days, 10
 Not equally oppressive is to all;
 Him, who ne'er listen'd to the voice of praise,
 The silence of neglect can ne'er appal.
 There are, who, deaf to mad Ambition's call,
 Would shrink to hear th' obstreperous trump of Fame; 15

Supremely blest, if to their portion fall
 Health, competence, and peace. Nor higher aim
 Had he, whose simple tale these artless lines proclaim.

The rolls of fame I will not now explore;
 Nor need I here describe in learned lay, 20
 How forth the Minstrel far'd in days of yore,
 Right glad of heart, though homely in array;
 His waving locks and beard all hoary grey:
 While from his bending shoulder, decent hung
 His harp, the sole companion of his way, 25
 Which to the whistling wind responsive rung:
 And ever as he went some merry lay he sung.

Fret not thyself, thou glittering child of pride,
 That a poor villager inspires my strain;
 With these let Pageantry and Power abide: 30
 The gentle Muses haunt the sylvan reign;
 Where through wild groves at eve the lonely swain

Enraptur'd roves, to gaze on Nature's charms.
 They hate the sensual and scorn the vain,
 The parasite their influence never warms, 35
 Nor him whose sordid soul the love of gold alarms. . . .

There lived in Gothic days as legends tell, 91
 A shepherd-swain, a man of low degree;
 Whose sires, perchance, in Fairy-land might dwell,

Sicilian groves, or vales of Arcady;
 But he, I ween, was of the north country;<sup>1</sup> 95
 A nation fam'd for song, and beauty's charms;
 Zealous, yet modest, innocent, though free;
 Patient of toil; serene amidst alarms;
 Inflexible in faith; invincible in arms.

The shepherd-swain of whom I mention made,
 On Scotia's mountains fed his little flock; 101
 The sickle, scythe, or plow, he never sway'd;
 An honest heart was almost all his stock;
 His drink the living water from the rock;
 The milky dams supplied his board, and lent
 Their kindly fleece to baffle winter's shock; 106
 And he, though oft with dust and sweat besprent,<sup>2</sup>

Did guide and guard their wanderings, where-soe'er they went.

From labor health, from health contentment
 springs;

Contentment opes the source of every joy. 110
 He envied not, he never thought of kings;
 Nor from those appetites sustain'd annoy,
 That chance may frustrate, or indulgence cloy:
 Nor Fate his calm and humble hopes beguiled; 114

He mourn'd no recreant friend, nor mistress coy,
 For on his vows the blameless Phoebe smil'd,
 And her alone he lov'd, and lov'd her from a child.

No jealousy their dawn of love o'ercast,
 Nor blasted were their wedded days with strife;

Each season look'd delightful as it past, 120
 To the fond husband and the faithful wife.

Beyond the lowly vale of shepherd-life
 They never roam'd; secure beneath the storm
 Which in Ambition's lofty hand is rife, Where peace and love are canker'd by the worm 125

Of pride, each bud of joy industrious to deform.

The wight whose tale these artless lines unfold,

Was all the offspring of this humble pair:

His birth no oracle or seer foretold:

No prodigy appear'd in earth or air, 130

Nor aught that might a strange event declare.
 You guess each circumstance of Edwin's birth;
 The parent's transport, and the parent's care;
 The gossip's<sup>3</sup> prayer for wealth, and wit and worth;

And one long summer-day of indolence and mirth. 135

And yet poor Edwin was no vulgar boy,
 Deep thought oft seem'd to fix his infant eye,
 Dainties he heeded not, nor gaud,<sup>4</sup> nor toy,
 Save one short pipe of rudest minstrelsy;
 Silent when glad; affectionate though shy; 140
 And now his look was most demurely sad;
 And now he laugh'd aloud, yet none knew
 why.

The neighbors star'd, and sigh'd, yet bless'd
 the lad:

Some deem'd him wondrous wise, and some believ'd him mad. . . . 144

Lo! where the stripling wrapt in wonder, roves
 Beneath the precipice o'erhung with pine; 164
 And sees, on high, amidst th' encircling groves,
 From cliff to cliff the foaming torrents shine:
 While waters, woods and winds, in concert
 join,

And Echo swells the chorus to the skies.

Would Edwin this majestic scene resign 169

For aught the huntsman's puny craft supplies?

Ah! no: he better knows great Nature's charms to prize.

<sup>3</sup> Originally, one who stood sponsor for a child at baptism; a godfather, or godmother. (Gossip means literally God-relative).

<sup>4</sup> Glittering trinket, or possibly jest, sport.

<sup>1</sup> Scotland.

<sup>2</sup> Besprinkled.

And oft he traced the uplands, to survey,
When o'er the sky advanc'd the kindling dawn,
The crimson cloud, blue main, and mountain grey,

And lake, dim-gleaming on the smoky lawn: 175
Far to the west, the long, long vale withdrawn,
Where twilight loves to linger for awhile;
And now he faintly kens the bounding fawn,
And villager abroad at early toil.
But lo! the Sun appears! and heaven, earth,
ocean, smile. 180

And oft the craggy cliff he lov'd to climb,
When all in mist the world below was lost.
What dreadful pleasure! there to stand sublime,

Like shipwreck'd mariner on desert coast,
And view th' enormous waste of vapor, tost 185
In billows, length'ning to th' horizon round,
Now scoop'd in gulfs, with mountains now emboss'd!

And hear the voice of mirth and song rebound,
Flocks, herds, and waterfalls, along the hoar profound! . . . 189

When the long-sounding curfew from afar 280
Loaded with loud lament the lonely gale,
Young Edwin, lighted by the evening star, Lingering and listening, wander'd down the vale.

There would he dream of graves, and corse
pale; 284

And ghosts that to the chancel-dungeon throng,
And drag a length of clanking chain, and wail,
Till silenc'd by the owl's terrific song,
Or blast that shrieks by fits the shuddering isles along.

Or, when the setting Moon, in crimson dyed,
Hung o'er the dark and melancholy deep, 290
To haunted stream, remote from man, he hied,
Where fays of yore their revels wont to keep;
And there let Fancy rove at large, till sleep
A vision brought to his entranced sight. 294
And first a wildly-murmuring wind 'gan creep
Shrill to his ringing ear; then tapers bright,
With instantaneous gleam, illum'd the vault of
night.

Anon in view a portal's blazon'd arch
Arose; the trumpet bids the valves unfold: 299
And forth an host of little warriors march,
Grasping the diamond lance, and targe of gold.
Their look was gentle, their demeanor bold, 302
And green their helmets, and green their silk attire;

And here and there, right venerably old,
The long-rob'd minstrels wake the warbling wire, 305

And some with mellow breath the martial pipe inspire. . . .

But who the melodies of morn can tell? 334
The wild brook babbling down the mountainside;

The lowing herd; the sheepfold's simple bell;

The pipe of early shepherd dim descried
In the lone valley; echoing far and wide
The clamorous horn along the cliffs above;
The hollow murmur of the ocean-tide; 340
The hum of bees, the linnet's lay of love,
And the full choir that wakes the universal grove.

The cottage curs at early pilgrim bark;
Crown'd with her pail, the tripping milk-maid
sings;

The whistling plowman stalks afield; and,
hark! 345

Down the rough slope the ponderous wagon
rings;

Through rustling corn the hare astonish'd
springs;

Slow tolls the village clock the drowsy hour;
The partridge bursts away on whirring wings;
Deep mourns the turtle in sequester'd bower,
And shrill lark carols clear from her aerial tour. 351

O Nature now in every charm supreme!
Whose votaries feast on raptures ever new!

O for the voice and fire of seraphim,
To sing thy glories with devotion due! 355

Blest be the day I 'scaped the wrangling crew,
From Pyrrho's maze,<sup>5</sup> and Epicurus<sup>6</sup> sty;

And held high converse with the godlike few,
Who to th' enraptur'd heart, and ear, and eye, Teach beauty, virtue, truth, and love, and melody. 360

Hence! ye who snare and stupefy the mind,
Sophists, of beauty, virtue, joy, the bane!

Greedy and fell, though impotent and blind,
Who spread your filthy nets in Truth's fair fane, 365

And ever ply your venom'd fangs amain!
Hence to dark Error's den, whose rankling slime

First gave you form! Hence! lest the Muse should deign,

(Though loth on theme so mean to waste a rhyme), 370

With vengeance to pursue your sacrilegious crime.

But hail, ye mighty masters of the lay,
Nature's true sons, the friends of man, and truth!

Whose song, sublimely sweet, serenely gay,
Amus'd my childhood, and inform'd my youth.

O let your spirit still my bosom soothe, 376
Inspire my dreams, and my wild-wanderings guide!

Your voice each rugged path of life can smooth:
For well I know, wherever ye reside,

There harmony, and peace, and innocence
abide. . . .

Your voice each rugged path of life can smooth:
For well I know, wherever ye reside,

There harmony, and peace, and innocence
abide. . . .

<sup>5</sup> Pyrrho's uncertainty, perplexities, and doubts.
Pyrrho (c. 360-c. 270 B. C.), was a Greek philosopher, who taught that we had no certain knowledge of the nature of things.

<sup>6</sup> A Greek philosopher (342-270 B. C.), founder of the Epicurean School. He was popularly supposed to have taught that pleasure and self-indulgence were the chief objects of man's existence. (Cf. the various meanings of Epicure).

THE HERMIT

(Written c. 1766)

At the close of the day, when the hamlet is still,
And mortals the sweets of forgetfulness prove,
When nought but the torrent is heard on the hill,

And nought but the nightingale's song in the grove:

'Twas thus by the cave of the mountain afar, 5
While his harp rung symphonious, a hermit
began;

No more with himself or with nature at war,
He thought as a sage, though he felt as a man.

"Ah! why, all abandon'd to darkness and woe,
Why, lone Philomela,<sup>1</sup> that languishing fall? 10
For spring shall return, and a lover bestow,
And sorrow no longer thy bosom enthrall.
But, if pity inspire you, renew the sad lay,
Mourn, sweetest complainer, man calls thee to mourn;

O soothe him, whose pleasures like thine pass
away: 15
Full quickly they pass—but they never return.

"Now gliding remote, on the verge of the sky,
The Moon half extinguish'd her crescent displays:

But lately I mark'd, when majestic on high
She shone, and the planets were lost in her blaze. 20

Roll on, thou fair orb, and with gladness pursue
The path that conducts thee to splendour
again:

But man's faded glory what change shall renew!
Ah, fool! to exult in a glory so vain!

"'Tis night, and the landscape is lovely no more:
I mourn, but, ye woodlands, I mourn not for you; 26

For morn is approaching, your charms to restore,

Perfum'd with fresh fragrance, and glittering with dew:

Nor yet for the ravage of winter I mourn;
Kind Nature the embryo blossom will save: 30
But when shall spring visit the mouldering urn!

O when shall it dawn on the night of the grave!"

"'Twas thus, by the glare of false science<sup>2</sup>
betray'd,
That leads, to bewilder, and dazzles, to blind,
My thoughts wont to roam, from shade onward to shade, 35

Destruction before me, and sorrow behind.

"O Pity, great Father of light," then I cried,
"Thy creature, who fain would not wander
from thee;

Lo, humbled in dust, I relinquish my pride:
From doubt and from darkness thou only canst
free." 40

<sup>1</sup> Or Philomel, the nightingale.<sup>2</sup> Knowledge, learning.

"And darkness and doubt are now flying away;
No longer I roam in conjecture forlorn.
So breaks on the traveller, faint, and astray,
The bright and the balmy effulgence of morn.
See Truth, Love, and Mercy, in triumph descending, 45

And nature all glowing in Eden's first bloom!
On the cold cheek of Death smiles and roses are blending,

And Beauty immortal awakes from the tomb."

James Macpherson

1738–1796

CARTHON: A POEM

(Selections from translation of Ossian,<sup>1</sup> ed. of 1773)

Tell, said the mighty Fingal, the tale of thy youthful days. Sorrow, like a cloud on the sun, shades the soul of Clessámmor. Mournful are thy thoughts, alone, on the banks of the roaring Lora. Let us hear the sorrow of thy 5 youth, and the darkness of thy days!

"It was in the days of peace," replied the great Clessámmor, "I came in my bounding ship, to Balclutha's walls of towers. The 10 winds had roared behind my sails, and Clutha's streams received my dark-bosomed ship.
Three days I remained in Reuthámir's halls,
and saw his daughter, that beam of light.

<sup>1</sup>In ancient Gaelic tradition, Ossian (or Oíson) was famous as a bard and warrior. He was the son of Finn, or Fin (the Fingal of Macpherson's poem), and he lived in the latter half of the third century. In 1762, James Macpherson, a young Scotch schoolmaster, published Fingal, an Ancient Epic Poem in Six Books, with other lesser poems. Ancient Gaelic legends had been preserved in remote parts of Scotland as well as in Ireland, and Macpherson asserted that his book was a translation of certain poems of Ossian, out of the original Gaelic. This claim was contested by Dr. Johnson, and, although the matter has been fully discussed and investigated, the authenticity of Macpherson's so-called "translation," has never been fully established. But, whatever its origin, Macpherson's Ossian, was a widely read and highly influential book, and with all its faults it holds an important place in the rise of romanticism in the 18th century.

Carthon, one of the short poems of Macpherson's collection, is supposed to be "a tale of the times of old," related by Ossian to Malvina, the betrothed of his dead son, and the companion and comfort of his age. The following story, partly told, and partly implied, forms the basis of the poem. When a young man, Clessámmor, the uncle of Fingal, came to Balclutha, a British town on the river Clutha, or Clyde. There he married Moina, the daughter of Reuthámir, the chief man of the town, but, having killed a rival in a quarrel ("the son of a stranger"), Clessámmor was forced to leave Moina and fly for his life. Carthon, the son of Clessámmor and Moina, was born after his father's flight and grew up ignorant of his parentage. While Carthon was a child, Comhal, Fingal's father and the brother-in-law of Clessámmor, attacks and burns Balclutha, and when Carthon comes to manhood, he resolves to take vengeance for this act of destruction on Comhal's family. Carthon is thus unwittingly involved in a feud with his own kindred, and in an expedition of vengeance, he meets Clessámmor in single combat. Both combatants are ignorant of the relationship between them, and Carthon dies by his father's hand. The poem opens on the night before the young hero's death.

The joy of the shell went round, and the aged hero gave the fair. . . . My love for Moina was great: my heart poured forth in joy.

"The son of a stranger came; a chief who loved the white-bosomed Moina. His words were mighty in the hall; he often half-un-sheathed his sword. Where, said he, is the mighty Comhal, the restless wanderer of the heath? Comes he, with his host, to Balclutha, 5 since Clessámmor is so bold? My soul, I replied, O warrior! burns in a light of its own. I stand without fear in the midst of thousands, though the valiant are distant far. Stranger! thy words are mighty, for Clessámmor is alone. 15 But my sword trembles by my side, and longs to glitter in my hand. Speak no more of Comhal, son of the winding Clutha.

"The strength of his pride arose. We fought; he fell beneath my sword. The banks 20 of Clutha heard his fall; a thousand spears glittered around. I fought; the strangers prevailed: I plunged into the stream of Clutha; my white sails rose over the waves, and bounded on the dark-blue sea. Moina came 25 to the shore, and rolled the red eye of her tears: her loose hair flew on the wind; and I heard her mournful, distant cries. Often did I turn my ship; but the winds of the East prevailed. Nor Clutha ever since have I seen, 30 nor Moina of the dark-brown hair. She fell in Balclutha, for I have seen her ghost. I knew her as she came through the dusky night, along the murmur of Lora; she was like the new moon, seen through the gathered mist: 35 when the sky pours down its flaky snow, and the world is silent and dark."

Raise, ye bards, said the mighty Fingal, the praise of unhappy Moina. Call her ghost, with your songs, to our hills; that she may 40 rest with the fair of Morven, the sunbeams of other days, the delight of heroes of old. I have seen the walls of Balclutha, but they were desolate. The fire had resounded in the halls: and the voice of the people is heard no 45 more. The stream of Clutha was removed from its place, by the fall of the walls. The thistle shook, there, its lonely head: the moss whistled to the wind. The fox looked out from the windows, the rank grass of the wall waved 50 round its head. Desolate is the dwelling of Moina, silence is in the house of her fathers. Raise the song of mourning, O bards! over the land of strangers. They have but fallen before us: for one day we must fall. Why dost thou 55 build the hall, son of the winged days? Thou lookest from thy towers today; yet a few years, and the blast of the desert comes; it howls in thy empty court, and whistles round thy half-worn shield. And let the blast of the desert come! we shall be renowned in our day! The mark of my arm shall be in battle; my name in the song of bards. Raise the song; 5 send round the shell: let joy be heard in my hall. When thou, sun of heaven, shalt fail! if thou shalt fail, thou mighty light! if thy brightness is for a season, like Fingal; our fame shall survive thy beams!

Such was the song of Fingal, in the day of his joy. His thousand bards leaned forward from their seats, to hear the voice of the king. It was like the music of harps on the gale of the spring. Lovely were thy thoughts, O 10 Fingal! why had not Ossian the strength of thy soul? But thou standest alone, my father! who can equal the king of Selma? . . .

Joy rose in Carthon's face; he lifted his heavy eyes. He gave his sword to Fingal, to lie within his hall, that the memory of Balclutha's king might remain in Morven. The battle ceased along the field, the bard had sung the song of peace. The chiefs gathered round the falling Carthon; they heard his words with 15 sighs. Silent they leaned on their spears, while Balclutha's hero spoke. His hair sighed in the wind, and his voice was sad and low.

"King of Morven," Carthon said, "I fall in the midst of my course. A foreign tomb receives, in youth, the last of Reuthámir's race, 20 Darkness dwells in Balclutha: the shadows of grief in Crathmo. But raise my remembrance on the banks of Lora, where my fathers dwelt. Perhaps the husband of Moina will mourn over his fallen Carthon." His words reached the heart of Clessámmor: he fell, in silence on his son. The host stood darkened around; no voice is on the plain. Night came, the moon, from the east, looked on the mournful field; but still they stood, like a silent grove that 25 lifts its head on Gormal, when the loud winds are laid, and dark autumn is on the plain.

Three days they mourned above Carthon; on the fourth his father died. In the narrow plain of the rock they lie; a dim ghost defends 30 their tomb. There lovely Moina is often seen; when the sunbeam darts on the rock, and all around is dark. There she is seen, Malvina! but not like the daughters of the hill. Her robes are from the stranger's land; and she is still alone!

Fingal was sad for Carthon; he commanded his bards to mark the day; when shadowy autumn returned; and often did they mark the 35 day, and sing the hero's praise. "Who comes so dark from ocean's roar, like autumn's shadowy cloud? Death is trembling in his hand! his eyes are flames of fire! Who roars along dark Lora's heath? Who but Carthon, king of swords! The people fall! see! how he strides, like the sullen ghost of Morven! But there he lies, a goodly oak, which sudden blasts overturned! When shalt thou rise, Balclutha's joy?

 When, Carthon, shalt thou arise? Who comes so dark from ocean's roar, like autumn's shadowy cloud?" Such were the words of the bards, in the day of their mourning: Ossian often joined their voice; and added to their song.
 My soul has been mournful for Carthon; he fell in the days of his youth: and thou, O Clessámmor! where is thy dwelling in the wind? Has the youth forgot his wound?
 Flies he, on clouds, with thee? I feel the sun,
 O Malvina! leave me to my rest. Perhaps they may come to my dreams; I think I hear a feeble voice! the beam of heaven delights to shine on the grave of Carthon: I feel it warm around!

O thou that rollest above, round as the shield of my fathers! Whence are thy beams, O sun! thy everlasting light? Thou comest forth in thy awful beauty; the stars hide themselves in the sky; the moon, cold and pale, sinks in the western wave. But thou thyself movest alone: who can be a companion of thy course! The oaks of the mountains fall: the mountains themselves decay with years: the ocean shrinks and grows again; the moon herself is lost in heaven; but thou art forever the same; rejoicing in the brightness of thy course. When the world is dark with tempests; when thunder rolls, and lightning flies; thou lookest in thy beauty, from the clouds, and laughst at the storm. But to Ossian, thou lookest in vain; for he beholds thy beams no more; whether thy yellow hair flows on the eastern clouds, or thou tremblest at the gates of the west. But thou art perhaps, like me, for a season, thy years will have an end. Thou shalt sleep in thy clouds, careless of the voice of the morning. Exult thee, O sun! in the strength of thy youth! Age is dark and un-lovely; it is like the glimmering light of the moon, when it shines through broken clouds, and the mist is on the hills; the blast of north is on the plain; the traveller shrinks in the midst of his journey.

Thomas Chatterton

1752-1770

MINSTREL'S ROUNDELAY

(From Ælla, 1770)

O sing unto my roundelay,
 O drop the briny tear with me,
 Dance no more at holy-day,
 Like a running river be.

My love is dead, 5
 Gone to his death-bed,
 All under the willow-tree.

Black his hair as the winter night
 White his skin as the summer snow,
 Red his face as the morning light, 10
 Cold he lies in the grave below.

My love is dead,
 Gone to his death-bed,
 All under the willow-tree.

Sweet his tongue as the throstle's note, 15
 Quick in dance as thought can be,
 Deft his tabor, cudgel stout,
 O he lies by the willow-tree!

My love is dead,
 Gone to his death-bed, 20
 All under the willow-tree.

Hark! the raven flaps his wing
 In the briar'd dell below;
 Hark! the death-owl loud doth sing
 To the nightmares as they go. 25

My love is dead,
 Gone to his death-bed,
 All under the willow-tree.

See! the white moon shines on high;
 Whiter is my true love's shroud; 30
 Whiter than the morning sky,
 Whiter than the evening cloud.

My love is dead,
 Gone to his death-bed, 35
 All under the willow-tree.

Here upon my true love's grave
 Shall the barren flowers be laid:
 Not one holy Saint to save
 All the coldness of a maid! 40

My love is dead,
 Gone to his death-bed,
 All under the willow-tree.

With my hands I'll gird the briars
 Round his holy corse to grow.
 Elfin Faëry, light your fires;
 Here my body still shall bow. 45

My love is dead,
 Gone to his death-bed,
 All under the willow-tree.

Come, with acorn-cup and thorn,
 Drain my heart's blood away;
 Life and all its good I scorn,
 Dance by night or feast by day. 50

My love is dead,
 Gone to his death-bed, 55
 All under the willow-tree.

THE BALADE OF CHARITIE

(From Poems collected 1777)

In Virginè<sup>1</sup> the sultry Sun 'gan sheene
 And hot upon the meads did cast his ray:
 The apple ruddied from its paly green,
 And the soft pear did bend the leafy spray;
 The pied chelandry<sup>2</sup> sang the livelong day: 5

<sup>1</sup> In the Zodiacal sign of Virgo, i. e., in September.

<sup>2</sup> Goldfinch. (Chatterton).

'Twas now the pride, the manhood of the year,
And eke the ground was dight in its most deft
aumere.<sup>3</sup>

The sun was gleaming in the mid of day,
Dead still the air and eke the welkin blue,
When from the sea ariste in drear array 10
A heap of clouds of sable sullen hue,
The which full fast unto the woodland drew,
Hiding at once the sunnè's festive face;
And the black tempest swelled and gathered up apace.

Beneath an holm,<sup>4</sup> fast by a pathway side 15
Which did unto Saint Godwyn's convent lead,
A hapless pilgrim moaning did abide,
Poor in his view, ungente in his weed,
Long breast-full of the miseries of need. 19
Where from the hailstorm could the beggar fly?
He had no housen there, nor any convent nigh.

Look in his gloomèd face; his sprite there scan,
How woe-begone, how withered, sapless,
dead!

Haste to thy church-glebe-house,<sup>5</sup> accursèd
man,
Haste to thy coffin, thy sole slumbering-bed!
Cold as the clay which will grow on thy
head 26
Are Charity and Love among high elves;
The Knights and Barons live for pleasure and themselves.

The gathered storm is ripe; the big drops fall;
The sunburnt meadows smoke and drink the rain; 30

The coming ghastness<sup>6</sup> dothe the cattle appal,
And the full flocks are driving o'er the plain;
Dashed from the clouds, the waters gush
again;

The welkin<sup>7</sup> opes, the yellow levin<sup>8</sup> flies,
And the hot fiery steam in the wide flame-lowe dies. 35

List! now the thunder's rattling clamouring sound

Moves slowly on, and then upswollen clangs,
Shakes the high spire, and lost, dispended,
drown'd,

Still on the affrighted ear of terror hangs;
The winds are up; the lofty elm-tree swangs;<sup>9</sup>
Again the levin and the thunder pours, 41
And the full clouds are burst at once in stormy showers.

Spurring his palfrey o'er the watery plain,
The Abbot of Saint Godwyn's convent came;
His chapournette<sup>10</sup> was drenchèd with the rain, 45
His painted girdle met with mickle shame;
He backwards told his bederoll<sup>11</sup> at the same.
The storm increasèd, and he drew aside,
With the poor alms-crauer near to the holm to bide.

<sup>3</sup> Here=apparel, mantle.

<sup>4</sup> Holly-tree.

<sup>5</sup> i. e., the grave.

<sup>6</sup> Terror. (Othello, V. i.)

<sup>7</sup> The heaven.

<sup>8</sup> Lightning.

<sup>9</sup> Swings.

<sup>10</sup> "A small round hat." (Chatterton).

<sup>11</sup> To tell one's beads backwards was "a figurative expression to signify cursing." (Chatterton).

His cope<sup>12</sup> was all of Lincoln cloth so fine, 50
With a gold button fastened near his chin,
His autremete<sup>13</sup> was edged with golden twine,
And his peaked shoe a lordling's might have been;

Full well it showed he counted cost no sin:
The trammels of the palfrey pleased his sight,
For the horse-milliner<sup>14</sup> his head with roses
dight. 56

"An alms, Sir Priest!" the drooping pilgrim
said,

"O let me wait within your convent-door
Till the sun shineth high above our head
And the loud tempest of the air is o'er. 60
Helpless and old am I, alas! and poor:
No house, nor friend, no money in my pouch;
All that I call my own is this my silver crouch."<sup>15</sup>

"Varlet," replied the Abbot, "cease your din;
This is no season alms and prayers to give; 65
My porter never lets a beggar in;
None touch my ring who not in honour
live."

And now the sun with the black clouds did strive,
And shot upon the ground his glaring ray:
The Abbot spurred his steed, and eftsoons rode
away. 70

Once more the sky was black, the thunder
roll'd:

Fast running o'er the plain a priest was seen,
Not dight full proud nor buttoned up in gold;
His cope and jape<sup>16</sup> were grey, and eke were clean;

A Limitour<sup>17</sup> he was, of order seen; 75
And from the pathway side then turned he,
Where the poor beggar lay beneath the holmen
tree.

"An alms, Sir Priest," the drooping pilgrim
said,

"For sweet Saint Mary and your order's sake!"

The Limitour then loosened his pouch-thread 80
And did thereof a groat of silver take;

The needy pilgrim did for gladness shake.
"Here, take this silver, it may ease thy care;
We are God's stewards all,—nought of our own
we bear.

"But ah! unhappy pilgrim, learn of me, 85
Scarcely any give a rentroll to their Lord:
Here, take my semicope,<sup>18</sup>—thou'rt bare, I see;

<sup>12</sup> Cloak, mantle.

<sup>13</sup> "A loose white robe worn by priests." (Chatterton).

<sup>14</sup> One who supplies trappings for horses. Stevens says, he saw "Horse-milliner" over a shop-door in Bristol, in 1776. Outside the shop stood a wooden horse adorned with ribbons.

<sup>15</sup> Cross, crucifix.

<sup>16</sup> "A short surplice, worn by friars of an inferior class, and secular priests." (Chatterton).

<sup>17</sup> A friar licensed to beg and limited to a certain specified district. V. p. 66, n. 24, supra.

<sup>18</sup> Short cape.

'Tis thine; the Saints will give me my reward!"
 He left the pilgrim and his way aborde,<sup>19</sup>
 Virgin and holy Saints who sit in gloure,<sup>20</sup> 90
 Or give the mighty will, or give the good man power.

BRISTOWE TRAGEDY; OR, THE DEATH OF SIR CHARLES BAWDIN

I

The feathered songster Chanticleer
 Has wound his bugle horn,
 And told the early villager
 The coming of the morn:

II

King Edward<sup>1</sup> saw the ruddy streaks 5
 Of light eclipse the gray;
 And heard the raven's croaking throat
 Proclaim the fated day.

III

"Thou'rt right," quoth he, "for, by the God
 That sits enthroned on high! 10
 Charles Bawdin, and his fellows twain,
 Today shall surely die."

IV

Then with a jug of nappy ale<sup>2</sup>
 His knights did on him wait:
 "Go tell the traitor, that today 15
 He leaves this mortal state."

V

Sir Canterlone then bended low,
 With heart brimful of woe;
 He journeyed to the castle-gate,
 And to Sir Charles did go. 20

VI

But when he came, his children twain,
 And eke his loving wife,
 With briny tears did wet the floor,
 For good Sir Charles's life.

VII

"O good Sir Charles," said Canterlone, 25
 "Bad tidings I do bring."
 "Speak boldly, man," said brave Sir Charles,
 "What says thy traitor king?"

VIII

"I grieve to tell, before yon sun
 Does from the welkin fly, 30
 He hath upon his honour sworn,
 That thou shalt surely die."

IX

"We all must die," quoth brave Sir Charles,
 "Of that I'm not afear'd;
 What boots to live a little space? 35
 Thank Jesu, I'm prepared."

<sup>19</sup> Went on. (Chatterton)

<sup>1</sup> King Edward IV, 1461-1483.

<sup>20</sup> Glory.

<sup>2</sup> Strong ale.

X

But tell thy king, for mine he's not,
 I'd sooner die today
 Than live his slave, as many are,
 Tho' I should live for aye." 40

XI

Then Canterlone he did go out,
 To tell the mayor straight
 To get all things in readiness
 For good Sir Charles's fate.

XII

Then Master Canynge<sup>3</sup> sought the king, 45
 And fell down on his knee;
 "I'm come," quoth he, "unto your grace
 To move your clemency."

XIII

Then quoth the king, "your tale speak out,
 You have been much our friend; 50
 Whatever your request may be,
 We will to it attend."

XIV

"My noble liege! all my request
 Is for a noble knight,
 Who tho' mayhap he has done wrong, 55
 He thought it still was right."

XV

"He has a spouse and children twain,
 All ruined are for aye;
 If that you are resolved to let Charles Bawdin die today." 60

XVI

"Speak not of such a traitor vile,"
 The king in fury said;
 "Before the evening star doth shine, Bawdin shall lose his head."

XVII

"Justice does loudly for him call, 65
 And he shall have his mead:
 Speak, Master Canynge! What thing else
 At present do you need?"

XVIII

"My noble liege," good Canynge said, 70
 "Leave justice to our God,
 And lay the iron rule aside;
 Be thine the olive rod."

XIX

"Was God to search our hearts and reins,
 The best were sinners great;
 Christ's vicar only knows no sin, 75
 In all this mortal state."

<sup>3</sup> William Canynge, a rich merchant, mayor and foremost citizen, in the reigns of Henry VI and Edward IV, of Chatterton's native city of Bristol. Canynge is represented as the friend and literary patron of one Thomas Rowley, the "poet-priest." Rowley is put forward as the author of Chatterton's imitations of ancient poetry, which he pretended to have transcribed from old manuscripts.

XX
 "Let mercy rule thine infant reign,
 'Twill fast thy crown full sure;
 From race to race thy family
 All sovereigns shall endure: 80

XXI
 "But if with blood and slaughter thou
 Begin thy infant reign,
 Thy crown upon thy children's brows
 Will never long remain."

XXII
 "Canynge, away! this traitor vile
 Has scorned my power and me:
 How canst thou then for such a man
 Entreat my clemency?"

XXIII
 "My noble liege! the truly brave
 Will valorous actions prize;
 Respect a brave and noble mind
 Although in enemies."

XXIV
 "Canynge, away! By God in Heaven
 That did me being give,
 I will not taste a bit of bread
 Whilst this Sir Charles doth live.

XXV
 "By Mary, and all Saints in Heaven,
 This sun shall be his last;"
 Then Canyng dropped a briny tear,
 And from the presence past. 100

XXVI
 With heart brimful of gnawing grief,
 He to Sir Charles did go,
 And sat him down upon a stool,
 And tears began to flow.

XXVII
 "We all must die," quoth brave Sir Charles; 105
 "What boots it how or when;
 Death is the sure, the certain fate
 Of all we mortal men.

XXVIII
 "Say, why, my friend, thy honest soul
 Runs over at thine eye: 110
 Is it for my most welcome doom
 That thou dost child-like cry?"

XXIX
 Quoth godly Canyng, "I do weep,
 That thou so soon must die,
 And leave thy sons and helpless wife; 115
 'Tis this that wets mine eye."

XXX
 "Then dry the tears that out thine eye
 From godly fountains spring;
 Death I despise, and all the power
 Of Edward, traitor king. 120

XXXI
 "When through the tyrant's welcome means
 I shall resign my life,

The God I serve will soon provide
 For both my sons and wife.

XXXII
 "Before I saw the lightsome sun, 125
 This was appointed me;
 Shall mortal man repine or grudge
 What God ordains to be?

XXXIII
 "How oft in battle have I stood,
 When thousands died around; 130
 When smoking streams of crimson blood
 Imbrued the fattened ground;

XXXIV
 "How did I know that every dart,
 That cut the airy way,
 Might not find passage to my heart, 135
 And close mine eyes for aye?

XXXV
 "And shall I now, for fear of death,
 Look wan and be dismayed?
 Nay! from my heart fly childish fear,
 Be all the man displayed. 140

XXXVI
 "Ah! godlike Henry! God forfend,
 And guard thee and thy son,
 If 'tis his will; but if 'tis not,
 Why then, his will be done.

XXXVII
 "My honest friend, my fault has been 145
 To serve God, and my prince;
 And that I no time-server am,
 My death will soon convince.

XXXVIII
 "In London city was I born,
 Of parents of great note; 150
 My father did a noble arms
 Emblazon on his coat:

XXXIX
 "I make no doubt but he is gone
 Where soon I hope to go;
 Where we for ever shall be blest, 155
 From out the reach of woe;

XL
 "He taught me justice and the laws
 With pity to unite;
 And eke he taught me how to know
 The wrong cause from the right: 160

XLI
 "He taught me with a prudent hand
 To feed the hungry poor,
 Nor let my servants drive away
 The hungry from my door:

'Henry VI (1422-1461). Tyrwhitt points out that Chatterton's ballad was probably suggested by the execution at Bristol of Sir Balyin Fulford, a Lancastrian Knight, in 1461, the year of Edward IV's accession. Henry VI's son, Edward, Prince of Wales, was killed in 1471 at the battle of Tewkesbury, or, perhaps, murdered after the fight; Henry VI himself died in the Tower in the same year; he was probably murdered by the commands of Edward IV.

XLII

"And none can say but all my life 165
I have his wordes kept;
And summed the actions of the day
Each night before I slept.

XLIII

"I have a spouse, go ask of her, 170
If I defiled her bed?
I have a king and none can lay
Black treason on my head.

XLIV

"In Lent, and on the holy eve,
From flesh I did refrain;
Why should I then appear dismayed 175
To leave this world of pain?

XLV

"No! Hapless Henry! I rejoice,
I shall not see thy death;
Most willingly in thy just cause 180
Do I resign my breath.

XLVI

"Oh, fickle people! ruined land!
Thou wilt know peace no moe;
While Richard's sons<sup>5</sup> exalt themselves,
Thy brooks with blood will flow.

XLVII

"Say, were ye tired of godly peace, 185
And godly Henry's reign,
That you did chop<sup>6</sup> your easy days
For those of blood and pain?

XLVIII

"What tho' I on a sledge be drawn,
And mangled by a hind,<sup>7</sup> 190
I do defy the traitor's power,
He cannot harm my mind;

XLIX

"What tho' uphoisted on a pole,
My limbs shall rot in air,
And no rich monument of brass 195
Charles Bawdin's name shall bear;

L

"Yet in the holy book above,
Which time can't eat away,
There with the servants of the Lord
My name shall live for aye. 200

LI

"Then welcome death! for life eterne
I leave this mortal life:
Farewell, vain world, and all that's dear,
My sons and loving wife!

<sup>5</sup> Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York. His Sons were Edward IV, George, Duke of Clarence, and Richard III.

<sup>6</sup> Interrupt, cut short.

<sup>7</sup> A rustic, a man of the lower class.

LII

"Now death as welcome to me comes, 205
As e'er the month of May;
Nor would I even wish to live,
With my dear wife to stay."

LIII

Quoth Canynge, "'Tis a goodly thing 210
To be prepared to die;
And from this world of pain and grief
To God in Heaven to fly."

LIV

And now the bell began to toll,
And clarions to sound;
Sir Charles he heard the horses' feet 215
A-prancing on the ground:

LV

And just before the officers
His loving wife came in,
Weeping unfeign'd tears of woe,
With loud and dismal din. 220

LVI

"Sweet Florence! now I pray forbear,
In quiet let me die;
Pray God that every Christian soul
May look on death as I.

LVII

"Sweet Florence! why these briny tears? 225
They wash my soul away,
And almost make me wish for life,
With thee, sweet dame, to stay.

LVIII

"'Tis but a journey I shall go 230
Unto the land of bliss;
Now, as a proof of husband's love,
Receive this holy kiss."

LIX

Then Florence, faltering in her say,
Trembling these wordes spoke,
"Ah, cruel Edward! bloody king! 235
My heart is well nigh broke:

LX

"Ah, sweet Sir Charles! why wilt thou go,
Without thy loving wife?
The cruel axe that cuts thy neck,
It eke shall end my life." 240

LXI

And now the officers came in
To bring Sir Charles away,
Who turned to his loving wife,
And thus to her did say:

LXII

"I go to life, and not to death; 245
Trust thou in God above,
And teach thy sons to fear the Lord,
And in their hearts him love:

LXIII

"Teach them to run the noble race
That I their father run;
Florence! should death thee take—adieu!
Ye officers, lead on." 250

LXIV

Then Florence raved as any mad,
And did her tresses tear;
"Oh! stay, my husband! lord! and life!"— 255
Sir Charles then dropped a tear.

LXV

Till, tired out with raving loud,
She fell upon the floor;
Sir Charles exerted all his might,
And marched from out the door. 260

LXVI

Upon a sledge he mounted then
With looks full brave and sweet;
Looks, that displayed no more concern
Than any in the street.

LXVII

Before him went the council-men, 265
In scarlet robes and gold,
And tassels spangling in the sun,
Much glorious to behold:

LXVIII

The Friars of Saint Augustine next
Appear'd to the sight, 270
All clad in homely russet weeds
Of godly monkish plight:

LXIX

In different parts a godly psalm
Most sweetly they did chant;
Behind their backs six minstrels came, 275
Who tuned the strung bataunt.<sup>a</sup>

LXX

Then five-and-twenty archers came;
Each one the bow did bend,
From rescue of King Henry's friends
Sir Charles for to defend. 280

LXXI

Bold as a lion came Sir Charles,
Drawn on a cloth-laid sledge,
By two black steeds in trappings white,
With plumes upon their head.

LXXII

Behind him five-and-twenty more 285
Of archers strong and stout,
With bended bow each one in hand,
March'd in godly rout:

LXXIII

Saint James's Friars march'd next,
Each one his part did chant; 290
Behind their backs six minstrels came,
Who tuned the strung bataunt:

LXXIV

Then came the mayor and aldermen,
In cloth of scarlet deck't;
And their attending men each one, 295
Like Eastern princes trick't:

LXXV

And after them a multitude
Of citizens did throng;
The windows were all full of heads,
As he did pass along. 300

LXXVI

And when he came to the high cross,
Sir Charles did turn and say,
"O thou that savest man from sin,
Wash my soul clean this day!"

LXXVII

At the great minster window sat 305
The king in mickle state,
To see Charles Bawdin go along
To his most welcome fate.

LXXVIII

Soon as the sledge drew nigh enough,
That Edward he might hear, 310
The brave Sir Charles he did stand up
And thus his words declare:

LXXIX

"Thou seest me, Edward! traitor vile!
Exposed to infamy;
But be assured, disloyal man! 315
I'm greater now than thee.

LXXX

"By foul proceedings, murder, blood,
Thou wearest now a crown;
And hast appointed me to die,
By power not thine own. 320

LXXXI

"Thou thinkest I shall die today;
I have been dead till now,
And soon shall live to wear a crown
For aye upon my brow;

LXXXII

"Whilst thou, perhaps, for some few years, 325
Shalt rule this fickle land,
To let them know how wide the rule
"Twixt king and tyrant hand:

LXXXIII

"Thy power unjust, thou traitor slave!
Shall fall on thy own head—" 330
From out of hearing of the king
Departed then the sledge.

<sup>a</sup> Evidently intended to suggest a musical instrument of the viol class. The word bataunt seems to have been invented by Chatterton; perhaps for the sake of the rhyme.

LXXXIV

King Edward's soul rushed to his face,
He turned his head away,
And to his brother Gloucester<sup>9</sup> 335
He thus did speak and say:

LXXXV

"To him that so-much-dreaded death
No ghastly terrors bring,
Behold the man! he spake the truth,
He's greater than a king!" 340

LXXXVI

"So let him die!" Duke Richard said;
"And may each one our foes
Bend down their necks to bloody axe,
And feed the carrion crows."

LXXXVII

And now the horses gently drew 345
Sir Charles up the high hill;
The axe did glisten in the sun,
His precious blood to spill.

LXXXVIII

Sir Charles did up the scaffold go,
As up a gilded car 350
Of victory by valorous chiefs
Gained in the bloody war:

LXXXIX

And to the people he did say,
"Behold you see me die
For serving loyally my king, 355
My king most rightfully.

XC

"As long as Edward rules this land,
No quiet you will know;
Your sons and husbands shall be slain,
And brooks with blood shall flow. 360

XCI

"You leave your good and lawful king
When in adversity;
Like me, unto the true cause stick;
And for the true cause die."

XCII

Then he, with priests, upon his knees, 365
A prayer to God did make,
Beseeching him unto himself
His parting soul to take.

XCIII

'Then, kneeling down he laid his head
Most seemly on the block; 370
Which from his body fair at once
The able headsman struck;

XCIV

And out the blood began to flow,
And round the scaffold twine;
And tears enough to wash't away, 375
Did flow from each man's eyne.

<sup>9</sup> Richard, Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III.

XCV

The bloody axe his body fair
Into four parties cut;
And every part, and eke his head, 380
Upon a pole was put.

XCVI

One part did rot on Kynwulph hill,
One on the minster tower,
And one from off the castle gate
The crowen did devour;

XCVII

The other on Saint Paul's good gate, 385
A dreary spectacle;
His head was placed on the high cross,
In High-street most noble.

XCVIII

Thus was the end of Bawdin's fate:
God prosper long our king, 390
And grant he may with Bawdin's soul,
In heaven God's mercy sing!

George Crabbe

1754-1832

THE MODERN PASTORAL

(From The Village, Bk. I. 1783)

The Village Life, and every care that reigns
O'er youthful peasants, and declining swains;
What labour yields, and what, that labour past,
Age, in its hour of langour finds at last;
What form the real picture of the poor, 5
Demand a song—the Muse can give no more.
Fled are those times, when, in harmonious strains,

The rustic poet praised his native plains:
No shepherds now, in smooth alternate verse,
Their country's beauty or their nymphs'
rehearse; 10
Yet still for these we frame the tender strain,
Still in our lays fond Corydons complain,
And shepherds' boys their amorous pains reveal,

The only pains, alas! they never feel.
On Mincio's banks, in Cæsar's bounteous reign, 15

If Tityrus found the Golden Age again,
Must sleepy bards the flattering dream prolong,
Mechanic echoes of the Mantuan song?<sup>1</sup>
From Truth and Nature shall we widely stray,
Where Virgil, not where Fancy, leads the way?
Yes, thus the Muses sing of happy swains, 21
Because the Muses never knew their pains:

They boast their peasant's pipes; but peasants
now
Resign their pipes, and plod behind the plow;

<sup>1</sup> i. e., the pastoral poems of Vergil, who was born near Mantua. The river Mincio (or Mincius) flows near Vergil's birthplace; Tityrus is the name of a shepherd in Vergil's Eclogues.

And few, amid the rural tribe, have time 25
To number syllables, and play with rhyme;
Save honest Duck,<sup>2</sup> what son of verse could share

The poet's rapture, and the peasant's care?
Or the great labours of the field degrade,
With the new peril of a poorer trade? 30

From this chief cause these idle praises
spring,

That themes so easy, few forbear to sing;
For no deep thought the trifling subjects ask;
To sing of shepherds is an easy task:

The happy youth assumes the common strain,<sup>35</sup>
A nymph his mistress, and himself a swain;
With no sad scenes he clouds his tuneful prayer,
But all, to look like her, is painted fair.

I grant indeed that fields and flocks have charms

For him that grazes or for him that farms; 40
But when amid such pleasing scenes I trace
The poor laborious natives of the place,
And see the mid-day sun, with fervid ray,
On their bare heads, and dewy temples play;

While some, with feebler hands and fainter hearts, 45

Deplore their fortune, yet sustain their parts;
Then shall I dare these real ills to hide
In tinsel trappings of poetic pride?

No; cast by Fortune on a frowning coast,
Which neither groves nor happy valleys boast;
Where other cares than those the Muse relates, 51

And other shepherds dwell with other mates;
By such examples taught, I paint the cot,

As Truth will paint it, and as bards will not:
Nor you, ye poor, of lettered scorn complain, 55

To you the smoothest song is smooth in vain:
O'ercome by labour, and bow'd down by time,
Feel you the barren flattery of a rhyme?

Can poets soothe you, when you pine for bread,
By winding myrtles round your ruin'd shed? 60

Can their light tales your weighty griefs o'er-
power,

Or glad with airy mirth the toilsome hour?
Lo! where the heath, with withering brake grown o'er,

Lends the light turf that warms the neighbouring poor;

From thence a length of burning sand appears,
Where the thin harvest waves its wither'd
ears; 66

Rank weeds, that every art and care defy,
Reign o'er the land, and rob the blighted rye:

There thistles stretch their prickly arms afar
And to the ragged infant threaten war; 70

There poppies nodding, mock the hope of toil;
There the blue bugloss paints the sterile soil;

Hardy and high, above the slender sheaf,
The slimy mallow waves her silky leaf;

O'er the young shoot the charlock throws a
shade, 75

And clasping tares cling round the sickly blade;

With mingled tints the rocky coasts abound,
And a sad splendour vainly shines around. . . .

Here joyless roam a wild amphibious race, 85
With sullen woe displayed in every face;

Who, far from civil arts and social fly,
And scowl at strangers with suspicious eye.

Here too the lawless merchant of the main
Draws from his plow th' intoxicated swain; 90

Want only claim'd the labour of the day,
But vice now steals his nightly rest away.

Where are the swains, who, daily labour
done,

With rural games play'd down the setting
sun;

Who struck with matchless force the bounding ball, 95

Or made the pond'rous quoit obliquely fall;
While some huge Ajax, terrible and strong,

Engaged some artful strippling of the throng,
And fell beneath him, foil'd, while far around

Hoarse triumph rose, and rocks return'd the sound? 100

Where now are these?—Beneath yon cliff they stand,

To show the freighted pinnace where to land;
To load the ready steed with guilty haste,

To fly in terror o'er the pathless waste,
Or, when detected, in their straggling course, 105

To foil their foes by cunning or by force;
Or, yielding part (which equal knaves demand),

To gain a lawless passport through the land.
Here, wand'ring long, amid these frowning
fields,

I sought the simple life that Nature yields; 110
Rapine and Wrong and Fear usurp'd her
place,

And a bold, artful, surly, savage race;
Who, only skill'd to take the finny tribe,

The yearly dinner, or septennial bribe,<sup>3</sup>
Wait on the shore, and, as the waves run
high,

On the tost vessel bend their eager eye. 116
Which to their coast directs its vent'rous
way;

Theirs, or the ocean's, miserable prey.
As on their neighbouring beach yon swallows
stand,

And wait for favouring winds to leave the
land;

While still for flight the ready wing is spread; 121
So waited I the favouring hour, and fled;

Fled from these shores where guilt and famine
reign,

And cried, Ah! hapless they who still remain;
Who still remain to hear the ocean roar, 125

Whose greedy waves devour the lessening
shore,

Till some fierce tide, with more imperious
sway,

Sweeps the low hut and all it holds away;
When the sad tennant weeps from door to door,

And begs a poor protection from the poor. . . .

<sup>2</sup> Stephen Duck, d. 1756, a self-taught and obscure versifier, of humble origin, who gave a truthful picture of the farmer's life in a poem called the Thresher's Lament,
<sup>3</sup> Southey's Lives and Works of our Uneducated Poets.

<sup>3</sup> i. e., the bribe given for their votes at a Parliamentary election. By the Act of 1716, a new Parliament had to be elected at least once in every seven years.

PETER GRIMES<sup>1</sup>(From The Borough, Letter XXII, 1810)

Alas! for Peter, not a helping hand, 65
 So was he hated, could he now command;
 Alone he row'd his boat, alone he cast
 His nets beside, or made his anchor fast;
 To hold a rope, or hear a curse was none,—
 He toil'd, and rail'd; he groan'd and swore alone. 70

Thus by himself compell'd to live each day,
 To wait for certain hours the tide's delay;
 At the same time the same dull views to see,
 The bounding marsh-bank and the blighted
 tree;

The water only, when the tides were high, 75
 When low, the mud half-cover'd and half-
 dry:

The sun-burnt tar, that blisters on the planks,
 And bank side stakes in their uneven ranks;
 Heaps of entangled weeds that slowly float,
 As the tide rolls by the impeded boat. 80

When the tides were neap, and, in the sultry
 day,
 Through the tall bounding mud-banks made
 their way,

Which on each side rose swelling, and below
 The dark warm flood ran silently and slow;
 There anchoring, Peter chose from man to hide, 85

There hang his head, and view the lazy tide
 In its hot slimy channel slowly glide;
 Where the small eels that left the deeper way
 For the warm shore, within the shallows play;
 Where gaping mussels, left upon the mud, 90
 Slope their slow passage to the fallen flood;—
 Here dull and hopeless he'd lie down and trace
 How sidelong crabs had scrawl'd their crooked
 race;

Or sadly listen to the tuneless cry
 Of fishing gull or clanging golden eye;<sup>2</sup> 95
 What time the sea-birds to the marsh would come,

And the loud bitttern, from the bull-rush home,
 Gave from the salt-ditch side the bellowing boom:

He nursed the feelings these dull scenes produce

And loved to stop beside the opening sluice; 100
 Where the small stream, confined in narrowing
 bound,

Ran with a dull, unvaried, sadd'ning sound;
 Where all, presented to the eye or ear,
 Oppress'd the soul with misery, grief and fear.
 Besides these objects, there were places
 three, 105

Which Peter seem'd with certain dread to see;

<sup>1</sup> Peter Grimes is a fisherman, ignorant, lawless, avaricious, and cruel, from his youth. He gets from London a workhouse-boy to help him in his labors, receiving a small sum of money for giving the boy a home. The boy dies from brutality and neglect, and Peter procures another, thus gaining a second fee. This boy also dies, and after that a third boy, in a way that arouses the gravest suspicion. The murder is not proved, but Peter is forbidden to employ another boy, and warned that if he should be again accused he will find no mercy.

<sup>2</sup> A sea-duck.

When he drew near them he would turn from each,
 And loudly whistle till he pass'd the reach.
 A change of scene to him brought no relief;
 In town, t'was plain, men took him for a thief; 110

The sailors' wives would stop him in the street,
 And say, "Now, Peter, thou'st no boy to beat:"
 Infants at play, when they perceived him, ran,
 Warning each other—"That's the wicked
 man,"

He growl'd an oath, and in an angry tone 115
 Curs'd the whole place, and wished to be alone.

FARMER MOSS'S DAUGHTER

(From Tales in Verse, 1812)

To farmer Moss, in Langar Vale, came down
 His only daughter, from her school in town;
 A tender, timid maid! who knew not how
 To pass a pig-sty, or to face a cow:

Smiling she came, with petty talents graced, 5
 A fair complexion, and a slender waist.

Used to spare meals, disposed in manner pure,
 Her father's kitchen she could ill endure;
 Where by the steaming beef he hungry sat,
 And laid at once a pound upon his plate; 10
 Hot from the field, her eager brother seized
 An equal part, and hunger's rage appeased;
 The air, surcharged with moisture, flagg'd
 around,

And the offended damsel sighed and frowned;
 The swelling fat in lumps conglomerate laid, 15
 And fancy's sickness seized the loathing maid:
 But when the men beside their station took,
 The maidens with them, and with these the
 cook;

When one huge wooden bowl before them stood,
 Fill'd with huge balls of farinaceous food; 20
 With bacon, mass saline, where never lean
 Beneath the brown and bristly rind was seen;
 When from a single horn the party drew
 Their copious draughts of heavy ale and new;
 When the coarse cloth she saw, with many a stain, 25

Soil'd by rude hinds! who cut and come again—
 She could not breathe, but with a heavy sigh,
 Rein'd the fair neck, and shut th' offended eye;
 She minced the sanguine flesh in frustums<sup>2</sup> fine,
 And wonder'd much to see the creatures dine; 30
 When she resolv'd her father's heart to move,
 If hearts of farmers were alive to love.

She now entreated by herself to sit
 In the small parlour, if papa thought fit,
 And there to dine, to read, to work alone: 35
 "No," said the farmer in an angry tone;
 "These are your school-taught airs; your mother's pride

Would send you there; but I am now your guide.—

Arise betimes, our early meal prepare,
 And this despatch'd, let business be your care; 40

<sup>1</sup> Farm-laborers, rustics.

<sup>2</sup> Pieces (Lat. frustum, a piece, part.)

Look to the lasses, let there not be one
 Who lacks attention, till her tasks be done;
 In every household work your portion take,
 And what you make not, see that others make:
 At leisure times attend the wheel, and see 45
 The whit'ning web be sprinkled on the Lea,
 When thus employ'd, should our young neighbour view
 A useful lass, you may have more to do."

William Blake

1757-1827

TO THE MUSES

(From Poetical Sketches, 1783)

Whether on Ida's shady brow,
 Or in the chambers of the East,
 The chambers of the sun that now
 From ancient melody have ceased;

Whether in Heaven ye wander fair, 5
 Or the green corners of the earth,
 Or the blue regions of the air,
 Where the melodious winds have birth;

Whether on crystal rocks ye rove
 Beneath the bosom of the sea, 10
 Wandering in many a coral grove;
 Fair Nine, forsaking Poetry;

How have you left the ancient love
 That bards of old enjoy'd in you!
 The languid strings do scarcely move, 15
 The sound is forced, the notes are few.

TO THE EVENING STAR

(From the same)

Thou fair-haired angel of the evening,
 Now, whilst the sun rests on the mountain,
 light

Thy brilliant torch of love; thy radiant crown
 Put on, and smile upon our evening bed!
 Smile on our loves; and whilst thou drawest
 round 5

The curtains of the sky, scatter thy dew
 On every flower that closes its sweet eyes
 In timely sleep: Let thy west wind sleep on The lake; speak silence with thy glimmering
 eyes,

And wash the dusk with silver. Soon, full
 soon 10

Dost thou withdraw; then the wolf rages wide,
 And then the lion glares through the dun forest.
 The fleeces of our flocks are covered with Thy sacred dew: protect them with thine influence.

INTRODUCTION

(From Songs of Innocence, 1787)

Piping down the valleys wild,
 Piping songs of pleasant glee,
 On a cloud I saw a child,
 And he, laughing, said to me:

"Pipe a song about a Lamb!" 5
 So I piped with merry cheer.
 "Piper, pipe that song again;"
 So I piped: he wept to hear.

"Drop thy pipe, thy happy pipe;
 Sing thy songs of happy cheer!" 10
 So I sang the same again,
 While he wept with joy to hear.

"Piper, sit thee down and write
 In a book, that all may read." 15
 So he vanish'd from my sight;
 And I plucked a hollow reed,

And I made a rural pen,
 And I stain'd the water clear,
 And I wrote my happy songs
 Every child may joy to hear. 20

THE LAMB

(From the same)

Little lamb, who made thee?
 Dost thou know who made thee?
 Gave thee life, and bade thee feed
 By the stream and o'er the mead;
 Gave thee clothing of delight, 5
 Softest clothing, woolly, bright;
 Gave thee such a tender voice,
 Making all the vales rejoice?
 Little lamb, who made thee?
 Dost thou know who made thee? 10

Little lamb, I'll tell thee;
 Little lamb, I'll tell thee:
 He is call'd by thy name,
 For He calls Himself a Lamb.
 He is meek, and He is mild, 15
 He became a little child.
 I a child and thou a lamb,
 We are call'd by His name.
 Little lamb, God bless thee!
 Little lamb, God bless thee! 20

NIGHT

(From the same)

The sun descending in the west,
 The evening star does shine,
 The birds are silent in their nest,
 And I must seek for mine.
 The moon, like a flower 5
 In heaven's high bow,
 With silent delight,
 Sits and smiles on the night.

Farewell, green fields and happy grove,
 Where flocks have ta'en delight; 10
 Where lambs have nibbled, silent move
 The feet of angels bright;
 Unseen, they pour blessing,
 And joy without ceasing,
 On each bud and blossom, 15
 And each sleeping bosom.

They look in every thoughtless nest,
Where birds are covered warm;
They visit caves of every beast,
To keep them all from harm. 20
If they see any weeping
That should have been sleeping,
They pour sleep on their head,
And sit down by their bed.

When wolves and tigers howl for prey 25
They pitying stand and weep,
Seeking to drive their thirst away,
And keep them from the sheep.
But if they rush dreadful,
The angels, most heedful, 30
Receive each mild spirit,
New worlds to inherit.

And there the lion's ruddy eyes
Shall flow with tears of gold:
And pitying the tender cries, 35
And walking round the fold:
Saying "Wrath by His meekness,
And by His health, sickness,
Are driven away
From our immortal day. 40

"And now beside thee, bleating lamb,
I can lie down and sleep,
Or think on Him who bore thy name,
Grazed after thee, and weep.
For wash'd in life's river, 45
My bright mane forever
Shall shine like the gold,
As I guard o'er the fold."

TO THE DIVINE IMAGE

(From the same)

To mercy, pity, peace, and love,
All pray in their distress,
And to these virtues of delight
Return their thankfulness.

For mercy, pity, peace, and love, 5
Is God our Father dear;
And mercy, pity, peace, and love,
Is man, His child and care.

For Mercy has a human heart,
Pity, a human face; 10
And Love, the human form divine;
And Peace, the human dress.

Then every man, of every clime,
That prays in his distress, 15
Prays to the human form divine;
Love, Mercy, Pity, Peace.

And all must love the human form,
In heathen, Turk, or Jew;
Where mercy, love, and pity dwell,
There God is dwelling too. 20

ON ANOTHER'S SORROW

(From the same)

Can I see another's woe,
And not be in sorrow too?
Can I see another's grief,
And not seek for kind relief?

Can I see a falling tear,
And not feel my sorrow's share?
Can a father see his child
Weep, nor be with sorrow fill'd?

Can a mother sit and hear,
An infant groan, an infant fear? 10
No, no! never can it be!
Never, never can it be!

And can He, who smiles on all,
Hear the wren, with sorrow small,
Hear the small bird's grief and care, 15
Hear the woes that infants bear?

And not sit beside the nest,
Pouring Pity in their breast,
And not sit the cradle near,
Weeping tear on infant's tear? 20

And not sit both night and day,
Wiping all our tears away?
Oh, no! never can it be!
Never, never can it be!

He doth give His joy to all: 25
He becomes an infant small,
He becomes a man of woe,
He doth feel the sorrow too.

Think not thou canst sigh a sigh,
And thy Maker is not by: 30
Think not thou canst weep a tear,
And thy Maker is not near.

Oh! He gives to us His joy,
That our griefs He may destroy.
Till our grief is fled and gone 35
He doth sit by us and moan.

THE TIGER

(From The Songs of Experience, 1794)

Tiger, Tiger, burning bright
In the forest of the night,
What immortal hand or eye
Framed thy fearful symmetry?

In what distant deeps or skies 5
Burned that fire within thine eyes?
On what wings dared he aspire?
What the hand dared seize the fire?

And what shoulder, and what art,
Could twist the sinews of thy heart? 10
When thy heart began to beat,
What dread hand and what dread feet?

What the hammer, what the chain,
 Knit thy strength and forged thy brain?
 What the anvil? What dread grasp Dared thy deadly terrors clasp?

15

When the stars threw down their spears,
 And water'd heaven with their tears,
 Did He smile His work to see?
 Did He who made the lamb make thee?

20

AH! SUNFLOWER

(From the same)

Ah! Sunflower! weary of time,
 Who countest the steps of the sun,
 Seeking after that sweet golden prime
 Where the traveller's journey is done;
 Where the Youth pined away with desire,
 And the pale virgin shrouded in snow,
 Arise from their graves, and aspire
 Where my sunflower wishes to go!

5

SCOTCH SONG WRITERS

John Skinner

1721-1807

TULLOCHGORUM<sup>1</sup>

Come gie's a sang, Montgomery cried,
 And lay your disputes all aside,
 What signifies 't for folk to chide
 For what's been done before them?
 Let Whig and Tory all agree,
 Whig and Tory, Whig and Tory,
 Let Whig and Tory all agree,
 To drop their Whig-mig-morum;
 Let Whig and Tory all agree,
 To spend the night in mirth and glee,
 And cheerfu' sing, alang wi' me,
 The reel o' Tullochgorum.

5

10

O, Tullochgorum's my delight,
 It gars us a' in ane unite,
 And any sumph<sup>2</sup> that keeps up spite,
 In conscience I abhor him.
 For blythe and cheery we's be a',
 Blythe and cheery, blythe and cheery,
 Blythe and cheery we's be a',
 As lang as we hae breth to draw,
 And dance, till we be like to fa',
 The reel of Tullochgorum.

15

There needs na' be sae great a phrase,
 Wi' dringing dull Italian lays,
 I wadna gie our ain strathspeys<sup>3</sup>
 For half a hundred score o' 'em.
 They're douff<sup>4</sup> and dowie<sup>5</sup> at the best,
 Douff and dowie, douff and dowie,

25

They're douff and dowie at the best
 Wi' a' their variorium.
 They're douff and dowie at the best,
 Their allegros and a' the rest,
 They canna please a Scottish taste,
 Compar'd wi' Tullochgorum.

30

Let warldly minds themselves oppress
 Wi' fears of want, and double cess,<sup>6</sup>
 And sullen sots themselves distress
 Wi' keeping up decorum.
 Shall we sae sour and sulky sit,
 Sour and sulky, sour and sulky,
 Shall we sae sour and sulky sit,
 Like auld Philosophorum?
 Shall we so sour and sulky sit,
 Wi' neither sense, nor mirth, nor wit,
 Nor ever rise to shake a fit
 To the reel of Tullochgorum?

35

40

45

May choicest blessings still attend
 Each honest open-hearted friend,
 And calm and quiet be his end,
 And a' that's good watch o'er him!
 May peace and plenty be his lot,
 And dainties a great store o' 'em;
 May peace and plenty be his lot,
 Unstained by any vicious spot!
 And may be never want a groat
 That's fond of Tullochgorum.

50

55

But for the dirty, yawning fool,
 Who wants to be oppression's tool,
 May envy gnaw his rotten soul,
 And discontent devour him!
 May dool<sup>7</sup> and sorrow be his chance,
 Dool and sorrow, dool and sorrow,
 May dool and sorrow be his chance,
 And nane say wae's me for 'im!
 May dool and sorrow be his chance,
 Wi' a' the ills that come frae France,
 Whae'er he be, that winna dance
 The reel of Tullochgorum.

60

65

Jane Elliot

1727-1805

THE FLOWERS OF THE FOREST

I've heard them liting,<sup>1</sup> at our ewe-milking,
 Lasses a-liting, before the dawn of day;
 But now they are moaning, on ilka green loaning;<sup>2</sup>
 The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede<sup>3</sup> away.
 At bughts<sup>4</sup> in the morning nae blythe lads are scoring;
 The lasses are lanely, and dowie, and wae;
 Nae daffing, nae gabbing, but sighing and sabbing,
 Ilk ane lifts her leglin,<sup>5</sup> and hies her away.

5

<sup>6</sup> Double taxes. (Cess = a tax); i. e., the amount of tax cesses, or assessed, by the Government.

<sup>7</sup> Dole, grief.

<sup>1</sup> Singing joyously.

<sup>2</sup> A path left for the cattle between the corn fields.

<sup>3</sup> Withered, faded.

<sup>4</sup> Sheep-pens.

<sup>5</sup> Milk-pail.

<sup>1</sup> When Skinner wrote this poem, Tullochgorum was not a song but the name of a tune to a Highland reel.
 Burns pronounced Skinner's Tullochgorum "the best Scotch song Scotland ever saw."

<sup>2</sup> Fool, softy.

<sup>3</sup> A Scotch dance resembling the reel.

<sup>4</sup> Dull.

<sup>5</sup> Doleful.

In hairst,<sup>6</sup> at the shearing, nae youths now are jeering,
 The bandsters<sup>7</sup> are lyart,<sup>8</sup> and runkled and
 gray;
 At fair or at preaching, nae wooing, nae
 fleecing<sup>9</sup>
 The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away.

At e'en, in the gloaming, nae swankies<sup>10</sup> are roaming
 'Bout stacks wi' the lasses at bogle<sup>11</sup> to play;
 But ilk ane sits eerie, lamenting her dearie— 15
 The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away.

Dool and wae for the order sent our lads to the Border!
 The English, for ance, by guile wan the day;
 The Flowers of the Forest, that fought aye the foremost,
 The prime of our land, lie cauld in the clay. 20

We'll hear nae more liting at our ewe-milking,
 Women and bairns are heartless and wae;
 Sighing and moaning on ilka green loaning,
 The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away.

Isabel Hagan

1740-1821

CA' THE YOWES

Ca' the yowes<sup>1</sup> to the knowes<sup>2</sup>
 Ca' them where the heather grows,
 Ca' them where the burnie rows,<sup>3</sup>
 My bonnie dearie.

As I gaed down the water side,
 There I met my shepherd lad,
 He rowed me sweetly in his plaid,
 And he ca'd me his dearie.

Will ye gang down the water side,
 And see the waves sae sweetly glide
 Beneath the hazels spreading wide,
 The moon it shines fu' clearly.

I was bred up at nae sic school,
 My shepherd lad to play the fool;
 And a' the day to sit in dool,
 And naebody to see me.

Ye shall get gowns and ribbons meet,
 Caul-leather shoon upon your feet,
 And in my arms ye'se lie and sleep,
 And ye shall be my dearie.

If ye'll but stand to what ye've said,
 I'se gang wi' you my shepherd lad;
 And ye may row me in your plaid,
 And I shall be your dearie.

While waters wimple<sup>4</sup> to the sea, 25
 While day blinks in the lift sae hie;
 Till clay-cauld death shall blin' my e'e,
 Ye aye shall be my dearie.

Lady Anne Barnard

1750-1825

AULD ROBIN GRAY

When the sheep are in the fauld, when the kye's<sup>1</sup> come hame,
 And a' the weary warld to rest are gane,
 The waes o' my heart fa' in showers frae ma ee, Unkent by my guidman, wha sleeps sound by me.

Young Jamie lo'ed me weel, and sought me for his bride, 5
 But saving ae crown-piece he had naething beside;
 To make the crown a pound my Jamie gaed to
 sea,
 And the crown and the pound—they were baith
 for me.

He hadna been gane a twelvemonth and a day,
 When my father brake his arm and the cow was stown<sup>2</sup> away; 10
 My mither she fell sick—my Jamie was at sea,
 And auld Robin Gray came a-courting me.

My father couldna wark—my mother couldna spin—
 I toiled day and night, but their bread I couldna win;
 Auld Rob maintained them baith, and, wi'
 tears in his ee, 15
 Said: "Jeanie, O for their sakes, will ye no marry me?"

My heart it said na, and I looked for Jamie back,
 But hard blew the winds, and his ship was a wrack,
 His ship was a wrack—why didna Jamie die,
 Or why am I spared to cry wae is me? 20

My father urged me sair—my mither didna
 speak,
 But she looked in my face till my heart was like to break;
 Thy gied him my hand—my heart was in the sea—
 And so auld Robin Gray he was guidman to me.

I hadna been his wife a week but only four, 25
 When, mournfu' as I sat on the stane at my
 door,
 I saw my Jamie's ghaist, for I couldna think it he,
 Till he said: "I'm come hame, love, to marry thee!"

<sup>4</sup> Ripple.

<sup>1</sup> Cows.

<sup>2</sup> Stolen.

<sup>6</sup> Harvest.

<sup>7</sup> Men who bind the sheaves.

<sup>8</sup> Gray-haired.

<sup>9</sup> Coaxing.

<sup>10</sup> Active young men.

<sup>11</sup> Hide-and-seek.

<sup>1</sup> Ewes.

<sup>2</sup> Knolls.

<sup>3</sup> The brook rolls.

Oh, sair sair did we greet, and mickle say o' a',
 I gied him ae kiss, and bade him gang awa'— 30
 I wish that I were dead, but I'm na like to die,
 For, though my heart is broken, I'm but young,
 wae is me!

I gang like a ghaist, and I carena much to spin,
 I darena think o' Jamie, for that wad be a sin,
 But I'll do my best a gude wife to be, 35
 For, oh! Robin Gray, he is kind to me.

Caroline Oliphant (Lady Nairn)

1766-1845

THE LAND OF THE LEAL

I'm wearin' awa', John,
 Like snaw-wreaths in thaw, John,
 I'm wearin' awa',
 To the land o' the leal.<sup>1</sup>
 There's nae sorrow there, John,
 There's neither could nor care, John,
 The day is aye fair
 In the land o' the leal.

Our bonnie bairn's there, John,
 She was baith gude and fair, John;
 And O! we grudged her sair
 To the land o' the leal.
 But sorrow's sel' wears past, John,
 And joy's a-coming fast, John,
 The joy that's aye to last
 In the land o' the leal.

Sae dear's the joy was bought, John,
 Sae free the battle fought, John,
 That sinfu' man e'er brought,
 To the land o' the leal.
 O, dry your glistening e'e, John!
 My saul lings to be free, John,
 And angels beckon me
 To the land o' the leal.

O, haud ye leal and true, John!
 Your day it's wearin' through, John,
 And I'll welcome you
 To the land o' the leal.
 Now fare-ye-weel, my ain John,
 This world's cares are vain, John,
 We'll meet, and we'll be fain,
 In the land o' the leal.

ANONYMOUS

THE WEE, WEE GERMAN LAIRDIE

Wha the deil hae we got for a king,
 But a wee, wee German lairdie!<sup>1</sup>
 An' when we gaed to bring him hame,
 He was delving in his kail-yardie:<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Loyal, faithful, true-hearted.

<sup>2</sup> i. e., George I (1714-1727), Elector of Hanover. Both George I and George II were favorite subjects for ridicule with the Jacobite song-writers.

<sup>3</sup> Cabbage-garden.

Sheughing kail,<sup>3</sup> and laying leeks, 5
 Without the hose and but the breeks;<sup>4</sup>
 And up his beggar duds he cleeks,
 The wee, wee German lairdie!

And he's clappit down in our gudeman's chair,
 The wee, wee German lairdie! 10
 And he's brought fouth<sup>5</sup> o' foreign trash,
 And dibbled<sup>6</sup> them in his yardie:
 He's pu'd the rose o' English loons,
 And brake the harp o' Irish clowns,
 But our Scot's thistle will jag his thumbs, 15
 The wee, wee German lairdie!

Come up amang the Highland hills,
 Thou wee, wee German lairdie,
 And see how Charlie's<sup>7</sup> lang-kail thrive,
 That he dibbled in his yardie: 20
 And if a stock ye daur to pu',
 Or haud the yoking o' a pleugh,
 We'll break your sceptre o'er your mou',
 Thou wee bit German lairdie!

Our hills are steep, our glens are deep, 25
 Nae fitting for a yardie;
 And our norlan' thistles winna pu',
 For a wee bit German lairdie!
 And we've the trenching blades o' weir,
 Wad glib<sup>8</sup> ye o' your German gear, 30
 And pass ye neath the claymore's sheer Thou feckless German lairdie!

Auld Scotland! thou'rt owre cauld a hole
 For nursing siccan vermin;
 But the very dogs o' England's court 35
 Can bark and howl in German!
 Then keep thy dibble<sup>9</sup> i' thy ain hand,
 Thy spade bit and thy yardie;
 For wha the deil now claims your land, 40
 But a wee, wee German lairdie?

CHARLIE IS MY DARLING

'Twas on a Monday morning,
 Right early in the year,
 That Charlie<sup>1</sup> came to our town,
 The young Chevalier. 5
 And Charlie he's my darling,
 My darling, my darling,
 And Charlie he's my darling,
 The young Chevalier.

As Charlie he came up the gate,
 His face shone like the day: 10
 I grat to see the lad come back
 That had been lang away.
 And Charlie he's my darling, etc.

<sup>3</sup> Ditching cabbage.

<sup>4</sup> Without breeches.

<sup>5</sup> Plenty.

<sup>6</sup> Planted.

<sup>7</sup> Charles Edward Stuart, "the young Pretender," grandson of King James II.

<sup>8</sup> Deprive.

<sup>9</sup> A pointed tool, used to make holes for planting seeds, or "dibbling."

<sup>1</sup> Charles Stuart, "the young Pretender," as his father James Edward Stuart, was called the "Chevalier" by his friends, Charles gained the title of "the young Chevalier."

And ilka bonnie lassie sang,
As to the door she ran,
Our king shall hae his ain again,
And Charlie is the man.
And Charlie he's my darling, etc.

15

Out-owre yon moory mountain,
And down yon craigy glen,
Of naething else our lasses sing
But Charlie and his men.
And Charlie he's my darling, etc.

20

Our Highland hearts are true and leal,
And glow without a stain;
Our Highland swords are metal keen,
And Charlie he's our ain.
And Charlie he's my darling,
My darling, my darling,
And Charlie he's my darling,
The young Chevalier.

25

30

Robert Fergusson

1750-1774

THE DAFT DAYS

Now mirk December's dowie<sup>1</sup> face
Glow'r's ow'r the rigs<sup>2</sup> wi' sour grimace,
While, thro' his minimum o' space,
The bleer-ey'd sun,
Wi' blinkin' light, and stealin' pace,
His race doth run.

5

Frae naked groves nae birdie sings,
To shepherd's pipe nae hillock rings,
The breeze nae od'rous flavour brings
From Borean cave,
An' dwynin'<sup>3</sup> Nature droops her wings,
Wi' visage grave.

10

Mankind but scanty pleasure glean
Frae snawy hill or barren plain,
Whan Winter, 'midst his nipping train,
Wi' frozen spear,
Sends drift ow'r a' his bleak domain,
And guides the weir.<sup>4</sup>

15

Auld Reekie<sup>5</sup> thou'rt the canty hole,
A bield<sup>6</sup> for mony a cauldrieff<sup>7</sup> soul,
Wha snugly at thine ingle loll,
Baith warm and couth;<sup>8</sup>
While round they gar the bicker<sup>9</sup> roll,
To weet their mouth. . . .

20

Ye browster wives, now busk ye bra',
An' fling your sorrows far awa',
Then come and gie's the tither blaw
O' reaming ale,
Mair precious than the well o' Spa,
Our hearts to heal. . . .

25

30

Fiddlers, your pins in temper fix,
And rozet weel your fiddle-sticks,
But banish vile Italian tricks
Frae out your quorum,
Nor fortes wi' pianos mix,
Gie's Tullochgorum. . . .

35

And thou, great god of Aqua Vitae!
Wha sways the empire o' this city,
When fou we're sometimes capernoity,<
Be thou prepar'd
To hedge us from that black banditti,
The City-Guard.

40

Robert Burns

(1759-1796)

THE COTTER'S SATURDAY NIGHT

(1785)

"Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys, and destiny obscure;
Nor Grandeur hear, with a disdainful smile,
The short and simple annals of the poor."
GRAY.

My lov'd, my honour'd, much respected friend!<sup>1</sup> a

No mercenary bard his homage pays;
With honest pride, I scorn each selfish end,
My dearest meed, a friend's esteem and praise:<sup>2</sup> b

To you I sing, in simple Scottish lays, b 5
The lowly train in life's sequester'd scene; c
The native feelings strong, the guileless ways, b

What Aiken in a cottage would have been; c
Ah! tho' his worth unknown, far happier there
I ween! c

November chill blows loud wi' angry sigh;<sup>3</sup> 10
The short'ning winter-day is near a close;
The miry beasts retreating frae the pleugh;
The black'ning trains o' craws to their repose:

The toil-worn Cotter frae his labour goes,
This night his weekly moil<sup>4</sup> is at an end, 15
Collects his spades, his mattocks, and his hoes,

Hoping the morn in ease and rest to spend,
And weary, o'er the moor, his course does hameward bend.

At length his lonely cot appears in view,
Beneath the shelter of an aged tree; 20
Th' expectant wee-things, toddlin', stacher<sup>4</sup>
through

To meet their dad, wi' flichterin' noise and glee.

His wee bit ingle, blinkin' bonily,

<sup>1</sup> Robert Aiken, a solicitor in Ayr, who was a patron of Burns, and an admirer of his poetry.

<sup>2</sup> A whistling, rushing sound. (Scotch form of sough.)

<sup>3</sup> Drudgery.

<sup>4</sup> Stagger.

<sup>1</sup> Gloomy.

<sup>2</sup> Ridges, hills.

<sup>3</sup> Pining, wasting away.

<sup>4</sup> War.

<sup>5</sup> Old smoky, i. e., Edinburgh. <sup>6</sup> Shelter.

<sup>7</sup> Chilly. <sup>8</sup> Kind, friendly.

<sup>9</sup> Wooden drinking-cup, or bowl.

His clean hearth-stane, his thrifty wife's smile,

The lisping infant, prattling on his knee; 25
Does a' his weary kiahugh<sup>5</sup> and care beguile,
And makes him quite forget his labour and his toil.

Belyve,<sup>6</sup> the elder bairns come drapping in,
At service out, amang the farmers roun';
Some ca'<sup>7</sup> the pleugh, some herd, some tentie
rin 30

A cannie errand<sup>8</sup> to a neebor town:
Their eldest hope, their Jenny, woman-grown,

In youthfu' bloom,—love sparkling in her e'e—

Comes hame, perhaps to shew a brow<sup>9</sup> new gown,
Or deposit her sair-won penny-fee,<sup>10</sup> 35
To help her parents dear, if they in hardship be.

Wi' joy unfeign'd, brothers and sisters meet,
And each for other's weelfare kindly spiers:<sup>11</sup>

The social hours, swift-wing'd, unnotic'd fleet:

Each tells the uncoss<sup>12</sup> that he sees or hears;
The parents partial eye their hopeful
years; 41

Anticipation forward points the view;
The mother, wi' her needle and her shears, Gars auld claes look amais<sup>t</sup> as weel's the new,

The father mixes a' wi' admonition due. 45

Their master's and their mistress's command,
The younkens a' are warn'd to obey;
And mind their labours wi' an eydent<sup>13</sup> hand,
And ne'er, tho' out o' sight, to jauk<sup>14</sup> or
play;

"And O! be sure to fear the Lord alway, 50
And mind your duty, duly, morn and night;
Lest in temptation's path ye gang astray,
Implore His counsel and assisting might:
They never sought in vain that sought the Lord
aright."

But, hark! a rap comes gently to the door; 55
Jenny, wha kens the meaning o' the same,
Tells how a neibor lad came o'er the moor,
To do some errands, and convoy her hame.
The wily mother sees the conscious flame—
Sparkle in Jenny's e'e, and flush her cheek; 60 Wi' heart-struck anxious care enquires his
name,

While Jenny hafflins<sup>15</sup> is afraid to speak;
Weel-pleas'd the mother hears it's nae wild, worthless rake.

<sup>5</sup> Worry, labor.

<sup>6</sup> By-and-bye, presently.

<sup>7</sup> Drive. As in "ca canny," drive slowly; or cautiously.

<sup>8</sup> Tentie rin a cannie errand=careful run a frugal errand.

<sup>9</sup> Brave, fine, gay.

<sup>10</sup> i. e., hard-won wages.

<sup>11</sup> Enquire.

<sup>12</sup> Strange happenings, little incidents out of the common.

<sup>13</sup> Diligent.

<sup>14</sup> To trifle, or, as we would say, to fool.

<sup>15</sup> Half.

Wi' kindly welcome, Jenny brings him ben;<sup>16</sup>
A strappin youth, he takes the mother's eye; 65

Blythe Jenny sees the visit's no ill-ta'en;
The father cracks of horses, pleughs, and kye.<sup>17</sup>

The youngster's artless heart o'erflows wi'
joy,

But blate an' laithfu',<sup>18</sup> scarce can weel behave;

The mother, wi' a woman's wiles, can spy<sup>19</sup>

What makes the youth sae bashfu' and sae
grave,

Weel-pleas'd to think her bairn's respected like the lave.<sup>20</sup>

Oh, happy love! where love like this is found!

Oh, heart-felt raptures! bliss beyond compare!

I've paced much this weary, mortal round, 75

And sage experience bids me this declare;

"If Heaven a draught of heavenly pleasure
spare—

One cordial in this melancholy vale,

'Tis when a youthful, loving, modest pair

In other's arms breathe out the tender tale, 80

Beneath the milk-white thorn that scents the evening gale."

Is there, in human form, that bears a heart,

A wretch! a villain! lost to love and truth!

That can, with studied, sly, ensnaring art,

Betray sweet Jenny's unsuspecting youth?

Curse on his perjurd arts! dissembling smooth! 86

Are honour, virtue, conscience, all exil'd?

Is there no pity, no relenting ruth,

Points to the parents fondling o'er their child?

Then paints the ruin'd maid, and their distraction wild? 90

But now the supper crowns their simple board,

The halesome parritch, chief o' Scotia's food;

The soupe their only hawkie<sup>20</sup> does afford,

That, 'yont the hallan<sup>21</sup> snugly chows her
codd:

The dame brings forth, in complimental
mood, 95

To grace the lad, her weel-hain'd kebbuck, fell;<sup>22</sup>

And aft he's prest, and aft he ca's it guid:

The frugal wife, garrulous, will tell How 't was a towmond auld,<sup>23</sup> sin' lint was i' the bell.<sup>24</sup>

<sup>16</sup> Inside, into the inner room. In two-roomed houses the outer apartment was called the but, the inner, containing the fire-place, ben.

<sup>17</sup> Cows.

<sup>18</sup> Blate an' laithfu'=shamefaced and reluctant. The youth is hesitating and awkward through shyness and modesty.

<sup>19</sup> The rest, the others.

<sup>20</sup> Cow, more especially a black and white cow. Soupe, i. e., milk.

<sup>21</sup> Partition. <sup>22</sup> Well-saved cheese, strong, pungent.

<sup>23</sup> Twelve-month old. <sup>24</sup> Since flax was in the flower.

The cheerfu' supper done, wi' serious face, 100
 They, round the ingle, form a circle wide;
 The sire turns o'er, with patriarchal grace,
 The big ha'-bible,<sup>26</sup> once his father's pride;
 His bonnet<sup>26</sup> rev'rently is laid aside,
 His lyart haffets<sup>27</sup> wearing thin and bare; 105
 Those strains that once did sweet in Zion glide,
 He wales a portion with judicious care;
 And "Let us worship God!" he says, with solemn air.

They chant their artless notes in simple guise,
 They tune their hearts, by far the noblest
 aim; 110
 Perhaps "Dundee's"<sup>28</sup> wild-warbling measures rise,
 Or plaintive "Martyrs," worthy of the
 name;
 Or noble "Elgin" beets<sup>29</sup> the heaven-ward flame,
 The sweetest far of Scotia's holy lays:
 Compar'd with these, Italian trills are tame; 115
 The tickl'd ears no heart-felt raptures raise;
 Nae unison hae they with our Creator's praise.

The priest-like father reads the sacred page,
 How Abram was the friend of God on high;
 Or Moses bade eternal warfare wage 120
 With Amalek's ungracious progeny;
 Or how the royal bard<sup>30</sup> did groaning lie
 Beneath the stroke of Heaven's avenging ire;
 Or Job's pathetic plaint, and wailing cry;
 Or rapt Isaiah's wild, seraphic fire; 125
 Or other holy seers that tune the sacred lyre.

Perhaps the Christian volume is the theme,
 How guiltless blood for guilty man was
 shed:
 How He, who bore in Heaven the second
 name,
 Had not on earth whereon to lay His
 head; 130
 How His first followers and servants sped;
 The precepts sage they wrote to many a land:
 How he, who lone in Patmos banish'd,
 Saw in the sun a mighty angel stand,
 And heard great Bab'lon's doom<sup>31</sup> pronounc'd
 by Heaven's command. 135

Then kneeling down, to Heaven's Eternal
 King,
 The saint, the father, and the husband
 prays:
 Hope "springs exulting on triumphant wing,"<sup>32</sup>

<sup>26</sup> Hall-bible, i. e., house-hold, or family. Bible.

<sup>28</sup> In Scotland (as in Shakespeare) bonnet often means a cap, or head-covering, worn by men or boys. In Scott's well-known song the "Blue Bonnets"=the Scotch. (v. p. 501).

<sup>27</sup> Grey temples, i. e., the locks of gray about his temples.

<sup>29</sup> Dundee, Martyrs, and Elgin are among the most familiar and characteristic of the Scottish hymn-tunes.

<sup>30</sup> Rouses, fans.

<sup>31</sup> King David.

<sup>32</sup> Rev. xviii.

<sup>33</sup> Pope, Windsor Forest, l. 111.

That thus they all shall meet in future
 days,
 There, ever bask in uncreated rays, 140
 No more to sigh, or shed the bitter tear,
 Together hymning their Creator's praise,
 In such society, yet still more dear;
 While circling Time moves round in an eternal sphere. 144

Compar'd with this, how poor Religion's pride,
 In all the pomp of method, and of art;
 When men display to congregations wide
 Devotion's ev'ry grace, except the heart!
 The Power, incens'd, the pageant will desert,
 The pompous strain, the sacerdotal stole; 150
 But haply, in some cottage far apart,
 May hear, well pleas'd, the language of the
 soul;
 And in His Book of Life the inmates poor enroll.

Then homeward all take off their sev'ral
 way;
 The youngling cottagers retire to rest: 155
 The parent-pair their secret homage pay,
 And proffer up to Heaven the warm request,
 That He who stills the raven's clam'rous
 nest,
 And decks the lily fair in flow'ry pride,
 Would, in the way His wisdom sees the
 best, 160
 For them and for their little ones provide;
 But chiefly, in their hearts with grace divine preside.

From scenes like these, old Scotia's grandeur
 springs,
 That makes her lov'd at home, rever'd abroad; 164
 Princes and lords are but the breath of kings,
 "An honest man's the noblest work of God;"<sup>33</sup>
 And certes, in fair virtue's heavenly road,
 The cottage leaves the palace far behind;
 What is a lordling's pomp? a cumbrous load, 169
 Disguising oft the wretch of human kind,
 Strid in arts of hell, in wickedness refin'd!

O Scotia! my dear, my native soil!
 For whom my warmest wish to Heaven is sent,
 Long may thy hardy sons of rustic toil
 Be blest with health, and peace, and sweet content! 175
 And O! may Heaven their simple lives prevent
 From luxury's contagion, weak and vile!
 Then, howe'er crowns and coronets be
 rent,
 A virtuous populace may rise the while,
 And stand a wall of fire around their muchlov'd isle. 180

<sup>33</sup> Pope, Essay on Man, Ep. iv. 247.

O Thou! who pour'd the patriotic tide,
 That stream'd thro' great unhappy Wallace's heart,
 Who dar'd to nobly stem tyrannic pride,
 Or nobly die, the second glorious part:
 (The patriot's God, peculiarly Thou art, 185
 His friend, inspirer, guardian and reward!)
 Oh never, never Scotia's realm desert;
 But still the patriot, and the patriot-bard
 In bright succession raise, her ornament and guard!

EPISTLE TO JOHN LAPRAIK, AN OLD SCOTTISH BARD

April 1st, 1785

While briars and woodbines budding green,
 And patricks scraichin'<sup>1</sup> loud at e'en,
 And morning poussie whidden<sup>2</sup> seen,
 Inspire my Muse,
 This freedom in an unknown frien' 5
 I pray excuse.

On Fasten-e'en<sup>3</sup> we had a rockin'<sup>4</sup>
 To ca' the crack<sup>5</sup> and weave our stockin';
 And there was muckle fun and jokin',
 Ye needna doubt; 10
 At length we had a hearty yokin'<sup>6</sup>
 At sang about.

There was ae sang, amang the rest,
 Aboon them a' it pleased me best,
 That some kind husband had address 15
 To some sweet wife:
 It thirl'd<sup>7</sup> the heart-strings through the breast,
 A' to the life.

I've scarce heard ought described sae weel,
 What generous manly bosoms feel; 20
 Thought I, "Can this be Pope, or Steele,
 Or Beattie's war?
 They tauld me 'twas an odd kind chiel
 About Muirkirk.

It pat me fidgin-fain<sup>8</sup> to hear't,
 And sae about him there I spiert;<sup>9</sup>
 Then a' that kent him round declared
 He had ingine;<sup>10</sup>
 That name excell'd it, few cam near't, 30
 It was sae fine.

That, set him to a pint of ale,
 And either douce<sup>11</sup> or merry tale,
 Or rhymes and sangs he'd made himsel,
 Or witty catches:
 'Tween Inverness and Teviotdale 35
 He had few matches.

Then up I gat, and swore an aith,
 Though I should pawn my pleugh and graith,<sup>12</sup>
 Or die a cadger pownie's<sup>13</sup> death,
 At some dike back, 40
 A pint and gill I'd gie them baith
 To hear your crack.<sup>14</sup>

But, first and foremost, I should tell,
 Amaist as soon as I could spell,
 I to the crambo-jingle fell,<sup>15</sup> 45
 Though rude and rough:
 Yet croonin' to a body's sel
 Does weel enough.

I am nae poet, in a sense,
 But just a rhymr, like by chance, 50
 And hae to learning nae pretence,
 Yet what the matter?
 Whene'er my Muse does on me glance,
 I jingle at her.

Your critic folk may cock their nose,
 And say, "How can you e'er propose,
 You, wha ken hardly verse frae prose,
 To make a sang?"<sup>16</sup> 55
 But, by your leaves, my learn'd foes,
 Ye're maybe wrang. 60

What's a' your jargon o' your schools,
 Your Latin names for horns and stools;
 If honest nature made you fools,
 What sairs<sup>16</sup> your grammars?
 Ye'd better ta'en up spadds and shoos, 65
 Or knappin'-hammers.<sup>17</sup>

A set o' dull conceited hashcs,<sup>18</sup>
 Confuse their brains in college classes!
 They gang in stirks,<sup>19</sup> and come out asses,
 Plain truth to speak; 70
 And syne<sup>20</sup> they think to climb Parnassus
 By dint o' Greek!

Gie me a spark o' Nature's fire!
 That's a' the learning I desire;
 Then, though I drudge through dub<sup>21</sup> and mire 76
 At pleugh or cart,
 My Muse, though hamely in attire,
 May touch the heart.

Oh for a punk<sup>22</sup> o' Allan's<sup>23</sup> glee,
 Or Fergusson's the bauld and slee,<sup>24</sup> 80
 Or bright Lapraik's, my friend to be,
 If I can hit it!
 That would be lear<sup>25</sup> enough for me,
 If I could get it!

Now, sir, if ye hae friends enow, 85
 Though real friends I b'lieve are few,
 Yet, if your catalogue be fu',
 I' se no insist,
 But gif ye want ae friend that's true, 90
 I'm on your list.

<sup>1</sup> Partridges crying. <sup>2</sup> Hare scampering.
<sup>3</sup> The evening before the fast of Lent, or before Ash Wednesday.
<sup>4</sup> Evening party. <sup>5</sup> Drive the talk.
<sup>6</sup> A turn, or bout. Hearty yokin' corresponds to "a good spell."
<sup>7</sup> Thrilled. <sup>8</sup> i. e. it made me impatient.
<sup>9</sup> Inquired. <sup>10</sup> Genius. <sup>11</sup> Serious, sober.

<sup>12</sup> Tackle. <sup>13</sup> A packman's, or carrier's pony.
<sup>14</sup> Talk. <sup>15</sup> i. e. I fell to making doggerel verses.
<sup>16</sup> Serves. <sup>17</sup> Stone-breakers' hammers.
<sup>18</sup> Blockheads. <sup>19</sup> Young cattle. <sup>20</sup> Then. <sup>21</sup> Puddle.
<sup>22</sup> Spark. <sup>23</sup> Allan Ramsay. <sup>24</sup> Sly. <sup>25</sup> Learning.

I winna blaw about mysel;
 As ill I like my fauts to tell;
 But friends and folk that wish me well,
     They sometimes roose<sup>20</sup> me;
 Though I maun own, as mony still      95
     As far abuse me.

There's ae wee faut they whiles lay to me,
 I like the lasses—Gude forgie me!
 For mony a plack<sup>27</sup> they wheedle frae me,
     At dance or fair;      100
 Maybe some ither thing they gie me,
     They weel can spare.

But Mauchline race, or Mauchline fair,
 I should be proud to meet you there;
 We'se gie ae night's discharge to Care,      105
     If we forgather,
 And hae a swap o' rhymin' ware
     Wi' ane anither.

The four-gill chap, we'se gar him clatter,
 And kirsens<sup>28</sup> him wi' reekin' water;      110
 Syne we'll sit down and tak our whitter,<sup>29</sup>
     To cheer our heart;
 And faith, we'se be acquainted better
     Before we part.

Awa' ye selfish war'ly race,      115
 Wha think that havins,<sup>30</sup> sense and grace,
 E'en love and friendship, should give place
     To catch-the-plack!<sup>31</sup>
 I dinna like to see your face,
     Nor hear your crack.<sup>32</sup>      120

But ye whom social pleasure charms,
 Whose hearts the tide of kindness warms,
 Who hold your being on the terms,
     "Each aid the others,"
 Come to my bowl, come to my arms,      125
     My friends, my brothers.

But, to conclude my long epistle,
 As my auld pen's worn to the grissle;
 Twa lines frae you would gar me fiddle,<sup>33</sup>
     Who am most fervent,      130
 While I can either sing or whistle,
     Your friend and servant.

TO A MOUSE, ON TURNING HER UP IN HER NEST, WITH THE PLOUGH,
 NOVEMBER, 1785

Wee, sleekit, cowrin, tim'rous beastie,
 O, what a panic's in thy breastie!
 Thou need na start awa sae hasty,
     Wi' bickering brattle!<sup>1</sup>
 I wad be laith to rin an' chase thee,      5
     Wi' murd'ring pattle!<sup>2</sup>

I'm truly sorry man's dominion,
 Has broken Nature's social union,
 An' justifies that ill opinion,
     Which maks thee startle      10'
 At me, thy poor, earth-born companion,
     An' fellow-mortal!

I doubt na, whyles,<sup>3</sup> but thou may thieve;
 What then? poor beastie, thou maun live!
 A daimen ieker in a thrave<sup>4</sup>      15
     'S a sma' request;
 I'll get a blessin wi' the lave,
     And never miss't!

Thy wee bit housie, too, in ruin!
 It's silly wa's the win's are strewin!      20
 An' naething now to big<sup>5</sup> a new ane,
     O' foggage<sup>6</sup> green!
 An' bleak December's winds ensuin,
     Baith snell<sup>7</sup> an' keen!

Thou saw the fields laid bare an' waste,      25
 An' weary winter comin' fast,
 An' cozie here, beneath the blast,
     Thou thought to dwell—
 Till, crash! the cruel coulter past
     Out thro' thy cell.      30

That wee bit heap o' leaves an' stibble
 Has cost thee mony a weary nibble!
 Now thou's turned out, for a' thy trouble,
     But<sup>8</sup> house or hald,<sup>9</sup>
 To thole the winter's sleety dribble,
     An' cranreuch<sup>10</sup> cauld!      35

But Mousie, thou art no thy lane,
 In proving foresight may be vain;
 The best laid schemes o' mice an' men
     Gang aft agley,<sup>11</sup>      40
 An' lea'e us nought but grief an' pain
     For promis'd joy!

Still, thou art blest, compar'd wi' me!
 The present only toucheth thee:
 But, och! I backward cast my e'e,
     On prospects drear!      45
 An' forward, tho' I canna see,
     I guess an' fear!

TO A MOUNTAIN DAISY, ON TURNING
 ONE DOWN WITH THE PLOUGH IN APRIL, 1786

Wee, modest, crimson-tipp'd flow'r,
 Thou's met me in an evil hour;
 For I maun crush among the stour<sup>1</sup>
     Thy slender stem:
 To spare thee now is past my pow'r,      5
     Thou bonie gem.

<sup>3</sup> At times, occasionally.
<sup>4</sup> An occasional ear in twenty-four sheaves. A thrave consisted of two stooks of corn of twelve sheaves each.
<sup>5</sup> Build. <sup>6</sup> Grass growing among the grain. <sup>7</sup> Bitter.
<sup>8</sup> Without. <sup>9</sup> Home. <sup>10</sup> Hoar-frost. <sup>11</sup> Awry.
<sup>1</sup> In Scotland stour usually means dust, or moving dust. Here, stour involves the idea of the earth up-turned or disturbed by the plough.

<sup>20</sup> Praise. <sup>27</sup> Coin. <sup>28</sup> Christen. <sup>29</sup> Draught.
<sup>30</sup> Manners. <sup>31</sup> Money-making, "chasing-the-dollar."
<sup>32</sup> Talk. <sup>33</sup> Fidget, i. e., jump for joy.
<sup>1</sup> Hurrying flight.
<sup>2</sup> The stick used to scrape the earth from the plough-share.

Alas! it's no thy neibor sweet,
 The bonie lark, companion meet,
 Bending thee 'mang the dewy weat,
     Wi' speek'l'd breast! 10
 When upward-springing, blythe, to greet
     The purpling east.

Cauld blew the bitter-biting north
 Upon thy early, humble birth;
 Yet cheerfully thou glinted forth 15
     Amid the storm,
 Scarce rear'd above the parent-earth
     Thy tender form.

The flaunting flow'rs our gardens yield,
 High shelt'ring woods and wa's maun shield; 20
 But thou, beneath the random field<sup>2</sup>
     O' clod or stane,
 Adorns the histie<sup>3</sup> stibble-field,
     Unseen, alane.

There, in thy scanty mantle clad,
 Thy snawie bosom sun-ward spread,
 Thou lifts thy unassuming head 25
     In humble guise;
 But now the share upturns thy bed,
     And low thou lies! 30

Such is the fate of artless maid,
 Sweet flow'ret of the rural shade!
 By love's simplicity betray'd,
     And guileless trust,
 Till she, like thee, all soil'd is laid, 35
     Low i' the dust.

Such is the fate of simple bard,
 On life's rough ocean luckless starr'd!
 Unskilful he to note the card<sup>4</sup>
     Of prudent lore, 40
 Till billows rage, and gales blow hard,
     And whelm him o'er!

Such fate to suffering worth is given,
 Who long with wants and woes has striv'n,
 By human pride or cunning driv'n, 45
     To mis'ry's brink;
 Till, wrench'd of ev'ry stay but Heav'n
     He, ruin'd, sink!

Ev'n thou who mourn'st the Daisy's fate,
 That fate is thine—no distant date; 50
 Stern Ruin's plough-share drives, elate,
     Full on thy bloom,
 Till crush'd beneath the furrow's weight,
     Shall be thy doom!

A BARD'S EPITAPH

(1786)

Is there a whim-inspir'd fool,
 Owre fast for thought, owre hot for rule,
 Owre blate<sup>1</sup> to seek, owre proud to snool,<sup>2</sup>
     Let him draw near;
 And owre this grassy heap sing dool,<sup>3</sup> 5
     And drop a tear.

<sup>2</sup> Shelter.<sup>3</sup> Dry, barren.<sup>4</sup> Probably here=compass. The card, or compass-card, on which the points were given, was often used for the compass itself.<sup>1</sup> Bashful.<sup>2</sup> To cringe.<sup>3</sup> A lamentation.

Is there a bard of rustic song,
 Who, noteless, steals the crowds among,
 That weekly this area throng,
     O, pass not by! 10
 But, with a frater-feeling<sup>4</sup> strong,
     Here heave a sigh.

Is there a man, whose judgment clear
 Can others teach the course to steer,
 Yet runs, himself, life's mad career, 15
     Wild as the wave,
 Here pause—and, thro' the starting tear,
     Survey this grave.

The poor inhabitant below
 Was quick to learn and wise to know, 20
 And keenly felt the friendly glow,
     And softer flame;
 But thoughtless follies laid him low,
     And stain'd his name!

Reader, attend! whether thy soul
 Soars fancy's flights beyond the pole,
 Or darkling grubs this earthly hole, 25
     In low pursuit:
 Know, prudent, cautious self-control
     Is wisdom's root. 30

A PRAYER UNDER THE PRESSURE OF VIOLENT ANGUISH

(1786)

O Thou Great Being! what Thou art,
 Surpasses me to know;
 Yet sure I am, that known to Thee
 Are all thy Works below.

Thy creature here before Thee stands, 5
 All wretched and distrest;
 Yet sure those ills that wring my soul
 Obey Thy high behest.

Sure Thou, Almighty, canst not act
 From cruelty or wrath! 10
 O, free my weary eyes from tears,
 Or close them fast in death!

But if I must afflicted be,
 To suit some wise design,
 Then man my soul with firm resolves, 15
 To bear and not repine!

AULD LANG SYNE

(1788)

Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
 And never brought to mind?
 Should auld acquaintance be forgot,
 And auld lang syne!

Chorus. For auld lang syne, my dear, 5
 For auld lang syne,
 We'll tak' a cup o' kindness yet,
 For auld lang syne.

<sup>4</sup> Brotherly feeling.

And surely ye'll be your pint stowp!<sup>1</sup>
 And surely I'll be mine!<sup>2</sup> 10
 And we'll tak a cup o' kindness yet,
 For auld lang syne.
 For auld, &c.

We twa hae run about the braes,
 And pou'd the gowans<sup>3</sup> fine; 15
 But we've wandered mony a weary fit,
 Sin' auld lang syne.
 For auld, &c.

We twa hae paid'l'd i' the burn,<sup>3</sup>
 Frae morning sun till dine;<sup>4</sup> 20
 But seas between us braid hae roar'd
 Sin' auld lang syne.
 For auld, &c.

And there's a hand, my trusty fere!<sup>5</sup>
 And gie's a hand o' thine! 25
 And we'll tak a right gude-willie waught,<sup>6</sup>
 For auld, &c.

OF A' THE AIRTS THE WIND CAN BLAW

(1788)

Of a' the airts<sup>1</sup> the wind can blaw,
 I dearly like the west,
 For there the bonie lassie lives,
 The lassie I lo'e best:
 There wild-woods grow, and rivers row, 5
 And mony a hill between:
 But day and night my fancy's flight
 Is ever wi' my Jean.

I see her in the dewy flowers,
 I see her sweet and fair: 10
 I hear her in the tune-fu' birds,
 I hear her charm the air:
 There's not a bonie flower that springs,
 By fountain, shaw,<sup>2</sup> or green;
 There's not a bonie bird that sings, 15
 But minds me o' my Jean.

MY BONIE MARY

(1788)

Go fetch to me a pint o' wine,
 And fill it in a silver tassie;<sup>1</sup>
 That I may drink before I go,
 A service to my bonie lassie.
 The boat rocks at the pier o' Leith; 5
 Fu' loud the wind blows frae the Ferry;
 The ship rides by the Berwick-law,
 And I maun leave my bonie Mary.

The trumpets sound, the banners fly,
 The glittering spears are rank'd ready: 10
 The shouts o' war are heard afar,
 The battle closes deep and bloody;

It's not the roar o' sea or shore,
 Wad mak me langer wish to tarry!
 Nor shouts o' war that's heard afar— 15
 It's leaving thee, my bonie Mary!

THE WOUNDED HARE

(1789)

Inhuman man! curse on thy barb'rous art,
 And blasted be thy murder-aiming eye,
 May never pity soothe thee with a sigh,
 Nor ever pleasure glad thy cruel heart!

Go live, poor wand'r'er of the wood and field! 5
 The bitter little that of life remains:
 No more the thickening brakes and verdant plains
 To thee a home, or food, or pastime yield.

Seek, mangled wretch, some place of wonted
 rest,
 No more of rest, but now the dying bed! 10
 The sheltering rushes whistling o'er thy head,
 The cold earth with thy bloody bosom prest.

Perhaps a mother's anguish adds its woe;
 The playful pair crowd fondly by thy side;
 Ah! helpless nurslings, who will now provide
 That life a mother only can bestow! 16

Of as by winding Nith I, musing, wait
 The sober eve, or hail the cheerful dawn,
 I'll miss thee sporting o'er the dewy lawn,
 And curse the ruffian's arm, and mourn thy hapless fate. 20

AE FOND KISS, AND THEN WE SEVER

(1791)

Ae fond kiss, and then we sever;
 Ae farewell, and then for ever!
 Deep in heart-wrung tears I'll pledge thee,
 Warring sighs and groans I'll wage thee. 5
 Who shall say that Fortune grieves him,
 While the star of hope she leaves him?
 Me, nae cheerful twinkle lights me;
 Dark despair around benights me.

I'll ne'er blame my partial fancy,
 Naething could resist my Nancy: 10
 But to see her was to love her;
 Love but her, and love for ever.
 Had we never lov'd sae kindly,
 Had we never lov'd sae blindly,
 Never met—or never parted, 15
 We had ne'er been broken-hearted.

Fare-thee-weel, thou first and fairest!
 Fare-thee-weel, thou best and dearest!
 Thine be ilka joy and treasure,
 Peace, Enjoyment, Love and Pleasure! 20
 Ae fond kiss, and then we sever!
 Ae farewell, alas, for ever!
 Deep in heart-wrung tears I'll pledge thee,
 Warring sighs and groans I'll wage thee.

<sup>1</sup> Stand for a pint cup.

<sup>2</sup> Paddled in the brook.

<sup>3</sup> Companion.

<sup>4</sup> Direction.

<sup>5</sup> A goblet.

<sup>6</sup> Daisies.

<sup>7</sup> Dinner time.

<sup>8</sup> A hearty draught.

<sup>9</sup> Grove or wood.

TAM O'SHANTER

(First published 1791)

"Of Brownie and of Bogillie full is this Buke."

GAWIN DOUGLAS.

When chapman billies<sup>1</sup> leave the street,
 And drouthy<sup>2</sup> neighbors, neighbors meet;
 As market days are wearing late,
 And folk begin to tak the gate,<sup>3</sup>
 While we sit bousing at the nappy,<sup>4</sup> 5
 An' getting fou<sup>5</sup> and unco happy,
 We think na on the lang Scots miles,<sup>6</sup>
 The mosses, waters, slaps,<sup>7</sup> and stiles,
 That lie between us and our hame,
 Where sits our sulky, sullen dame, 10
 Gathering her brows like gathering storm,
 Nursing her wrath to keep it warm.

This truth fand honest TAM O' SHANTER,
 As he frae Ayr ae night did canter:
 (Auld Ayr, wham ne'er a town surpasses, 15
 For honest men and bonie lasses).

O Tam! had'st thou but been sae wise,
 As ta'en thy ain wife Kate's advice!
 She tauld thee weel thou wast a skellum;<sup>8</sup>
 A blethering, blustering, drunken blellum;<sup>9</sup> 20
 That frae November till October,
 Ae market-day thou wast a sober;
 That ilka melder<sup>10</sup> wi' the Miller,
 Thou sat as lang as thou had siller;
 That ev'ry naig was ca'd<sup>11</sup> a shoe on 25
 The Smith and thee gat roarin fou on;
 That at the Lord's house, ev'n on Sunday,
 Thou drank wi' Kirkton Jean<sup>12</sup> till Monday;
 She prophesied that late or soon,
 Thou wad be found deep drown'd in Doon, 30
 Or catch'd wi' warlocks<sup>13</sup> i' the mirk,<sup>14</sup>
 By Alloway's auld haunted kirk.

Ah, gentle dames! it gars me greet,<sup>15</sup>
 To think how many counsels sweet,
 How many lengthen'd sage advices, 35
 The husband frae the wife despises!

But to our tale:—Ae market night,
 Tam had got planted unco right,
 Fast by an ingle,<sup>16</sup> bleezing finely,
 Wi' reaming swats, that drank divinely; 40
 And at his elbow, Souter<sup>17</sup> Johnie,
 His ancient, trusty, drouthy crony:
 'Tam lo'ed him like a very brither;
 They had been fou for weeks thegither.

<sup>1</sup> Pedlar fellows, pedlars. <sup>2</sup> Thirsty.
<sup>3</sup> Road. <sup>4</sup> Ale, especially strong ale. <sup>5</sup> Full.
<sup>6</sup> The Scotch mile was several hundred yards longer than the English mile.

<sup>7</sup> Gaps in a hedge or fence. <sup>8</sup> Scoundrel.
<sup>9</sup> Blatherskite, noisy talker.

<sup>10</sup> I. e., Every time he took meal to be ground. Melder = the amount of meal ground at one time.

<sup>11</sup> I. e., every horse that was shod. Ca'd = driven; to ca a shoe = to drive, or nail on, a shoe.

<sup>12</sup> I. e., Jean Kennedy, who kept a public house at the village of Kirkoswald, on the road from Portpatrick to Glasgow. At Kirkoswald, Douglas Graham and John Davidson are buried, the first is thought to have been the original of Tam O' Shanter, the second of Souter Johnie.

<sup>13</sup> Here, monsters, creatures in league with the devil.

<sup>14</sup> Dark. <sup>15</sup> Makes me weep.

<sup>16</sup> Fire, or fire-place. <sup>17</sup> Cobbler.

The night drave on wi' sangs an' clatter; 45
 And aye the ale was growing better:
 The Landlady and Tam grew gracious,
 Wi' favours secret, sweet, and precious:
 The Souter tauld his queerest stories;
 The Landlord's laugh was ready chorus: 50
 The storm without might rair<sup>18</sup> and rustle,
 Tam did na mind the storm a whistle.

Care, mad to see a man sae happy,
 E'en drown'd himself among the nappy.
 As bees flee hame wi' lades<sup>19</sup> o' treasure, 55
 The minutes wing'd their way wi' pleasure:
 Kings may be blest, but Tam was glorious,
 O'er a' the ills o' life victorious!

But pleasures are like poppies spread,
 You seize the flow'r, its bloom is shed; 60
 Or like the snow falls in the river,
 A moment white—then melts forever;
 Or like the Borealis race,
 That flit ere you can point their place;
 Or like the Rainbow's lovely form, 65
 Evanishing amid the storm.—
 Nae man can tether Time or Tide;
 The hour approaches Tam maun ride:
 That hour, o' night's black arch the key-stane,
 That dreary hour he mounts his beast in; 70
 And sic a night he taks the road in,
 As ne'er poor sinner was abroad in.

The wind blew as 't wad blawn its last;
 The rattling showers rose on the blast;
 The speedy gleams the darkness swallow'd; 75
 Loud, deep, and lang the thunder bellow'd:
 That night, a child might understand,
 The deil had business on his hand.

Weel-mounted on his gray mare Meg,
 A better never lifted leg, 80
 Tam skelpit<sup>20</sup> on thro' dub<sup>21</sup> and mire,
 Despising wind, and rain, and fire;
 Whiles holding fast his gude blue bonnet,
 Whiles crooning o'er some auld Scots sonnet, 85
 Whiles glow'rin round wi' prudent cares,
 Lest bogles<sup>22</sup> catch him unawares;
 Kirk-Alloway was drawing nigh,
 Where ghaists and houlets<sup>23</sup> nightly cry.

By this time he was cross the ford,
 Where in the snaw the chapman smoor'd;<sup>24</sup> 90
 And past the birks<sup>25</sup> and meikle stane,
 Where drunken Charlie brak's neck-bane;
 And thro' the whins,<sup>26</sup> and by the cairn,<sup>27</sup>
 Where hunters fand the murder'd bairn;
 And near the thorn, aboon the well, 95
 Where Mungo's mither hang'd hersel'.
 Before him Doon pours all his floods;
 The doubling storm roars thro' the woods,
 The lightnings flash from pole to pole,
 Near and more near the thunders roll, 100
 When, glimmering thro' the groaning trees,
 Kirk-Alloway seem'd in a bleeze,
 Thro' ilka bore<sup>28</sup> the beams were glancing,
 And loud resounded mirth and dancing.

<sup>18</sup> Roar. <sup>19</sup> Loads. <sup>20</sup> Dashed, hurried.

<sup>21</sup> Puddle. <sup>22</sup> Ghosts, hobgoblins. <sup>23</sup> Owls.

<sup>24</sup> Was smothered. <sup>25</sup> Birches.

<sup>26</sup> Furze. <sup>27</sup> A heap of stones. <sup>28</sup> Hole, opening.

- Inspiring bold John Barleycorn!<sup>29</sup> 105
 What dangers thou canst make us scorn!
 Wi' tippenny,<sup>30</sup> we fear nae evil;
 Wi' usquebae,<sup>31</sup> we'll face the devil!
 The swats sae ream'd<sup>32</sup> in Tammie's noddle,
 Fair play, he car'd na deils a boddle,<sup>33</sup> 110
 But Maggie stood, right sair astonish'd,
 Till, by the heel and hand admonish'd,
 She ventur'd forward on the light;
 And, wow! Tam saw an unco sight!
- Warlocks and witches in a dance: 115
 Nae cotillion, brent new<sup>34</sup> frae France,
 But hornpipes, jigs, strathspeys, and reels,
 Put life and mettle in their heels.
 A winnock-bunker<sup>35</sup> in the east,
 There sat auld Nick, in shape o' beast; 120
 A towzie tyke,<sup>36</sup> black, grim, and large,
 To gie them music was his charge;
 He screw'd the pipes and gart them skirl,<sup>37</sup>
 Till roof and rafters a' did dirl.<sup>38</sup> 125
 Coffins stood round, like open presses,
 That shaw'd the Dead in their last dresses;
 And (by some devilish cantraip<sup>39</sup> sleight)
 Each in its cauld hand held a light.
 By which heroic Tam was able
 To note upon the haly table, 130
 A murderer's bane, in gibbet-airns;
 Twa span-lang, wee, unchristened bairns;
 A thief, new-cutted frae a rape,
 Wi' his last gasp his gab<sup>40</sup> did gape; 135
 Five tomahawks, wi' blude red-rusted;
 Five scimitars, wi' murder crusted;
 A garter which a babe had strangled:
 A knife, a father's throat had mangled,
 Whom his ain son of life bereft,
 The gray-hairs yet stack to the heft; 140
 Wi' mair of horrible and awfu',
 Which even to name wad be unlawfu'.
- As Tammie glowr'd amaz'd, and curious,
 The mirth and fun grew fast and furious;
 The Piper loud and louder blew, 145
 The dancers quick and quicker flew;
 They reel'd, they set, they cross'd, they cleekit,<sup>41</sup>
 Till ilka carlin swat and reekit,
 And coast her duddies<sup>42</sup> to the wark,
 And linket<sup>43</sup> at it in her sark!<sup>44</sup> 150
- Now Tam, O Tam! had thae been queans,<sup>45</sup>
 A' plump and strapping in their teens!
 Their sarks, instead o' creeshie flainen,<sup>46</sup>
 Been snaw-white seventeen-hunder linen!<sup>47</sup>—47
 Thir breeks o' mine, my only pair, 155
 That ance were plush, o' guid blue hair,
 I wad hae gi'en them off my hurdies,<sup>48</sup>
 For ae blink o' the bonie burdies!<sup>49</sup>
- But wither'd hagdams, auld and droll,
 Rigwoodie<sup>50</sup> bags wad spean<sup>51</sup> a foal, 160
 Louping an' flinging on a crummock,<sup>52</sup>
 I wonder didna turn thy stomach.
 But Tam kennt what was what fu' brawlie;
 There was ae winsome wench and waulie,<sup>53</sup>
 That night enlisted in the core, 165
 Lang after ken'd on Carrick shore;
 (For mony a beast to dead she shot,
 And perish'd mony a bonie boat,
 And shook baith meikle corn and bear,<sup>54</sup>
 And kept the country-side in fear); 170
 Her cutty sark,<sup>55</sup> o' Paisley harn,<sup>56</sup>
 That while a lassie she had worn,
 In longitude tho' sorely scanty,
 It was her best, and she was vauntie.<sup>57</sup>
 Ah! little ken'd thy reverend grannie, 175
 That sark she coft<sup>58</sup> for her wee Nannie,
 Wi' twa pund Scots ('twas a' her riches),
 Wad ever grae'd a dance o' witches!
 But here my Muse her wing maun cour,
 Sic flights are far beyond her power; 180
 To sing how Nannie lap and flang,
 (A soule jade she was and strang),
 And how Tam stood, like ane bewitch'd,
 And thought his very een enrich'd:
 Even Satan glowr'd and fidg'd fu' fain, 185
 And hotch'd<sup>59</sup> and blew wi' might and main:
 Till first ae caper, syne<sup>60</sup> anither,
 Tam tint<sup>61</sup> his reason a' thegither,
 And roars out, "Weel done, Cutty-sark!"
 And in an instant all was dark: 190
 And scarcely had he Maggie rallied,
 When out the hellish legion sallied.
- As bees bizz out wi' angry fyke,<sup>62</sup>
 When plundering herds assail their byke;<sup>63</sup>
 As open pussie's<sup>64</sup> mortal foes, 195
 When, pop! she starts before their nose;
 As eager runs the market-crowd,
 When "Catch the thief!" resounds aloud;
 So Maggie runs, the witches follow,
 Wi' mony an eldritch skreich<sup>65</sup> and hollow. 200
- Ah, Tam! ah, Tam! thou'll get thy fairin!<sup>66</sup>
 In hell they'll roast thee like a herrin!
 In vain thy Kate awaits thy comin!
 Kate soon will be a woeful woman!
 Now, do thy speedy-utmost, Meg, 205
 And win the key-stane<sup>67</sup> o' the brig;
 There, at them thou thy tail may toss,
 A running stream they darena cross!
 But ere the key-stane she could make,
 The fiend a tail<sup>68</sup> she had to shake! 210
 For Nannie, far before the rest,
 Hard upon noble Maggie prest,
- <sup>29</sup> The personification of barley, or malt, liquor. Cf. Burns' poem John Barleycorn.
<sup>30</sup> Twopenny ale. <sup>31</sup> Whiskey. <sup>32</sup> Ale so frothed.
<sup>33</sup> A small Scotch coin. <sup>34</sup> Bright, new, = bran-new.
<sup>35</sup> Window-ledge, or seat. <sup>36</sup> Shaggy cur.
<sup>37</sup> Made them scream, or sound shrilly.
<sup>38</sup> Rattle, tremble. <sup>39</sup> Magic. <sup>40</sup> Mouth.
<sup>41</sup> Joined hands. <sup>42</sup> Cast off her old clothes.
<sup>43</sup> Tripped. <sup>44</sup> Shirt. <sup>45</sup> Young girls.
<sup>46</sup> Greasy flannel. <sup>47</sup> i. e., fine linen.
<sup>48</sup> Hips. <sup>49</sup> Lasses.
<sup>50</sup> Perhaps = wrinkled, withered.
<sup>51</sup> Staff, a witch's stick.
<sup>52</sup> Barley.
<sup>53</sup> Paisley yarn, i. e., a kind of coarse linen. Paisley is noted for its manufacture of linen, shawls, etc.
<sup>54</sup> Proud of it. <sup>55</sup> Bought. <sup>56</sup> Hitched.
<sup>57</sup> Then. <sup>58</sup> Lost. <sup>59</sup> Hive.
<sup>60</sup> Fussy, restlessness.
<sup>61</sup> Pussy =, here, hare, or rabbit.
<sup>62</sup> Ghostly, or unearthly, screech. <sup>63</sup> Deserts.
<sup>64</sup> i. e., the middle of the bridge. This was the point of safety, since the pursuing spirits could not pass beyond the middle of the running stream beneath.
<sup>65</sup> i. e., "The devil a bit of a tail." (Fiend = fiend, devil).

And flew at Tam wi' furious ettle;<sup>60</sup>
 But little wist she Maggie's mettle!
 Ae spring brought off her master hale, 215
 But left behind her ain gray tail:
 The carling clautht<sup>70</sup> her by the rump,
 And left poor Maggie scarce a stump.

Now, wha this tale o' truth shall read,
 Ilk man, and mother's son, take heed: 220
 Whene'er to Drink you are inclin'd,
 Or Cutty-sarks rin in your mind,
 Think ye may buy the joys o'er dear;
 Remember Tam o' Shanter's mare.

AFTON WATER

(1791)

Flow gently, sweet Afton, among thy green braes,<sup>1</sup>
 Flow gently, I'll sing thee a song in thy praise;
 My Mary's asleep by thy murmuring stream—
 Flow gently, sweet Afton, disturb not her dream.

Thou stock-dove, whose echo resounds through the glen, 5
 Ye wild whistling blackbirds in yon thorny den, Thou green-crested lapwing, thy screaming for-
 bear—
 I charge you disturb not my slumbering fair.

How lofty, sweet Afton, thy neighbouring hills,
 Far mark'd with the courses of clear winding rills; 10

There daily I wander as noon rises high,
 My flocks and my Mary's sweet cot in my eye.

How pleasant thy banks and green valleys
 below,

Where wild in the woodlands the primroses
 blow;

There, oft as mild evening weeps over the lea, 15
 The sweet-scented birk<sup>2</sup> shades my Mary and
 me.

Thy crystal stream, Afton, how lovely it glides,
 And winds by the cot where my Mary resides;
 How wanton thy waters her snowy feet lave,
 As gathering sweet flowerets she stems thy clear wave. 20

Flow gently, sweet Afton, among thy green
 braes,

Flow gently, sweet river, the theme of my lays:
 My Mary's asleep by thy murmuring stream—
 Flow gently, sweet Afton, disturb not her dream!

HIGHLAND MARY

(1792)

Ye banks and braes and streams around
 The castle o' Montgomery!
 Green be your woods, and fair your flowers,
 Your waters never drumlie:<sup>1</sup>

<sup>60</sup> Intent.<sup>1</sup> Banks.<sup>1</sup> Muddy.<sup>70</sup> Clutched.<sup>2</sup> Birch.

There Simmer first unfold her robes, 5
 And there the longest tarry;
 For there I took the last Farewell
 O' my sweet Highland Mary.

How sweetly bloom'd the gay, green birk,<sup>2</sup>
 How rich the hawthorn's blossom, 10
 As underneath their fragrant shade,
 I clasp'd her to my bosom!
 The golden Hours on angel wings,
 Flew o'er me and my Dearie;
 For dear to me, as light and life, 15
 Was my sweet Highland Mary.

Wi' mony a vow, and lock'd embrace,
 Our parting was fu' tender;
 And, pledging aft to meet again,
 We tore ourselves asunder; 20
 But oh! fell Death's untimely frost,
 That nipt my Flower sae early!
 Now green's the sod, and cauld's the clay
 That wraps my Highland Mary!

O pale, pale now, those rosy lips, 25
 I aft hae kiss'd sae fondly!
 And clos'd for aye, the sparkling glance
 That dwelt on me sae kindly!
 And mouldering now in silent dust,
 That heart that lo'ed me dearly! 30
 But still within my bosom's core
 Shall live my Highland Mary.

BRUCE'S ADDRESS TO HIS ARMY AT BANNOCKBURN

(1793)

Scots, wha hae wi' WALLACE bled,
 Scots, wham BRUCE has often led;
 Welcome to your gory bed,
 Or to Victorie!

Now's the day, and now's the hour; 5
 See the front o' battle lour;
 See approach proud EDWARD's power—
 Chains and Slaverie!

Wha will be a traitor knave?
 Wha can fill a coward's grave? 10
 Wha sae base as be a slave?
 Let him turn and flee!

Wha, for Scotland's King and Law,
 Freedom's sword will strongly draw,
 FREEMAN stand, or FREEMAN fa', 15
 Let him on wi' me!

By Oppression's woes and pains!
 By your Sons in servile chains!
 We will drain our dearest veins,
 But they shall be free! 20

Lay the proud Usurpers low!
 Tyrants fall in every foe!
 LIBERTY's in every blow!—

Let us Do or Die!

<sup>2</sup> Birch.

A RED, RED ROSE

(1793)

O my Luve's like a red, red rose,
That's newly sprung in June:
O my Luve's like the melody
That's sweetly play'd in tune.

As fair art thou, my bonie lass, 5
So deep in luve am I;
And I will luve thee still, my dear,
Till a' the seas gang dry.

Till a' the seas gang dry, my dear,
And the rocks melt wi' the sun: 10
I will luve thee still, my dear,
While the sands o' life shall run.

And fare-thee-weel, my only Luve!
And fare-thee-weel awhile! 15
And I will come again, my Luve,
Though it were ten thousand mile!

CONTENTED WI' LITTLE AND CANTIE
WI' MAIR

(1794)

Contented wi' little, and cantie<sup>1</sup> wi' mair,
Whene'er I forgather wi' Sorrow and Care,
I gie them a skelp<sup>2</sup> as they're creeping alang, Wi' a cog o' gude swats<sup>3</sup> and an auld Scottish sang.

Chorus—Contented wi' little, &c.

I whiles claw the elbow o' troublesome thought;
But Man is a soger,<sup>4</sup> and Life is a faught;<sup>5</sup> 7
My mirth and gude humour are coin in my pouch,
And my Freedom's my Lairdship nae monarch dare touch.

Contented wi' little, &amp;c. 10

A towmond<sup>6</sup> o' trouble, should that be my fa',<sup>7</sup>
A night o' gude fellowship sowthers<sup>8</sup> it a':
When at the blythe end o' our journey at last,
Wha the deil ever thinks o' the road he has
past?

Contented wi' little, &amp;c. 15

Blind Chance, let her snapper and stoyte<sup>9</sup> on her way;
Be 't to me, be 't frae me, e'en let the jade gae:
Come Ease, or come Travail, come Pleasure or Pain,
My warst word is: "Welcome, and welcome
again!"

Contented wi' little, &amp;c. 20

IS THERE, FOR HONEST POVERTY

(1795)

(Tune—"For a' that")

Is there for honest Poverty,
That hangs his head, an' a' that;
The coward slave—we pass him by,
We dare be poor for a' that!

<sup>1</sup> Merry, cheerful. <sup>2</sup> Slap. <sup>3</sup> Bowl of good ale.<sup>4</sup> Soldier.<sup>5</sup> Fight.<sup>6</sup> A twelvemonth.<sup>7</sup> Fate.<sup>8</sup> Soldiers.<sup>9</sup> Stagger and stumble.

For a' that, an' a' that, 5
Our toils obscure an' a' that,
The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
The Man's the gowd for a' that.

What though on hamely fare we dine,
Wear hodden grey,<sup>1</sup> an' a' that; 10
Gie fools their silks, and knaves their wine,
A Man's a Man for a' that:
For a' that, an' a' that,
Their tinsel show, and a' that
The honest man, tho' e'er sae poor, 15
Is king o' men for a' that.

Ye see you birkie<sup>2</sup> ca'd a lord,
Wha struts, an' stares an' a' that;
Tho' hundreds worship at his word,
He's but a coof<sup>3</sup> for a' that: 20
For a' that, and a' that,
His ribband, star, an' a' that:
The man o' independent mind,
He looks an' laughs at a' that.

A prince can mak a belted knight, 25
A marquis, duke, an' a' that;
But an honest man's aboon his might,
Guid faith, he maunna fa' that!
For a' that, an' a' that,
Their dignities an' a' that; 30
The pith o' sense, an' pride o' worth,
Are higher rank than a' that.

Then let us pray that come it may,
(As come it will for a' that),
That Sense and Worth, o'er a' the earth, 35
May bear the gree, an' a' that.
For a' that, an' a' that,
It's coming yet for a' that,
That Man to Man, the world o'er,
Shall brothers be for a' that. 40

O, WERT THOU IN THE CAULD BLAST

(1796)

O wert thou in the cauld blast,
On yonder lea, on yonder lea,
My plaidie to the angry air,
I'd shelter thee, I'd shelter thee;
Or did Misfortune's bitter storms 5
Around thee blaw, around thee blaw,
Thy bield<sup>1</sup> should be my bosom,
To share it a', to share it a'.

Or were I in the wildest waste,
Sae bleak and bare, sae bleak and bare, 10
The desert were a Paradise,
If thou wert there, if thou wert there;
Or were I monarch o' the globe,
Wi' thee to reign, wi' thee to reign,
The brightest jewel in my Crown 15
Wad be my Queen, wad be my Queen.

<sup>1</sup> Hodden grey, a coarse woolen stuff, which (being undyed) retained the natural gray color of the wool.<sup>2</sup> A conceited, self-assertive man; a "young sport."<sup>3</sup> Lout, fool.<sup>4</sup> Try.<sup>5</sup> Shelter.

VII. THE AGE OF WORDSWORTH AND SCOTT

c. 1784-c. 1837

William Wordsworth

1770-1850

LINES

COMPOSED A FEW MILES ABOVE TINTERN ABBEY,<sup>1</sup>
ON REVISITING THE BANKS OF THE WYE
DURING A TOUR (July 13, 1798)

Five years have past; five summers, with the length

Of five long winters! and again I hear
These waters, rolling from their mountain-
springs

With a soft inland murmur.—Once again
Do I behold these steep and lofty cliffs,

That on a wild secluded scene impress
Thoughts of more deep seclusion; and connect
The landscape with the quiet of the sky.

The day is come when I again repose
Here, under this dark sycamore, and view

These plots of cottage-ground, these orchard-tufts,

Which at this season, with their unripe fruits,
Are clad in one green hue, and lose themselves

'Mid groves and copses. Once again I see These hedge-rows, hardly hedge-rows, little lines

Of sportive wood run wild; these pastoral farms,
Green to the very door; and wreaths of smoke
Sent up, in silence, from among the trees!

With some uncertain notice, as might seem
Of vagrant dwellers in the houseless woods,

Or of some hermit's cave, where by his fire
The hermit sits alone.

These beauteous forms,
Through a long absence, have not been to me

As is a landscape to a blind man's eye:

But oft, in lonely rooms, and 'mid the din
Of towns and cities, I have owed to them,

In hours of weariness, sensations sweet,
Felt in the blood, and felt along the heart;

And passing even into my purer mind,

With tranquil restoration:—feelings too
Of unremembered pleasure: such, perhaps,

As have no slight or trivial influence
On that best portion of a good man's life,

His little, nameless, unremembered, acts
Of kindness and of love. Nor less, I trust,

To them I may have owed another gift,
Of aspect more sublime; that blessed mood,

<sup>1</sup>This poem was composed during a short excursion in the valley of the Wye, which Wordsworth made with his sister. He visited the ruins of Tintern Abbey, but the poem, we are told, was composed some miles from the historic ruin, and deals entirely with the beauties of the Wye valley, and apparently with some scenes especially associated with memories of the past.

In which the burthen of the mystery,
In which the heavy and the weary weight

Of all this unintelligible world,
Is lightened:—that serene and blessed mood,

In which the affections gently lead us on,—
Until, the breath of this corporeal frame

And even the motion of our human blood
Almost suspended, we are laid asleep

In body, and become a living soul;
While with an eye made quiet by the power

Of harmony, and the deep power of joy,
We see into the life of things.

If this
Be but a vain belief, yet, oh! how oft—
In darkness and amid the many shapes

Of joyless daylight; when the fretful stir
Unprofitable, and the fever of the world,

Have hung upon the beatings of my heart—
How oft, in spirit, have I turned to thee,

O sylvan Wye! Thou wanderer thro' the woods,

How often has my spirit turned to thee!

And now, with gleams of half-extinguished
thought,

With many recognitions dim and faint,
And somewhat of a sad perplexity,

The picture of the mind revives again:
While here I stand, not only with the sense

Of present pleasure, but with pleasing thoughts
That in this moment there is life and food

For future years. And so I dare to hope, Though changed, no doubt, from what I was when first

I came among these hills; when like a roe
I bounded o'er the mountains, by the sides

Of the deep rivers, and the lonely streams,
Wherever nature led: more like a man

Flying from something that he dreads than one Who sought the thing he loved. For Nature

then
(The coarser pleasures of my boyish days,
And their glad animal movements all gone by)

To me was all in all.—I cannot paint
What then I was. The sounding cataract

Haunted me like a passion: the tall rock,
The mountain, and the deep and gloomy wood,

Their colours and their forms, were then to me
An appetite; a feeling and a love,

That had no need of a remoter charm,
By thought supplied, nor any interest

Unborrowed from the eye.—That time is
past,

And all its aching joys are now no more,
And all its dizzy raptures. Not for this

Faint I, nor mourn nor murmur; other gifts
Have followed; for such loss, I would believe,

Abundant recompense. For I have learned 90
 To look on nature, not as in the hour
 Of thoughtless youth; but hearing oftentimes
 The still, sad music of humanity,
 Nor harsh nor grating, though of ample power
 To chasten and subdue. And I have felt 95
 A presence that disturbs me with the joy
 Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime
 Of something far more deeply interfused,
 Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
 And the round ocean and the living air, 100
 And the blue sky, and in the mind of man:
 A motion and a spirit, that impels
 All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
 And rolls through all things. Therefore am I still

A lover of the meadows and the woods, 105
 And mountains; and of all that we behold
 From this green earth; of all the mighty world
 Of eye, and ear,—both what they half create,
 And what perceive; well pleased to recognize
 In nature and the language of the sense, 110
 The anchor of my purest thoughts, the nurse,
 The guide, the guardian of my heart, and soul
 Of all my moral being.

Nor perchance,
 If I were not thus taught, should I the more 115
 Suffer my genial spirits to decay:
 For thou art with me here upon the banks
 Of this fair river; thou, my dearest Friend,
 My dear, dear Friend; and in thy voice I catch
 The language of my former heart, and read 120
 My former pleasures in the shooting lights
 Of thy wild eyes. Oh! yet a little while
 May I behold in thee what I was once,
 My dear, dear Sister! and this prayer I make,
 Knowing that Nature never did betray 125
 The heart that loved her; 'tis her privilege
 Through all the years of this our life, to lead
 From joy to joy: for she can so inform
 The mind that is within us, so impress
 With quietness and beauty, and so feed 130
 With lofty thoughts, that neither evil tongues,
 Rash judgments, nor the sneers of selfish men,
 Nor greetings where no kindness is, nor all
 The dreary intercourse of daily life,
 Shall e'er prevail against us, or disturb 135
 Our cheerful faith, that all which we behold
 Is full of blessings. Therefore let the moon Shine on thee in thy solitary walk;
 And let the misty mountain-winds be free
 To blow against thee: and, in after years,
 When these wild ecstasies shall be matured 140
 Into a sober pleasure; when thy mind
 Shall be a mansion for all lovely forms,
 Thy memory be as a dwelling-place
 For all sweet sounds and harmonies; oh! then,
 If solitude, or fear, or pain, or grief, 146
 Should be thy portion, with what healing
 thoughts

Of tender joy wilt thou remember me,
 And these my exhortations! Nor, perchance—
 If I should be where I no more can hear 150
 Thy voice, nor catch from thy wild eyes these gleams
 Of past existence—wilt thou then forget

That on the banks of this delightful stream
 We stood together; and that I, so long
 A worshipper of Nature, hither came 155
 Unwearied in that service: rather say
 With warmer love—oh! with far deeper zeal
 Of holier love. Nor will thou then forget,
 That after many wanderings, many years
 Of absence, these steep woods and lofty cliffs,
 And this green pastoral landscape, were to me
 More dear, both for themselves and for thy sake! 162

EXPOSTULATION AND REPLY

(1798)

"Why, William, on that old gray stone
 Thus for the length of half a day,
 Why, William, sit you thus alone,
 And dream your time away?"

"Where are your books?—that light bequeathed
 To Beings else forlorn and blind! 6
 Up! up! and drink the spirit breathed
 From dead men to their kind.

"You look round on your Mother Earth,
 As if she for no purpose bore you; 10
 As if you were her first-born birth,
 And none had lived before you!"

One morning thus, by Esthwaite lake,
 When life was sweet, I knew not why,
 To me my good friend Matthew spake, 15
 And thus I made reply:

"The eye—it cannot choose but see;
 We cannot bid the ear be still;
 Our bodies feel, where'er they be,
 Against or with our will. 20

"Nor less I deem that there are Powers
 Which of themselves our minds impress;
 That we can feed this mind of ours
 In a wise passiveness.

"Think you, 'mid all this mighty sum 25
 Of things forever speaking,
 That nothing of itself will come,
 But we must still be seeking?"

"—Then ask not wherefore, here, alone, 30
 Conversing as I may,
 I sit upon this old gray stone,
 And dream my time away."

THE TABLES TURNED

AN EVENING SCENE ON THE SAME SUBJECT

(1798)

Up! up! my Friend, and quit your books;
 Or surely you'll grow double:
 Up! up! my Friend, and clear your looks;
 Why all this toil and trouble?

The sun, above the mountain's head,
A freshening lustre mellow
Through all the long green fields has spread,
His first sweet evening yellow.

Books! 'tis a dull and endless strife:
Come, hear the woodland linnet,
How sweet his music! on my life,
There's more of wisdom in it.

And hark! how blithe the throstle sings!
He, too, is no mean preacher:
Come forth into the light of things,
Let Nature be your teacher.

She has a world of ready wealth,
Our minds and hearts to bless—
Spontaneous wisdom breathed by health,
Truth breathed by cheerfulness.

One impulse from a vernal wood
May teach you more of man,
Of moral evil and of good,
Than all the sages can.

Sweet is the lore which Nature brings;
Our meddling intellect
Mis-shapes the beauteous forms of things:—
We murder to dissect.

Enough of Science and of Art;
Close up those barren leaves;
Come forth, and bring with you a heart
That watches and receives.

THREE YEARS SHE GREW

(1799)

Three years she grew in sun and shower,
Then Nature said, "A lovelier flower
On earth was never sown;
This Child I to myself will take;
She shall be mine, and I will make A Lady of my own.

"Myself will to my darling be
Both law and impulse: and with me
The girl, in rock and plain,
In earth and heaven, in glade and bower, 10
Shall feel an overseeing power
To kindle or restrain.

"She shall be sportive as the fawn
That wild with glee across the lawn
Or up the mountain springs;
And hers shall be the breathing balm, 15
And hers the silence and the calm
Of mute insensate things.

"The floating clouds their state shall lend
To her; for her the willow bend;
Nor shall she fail to see
Even in the motions of the Storm,
Grace that shall mold the Maiden's form
By silent sympathy.

"The stars of midnight shall be dear 25
To her; and she shall lean her ear
In many a secret place
Where rivulets dance their wayward round,
And beauty born of murmuring sound
Shall pass into her face. 30

"And vital feelings of delight
Shall rear her form to stately height,
Her virgin bosom swell;
Such thoughts to Lucy I will give
While she and I together live 35
Here in this happy dell."

Thus Nature spake—The work was done—
How soon my Lucy's race was run!
She died, and left to me
This heath, this calm, and quiet scene; 40
The memory of what has been,
And never more will be.

SHE DWELT AMONG THE UNTRODDEN WAYS

(1799)

She dwelt among the untrodden ways
Beside the springs of Dove,
A Maid whom there were none to praise,
And very few to love:

A violet by a mossy stone
Half hidden from the eye! 5
—Fair as a star, when only one
Is shining in the sky.

She lived unknown, and few could know
When Lucy ceased to be;
But she is in her grave, and, oh,
The difference to me! 10

MICHAEL

A PASTORAL POEM

(1800)

If from the public way you turn your steps
Up the tumultuous brook of Green-head Ghyll,<sup>1</sup>
You will suppose that with an upright path
Your feet must struggle; in such bold ascent
The pastoral mountains front you, face to face. 5
But, courage! for around that boisterous brook
The mountains have all opened out themselves,
And made a hidden valley of their own.
No habitation can be seen; but they
Who journey thither find themselves alone 10
With a few sheep, with rocks and stones, and kites

That overhead are sailing in the sky.
It is in truth an utter solitude;
Nor should I have made mention of this Dell
But for one object which you might pass by, 15
Might see and notice not. Beside the brook
Appears a straggling heap of unhewn stones:
And to that simple object appertains

<sup>1</sup> Narrow valley or ravine.

A story unenriched with strange events,
 Yet not unfit, I deem, for the fireside, 20
 Or for the summer shade. It was the first
 Of those domestic tales that spake to me
 Of Shepherds, dwellers in the valleys, men
 Whom I already loved:—not verily
 For their own sakes, but for the fields and hills
 Where was their occupation and abode. 26
 And hence this Tale, while I was yet a Boy
 Careless of books, yet having felt the power
 Of Nature, by the gentle agency
 Of natural objects, led me on to feel 30
 For passions that were not my own, and think
 (At random and imperfectly indeed)
 On man, the heart of man, and human life.
 Therefore, although it be a history
 Homely and rude, I will relate the same 35
 For the delight of a few natural hearts;
 And, with yet fonder feeling, for the sake
 Of youthful Poets, who among these hills
 Will be my second self when I am gone.

Upon the forest-side in Grasmere Vale<sup>2</sup> 40
 There dwelt a Shepherd, Michael was his name;
 An old man, stout of heart, and strong of limb.
 His bodily frame had been from youth to age
 Of an unusual strength: his mind was keen,
 Intense, and frugal, apt for all affairs, 45
 And in his shepherd's calling he was prompt
 And watchful more than ordinary men.
 Hence had he learned the meaning of all winds,
 Of blasts of every tone; and, oftentimes,
 When others heeded not, he heard the South 50
 Make subterraneous music, like the noise
 Of bagpipers on distant Highland hills.
 The Shepherd, at such warning, of his flock
 Bethought him, and he to himself would say,
 "The winds are now devising work for me!" 55
 And, truly, at all times, the storm, that drives
 The traveller to a shelter, summoned him
 Up to the mountains: he had been alone
 Amid the heart of many thousand mists,
 That came to him, and left him, on the heights.
 So lived he till his eightieth year was past. 61
 And grossly that man errs, who should suppose That the green valleys, and the streams and rocks,
 Were things indifferent to the Shepherd's thoughts.
 Fields, where with cheerful spirits he had breathed 65
 The common air; hills, which with vigorous step
 He had so often climbed; which had impressed
 So many incidents upon his mind
 Of hardship, skill or courage, joy or fear;
 Which, like a book, preserved the memory 70
 Of the dumb animals whom he had saved,
 Had fed or sheltered, linking to such acts
 The certainty of honourable gain,
 Those fields, those hills—what could they less?
 had laid
 Strong hold on his affections, were to him 75
 A pleasurable feeling of blind love,

<sup>2</sup> The valley in which lie the lake and village of Grasmere where Wordsworth lived for eight years.

The pleasure which there is in life itself.
 His days had not been passed in singleness.
 His Helpmate was a comely matron, old—
 Though younger than himself full twenty years.
 She was a woman of a stirring life, 81
 Whose heart was in her house: two wheels she had
 Of antique form; this large, for spinning wool;
 That small, for flax; and if one wheel had rest,
 It was because the other was at work. 85
 The Pair had but one inmate in their house,
 An only Child, who had been born to them
 When Michael, telling o'er his years, began
 To deem that he was old,—in shepherd's phrase,
 With one foot in the grave. This only Son, 90
 With two brave sheep-dogs tried in many a storm,
 The one of an inestimable worth,
 Made all their household. I may truly say
 That they were as a proverb in the vale
 For endless industry. When day was gone, 95
 And from their occupations out of doors
 The Son and Father were come home, even
 then,
 Their labor did not cease; unless when all
 Turned to the cleanly supper-board, and there,
 Each with a mess of pottage and skimmed milk,
 Sat round the basket piled with oaten cakes, 101
 And their plain home-made cheese. Yet when the meal
 Was ended, Luke (for so the Son was named)
 And his old Father both betook themselves
 To such convenient work as might employ 105
 Their hands by the fire-side; perhaps to card
 Wool for the Housewife's spindle, or repair
 Some injury done to sickle, flail, or scythe,
 Or other implement of house or field.

Down from the ceiling, by the chimney's
 edge, 110
 That in our ancient uncouth country style
 With huge and black projection overbowed
 Large space beneath, as duly as the light
 Of day grew dim the Housewife hung a lamp;
 An aged utensil, which had performed 115
 Service beyond all others of its kind.
 Early at evening did it burn—and late,
 Surviving comrade of uncounted hours,
 Which, going by from year to year, had found,
 And left the couple neither gay perhaps 120
 Nor cheerful, yet with objects and with hopes,
 Living a life of eager industry.
 And now, when Luke had reached his eighteenth year,
 There by the light of this old lamp they sate,
 Father and Son, while far into the night 125
 The Housewife plied her own peculiar work,
 Making the cottage through the silent hours
 Murmur as with the sound of summer flies.
 This light was famous in its neighborhood,
 And was a public symbol of the life 130
 That thrifty Pair had lived. For, as it chanced,
 Their cottage on a plot of rising ground Stood single, with large prospect, north and south.

High into Easedale, up to Dunmail-Raise,
And westward to the village near the lake; 135
And from this constant light, so regular
And so far seen, the House itself, by all
Who dwelt within the limits of the vale,
Both old and young, was named THE EVENING
STAR.

Thus living on through such a length of
years, 140
The Shepherd, if he loved himself, must needs
Have loved his Helpmate; but to Michael's
heart

This son of his old age was yet more dear—
Less from instinctive tenderness, the same Fond spirit that blindly works in the blood of all— 145

Than that a child, more than all other gifts
That earth can offer to declining man, Brings hope with it, and forward-looking
thoughts,

And stirrings of inquietude, when they
By tendency of nature needs must fail. 150
Exceeding was the love he bare to him,
His heart and his heart's joy! For oftentimes
Old Michael, while he was a babe in arms,
Had done him female service, not alone
For pastime and delight, as is the use 155
Of fathers, but with patient mind enforced
To acts of tenderness; and he had rocked
His cradle, as with a woman's gentle hand.

And, in a later time, ere yet the boy
Had put on boy's attire, did Michael love, 160
Albeit of a stern unbending mind,
To have the Young one in his sight, when he Wrought in the field, or on his shepherd's stool
Sate with a fettered sheep before him stretched
Under the large old oak, that near his door 165 Stood single, and, from matchless depth of shade

Chosen for the Shearer's covert from the sun,
Thence in our rustic dialect was called
The CLIPPING TREE, a name which yet it bears.
There while they two were sitting in the shade, 170

With others round them, earnest all and blithe,
Would Michael exercise his heart with looks
Of fond correction and reproof bestowed
Upon the Child, if he disturbed the sheep
By catching at their legs, or with his shouts 175 Scared them, while they lay still beneath the shears.

And when by Heaven's good grace the boy grew up

A healthy Lad, and carried in his cheek
Two steady roses that were five years old;
Then Michael from a winter coppice cut 180
With his own hand a sapling, which he hooped
With iron, making it throughout in all
Due requisites a perfect shepherd's staff,
And gave it to the Boy; wherewith equipt
He as a watchman oftentimes was placed 185
At gate or gap, to stem or turn the flock;
And, to his office prematurely called,
There stood the urchin, as you will divine,
Something between a hindrance and a help;

And for this cause not always, I believe, 190
Receiving from his Father hire of praise;
Though naught was left undone which staff, or voice,
Or looks, or threatening gestures, could perform.

But soon, as Luke, full ten years old, could
stand
Against the mountain blasts, and to the heights,
Not fearing toil, nor length of weary ways, 196
He with his Father daily went, and they Were as companions, why should I relate
That objects which the Shepherd loved before
Were dearer now? that from the Boy there came 200
Feelings and emanations—things which were
Light to the sun and music to the wind:
And that the old Man's heart seemed born
again?

Thus in his Father's sight the Boy grew up;
And now, when he had reached his eighteenth year, 205
He was his comfort and his daily hope.

While in this sort the simple household lived
From day to day, to Michael's ear there came Distressful tidings. Long before the time
Of which I speak, the Shepherd had been bound
In surety for his brother's son, a man 211
Of an industrious life, and ample means;
But unforeseen misfortunes suddenly
Had prest upon him; and old Michael now
Was summoned to discharge the forfeiture, 215
A grievous penalty, but little less Than half his substance. This unlooked-for claim,

At the first hearing, for a moment took
More hope out of his life than he supposed
That any old man ever could have lost. 220
As soon as he had armed himself with strength
To look his trouble in the face, it seemed
The Shepherd's sole resource to sell at once
A portion of his patrimonial fields.
Such was his first resolve; he thought again, 225
And his heart failed him. "Isabel," said he,
Two evenings after he had heard the news,
"I have been toiling more than seventy years,
And in the open sunshine of God's love
Have we all lived; yet if these fields of ours 230
Should pass into a stranger's hand, I think
That I could not lie quiet in my grave.
Our lot is a hard lot; the sun himself
Has scarcely been more diligent than I;
And I have lived to be a fool at last 235
To my own family. An evil man
That was, and made an evil choice, if he
Were false to us; and if he were not false,
There are ten thousand to whom loss like this
Had been no sorrow. I forgive him;—but 240
'Twere better to be dumb than to talk thus.

"When I began, my purpose was to speak
Of remedies and of a cheerful hope.
Our Luke shall leave us, Isabel; the land

Shall not go from us, and it shall be free; 245
 He shall possess it free as is the wind
 That passes over it. We have, thou know'st,
 Another kinsman—he will be our friend
 In this distress. He is a prosperous man,
 Thriving in trade—and Luke to him shall go, 250
 And with his kinsman's help and his own thrift
 He quickly will repair this loss, and then
 He may return to us. If here he stay,
 What can be done? Where everyone is poor,
 What can be gained?" 255

At this the old Man paused,
 And Isabel sat silent, for her mind
 Was busy, looking back into past times.
 There's Richard Bateman, thought she to herself,

He was a parish-boy—at the church-door 260
 They made a gathering for him, shillings, pence
 And half pennies, wherewith the neighbors bought

A basket, which they filled with peddler's wares;
 And, with this basket on his arm, the lad
 Went up to London, found a master there, 265
 Who, out of many, chose the trusty boy
 To go and overlook his merchandise
 Beyond the seas; where he grew wondrous rich,
 And left estates and moneys to the poor,
 And, at his birth-place, built a chapel, floored
 With marble, which he sent from foreign lands. 271

These thoughts, and many others of like sort,
 Passed quickly through the mind of Isabel,
 And her face brightened. The old Man was glad,
 And thus resumed:—"Well, Isabel! this scheme
 These two days, has been meat and drink to
 me. 276

Far more than we have lost is left us yet.
 —We have enough—I wish indeed that I
 Were younger;—but this hope is a good hope.
 —Make ready Luke's best garments, of the best 280

Buy for him more, and let us send him forth
 To-morrow, or the next day, or to-night:
 If he could go, the boy should go to-night."
 Here Michael ceased, and to the fields went forth

With a light heart. The Housewife for five days 285

Was restless morn and night, and all day long
 Wrought on with her best fingers to prepare Things needful for the journey of her son.

But Isabel was glad when Sunday came
 To stop her in her work: for, when she lay 290
 By Michael's side, she through the last two nights

Heard him, how he was troubled in his sleep:
 And when they rose at morning she could see
 That all his hopes were gone. That day at noon
 She said to Luke, while they two by themselves
 Were sitting at the door, "Thou must not go:
 We have no other Child but thee to lose, 297
 None to remember—do not go away;
 For if thou leave thy Father, he will die."

The youth made answer with a jocund voice; 300
 And Isabel, when she had told her fears,
 Recovered heart. That evening her best fare

Did she bring forth, and all together sat
 Like happy people round a Christmas fire.

With daylight Isabel resumed her work; 305
 And all the ensuing week the house appeared
 As cheerful as a grove in Spring: at length
 The expected letter from their kinsman came,
 With kind assurances that he would do
 His utmost for the welfare of the Boy; 310
 To which, requests were added, that forthwith
 He might be sent to him. Ten times or more
 The letter was read over; Isabel
 Went forth to show it to the neighbors round;
 Nor was there at that time on English land 315
 A prouder heart than Luke's. When Isabel
 Had to her house returned, the old Man said,
 "He shall depart to-morrow." To this word
 The Housewife answered, talking much of things

Which, if at such short notice he should go, 320
 Would surely be forgotten. But at length
 She gave consent, and Michael was at ease.

Near the tumultuous brook of Green-head
 Ghyll,

In that deep valley, Michael had designed
 To build a Sheep-fold; and, before he heard 325
 The tidings of his melancholy loss,
 For this same purpose he had gathered up
 A heap of stones which by the streamlet's edge
 Lay thrown together, ready for the work.

With Luke that evening thitherward he walked:
 And soon as they had reached the place he stopped, 331

And thus the old Man spake to him: "My Son,
 To-morrow thou wilt leave me: with full heart
 I look upon thee, for thou art the same
 That wert a promise to me ere thy birth, 335
 And all thy life hast been my daily joy.

I will relate to thee some little part
 Of our two histories; 'twill do thee good
 When thou art from me, even if I should touch
 On things thou canst not know of.—After thou 340

First camest into the world—as oft befalls
 To new-born infants—thou didst sleep away
 Two days, and blessings from thy Father's tongue

Then fell upon thee. Day by day passed on,
 And still I loved thee with increasing love. 345

Never to living ear came sweeter sounds
 Than when I heard thee by our own fire-side
 First uttering, without words, a natural tune;
 While thou, a feeding babe, didst in thy joy
 Sing at thy mother's breast. Month followed month, 350

And in the open fields my life was passed
 And on the mountains; else I think that thou Hadst been brought up upon thy Father's knees.

But we were playmates, Luke: among these hills,

As well thou knowest, in us the old and young
 Have played together, nor with me didst thou
 Lack any pleasure which a boy can know." 357
 Luke had a manly heart; but at these words
 He sobbed aloud. The old Man grasped his hand,

And said, "Nay, do not take it so—I see 360
That these are things of which I need not speak.
—Even to the utmost I have been to thee
A kind and a good Father. And herein
I but repay a gift which I myself
Received at others' hands; for, though now old
Beyond the common life of man, I still 366
Remember them who loved me in my youth.
Both of them sleep together: here they lived,
As all their Forefathers had done; and when
At length their time was come, they were not loth 370

To give their bodies to the family mould.
I wished that thou shouldst live the life they lived:

But, 'tis a long time to look back, my Son,
And see so little gain from threescore years.
These fields were burthened when they came to me; 375

Till I was forty years of age, not more
Than half of my inheritance was mine.
I toiled and toiled; God blessed me in my work,
And till these three weeks past the land was
free.

—It looks as if it never could endure 380
Another Master. Heaven forgive me, Luke,
If I judge ill for thee, but it seems good
That thou should'st go."

At this the old man paused.
Then, pointing to the stones near which they stood, 385

Thus, after a short silence, he resumed:
"This was a work for us; and now, my Son,
It is a work for me. But, lay one stone—
Here, lay it for me, Luke, with thine own hands.
Nay, Boy, be of good hope;—we both may live
To see a better day. At eighty-four 391
I am strong and hale;—Do thou thy part;
I will do mine.—I will begin again
With many tasks that were resigned to thee:
Up to the heights, and in among the storms, 395
Will I without thee go again, and do
All works which I was wont to do alone,
Before I knew thy face.—Heaven bless thee,
Boy!

Thy heart these two weeks has been beating
fast

With many hopes; it should be so—yes—yes—
I knew that thou couldst never have a wish 401
To leave me, Luke: thou hast been bound to me
Only by links of love: When thou art gone,
What will be left to us!—But, I forget
My purposes. Lay now the corner-stone, 405
As I requested; and hereafter, Luke,
When thou art gone away, should evil men
Be thy companions, think of me, my Son,
And of this moment: hither turn thy thoughts,
And God will strengthen thee: amid all fear 410
And all temptation, Luke, I pray that thou
Mayst bear in mind the life thy Fathers lived,
Who, being innocent, did for that cause
Bestir them in good deeds. Now, fare thee well—

When thou return'st, thou in this place wilt
see 415

A work which is not here: a covenant

'Twill be between us; but, whatever fate
Befall thee, I shall love thee to the last,
And bear thy memory with me to the grave."

The Shepherd ended here; and Luke stooped
down, 420

And, as his Father had requested, laid
The first stone of the Sheep-fold. At the sight
The old Man's grief broke from him; to his
heart

He pressed his Son, he kissed him and wept;
And to the house together they returned. 425

—Hushed was that House in peace, or seeming peace,

Ere the night fell:—with morrow's dawn the Boy

Began his journey, and when he had reached
The public way, he put on a bold face;
And all the neighbors, as he passed their doors,
Came forth with wishes and with farewell prayers, 431

That followed him till he was out of sight.

A good report did from their Kinsman come,
Of Luke and his well-doing: and the Boy
Wrote loving letters, full of wondrous news, 435
Which, as the Housewife phrased it, were throughout

"The prettiest letters that were ever seen."
Both parents read them with rejoicing hearts.
So, many months passed on; and once again
The Shepherd went about his daily work 440
With confident and cheerful thoughts; and now
Sometimes when he could find a leisure hour
He to that valley took his way, and there Wrought at the Sheep-fold. Meantime Luke began

To slacken in his duty; and, at length, 445
He in the dissolute city gave himself
To evil courses: ignominy and shame
Fell on him, so that he was driven at last
To seek a hiding-place beyond the seas.

There is a comfort in the strength of love, 450
'Twill make a thing endurable, which else
Would overset the brain, or break the heart:
I have conversed with more than one who well
Remember the old Man, and what he was
Years after he had heard this heavy news. 455
His bodily frame had been from youth to age
Of an unusual strength. Among the rocks
He went, and still looked up to sun and cloud,
And listened to the wind; and, as before,
Performed all kinds of labor for his sheep, 460
And for the land, his small inheritance.
And to that hollow dell from time to time
Did he repair, to build the Fold of which
His flock had need. 'Tis not forgotten yet
The pity which was then in every heart 465
For the old Man—and 'tis believed by all
That many and many a day he thither went,
And never lifted up a single stone.

There, by the Sheep-fold, sometimes was he
seen,

Sitting alone, or with his faithful Dog, 470
Then old, beside him, lying at his feet.

The length of full seven years, from time to
time,

He at the building of this Sheep-fold wrought,
 And left the work unfinished when he died.
 Three years, or little more, did Isabel 475
 Survive her husband: at her death the estate
 Was sold, and went into a stranger's hand.
 The Cottage which was named the EVENING

STAR

Is gone—the plowshare has been through the ground
 On which it stood; great changes have been wrought 480
 In all the neighborhood:—yet the oak is left
 That grew beside their door; and the remains
 Of the unfinished Sheep-fold may be seen
 Beside the boisterous brook of Green-head
 Ghyll.

MY HEART LEAPS UP

(From Poems, 1807)

My heart leaps up when I behold
 A rainbow in the sky:
 So was it when my life began;
 So is it now I am a man;
 So be it when I shall grow old, 5
 Or let me die!
 The Child is father of the Man;
 And I could wish my days to be Bound each to each by natural piety.

THE SOLITARY REAPER

(From Poems, 1807)

Behold her, single in the field,
 Yon solitary Highland Lass!
 Reaping and singing by herself;
 Stop here, or gently pass!
 Alone she cuts and binds the grain, 5
 And sings a melancholy strain;
 O, listen! for the Vale profound
 Is overflowing with the sound.

No nightingale did ever chaunt
 More welcome notes to weary bands 10
 Of travellers in some shady haunt,
 Among Arabian sands:
 A voice so thrilling ne'er was heard
 In spring-time from the cuckoo-bird,
 Breaking the silence of the seas
 Among the farthest Hebrides. 15

Will no one tell me what she sings!—
 Perhaps the plaintive numbers flow
 For old, unhappy, far-off things,
 And battles long ago: 20

Or is it some more humble lay,
 Familiar matter of to-day?
 Some natural sorrow, loss, or pain,
 That has been, and may be again?

Whate'er the theme, the Maiden sang 25
 As if her song could have no ending;
 I saw her singing at her work,
 And o'er the sickle bending;—

I listened, motionless and still;
 And, as I mounted up the hill, 30
 The music in my heart I bore,
 Long after it was heard no more.

ODE

INTIMATIONS OF IMMORTALITY FROM RECOLLEC-TIONS OF EARLY CHILDHOOD

(1803–1806)

I

There was a time when meadow, grove, and
 stream,
 The earth, and every common sight,
 To me did seem
 Appareled in celestial light,
 The glory and the freshness of a dream. 5
 It is not now as it hath been of yore;—
 Turn wheresoe'er I may,
 By night or day,
 The things which I have seen I now can see no
 more.

II

The Rainbow comes and goes, 10
 And lovely is the Rose,
 The Moon doth with delight
 Look round her when the heavens are bare,
 Waters on a starry night
 Are beautiful and fair; 15
 The sunshine is a glorious birth;
 But yet I know, where'er I go,
 That there hath passed away a glory from the earth.

III

Now, while the birds thus sing a joyous song,
 And while the young lambs bound 20
 As to the tabor's sound,
 To me alone there came a thought of grief:
 A timely utterance gave that thought relief,
 And I again am strong:
 The cataracts blow their trumpets from the steep; 25
 No more shall grief of mine the season wrong;
 I hear the Echoes through the mountains
 throng,
 The Winds come to me from the fields of sleep,<sup>1</sup>
 And all the earth is gay;
 Land and sea 30
 Give themselves up to jollity,
 And with the heart of May Doth every Beast keep holiday;—
 Thou Child of Joy,
 Shout round me, let me hear thy shouts, thou happy Shepherd-boy! 35

IV

Ye blessèd Creatures, I have heard the call
 Ye to each other make; I see
 The heavens laugh with you in your jubilee;

<sup>1</sup> The poet seems to mean simply the quiet, peaceful fields of the more remote country districts.

My heart is at your festival,
 My head hath its coronal, 40
 The fulness of your bliss, I feel—I feel it all,
 O evil day! if I were sullen
 While Earth herself is adorning,
 This sweet May-morning,
 And the Children are culling 45
 On every side,
 In a thousand valleys far and wide,
 Fresh flowers; while the sun shines warm,
 And the Babe leaps up on his Mother's arm:—
 I hear, I hear, with joy I hear! 50
 —But there's a Tree, of many, one,
 A single Field which I have looked upon,
 Both of them speak of something that is gone:
 The Pansy at my feet
 Doth the same tale repeat: 55
 Whither is fled the visionary gleam?
 Where is it now, the glory and the dream?

V

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting:
 The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star,
 Hath had elsewhere its setting, 60
 And cometh from afar:
 Not in entire forgetfulness,
 And not in utter nakedness,
 But trailing clouds of glory do we come
 From God, who is our home: 65
 Heaven lies about us in our infancy!
 Shades of the prison-house begin to close
 Upon the growing Boy,
 But He beholds the light, and whence it flows,
 He sees it in his joy; 70
 The Youth, who daily farthest from the east
 Must travel, still is Nature's Priest,
 And by the vision splendid
 Is on his way attended;
 At length the Man perceives it die away, 75
 And fade into the light of common day.

VI

Earth fills her lap with pleasures of her own;
 Yearnings she hath in her own natural kind,
 And, even with something of a Mother's mind,
 And no unworthy aim, 80
 The homely Nurse doth all she can
 To make her Foster-child, her Inmate Man,
 Forget the glories he hath known,
 And that imperial palace whence he came.

VII

Behold the Child among his new-born blisses, 85
 A six years' Darling of a pigmy size!
 See, where 'mid work of his own hand he lies,
 Fretted by sallies of his mother's kisses,
 With light upon him from his father's eyes!
 See, at his feet, some little plan or chart, 90
 Some fragment from his dream of human life,
 Shaped by himself with newly-learned art;
 A wedding or a festival,
 A mourning or a funeral;
 And this hath now his heart, 95
 And unto this he frames his song:
 And unto this he frames his song:
 Then will he fit his tongue

To dialogues of business, love, or strife;
 But it will not be long
 Ere this be thrown aside, 100
 And with new joy and pride
 The little Actor cons another part;
 Filling from time to time his "humorous stage"<sup>2</sup>
 With all the Persons, down to palsied Age,
 That Life brings with her in her equipage; 105
 As if his whole vocation
 Were endless imitation.

VIII

Thou, whose exterior semblance doth belie
 Thy Soul's immensity;
 Thou best Philosopher, who yet dost keep 110
 Thy heritage, thou Eye among the blind,
 That, deaf and silent, read'st the eternal deep,
 Haunted forever by the eternal mind,—
 Mighty Prophet! Seer blest!
 On whom those truths do rest, 115
 Which we are toiling all our lives to find,
 In darkness lost, the darkness of the grave;
 Thou, over whom thy Immortality
 Broods like the Day, a Master o'er a Slave,
 A Presence which is not to be put by; 120
 Thou little Child, yet glorious in the might
 Of heaven-born freedom on thy being's height,
 Why with such earnest pains dost thou provoke
 The years to bring the inevitable yoke,
 Thus blindly with thy blessedness at strife? 125
 Full soon thy Soul shall have her earthly freight,
 And custom lie upon thee with a weight,
 Heavy as frost, and deep almost as life!

IX

O joy! that in our embers
 Is something that doth live, 130
 That nature yet remembers
 What was so fugitive!
 The thought of our past years in me doth breed
 Perpetual benediction: not indeed
 For that which is most worthy to be blest; 135
 Delight and liberty, the simple creed
 Of Childhood, whether busy or at rest,
 With new-fledged hope still fluttering in his breast:—
 Not for these I raise
 The song of thanks and praise; 140
 But for those obstinate questionings
 Of sense and outward things,
 Fallings from us, vanishings;<sup>3</sup>
 Blank misgivings of a Creature
 Moving about in worlds not realized, 145
 High instincts before which our mortal Nature
 Did tremble like a guilty thing surprised:

<sup>2</sup> The stage on which men and women are exhibited in various moods and whims. The quotation is from Daniel's Musophilus.

<sup>3</sup> Wordsworth tells us that at times the external world became vague and unreal to him, and adds: "Many times while going to school have I grasped at a wall or tree to recall myself from this abyss of idealism to the reality." This questioning of the reality of the world, this occasional feeling that things of the senses are falling from us, vanishing, suggests to Wordsworth the immortality of the soul; and it is for these experiences that he is chiefly thankful.

But for those first affections,
 Those shadowy recollections,
 Which, be they what they may, 150
 Are yet the fountain light of all our day,
 Are yet a master light of all our seeing;
 Uphold us, cherish, and have power to make
 Our noisy years seem moments in the being
 Of the eternal Silence: truths that wake, 155
 To perish never;
 Which neither listlessness, nor mad endeavor,
 Nor Man nor Boy,
 Nor all that is at enmity with joy,
 Can utterly abolish or destroy! 160
 Hence in a season of calm weather
 Though inland far we be,
 Our Souls have sight of that immortal sea
 Which brought us hither,
 Can in a moment travel thither, 165
 And see the Children sport upon the shore,
 And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.

X

Then sing, ye Birds, sing, sing a joyous song!
 And let the young Lambs bound
 As to the tabor's sound! 170
 We in thought will join your throng,
 Ye that pipe and ye that play,
 Ye that through your hearts to-day
 Feel the gladness of the May!
 What though the radiance which was once so bright 175
 Be now forever taken from my sight,
 Though nothing can bring back the hour
 Of splendour in the grass, of glory in the flower;
 We will grieve not, rather find
 Strength in what remains behind; 180
 In the primal sympathy
 Which having been must ever be;
 In the soothing thoughts that spring
 Out of human suffering;
 In the faith that looks through death 185
 In years that bring the philosophic mind.

XI

And O, ye Fountains, Meadows, Hills and Groves,
 Forebode not any severing of our loves!
 Yet in my heart of hearts I feel your might;
 I only have relinquished one delight 190
 To live beneath your more habitual sway.
 I love the Brooks which down their channels
 fret,
 Even more than when I tripped lightly as they;
 The innocent brightness of a new-born Day
 Is lovely yet; 195
 The Clouds that gather round the setting sun
 Do take a sober colouring from an eye
 That hath kept watch o'er man's mortality;
 Another race hath been, and other palms are won.
 Thanks to the human heart by which we live, 200
 Thanks to its tenderness, its joys, and fears,
 To me the meanest flower that blows can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

"I WANDERED LONELY AS A CLOUD"

(From Poems, 1807)

I wandered lonely as a cloud
 That floats on high o'er vales and hills,
 When all at once I saw a crowd,
 A host, of golden daffodils;
 Beside the lake, beneath the trees, 5
 Fluttering and dancing in the breeze.
 Continuous as the stars that shine
 And twinkle on the milky way,
 They stretched in never-ending line
 Along the margin of a bay: 10
 Ten thousand saw I at a glance,
 Tossing their heads in sprightly dance.
 The waves beside them danced; but they
 Out-did the sparkling waves in glee:
 A poet could not but be gay, 15
 In such a jocund company:
 I gazed—and gazed—but little thought
 What wealth the show to me had brought:

For oft, when on my couch I lie
 In vacant or in pensive mood, 20
 They flash upon that inward eye
 Which is the bliss of solitude:
 And then my heart with pleasure fills,
 And dances with the daffodils.

"SHE WAS A PHANTOM OF DELIGHT"

(From Poems, 1807)

She was a Phantom of delight
 When first she gleamed upon my sight;
 A lovely Apparition, sent
 To be a moment's ornament; 5
 Her eyes are stars of Twilight fair;
 Like Twilight's, too, her dusky hair;
 But all things else about her drawn
 From May-time and the cheerful Dawn;
 A dancing Shape, an Image gay,
 To haunt, to startle, and way-lay. 10

I saw her upon nearer view,
 A Spirit, yet a Woman too!
 Her household motions light and free,
 And steps of virgin-liberty;

A countenance in which did meet 15
 Sweet records, promises as sweet;
 A Creature not too bright or good
 For human nature's daily food;
 For transient sorrows, simple wiles,
 Praise, blame, love, kisses, tears, and smiles. 20

And now I see with eyes serene
 The very pulse of the machine;<sup>1</sup>
 A Being breathing thoughtful breath,
 A traveller between life and death;
 The reason firm, the temperate will, 25
 Endurance, foresight, strength, and skill;

<sup>1</sup> i. e., the vital impulse of the whole organism. Hamlet speaks of the body as a machine (Act II. ii. 124), and to associate the word too exclusively with a mechanical contrivance (as we are apt to do), spoils the poetry of the passage.

A perfect Woman, nobly planned,
To warn, to comfort, and command;
And yet a Spirit still, and bright
With something of an angel light.

30

ODE TO DUTY

(From Poems, 1807)

Stern Daughter of the Voice of God!
O Duty! if that name thou love
Who art a light to guide, a rod
To check the erring, and reprove;
Thou, who art victory and law
When empty terrors overawe;
From vain temptations dost set free;
And calm'st the weary strife of frail humanity!

5

There are who ask not if thine eye
Be on them; who, in love and truth,
Where no misgiving is, rely
Upon the genial sense of youth:
Glad Hearts! without reproach or blot;
Who do thy work, and know it not.
Long may the kindly impulse last!
But thou, if they should totter, teach them to stand fast!

10

15

Serene will be our days and bright,
And happy will our nature be,
When love is an unerring light,
And joy its own security.
And they a blissful course may hold
Even now, who, not unwisely bold,
Live in the spirit of this creed;
Yet seek thy firm support according to their need.

20

I, loving freedom, and untried;
No sport of every random gust,
Yet being to myself a guide,
Too blindly have reposed my trust:
And oft, when in my heart was heard
Thy timely mandate, I deferred
The task, in smoother walks to stray;
But thee I now would serve more strictly, if I may.

25

30

Through no disturbance of my soul,
Or strong compunction in me wrought,
I supplicate for thy control;
But in the quietness of thought:
Me this unchartered freedom tires;
I feel the weight of chance-desires:
My hopes no more must change their name,
I long for a repose that ever is the same.

35

40

Stern Lawgiver! yet thou dost wear
The Godhead's most benignant grace;
Nor know we anything so fair
As is the smile upon thy face:
Flowers laugh before thee on their beds
And fragrance in thy footing treads;
Thou dost preserve the stars from wrong;
And the most ancient heavens, through Thee,
are fresh and strong.

45

To humbler functions, awful Power!
I call thee: I myself commend
Unto thy guidance from this hour;
Oh, let my weakness have an end!
Give unto me, made lowly wise,
The spirit of self-sacrifice;
The confidence of reason give;
And in the light of truth thy Bondman let me live!

50

55

RESOLUTION AND INDEPENDENCE

(From Poems, 1807)

I

There was a roaring in the wind all night;
The rain came heavily and fell in floods;
But now the sun is rising calm and bright;
The birds are singing in the distant woods;
Over his own sweet voice the Stock-dove
broods;
The Jay makes answer as the Magpie chatters;
And all the air is filled with pleasant noise of waters.

5

II

All things that love the sun are out of doors;
The sky rejoices in the morning's birth;
The grass is bright with rain-drops;—on the moors
The hare is running races in her mirth;
And with her feet she from the plashy earth
Raises a mist, that, glittering in the sun,
Runs with her all the way, wherever she doth run.

10

III

I was a Traveller then upon the moor;
I saw the hare that raced about with joy;
I heard the woods and distant waters roar;
Or heard them not, as happy as a boy:
The pleasant season did my heart employ:
My old remembrances went from me wholly;
And all the ways of men, so vain and melancholy.

15

20

IV

But, as it sometimes chanceth, from the might
Of joy in minds that can no further go,
As high as we have mounted in delight
In our dejection do we sink as low;
To me that morning did it happen so;
And fears and fancies thick upon me came;
Dim sadness—and blind thoughts, I knew not,
nor could name.

25

V

I heard the sky-lark warbling in the sky;
And I bethought me of the playful hare:
Even such a happy Child of earth am I;
Even as these blissful creatures do I fare;
Far from the world I walk, and from all care;
But there may come another day to me—
Solitude, pain of heart, distress, and poverty.

30

35

VI

My whole life I have lived in pleasant thought,
 As if life's business were a summer mood;
 As if all needful things would come unsought
 To genial faith, still rich in genial good;
 But how can He expect that others should 40
 Build for him, sow for him, and at his call Love him, who for himself will take no heed at all?

VII

I thought of Chatterton,<sup>1</sup> the marvellous Boy,
 The sleepless Soul that perished in his pride;
 Of Him<sup>2</sup> who walked in glory and in joy 45
 Following his plough, along the mountain-side:
 By our own spirits are we deified:
 We Poets in our youth begin in gladness;
 But thereof come in the end despondency and madness.

VIII

Now, whether it were by peculiar grace, 50
 A leading from above, a something given,
 Yet it befell, that, in this lonely place,
 When I with these untoward thoughts had
 striven,
 Beside a pool bare to the eye of heaven
 I saw a Man before me unawares: 55
 The oldest man he seemed that ever wore grey hairs.

IX

As a huge stone is sometimes seen to lie
 Couched on the bald top of an eminence;
 Wonder to all who do the same espy,
 By what means it could thither come, and whence; 60
 So that it seems a thing endued with sense:
 Like a sea-beast crawled forth, that on a shelf
 Of rock or sand reposes, there to sun itself;

X

Such seemed this Man, not all alive nor dead,
 Nor all asleep—in his extreme old age: 65
 His body was bent double, feet and head
 Coming together in life's pilgrimage;
 As if some dire constraint of pain, or rage
 Of sickness felt by him in times long past,
 A more than human weight upon his frame had cast. 70

XI

Himself he propped, limbs, body, and pale face,
 Upon a long grey staff of shaven wood:
 And, still as I drew near with gentle pace,
 Upon the margin of that moorish flood
 Motionless as a cloud the old Man stood, 75
 That heareth not the loud winds when they call;
 And moveth all together, if it move at all.

XII

At length, himself unsettling, he the pond
 Stirred with his staff, and fixedly did look Upon the muddy water, which he coned, 80
 As if he had been reading in a book:

<sup>1</sup> Thomas Chatterton, the poet, who committed suicide at the age of 13 (1770) to escape a slower death by starvation. V. p. 446, supra. <sup>2</sup> Burns.

And now a stranger's privilege I took;
 And, drawing to his side, to him did say,
 "This morning gives us promise of a glorious day."

XIII

A gentle answer did the old Man make, 85
 In courteous speech which forth he slowly drew:
 And him with further words I thus bespake,
 "What occupation do you there pursue?
 This is a lonesome place for one like you."
 Ere he replied, a flash of mild surprise 90
 Broke from the sable orbs of his yet-vivid eyes.

XIV

His words came feebly, from a feeble chest,
 But each in solemn order followed each,
 With something of a lofty utterance drest—
 Choice word and measured phrase, above the reach 95
 Of ordinary men; a stately speech;
 Such as grave Livers do in Scotland use, Religious men, who give to God and man their dues.

XV

He told, that to these waters he had come
 To gather leeches, being old and poor: 100
 Employment hazardous and wearisome!
 And he had many hardships to endure:
 From pond to pond he roamed, from moor to
 moor;
 Housing, with God's good help, by choice or chance;
 And in this way he gained an honest maintenance. 105

XVI

The old Man still stood talking by my side;
 But now his voice to me was like a stream Scarce heard; nor word from word could I divide;
 And the whole body of the man did seem
 Like one whom I had met with in a dream; 110
 Or like a man from some far region sent,
 To give me human strength, by apt admonish-ment.

XVII

My former thoughts returned: the fear that kills;
 And hope that is unwilling to be fed;
 Cold, pain, and labour, and all fleshly ills; 115
 And mighty Poets in their misery dead.
 —Perplexed, and longing to be comforted,
 My question eagerly did I renew,
 "How is it that you live, and what is it you do?"

XVIII

He with a smile did then his words repeat: 120
 And said, that, gathering leeches, far and wide
 He travelled; stirring thus about his feet
 The waters of the pools where they abide.
 "Once I could meet with them on every side;
 But they have dwindled long by slow decay; 125
 Yet still I persevere, and find them where I may."

XIX

While he was talking thus, the lonely place,
The old Man's shape, and speech—all troubled
me:

In my mind's eye I seemed to see him pace
About the weary moors continually, 130
Wandering about alone and silently.
While I these thoughts within myself pursued,
He, having made a pause, the same discourse renewed.

XX

And soon with this he other matter blended,
Cheerfully uttered, with demeanour kind, 135
But stately in the main; and when he ended,
I could have laughed myself to scorn to find
In that decrepit Man so firm a mind.
"God," said I, "be my help and stay secure;
I'll think of the Leech-gatherer on the lonely
moor!" 140

SONNETS

WRITTEN IN LONDON, SEPTEMBER,
1802

O Friend! I know not which way I must look
For comfort, being, as I am, oppress'd,
To think that now our life is only drest
For show; mean handy-work of craftsman,
cook, 5
Or groom!—We must run glittering like a brook 5

In the open sunshine, or we are unblest:
The wealthiest man among us is the best:
No grandeur now in nature or in book
Delights us. Rapine, avarice, expense,
This is idolatry: and these we adore: 10
Plain living and high thinking are no more:
The homely beauty of the good old cause
Is gone; our peace, our fearful innocence,
And pure religion breathing household laws.

LONDON, 1802

Milton! thou shouldst be living at this hour:
England hath need of thee: she is a fen
Of stagnant waters: altar, sword, and pen,
Fireside, the heroic wealth of hall and bower,
Have forfeited their ancient English dower 5
Of inward happiness. We are selfish men;
Oh! raise us up, return to us again;
And give us manners, virtue, freedom, power.
Thy soul was like a Star, and dwelt apart:
Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the
sea: 10
Pure as the naked heavens, majestic, free,
So didst thou travel on life's common way,
In cheerful godliness; and yet thy heart
The lowliest duties on herself did lay.

"WHEN I HAVE BORNE IN MEMORY"
(1802)

When I have borne in memory what has tamed Great Nations, how ennobling thoughts depart
When men change swords for ledgers, and desert

The student's bower for gold, some fears unnamed

I had, my Country!—am I to be blamed? 5
Now, when I think of Thee, and what Thou art,
Verily, in the bottom of my heart,
Of those unfilial fears I am ashamed,
For dearly must we prize thee; we who find
In thee a bulwark for the cause of men; 10
And I by my affection was beguiled:
What wonder if a Poet now and then,
Among the many movements of his mind,
Felt for thee as a lover or a child!

COMPOSED UPON WESTMINSTER
BRIDGE,

SEPTEMBER 3, 1802

Earth has not anything to show more fair:
Dull would he be of soul who could pass by
A sight so touching in its majesty:
This City now doth, like a garment, wear
The beauty of the morning; silent, bare, 5
Ships, towers, domes, theatres, and temples lie
Open unto the fields, and to the sky;
All bright and glittering in the smokeless air.
Never did sun more beautifully steep
In his first splendour valley, rock, or hill; 10
Ne'er saw I, never felt, a calm so deep!
The river glideth at his own sweet will:
Dear God! the very houses seem asleep;
And all that mighty heart is lying still!

COMPOSED UPON THE BEACH NEAR CALAIS

AUGUST, 1802

It is a beauteous evening, calm and free: A
The holy time is quiet as a Nun B
Breathless with adoration; the broad sun B
Is sinking down in its tranquillity; A
The gentleness of heaven broods o'er the Sea. A5
Listen! the mighty Being is awake, B
And doth with his eternal motion make B
A sound like thunder—everlastingly. A
Dear Child! dear Girl! that walkest with me here, c
If thou appear untouched by solemn thought, 10
Thy nature is not therefore less divine: c
Thou liest in Abraham's bosom all the year; c
And worship'st at the Temple's inner shrine, c
God being with thee when we know it not. d

"THE WORLD IS TOO MUCH WITH US" (1806)

The world is too much with us: late and soon,
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers:
Little we see in Nature that is ours;
We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!
The sea that bares her bosom to the moon; 5

The winds that will be howling at all hours,
And are up-gathered now like sleeping flowers;
For this, for everything, we are out of tune;
It moves us not.—Great God! I'd rather be
A Pagan suckled in a creed outworn; 10
So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,
Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn;
Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea;
Or hear old Triton blow his wreathèd horn.

Samuel Taylor Coleridge

1772-1834

THE RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINER

IN SEVEN PARTS

(From the Lyrical Ballads, 1798)

Argument

How a Ship having passed the Line was driven by storms to the cold Country towards the South Pole; and how from thence she made her course to the tropical Latitude of the Great Pacific Ocean; and of the strange things that befell; and in what manner the Ancyent Marinere came back to his own Country.

PART I

It is an ancient Mariner,
And he stoppeth one of three,
"By thy long gray beard and glittering eye,
Now wherefore stopp'st thou me?"

The Bridegroom's doors are opened wide, 5
And I am next of kin;
The guests are met, the feast is set:
May'st hear the merry din."

He holds him with his skinny hand, 10
"There was a ship," quoth he.
"Hold off! unhand me, gray-beard loon!"
Eftsoons<sup>1</sup> his hand dropt he.

He holds him with his glittering eye— 15
The Wedding-Guest stood still,
And listens like a three years' child:
The Mariner hath his will.

The Wedding-Guest sat on a stone: 20
He cannot choose but hear;
And thus spake on that ancient man,
The bright-eyed Mariner.

"The ship was cheered, the harbour cleared,
Merrily did we drop
Below the kirk, below the hill,
Below the lighthouse top.

1-12. An ancient Mariner meeteth three Gallants bidden to a wedding-feast, and detaineth one.

13-20. The Wedding-Guest is spell-bound by the eye of the old seafaring man, and constrained to hear his tale.

21-30. The Mariner tells how the ship sailed southward with a good wind and fair weather, till it reached the line.

<sup>1</sup> Soon after.

"The sun came up upon the left 25
Out of the sea came he!
And he shone bright, and on the right
Went down into the sea.

Higher and higher every day, 30
Till over the mast at noon—
The Wedding-Guest here beat his breast,
For he heard the loud bassoon.

The bride hath paced into the hall, 35
Red as a rose is she;
Nodding their heads before her goes
The merry minstrelsy.

The Wedding-Guest he beat his breast, 40
Yet he cannot choose but hear;
And thus spake on that ancient man,
The bright-eyed Mariner.

"And now the Storm-blast came, and he 45
Was tyrannous and strong:
He struck with his o'ertaking wings,
And chased us south along.

With sloping masts and dipping prow, 45
As who pursued with yell and blow
Still treads the shadow of his foe,
And forward bends his head,
The ship drove fast, loud roared the blast, 50
And southward aye we fled.

And now there came both mist and snow 55
And it grew wondrous cold:
And ice, mast-high, came floating by,
As green as emerald.

And through the drifts the snowy clifts 55
Did send a dismal sheen:
Nor shapes of men nor beasts we ken—
The ice was all between.

The ice was here, the ice was there, 60
The ice was all around:
It cracked and growled, and roared and howled,
Like noises in a swound!<sup>2</sup>

At length did cross an Albatross,<sup>3</sup> 65
Thorough the fog it came;
As if it had been a Christian soul,
We hailed it in God's name.

It ate the food it ne'er had eat, 70
And round and round it flew.
The ice did split with a thunder-fit;
The helmsman steered us through!

31-40. The Wedding-Guest heareth the bridal music, but the Mariner continueth his tale.

41-50. The ship driven by a storm toward the south pole.

51-62. The land of ice, and of fearful sounds where no living thing was to be seen.

63-70. Till a great seabird, called the Albatross, came through the snow-fog, and was received with great joy and hospitality.

<sup>2</sup> Swoon.

<sup>3</sup> The albatross was considered by sailors to be a bird of good omen; which makes the Mariner's crime all the blacker.

And a good south wind sprung up behind;
The Albatross did follow,
And every day, for food or play,
Came to the mariners' hollo!

In mist or cloud, on mast or shroud, 75
It perched for vespers nine;
Whiles all the night, through fog-smoke white,
Glimmered the white moon-shine."

"God save thee, ancient Mariner!
From the fiends, that plague thee thus!— 80
Why look'st thou so?"—With my cross-bow
I shot the Albatross.

PART II

The Sun now rose upon the right;<sup>4</sup>
Out of the sea came he,
Still hid in mist, and on the left 85
Went down into the sea.

And the good south wind still blew behind,
But no sweet bird did follow,
Nor any day for food or play
Came to the mariners' hollo! 90

And I had done a hellish thing,
And it would work 'em woe:
For all averred, I had killed the bird
That made the breeze to blow.
Ah wretch! said they, the bird to slay, 95
That made the breeze to blow!

Nor dim nor red, like God's own head,
The glorious Sun uprist;
Then all averred, I had killed the bird
That brought the fog and mist. 100
'Twas right, said they, such birds to slay,
That bring the fog and mist.

The fair breeze blew, the white foam flew,
The furrow followed free;
We were the first that ever burst 105
Into that silent sea.

Down dropt the breeze, the sails dropt down,
'Twas sad as sad could be;
And we did speak only to break
The silence of the sea! 110

All in a hot and copper sky,
The bloody Sun, at noon,
Right up above the mast did stand,
No bigger than the Moon.

71-78. And lo! the Albatross proveth a bird of good omen, and followeth the ship as it returned northward through fog and floating ice.

79-82. The ancient Mariner inhospitably killeth the pious bird of good omen.

83-96. His shipmates cry out against the ancient Mariner, for killing the bird of good luck.

97-102. But when the fog cleared off, they justify the same, and thus make themselves accomplices in the crime.

103-106. The fair breeze continues; the ship enters the Pacific Ocean, and sails northward, even till it reaches the line.

107-118. The ship hath been suddenly becalmed.

<sup>4</sup>The ship having rounded the Horn, is now sailing North.

Day after day, day after day, 115
We stuck, nor breath nor motion;
As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean.

Water, water, everywhere,
And all the boards did shrink;
Water, water, everywhere, 120
Nor any drop to drink.

The very deep did rot: O Christ!
That ever this should be!
Yea, slimy things did crawl with legs 125
Upon the slimy sea.

About, about, in reel and rout
The death-fires danced at night;
The water, like a witch's oils,
Burnt green, and blue, and white. 130

And some in dreams assured were
Of the Spirit<sup>5</sup> that plagued us so;
Nine fathom deep he had followed us
From the land of mist and snow.

And every tongue, through utter drought, 135
Was withered at the root;
We could not speak, no more than if
We had been choked with soot.

Ah! well-a-day! what evil looks
Had I from old and young! 140
Instead of the cross, the Albatross
About my neck was hung.

PART III

There passed a weary time. Each throat
Was parched, and glazed each eye.
A weary time! a weary time! 145
How glazed each weary eye,
When looking westward, I beheld
A something in the sky.

At first it seemed a little speck,
And then it seemed a mist; 150
It moved and moved, and took at last
A certain shape, I wist.

A speck, a mist, a shape, I wist!
And still it neared and neared:
As if it dodged a water-sprite, 155
It plunged and tacked and veered.

119-130. And the Albatross begins to be avenged.

131-138. A spirit had followed them; one of the invisible inhabitants of this planet, neither departed souls nor angels; concerning whom the learned Jew, Josephus, and the Platonist Constantinopolitan Michael Psellus, may be consulted. They are very numerous, and there is no climate or element without one or more.

139-142. The shipmates, in their sore distress would fain throw the whole guilt on the ancient Mariner; in sign whereof they hang the dead sea-bird round his neck.

143-156. The ancient Mariner beholdeth a sign in the element afar off.

<sup>5</sup>The spirit of the South Polar region, who loved the Albatross.

With throats unslaked, with black lips baked,
We could nor laugh nor wail;
Through utter drought all dumb we stood!
I bit my arm, I sucked the blood,
And cried, A sail! a sail!

With throats unslaked, with black lips baked,
Agape they heard me call:
Gramercy! they for joy did grin,
And all at once their breath drew in,
As they were drinking all.

See! see! (I cried) she tacks no more!
Hither to work us weal;
Without a breeze, without a tide,
She steadies with upright keel!

The western wave was all a-flame.
The day was well-nigh done!
Almost upon the western wave
Rested the broad bright Sun;
When that strange shape drove suddenly
Betwixt us and the Sun.

And straight the Sun was flecked with bars,
(Heaven's Mother send us grace!)
As if through a dungeon-grate he peered
With broad and burning face.

Alas! (thought I, and my heart beat loud)
How fast she nears and nears!
Are those her sails that glance in the sun,
Like restless gossameres?

Are those her ribs through which the sun
Did peer, as through a grate?
And is that Woman all her crew?
Is that a Death? and are there two?
Is Death that woman's mate?

Her lips were red, her looks were free,
Her locks were yellow as gold:
Her skin was as white as leprosy,
The Night-mare Life-in-Death was she,
Who thicks man's blood with cold.

The naked hulk alongside came,
And the twain were casting dice;
"The game is done! I've won! I've won!"
Quoth she, and whistles thrice.

The Sun's rim dips; the stars rush out;
At one stride comes the dark;
With far-heard whisper, o'er the sea,
Off shot the spectre-bark.

157-163. At its nearer approach, it seemeth him to be a ship; and at a dear ransom he freeth his speech from the bonds of thirst.

164-166. A flash of joy.
167-176. And horror follows; for can it be a ship that comes onward without wind or tide?

177-186. It seemeth him but the skeleton of a ship. And its ribs are seen as bars on the face of the setting Sun.

187-194. The Spectre-Woman and her death-mate, and no other on board the skeleton ship. Like vessel, like crew!

195-198. Death and Life-in-Death have died for the ship's crew, and she (the latter) winneth the ancient Mariner.

199-202. No twilight within the courts of the Sun.

We listened and looked sideways up!
Fear at my heart, as at a cup,
My life-blood seemed to sip!
The stars were dim, and thick the night,
The steersman's face by his lamp gleamed white;

From the sails the dew did drip—
Till clomb above the eastern bar
The horned Moon, with one bright star
Within the nether tip.

One after one, by the star-dogged Moon,
Too quick for groan or sigh,
Each turned his face with a ghastly pang,
And cursed me with his eye.

Four times fifty living men,
(And I heard nor sigh nor groan)
With heavy thump, a lifeless lump,
They dropped down one by one.

The souls did from their bodies fly,—
They fled to bliss or woe!
And every soul, it passed me by,
Like the whizz of my cross-bow!

PART IV

"I fear thee, ancient Mariner!
I fear thy skinny hand!
And thou art long, and lank, and brown,
As is the ribbed sea-sand.

I fear thee and thy glittering eye,
And thy skinny hand, so brown."—
Fear not, fear not, thou Wedding-Guest!
This body dropt not down.

Alone, alone, all, all alone,
Alone on a wide wide sea!
And never a saint took pity on
My soul in agony.

The many men, so beautiful!
And they all dead did lie:
And a thousand thousand slimy things
Lived on; and so did I.

I looked upon the rotting sea,
And drew my eyes away;
I looked upon the rotting deck,
And there the dead men lay.

I looked to heaven, and tried to pray;
But or ever a prayer had gusht,
A wicked whisper came, and made
My heart as dry as dust.

I closed my lids, and kept them close,
And the balls like pulses beat;
For the sky and the sea, and the sea and the sky
Lay like a load on my weary eye,
And the dead were at my feet.

203-223. At the rising of the Moon, one after another; his shipmates drop down dead. But Life-in-Death begins her work on the ancient Mariner.

224-235. The Wedding-Guest feareth that a spirit is talking to him; but the ancient Mariner assureth him of his bodily life, and proceedeth to relate his horrible penance.

236-252. He despiseth the creatures of the calm, and envieeth that they should live, and so many lie dead.

The cold sweat melted from their limbs,
Nor rot nor reek did they:
The look with which they looked on me 255
Had never passed away.

An orphan's curse would drag to hell
A spirit from on high;
But oh! more horrible than that
Is a curse in a dead man's eye! 260
Seven days, seven nights, I saw that curse,
And yet I could not die.

The moving Moon went up the sky,
And nowhere did abide:
Softly she was going up, 265
And a star or two beside—

Her beams bemoaned the sultry main,
Like April hoar-frost spread:
But where the ship's huge shadow lay,
The charmed water burnt alway 270
A still and awful red.

Beyond the shadow of the ship,
I watched the water-snakes:
They moved in tracks of shining white,
And when they reared, the elfish light 275
Fell off in hoary flakes.

Within the shadow of the ship
I watched their rich attire:
Blue, glossy green, and velvet black,
They coiled and swam; and every track 280
Was a flash of golden fire.

O happy living things! no tongue
Their beauty might declare:
A spring of love gushed from my heart,
And I blessed them unaware: 285
Sure my kind saint took pity on me,
And I blessed them unaware.

The selfsame moment I could pray;
And from my neck so free
The Albatross fell off, and sank 290
Like lead into the sea.

PART V

Oh sleep! it is a gentle thing,
Beloved from pole to pole!
To Mary Queen the praise be given!
She sent the gentle sleep from heaven, 295
That slid into my soul.

253-262. But the curse liveth for him in the eye of the dead men.

263-271. In his loneliness and fixedness he yearneth towards the journeying Moon, and the stars that still sojourn, yet still move onward; and everywhere the blue sky belongs to them, and is their appointed rest, and their native country and their own natural homes, which they enter unannounced, as lords that are certainly expected and yet there is a silent joy at their arrival.

272-281. By the light of the Moon he beholdeth God's creatures of the great calm.

282-283. Their beauty and their happiness.

284-287. He blesseth them in his heart.

288-291. The spell begins to break.

292-308. By grace of the holy Mother, the ancient Mariner is refreshed with rain.

The silly buckets<sup>a</sup> on the deck,
That had so long remained,
I dreamt that they were filled with dew; 300
And when I awoke, it rained.

My lips were wet, my throat was cold,
My garments all were dank;
Sure I had drunken in my dreams,
And still my body drank.

I moved, and could not feel my limbs: 305
I was so light—almost
I thought that I had died in sleep,
And was a blessed ghost.

And soon I heard a roaring wind:
It did not come anear;
But with its sound it shook the sails,
That were so thin and sere. 310

The upper air burst into life!
And a hundred fire-flags sheen,
To and fro they were hurried about! 315
And to and fro, and in and out—
The wan stars danced between.
And the coming wind did roar more loud,
And the sails did sigh like sedge;
And the rain poured down from one black 320
cloud;
The Moon was at its edge.

The thick black cloud was cleft, and still
The Moon was at its side:
Like waters shot from some high crag,
The lightning fell with never a jag, 325
A river steep and wide.

The loud wind never reached the ship,
Yet now the ship moved on!
Beneath the lightning and the Moon
The dead men gave a groan. 330

They groaned, they stirred, they all uprose,
Nor spake, nor moved their eyes;
It had been strange, even in a dream,
To have seen those dead men rise.

The helmsman steered, the ship moved on;
Yet never a breeze up blew; 335
The mariners all 'gan work the ropes,
Where they were wont to do;
They raised their limbs like lifeless tools—
We were a ghastly crew. 340

The body of my brother's son
Stood by me, knee to knee:
The body and I pulled at one rope
But he said nought to me.

309-326. He heareth sounds and seeth strange sights and commotions in the sky and the element

327-376. The bodies of the ship's crew are inspired, and the ship moves on; but not by the souls of the men, nor by demons of earth or middle air, but by a blessed troop of angelic spirits, sent down by the invocation of the guardian saint.

<sup>a</sup> Possibly foolish, or ridiculous, because they "had so long remained" useless.

"I fear thee, ancient Mariner!"
Be calm, thou Wedding-Guest!
'Twas not those souls that fled in pain,
Which to their corse came again,
But a troop of spirits blest:

345 How long in that same fit I lay,
I have not to declare;
But ere my living life returned,
I heard and in my soul discerned,
Two voices in the air.

395

For when it dawned—they dropped their arms,
And clustered round the mast;
Sweet sounds rose slowly through their mouths,
And from their bodies passed.

351

"Is it he?" quoth one, "Is this the man?
By Him who died on cross,
With his cruel bow he laid full low
The harmless Albatross.

400

Around, around, flew each sweet sound,
Then darted to the Sun;
Slowly the sounds came back again,
Now mixed, now one by one.

355

"The spirit who bideth by himself
In the land of mist and snow,
He loved the bird that loved the man
Who shot him with his bow."

405

Sometimes a-dropping from the sky
I heard the sky-lark sing;
Sometimes all little birds that are,
How they seemed to fill the sea and air
With their sweet jargoning!

360

The other was a softer voice,
As soft as honey-dew:
Quoth he, "The man hath penance done,
And penance more will do."

PART VI

First Voice

And now 'twas like all instruments,
Now like a lonely flute;
And now it is an angel's song,
That makes the heavens be mute.

365

"But tell me, tell me! speak again,
Thy soft response renewing—
What makes that ship drive on so fast?
What is the ocean doing?"

410

Second Voice

It ceased; yet still the sails made on
A pleasant noise till noon,
A noise like of a hidden brook
In the leafy month of June,
That to the sleeping woods all night
Singeth a quiet tune.

370

"Still as a slave before his lord,
The ocean hath no blast;
His great bright eye most silently
Up to the Moon is cast—

415

Till noon we quietly sailed on,
Yet never a breeze did breathe:
Slowly and smoothly went the ship,
Moved onward from beneath.

375

If he may know which way to go;
For she guides him smooth or grim.
See, brother, see! how graciously
She looketh down on him."

420

First Voice

Under the keel nine fathom deep,
From the land of mist and snow,
The spirit slid: and it was he
That made the ship to go.
The sails at noon left off their tune,
And the ship stood still also.

380

"But why drives on that ship so fast,
Without or wave or wind?"

Second Voice

The Sun, right up above the mast,
Had fixed her to the ocean:
But in a minute she 'gan stir,
With a short uneasy motion—
Backwards and forwards half her length
With a short uneasy motion.

385

"The air is cut away before,
And closes from behind.

425

Fly, brother, fly! more high, more high!
Or we shall be belated:
For slow and slow that ship will go,
When the Mariner's trance is abated."

Then like a pawing horse let go,
She made a sudden bound:
It flung the blood into my head,
And I fell down in a swoond.<sup>7</sup> 390

"I woke, and we were sailing on
As in a gentle weather:
'Twas night, calm night, the Moon was high,
The dead men stood together.

430

377-392. The lonesome Spirit from the south-pole carries on the ship as far as the line, in obedience to the angelic troop, but still requirerth vengeance.

393-409. The Polar Spirit's fellow-demons, the invisible inhabitants of the element, take part in his wrong; and two of them relate one to the other, that penance long and heavy for the ancient Mariner hath been accorded to the Polar Spirit, who returneth southward.

<sup>7</sup> Swoon.

All stood together on the deck,
For a charnel-dungeon fitter:
All fixed on me their stony eyes,
That in the Moon did glitter.

435

410-429. The Mariner hath been cast into a trance; for the angelic power causeth the vessel to drive northward faster than human life could endure.

430-441. The supernatural motion is retarded; the Mariner awakes, and his penance begins anew.

The pang, the curse, with which they died,
Had never passed away:
I could not draw my eyes from theirs, 440
Nor turn them up to pray.

And now this spell was snapt: once more
I viewed the ocean green,
And looked far forth, yet little saw
Of what had else been seen— 445

Like one, that on a lonesome road
Doth walk in fear and dread,
And having once turned round walks on,
And turns no more his head;
Because he knows, a frightful fiend 450
Doth close behind him tread.

But soon there breathed a wind on me,
Nor sound nor motion made:
Its path was not upon the sea,
In ripple or in shade. 455

It raised my hair, it fanned my cheek
Like a meadow-gale of spring—
It mingled strangely with my fears,
Yet it felt like a welcoming.

Swiftly, swiftly flew the ship,
Yet she sailed softly too:
Sweetly, sweetly blew the breeze—
On me alone it blew. 460

Oh! dream of joy! is this indeed
The lighthouse top I see?
Is this the hill? is this the kirk?
Is this mine own countree? 465

We drifted o'er the harbour-bar,
And I with sobs did pray—
O let me be awake, my God!
Or let me sleep alway. 470

The harbour-bay was clear as glass,
So smoothly it was strewn!
And on the bay the moonlight lay,
And the shadow of the Moon. 475

The rock shone bright, the kirk no less,
That stands above the rock:
The moonlight steeped in silentness
The steady weathercock.

And the bay was white with silent light
Till rising from the same,
Full many shapes, that shadows were,
In crimson colours came. 480

A little distance from the prow
Those crimson shadows were: 485
I turned my eyes upon the deck—
Oh Christ! what saw I there!

Each corse lay flat, lifeless and flat,
And, by the holy rood!
A man all light, a seraph-man, 490
On every corse there stood.

This seraph-band, each waved his hand:
It was a heavenly sight!
They stood as signals to the land,
Each one a lovely light; 495

This seraph-band, each waved his hand,
No voice did they impart—
No voice; but oh! the silence sank
Like music on my heart.

But soon I heard the dash of oars,
I heard the Pilot's cheer;
My head was turned perforce away,
And I saw a boat appear.
The Pilot and the Pilot's boy, 500
I heard them coming fast:
Dear Lord in Heaven! it was a joy
The dead men could not blast. 505

I saw a third—I heard his voice:
It is the Hermit good!
He singeth loud his godly hymns 510
That he makes in the wood.
He'll shrieve my soul, he'll wash away
The Albatross's blood.

PART VII

This Hermit good lives in that wood
Which slopes down to the sea. 515
How loudly his sweet voice he rears!
He loves to talk with mariners
That come from a far countree.

He kneels at morn, and noon, and eve—
He hath a cushion plump:
It is the moss that wholly hides
The rotted old oak-stump. 520

The skiff-boat neared: I heard them talk,
"Why, this is strange, I trow!
Where are those lights so many and fair, 525
That signal made but now?"

"Strange, by my faith!" the Hermit said—
"And they answered not our cheer!
The planks look warped! and see those sails, 530
How thin they are and sere!
I never saw aught like to them,
Unless perchance it were

Brown skeletons of leaves that lag
My forest-brook along;
When the ivy-tod<sup>s</sup> is heavy with snow, 535
And the owlet whoops to the wolf below,
That eats the she-wolf's young."

442-463. The curse is finally expiated.
464-479. And the ancient Mariner beholdeth his native country.

480-499. The angelic spirits leave the dead bodies, and appear in their own forms of light.

514-545. The Hermit of the wood approacheth the ship with wonder.

<sup>s</sup> Ivy bush.

"Dear Lord! it hath a fiendish look—
(The Pilot made reply)
I am a-feared"—"Push on, push on!" 540
Said the Hermit cheerily.

The boat came closer to the ship,
But I nor spake nor stirred;
The boat came close beneath the ship,
And straight a sound was heard. 545

Under the water it rumbled on,
Still louder and more dread:
It reached the ship, it split the bay;
The ship went down like lead.

Stunned by that loud and dreadful sound, 550
Which sky and ocean smote,
Like one that hath been seven days drowned
My body lay afloat;
But swift as dreams, myself I found
Within the Pilot's boat. 555

Upon the whirl, where sank the ship,
The boat spun round and round;
And all was still, save that the hill
Was telling of the sound.

I moved my lips—the Pilot shrieked 560
And fell down in a fit;
The holy Hermit raised his eyes,
And prayed where he did sit.

I took the oars: the Pilot's boy,
Who now doth crazy go,
Laughed loud and long, and all the while
His eyes went to and fro. 565
"Ha! ha!" quoth he, "full plain I see,
The Devil knows how to row."

And now, all in my own countree, 570
I stood on the firm land!
The Hermit stepped forth from the boat,
And scarcely he could stand.

"O shrieve me, shrieve me, holy man!"
The Hermit crossed his brow. 575
"Say quick," quoth he, "I bid thee say—
What manner of man art thou?"

Forthwith this frame of mine was wrenched
With a woful agony,
Which forced me to begin my tale; 580
And then it left me free.

Since then, at an uncertain hour,
That agony returns:
And till my ghastly tale is told,
This heart within me burns. 585

546-549. The ship suddenly sinketh.
550-573. The ancient Mariner is saved in the Pilot's boat.

574-581. The ancient Mariner earnestly entreateth the Hermit to shrieve him: and the penance of life falls on him.

582-625. And ever and anon throughout his future life an agony constraineth him to travel from land to land, and to teach, by his own example, love and reverence to all things that God made and loveth.

I pass, like night, from land to land;
I have strange power of speech;
That moment that his face I see,
I know the man that must hear me:
To him my tale I teach. 590

What loud uproar bursts from that door!
The wedding-guests are there:
But in the garden-bower the bride
And bride-maids singing are:
And hark the little vesper bell, 595
Which biddeth me to prayer!

O Wedding-Guest! this soul hath been
Alone on a wide, wide sea:
So lonely 'twas, that God himself
Scarce seemèd there to be. 600

O sweeter than the marriage-feast,
'Tis sweeter far to me,
To walk together to the kirk
With a goodly company!—

To walk together to the kirk, 605
And all together pray,
While each to his great Father bends,
Old men, and babes, and loving friends
And youths and maidens gay!

Farewell, farewell! but this I tell
To thee, thou Wedding-Guest!
He prayeth well, who loveth well
Both man and bird and beast. 610

He prayeth best, who loveth best
All things both great and small;
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all." 615

The Mariner, whose eye is bright,
Whose beard with age is hoar,
Is gone: and now the Wedding-Guest
'Turned from the bridegroom's door. 620

He went like one that hath been stunned,
And is of sense forlorn:
A sadder and a wiser man,
He rose the morrow morn. 625

FRANCE: AN ODE

(1798)

I

Ye Clouds! that far above me float and pause, Whose pathless march no mortal may control!

Ye Ocean-Waves! that, whereso'er ye roll,
Yield homage only to eternal laws!

Ye Woods! that listen to the night-birds'
singing, 5

Midway the smooth and perilous slope
reclined,

Save when your own imperious branches
swinging,

Have made a solemn music of the wind!

Where, like a man beloved of God,
 Through glooms, which never woodman trod, 10
 How oft, pursuing fancies holy,
 My moonlight way o'er flowering weeds I wound,
 Inspired, beyond the guess of folly,
 By each rude shape and wild unconquerable
 sound!
 O ye loud waves! and O ye Forests high! 15
 And O ye Clouds that far above me soared!
 Thou rising Sun! thou blue rejoicing Sky!
 Yea, everything that is and will be free!
 Bear witness for me, wheresoe'er ye be,
 With what deep worship I have still adorned 20
 The spirit of divinest liberty.

II

When France in wrath her giant-limbs up-reared,
 And with that oath, which smote air, earth,
 and sea,
 Stamped her strong foot and said she would be free,
 Bear witness for me, how I hoped and feared! 25
 With what a joy my lofty gratulation
 Unawed I sang, amid a slavish band:
 And when to whelm the disenchanting nation,
 Like fiends embattled by a wizard's wand,
 The monarchs marched in evil day, 30
 And Britain joined the dire array;
 Though dear her shores and circling ocean,
 Though many friendships, many youthful loves
 Had swoll'n the patriot emotion
 And flung a magic light o'er all her hills and groves; 35
 Yet still my voice, unaltered, sang defeat
 To all that braved the tyrant-quelling lance,
 And shame too long delayed and vain retreat!
 For ne'er, O Liberty! with partial aim
 I dimmed thy light or damped thy holy flame; 40
 But blessed the paeans of delivered France,
 And hung my head and wept at Britain's name.

III

"And what," I said, "though Blasphemy's loud scream
 With that sweet music of deliverance strove!
 Though all the fierce and drunken passions
 wove 45
 A dance more wild than e'er was maniac's
 dream!
 Ye storms, that round the dawning east assembled,
 The Sun was rising, though ye hid his light!"
 And when, to soothe my soul, that hoped and trembled,
 The dissonance ceased, and all seemed calm and
 bright; 50
 When France her front deep-scarr'd and gory
 Concealed with clustering wreaths of glory;
 When, insupportably advancing,
 Her arm made mockery of the warrior's
 tramp;
 While timid looks of fury glancing, 55
 Domestic treason crushed beneath her fatal
 stamp,

Writhed like a wounded dragon in his gore;
 Then I reproached my fears that would not flee;
 "And soon," I said, "shall Wisdom teach her lore
 In the low huts of them that toil and groan! 60
 And, conquering by her happiness alone,
 Shall France compel the nations to be free,
 Till Love and Joy look round, and call the Earth their own."

IV

Forgive me, Freedom! O forgive those dreams!
 I hear thy voice, I hear thy loud lament, 65
 From bleak Helvetia's icy caverns sent—
 I hear thy groans upon her blood-stained streams!
 Heroes, that for your peaceful country perished,
 And ye that, fleeing, spot your mountain-snows
 With bleeding wounds; forgive me, that I cherished 70
 One thought that ever blessed your cruel foes!
 To scatter rage and traitorous guilt
 Where Peace her jealous home had built;
 A patriot-race to disinherit
 Of all that made their stormy wilds so dear; 75
 And with inexpiable spirit
 To taint the bloodless freedom of the mountaineer—
 O France, that mockst Heaven, adulterous,
 blind,
 And patriot only in pernicious toils, 79
 Are these thy boasts, Champion of human kind?
 To mix with Kings in the low lust of sway,
 Yell in the hunt, and share the murderous prey:
 To insult the shrine of Liberty with spoils
 From freemen torn; to tempt and to betray?

V

The Sensual and the Dark rebel in vain, 85
 Slaves by their own compulsion! In mad game
 They burst their manacles and wear the name
 Of Freedom, graven on a heavier chain!
 O Liberty! with profitless endeavor
 Have I pursued thee, many a weary hour; 90
 But thou nor swell'st the victor's strain, nor ever Didst breathe thy soul in forms of human power.
 Alike from all, howe'er they praise thee,
 (Nor prayer, nor boastful name delays thee)
 Alike from Priestcraft's harpy minions, 95
 And factious Blasphemy's obscene slaves,
 Thou speedest on thy subtle pinions,
 The guide of homeless winds, and playmate of the waves!
 And there I felt thee!—on that sea-cliff's verge,
 Whose pines, scarce travelled by the breeze above, 100
 Had made one murmur with the distant surge!
 Yes, while I stood and gazed, my temples bare,
 And shot my being through earth, sea and air,
 Possessing all things with intensest love,
 O Liberty! my spirit felt thee there. 105

DEJECTION: AN ODE

(1802)

Late, late yestreen I saw the new Moon,
With the old moon in her arms;
And I fear, I fear, my master dear!
We shall have a deadly storm.

Ballad of Sir Patrich Spence.

I

Well! If the Bard was weather-wise, who made
The grand old ballad of Sir Patrich Spence,<sup>1</sup> &
This night, so tranquil now, will not go hence
Unroused by winds, that ply a busier trade
Than those which mould yon cloud in lazy flakes,

Or the dull sobbing draft, that moans and rakes 10

Upon the strings of this Æolian lute,
Which better far were mute.

For lo! the new-Moon winter-bright!
And overspread with phantom light,
(With swimming phantom light o'erspread 15
But rimmed and circled by a silver thread)
I see the old Moon in her lap, foretelling
The coming on of rain and squally blast.

And oh! that even now the gust were swelling,
And the slant night-shower driving loud and
fast! 20

Those sounds which oft have raised me, whilst they awed,

And sent my soul abroad,
Might now perhaps their wonted impulse give,
Might startle this dull pain, and make it move and live! 24

II

A grief without a pang, void, dark, and drear,
A stifled, drowsy, unimpassioned grief,
Which finds no natural outlet, no relief,
In word or sigh or tear—

O Lady! in this wan and heartless mood,
To other thoughts by yonder throstle woo'd, 30

All this long eve, so balmy and serene,
Have I been gazing on the western sky,

And its peculiar tint of yellow green:
And still I gaze—and with how blank an eye! 34
And those thin clouds above, in flakes and bars,
That give away their motion to the stars;
Those stars that glide behind them or between,
Now sparkling, now bedimmed, but always
seen:

Yon crescent Moon as fixed as if it grew
In its own cloudless, starless lake of blue: 40
I see them all so excellently fair,
I see, not feel how beautiful they are!

III

My genial spirits fail;
And what can these avail
To lift the smothering weight from off my breast? 45

It were a vain endeavour,
Though I should gaze forever

<sup>1</sup> V. p. 93, supra.

On that green light that lingers in the west:
I may not hope from outward forms to win
The passion and the life whose fountains are within. 50

IV

O Lady, we receive but what we give,
And in our life alone does nature live:
Ours is her wedding-garment, ours her shroud!
And would we aught behold of higher worth,
Than that inanimate cold world allowed 55
To the poor loveless ever-anxious crowd,
Ah! from the soul itself must issue forth,
A light, a glory, a fair luminous cloud
Enveloping the Earth—

And from the soul itself must there be sent 60
A sweet and potent voice, of its own birth,
Of all sweet sounds the life and element!

V

O pure of heart; thou need'st not ask of me
What this strong music in the soul may be!
What, and wherein it doth exist, 65
This light, this glory, this fair luminous mist,
This beautiful and beauty-making power.

Joy, virtuous Lady! Joy that ne'er was given,
Save to the pure, and in their purest hour,
Life, and Life's effluence, cloud at once and shower, 70

Joy, Lady! is the spirit and the power
Which wedding Nature to us gives in dower,
A new Earth and new Heaven,
Undreamt of by the sensual and the proud— 74
Joy is the sweet voice, Joy the luminous
cloud—

We in ourselves rejoice!
And thence flows all that charms our ear or sight,
All melodies the echoes of that voice,
All colours a suffusion from that light.

VI

There was a time when, though my path was rough, 80

This joy within me dallied with distress,
And all misfortunes were but as the stuff
Whence Fancy made me dreams of happiness:

For hope grew round me like the twining
vine,
And fruits and foliage, not my own, seemed
mine. 85

But now afflictions bow me down to earth:
Nor care I that they rob me of my mirth,
But oh! each visitation

Suspends what nature gave me at my birth,
My shaping spirit of Imagination. 90
For not to think of what I needs must feel,
But to be still and patient, all I can;

And haply by abstruse research to steal
From my own nature all the natural man—
This was my sole resource, my only plan: 95
Till that which suits a part infects the whole,
And now is almost grown the habit of my soul.

VII

Hence, viper thoughts, that coil around my mind,

Reality's dark dream!

I turn from you and listen to the wind, 100
Which long has raved unnoticed. What a scream

Of agony by torture lengthened out
That lute sent forth! Thou Wind that ravest without,

Bare craig, or mountain-tairn, or blasted
tree, 104

Or pine-grove whither woodman never clomb,
Or lonely house, long held the witches' home,

Methinks were fitter instruments for thee,
Mad Lutanist! who in this month of showers,
Of dark brown gardens, and of peeping flowers,
Mak'st Devils' yule with worse than wintry
song, 110

The blossoms, buds, and timorous leaves
among.

Thou Actor, perfect in all tragic sounds!

Thou mighty Poet, e'en to frenzy bold!

What tell'st thou now about?

'Tis of the rushing of a host in rout, 115

With groans of trampled men, with smarting wounds—

At once they groan with pain, and shudder with the cold!

But hush! there is a pause of deepest silence!

And all the noise, as of a rushing crowd,

With groans and tremulous shudderings—all is over— 120

It tells another tale, with sounds less deep and loud!

A tale of less affright,

And tempered with delight,

As Otway's self had framed the tender lay,

'Tis of a little child, 125

Upon a lonesome wild,

Not far from home, but she hath lost her
way:

And now moans low in bitter grief and fear,

And now screams loud, and hopes to make her mother hear.

VIII

'Tis midnight, but small thoughts have I of sleep; 130

Full seldom may my friend such vigils keep!

Visit her, gentle Sleep! with wings of healing,
And may this storm be but a mountain-

birth,

May all the stars hang bright above her dwelling,

Silent as though they watched the sleeping
Earth! 135

With light heart may she rise,

Gay fancy, cheerful eyes,

Joy lift her spirit, joy attune her voice;

To her may all things live, from pole to pole,

Their life the eddying of her living soul! 140

O simple spirit guided from above,

Dear Lady! friend devoutest of my choice,

Thus mayest thou ever, evermore rejoice.

THE GOOD GREAT MAN

(1802)

COMPLAINT

"How seldom, friend! a good great man inherits
Honour or wealth with all his worth and pains!
It sounds like stories from the land of spirits
If any man obtain that which he merits
Or any merit that which he obtains." 5

REPLY

For shame, dear friend, renounce this canting
strain!

What would'st thou have a good great man obtain?

Place? titles? salary? a gilded chain?

Or throne of corse which his sword had slain?

Greatness and goodness are not means, but ends! 10

Hath he not always treasures, always friends,

The good great man? three treasures, LOVE and LIGHT,

And CALM THOUGHTS, regular as infants' breath:
And three firm friends, more sure than day and
night—

HIMSELF, his MAKER, and the ANGEL DEATH! 15

TO THE RIVER OTTER

Dear native brook! wild streamlet of the West!

How many various-fated years have past,

What happy, and what mournful hours, since last

I skimmed the smooth thin stone along thy
breast,

Numbering its light leaps! yet so deep imprest

Sink the sweet scenes of childhood, that mine
eyes 6

I never shut amid the sunny ray,

But straight with all their tints thy waters rise,
Thy crossing plank, thy marge with willows

gray,

And bedded sand that, veined with various dyes, 10

Gleamed through thy bright transparence! On my way,

Visions of childhood! oft have ye beguiled
Lone manhood's cares, yet waking fondest sighs.

Ah! that once more I were a careless child!

KUBLA KHAN: OR A VISION IN A DREAM

(1816)

In Xanadu did Kubla Khan

A stately pleasure-dome decree:

Where Alph, the sacred river, ran

Through caverns measureless to man

Down to a sunless sea. 5

So twice five miles of fertile ground

With walls and towers were girdled round:

And there were gardens bright with sinuous rills
Where blossomed many an incense-bearing

tree:

And here were forests ancient as the hills, 10
Enfolding sunny spots of greenery.

But oh! that deep romantic chasm which slanted

Down the green hill athwart a cedarn cover!

A savage place! as holy and enchanted

As e'er beneath a waning moon was haunted 15

By woman wailing for her demon-lover!

And from this chasm, with ceaseless turmoil seething,

As if this earth in fast thick pants were breath-
ing,

A mighty fountain momentarily was forced:

Amid whose swift half-intermitted burst 20

Huge fragments vaulted like rebounding hail,

Or chaffy grain beneath the thresher's flail;

And mid these dancing rocks at once and ever

It flung up momentarily the sacred river.

Five miles meandering with a mazy motion 25

Through wood and dale the sacred river ran,

Then reached the caverns measureless to man,

And sank in tumult to a lifeless ocean:

And 'mid this tumult Kubla heard from far

Ancestral voices prophesying war! 30

The shadow of the dome of pleasure

Floated midway on the waves;

Where was heard the mingled measure

From the fountain and the caves.

It was a miracle of rare device, 35

A sunny pleasure-dome with caves of ice!

A damsel with a dulcimer

In a vision once I saw;

It was an Abyssinian maid,

And on her dulcimer she played, 40

Singing of Mount Abora.

Could I revive within me

Her symphony and song,

To such a deep delight 'twould win me,

That with music loud and long, 45

I would build that dome in air,

That sunny dome! those caves of ice!

And all who heard should see them there,

And all should cry, Beware! Beware!

His flashing eyes, his floating hair! 50

Weave a circle round him thrice,

And close your eyes with holy dread,

For he on honey-dew hath fed,

And drunk the milk of Paradise.

YOUTH AND AGE

(1822-1832)

Verse, a breeze mid blossoms straying,

Where Hope clung feeding, like a bee—

Both were mine! Life went a-maying

With Nature, Hope, and Poesy,

When I was young!

When I was young?—Ah, woful When! 5

Ah! for the change 'twixt Now and Then!

This breathing house not built with hands,

This body that does me grievous wrong, 10

O'er airy cliffs and glittering sands,

How lightly then it flashed along!—

Like those trim skiffs, unknown of yore,

On winding lakes and rivers wide,

That ask no aid of sail or oar,

That fear no spite of wind or tide! 15

Nought cared this body for wind or weather

When Youth and I lived in't together.

Flowers are lovely; Love is flower-like;

Friendship is a sheltering tree;

O! the joys, that came down shower-like, 20

Of Friendship, Love, and Liberty,

Ere I was old.

Ere I was old? Ah woful Ere,

Which tells me, Youth's no longer here!

O Youth! for years so many and sweet, 25

'Tis known, that Thou and I were one,

I'll think it but a fond conceit—

It cannot be that Thou art gone!

Thy vesper-bell hath not yet toll'd:—

And thou wert aye a masker bold! 30

What strange disguise hast now put on,

To make believe, that Thou art gone?

I see these locks in silvery slips,

This drooping gait, this altered size:

But Spring-tide blossoms on thy lips 35

And tears take sunshine from thine eyes!

Life is but thought: so think I will

That Youth and I are house-mates still.

Dew-drops are the gems of morning,

But the tears of mournful eve! 40

Where no hope is, life's a warning

That only serves to make us grieve,

When we are old:

That only serves to make us grieve

With oft and tedious taking-leave, 45

Like some poor nigh-related guest,

That may not rudely be dismissed;

Yet hath outstay'd his welcome while,

And tells the jest without the smile.

WORK WITHOUT HOPE

(February 21st, 1827)

All Nature seems at work. Slugs leave their lair—

The bees are stirring—birds are on the wing—

And Winter slumbering in the open air,

Wears on his smiling face a dream of Spring!

And I the while, the sole unbusy thing, 5

Nor honey make, nor pair, nor build, nor sing.

Yet well I ken the banks where amaranths

blow,

Have traced the fount whence streams of nectar

flow.

Bloom, O ye amaranths! bloom for whom ye

may,

For me ye bloom not! Glide, rich streams,

away! 10

With lips unbrightened, wreathless brow, I stroll:

And would you learn the spells that drowse my

soul?

Work without Hope draws nectar in a sieve,

And Hope without an object cannot live.

Robert Southey

1774-1843

THE BATTLE OF BLENHEIM<sup>1</sup>

(Written at Westbury, 1798)

I

It was a summer evening,
 Old Kaspar's work was done,
 And he before his cottage door
 Was sitting in the sun,
 And by him sported on the green
 His little grandchild Wilhelmine.

II

She saw her brother Peterkin
 Roll something large and round,
 Which he beside the rivulet
 In playing there had found;
 He came to ask what he had found,
 That was so large, and smooth, and round.

III

Old Kaspar took it from the boy,
 Who stood expectant by;
 And then the old man shook his head,
 And with a natural sigh,
 "Tis some poor fellow's skull," said he,
 "Who fell in the great victory."

IV

"I find them in the garden,
 For there's many hereabout;
 And often when I go to plough,
 The ploughshare turns them out!
 For many thousand men," said he,
 "Were slain in that great victory."

V

"Now tell us what 'twas all about,"
 Young Peterkin, he cries;
 And little Wilhelmine looks up
 With wonder-waiting eyes;
 "Now tell us all about the war,
 And what they fought each other for."

VI

"It was the English," Kaspar cried,
 "Who put the French to rout;
 But what they fought each other for,
 I could not well make out;
 But every body said," quoth he,
 "That 'twas a famous victory."

VII

"My father lived at Blenheim then,
 Yon little stream hard by;
 They burnt his dwelling to the ground,
 And he was forced to fly;
 So with his wife and child he fled,
 Nor had he where to rest his head.

<sup>1</sup> The Duke of Marlborough, Commander-in-Chief of the English and Dutch forces, assisted by Prince Eugene of Savoy, won a celebrated victory over the French and Bavarians at Blenheim, Aug. 13, 1704. The war arose over the disputed succession to the throne of Spain.

VIII

"With fire and sword the country round
 Was wasted far and wide,
 And many a childing mother then
 And new-born baby died:
 But things like that, you know, must be
 At every famous victory.

IX

"They say it was a shocking sight
 After the field was won;
 For many thousand bodies here
 Lay rotting in the sun;
 But things like that, you know, must be
 After a famous victory.

X

"Great praise the Duke of Marlboro' won, 55
 And our good Prince Eugene."
 10 "Why 'twas a very wicked thing!"
 Said little Wilhelmine.
 "Nay . . nay . . my little girl," quoth he,
 "It was a famous victory." 60

XI

"And every body praised the Duke
 Who this great fight did win."
 15 "But what good came of it at last?"
 Quoth little Peterkin.
 "Why, that I cannot tell," said he,
 "But 'twas a famous victory." 65

THE WELL OF ST. KEYNE

1798

A Well there is in the west country,
 And a clearer one never was seen;
 There is not a wife in the west country
 But has heard of the Well of St. Keyne.

An oak and an elm-tree stand beside, 5
 And behind doth an ash-tree grow,
 And a willow from the bank above
 Droops to the water below.

A traveller came to the Well of St. Keyne;
 Joyfully he drew nigh, 10
 For from cock-crow he had been travelling,
 And there was not a cloud in the sky.

He drank of the water so cool and clear,
 For thirsty and hot was he; 15
 And he sat down upon the bank,
 Under the willow-tree.

There came a man from the house hard by,
 At the Well to fill his pail;
 On the Well-side he rested it,
 And he bade the Stranger hail. 20

"Now art thou a bachelor, Stranger?" quoth
 he;
 "For, an if thou hast a wife,
 The happiest draught thou hast drank this
 day
 That ever thou didst in thy life.

"Or has thy good woman, if one thou hast, 25
 Ever here in Cornwall been?
 For, an if she have, I'll venture my life,
 She has drank of the Well of St. Keyne."

"I have left a good woman who never was here,"
 The Stranger he made reply; 30
 "But that my draught should be the better for that,
 I pray you answer me why."

"St. Keyne," quoth the Cornish-man, "many a time
 Drank of this crystal Well;
 And, before the Angel summon'd her, 35
 She laid on the water a spell."

"If the Husband, of this gifted Well
 Shall drink before his Wife,
 A happy man thenceforth is he,
 For he shall be Master for life. 40

"But if the Wife should drink of it first, God help the Husband then!"—
 The Stranger stoop'd to the Well of St. Keyne,
 And drank of the water again.

"You drank of the Well, I warrant, betimes?"
 He to the Cornish-man said: 46
 But the Cornish-man smiled as the Stranger
 spake,
 And sheepishly shook his head.

"I hasten'd as soon as the wedding was done,
 And left my Wife in the porch; 50,
 But i' faith she had been wiser than me,
 For she took a bottle to church."

MY DAYS AMONG THE DEAD ARE PAST

(Written at Keswick, 1818)

I

My days among the Dead are past;
 Around me I behold,
 Where'er these casual eyes are cast,
 The mighty minds of old;
 My never-failing friends are they, 5
 With whom I converse day by day.

II

With them I take delight in weal,
 And seek relief in woe;
 And while I understand and feel
 How much to them I owe, 10
 My cheeks have often been bedew'd
 With tears of thoughtful gratitude.

III

My thoughts are with the Dead; with them
 I live in long-past years;
 Their virtues love, their faults condemn, 15
 Partake their hopes and fears,
 And from their lessons seek and find
 Instruction with an humble mind.

IV

My hopes are with the Dead; anon
 My place with them will be, 20
 And I with them shall travel on Through all Futurity:
 Yet leaving here a name, I trust,
 That will not perish in the dust.

Sir Walter Scott

1771-1832

HAROLD'S SONG TO ROSABELLE

(From Lay of the Last Minstrel, 1805)

CANTO VI

XXIII

O listen, listen, ladies gay!
 No haughty feat of arms I tell;
 Soft is the note, and sad the lay,
 That mourns the lovely Rosabelle.

"Moor, moor the barge, ye gallant crew!
 And, gentle ladye, deign to stay!
 Rest thee in Castle Ravensheuch,
 Nor tempt the stormy firth to-day. 8

"The blackening wave is edged with white;
 To inch<sup>1</sup> and rock the sea-mews fly; 10
 The fishers have heard the Water-Sprite,
 Whose screams forebode that wreck is nigh.

"Last night the gifted Seer did view
 A wet shroud swathed round ladye gay;
 Then stay thee, Fair, in Ravensheuch; 15
 Why cross the gloomy firth to-day?"—

"'Tis not because Lord Lindesay's heir
 To-night at Roslin leads the ball,
 But that my ladye-mother there
 Sits lonely in her castle-hall. 25

"'Tis not because the ring they ride,
 And Lindesay at the ring rides well,
 But that my sire the wine will chide,
 If 'tis not fill'd by Rosabelle.—"

O'er Roslin all that dreary night, 25
 A wondrous blaze was seen to gleam;
 'Twas broader than the watch-fire's light,
 And redder than the bright moonbeam.

It glared on Roslin's castled rock, 30
 It ruddied all the copse-wood glen;
 'Twas seen from Dryden's groves of oak,
 And seen from cavern'd Hawthornden.

Seem'd all on fire that chapel proud,
 Where Roslin's chiefs uncoffin'd lie,
 Each Baron, for a sable shroud,
 Sheathed in his iron panoply. 35

<sup>1</sup> Island.

Seem'd all on fire within, around,
 Deep sacristy and altar's pale;
 Shone every pillar foliage-bound,
 And glimmer'd all the dead men's mail. 40

Blazed battlement and pinnet high,
 Blazed every rose-carved buttress fair—
 So still they blaze, when fate is nigh
 The lordly line of high St. Clair.

There are twenty of Roslin's barons bold 45
 Lie buried within that proud chapelle;
 Each one the holy vault doth hold—
 But the sea holds lovely Rosabelle!

And each St. Clair was buried there,
 With candle, with book, and with knell; 50
 But the sea-caves rung, and the wild winds sung,
 The dirge of lovely Rosabelle.

HUNTING SONG

(1808)

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
 On the mountain dawns the day;
 All the jolly chase is here
 With hawk, and horse, and hunting-spear;
 Hounds are in their couples yelling, 5
 Hawks are whistling, horns are knelling,
 Merrily, merrily, mingle they,
 "Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
 The mist has left the mountain gray, 10
 Springlets in the dawn are steaming,
 Diamonds on the brake are gleaming;
 And foresters have busy been
 To track the buck in thicket green;
 Now we come to chant our lay, 15
 "Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
 To the green-wood haste away;
 We can show you where he lies,
 Fleet of foot, and tall of size; 20
 We can show the marks he made,
 When 'gainst the oak his antlers frayed;
 You shall see him brought to bay,
 "Waken, lords and ladies gay."

Louder, louder chant the lay, 25
 Waken, lords and ladies gay!
 Tell them youth, and mirth, and glee,
 Run a course as well as we;
 Time, stern huntsman! who can baulk,
 Stanch as hound, and fleet as hawk; 30
 Think of this, and rise with day,
 Gentle lords and ladies gay.

LOCHINVAR

(From Marmion, 1808)

CANTO V

O, young Lochinvar is come out of the west,
 Through all the wide border his steed was the best;

And save his good broadsword, he weapons had
 none,
 He rode all unarm'd, and he rode all alone.
 So faithful in love, and so dauntless in war, 5
 There never was knight like the young Lochin-var.

He staid not for brake, and he stopp'd not for stone,
 He swam the Esk river where ford there was
 none;
 But ere he alighted at Netherby gate,
 The bride had consented, the gallant came late: 10
 For a laggard in love, and a dastard in war,
 Was to wed the fair Ellen of brave Lochinvar.

So boldly he enter'd the Netherby Hall,
 Among bride's-men, and kinsmen, and brothers,
 and all:

Then spoke the bride's father, his hand on his sword 15
 (For the poor craven bridegroom said never a word),

"O come ye in peace here, or come ye in war,
 Or to dance at our bridal, young Lord Lochin-
 var?"—

"I long woo'd your daughter, my suit you denied;—
 Love swells like the Solway, but ebbs like its tide— 20

And now am I come, with this lost love of mine,
 To lead but one measure, drink one cup of wine.
 There are maidens in Scotland more lovely by far,
 That would gladly be bride to the young Lochinvar."

The bride kiss'd the goblet: the knight took it up, 25
 He quaff'd off the wine, and he threw down the cup.

She look'd down to blush, and she look'd up to sigh,

With a smile on her lips, and a tear in her eye.
 He took her soft hand, ere her mother could bar,—

"Now tread we a measure!" said young
 Lochinvar. 30

So stately his form, and so lovely her face,
 That never a hall such a galliard did grace;
 While her mother did fret, and her father did
 fume,

And the bridegroom stood dangling his bonnet
 and plume;

And the bride-maidens whisper'd, "'Twere better by far, 35

To have match'd our fair cousin with young Lochinvar."

One touch to her hand, and one word in her ear,
 When they reach'd the hall-door, and the charger stood near;

So light to the croupe the fair lady he swung,
 So light to the saddle before her he sprang! 40

"She is won! we are gone, over bank, bush, and scour;
They'll have fleet steeds that follow," quoth
young Lochinvar.

There was mounting 'mong Graemes of the Netherby clan;
Forsters, Fenwicks, and Musgraves, they rode and they ran:

There was racing and chasing, on Cannobie
Lee, 45
But the lost bride of Netherby ne'er did they see.

So daring in love, and so dauntless in war,
Have ye e'er heard of gallant like young Lochin-var?

BALLAD

ALICE BRAND

(From The Lady of the Lake, 1810)

CANTO IV

XII

Merry it is in the good greenwood,
When the mavis and merle<sup>1</sup> are singing,
When the deer sweeps by, and the hounds are in cry,
And the hunter's horn is ringing.

"O Alice Brand, my native land 5
Is lost for love of you;
And we must hold by wold and wold,
As outlaws wont to do.

"O Alice, 'twas all for thy locks so bright, 10
And 'twas all for thine eyes so blue,
That on the night of our luckless flight,
Thy brother bold I slew.

"Now must I teach to hew the beech
The hand that held the glaive,<sup>2</sup>
For leaves to spread our lowly bed, 15
And stakes to fence our cave.

"And for vest of pall,<sup>3</sup> thy fingers small,
That wont on harp to stray,
A cloak must shear from the slaughter'd deer, 20
To keep the cold away."

"O Richard! if my brother died,
'Twas but a fatal chance;
For darkling was the battle tried,
And fortune sped the lance.

"If pall and vair<sup>4</sup> no more I wear, 25
Nor thou the crimson sheen,
As warm, we'll say, is the russet gray,
As gay the forest green.

"And, Richard, if our lot be hard, 30
And lost thy native land,
Still Alice has her own Richard,
And he his Alice Brand."

XIII
'Tis merry, 'tis merry, in good greenwood,
So blithe Lady Alice is singing;
On the beech's pride, and oak's brown side, 35
Lord Richard's axe is ringing.

Up spoke the moody Elfin King,
Who won'd<sup>5</sup> within the hill,—
Like wind in the porch of a ruin'd church,
His voice was ghostly shrill. 40

"Why sounds yon stroke on beech and oak,
Our moonlight circle's screen?
Or who comes here to chase the deer,
Beloved of our Elfin Queen?
Or who may dare on wold to wear 45
The fairies' fatal green?"

"Up, Urgan, up! to yon mortal hie,
For thou wert christen'd man;
For cross or sign thou wilt not fly,
For mutter'd word or ban. 50

"Lay on him the curse of the wither'd heart,
The curse of the sleepless eye;
Till he wish and pray that his life would part,
Nor yet find leave to die."

XIV

'Tis merry, 'tis merry, in good greenwood, 55
Though the birds have still'd their singing;
The evening blaze doth Alice raise,
And Richard is fagots bringing.

Up Urgan starts, that hideous dwarf,
Before Lord Richard stands, 60
And, as he cross'd and bless'd himself,
"I fear not sign," quoth the grisly elf,
"That is made with bloody hands."

But out then spoke she, Alice Brand,
That woman void of fear,— 65
"And if there's blood upon his hand,
'Tis but the blood of deer."

"Now loud thou liest, thou bold of mood!
It cleaves unto his hand,
The stain of thine own kindly blood, 70
The blood of Ethert Brand."

Then forward stepp'd she, Alice Brand,
And made the holy sign,—
"And if there's blood on Richard's hand,
A spotless hand is mine. 75

"And I conjure thee, Demon elf,
By Him whom Demons fear,
To show us whence thou art thyself,
And what thine errand here?"—

XV

"'Tis merry, 'tis merry, in Fairy-land, 80
When fairy birds are singing,
When the court doth ride by their monarch's
side,
With bit and bridle ringing:
<sup>6</sup> Dwelt.

<sup>1</sup> Thrush and blackbird.

<sup>2</sup> Sword.

<sup>3</sup> A kind of fine cloth worn by the upper classes.

<sup>4</sup> A kind of fur.

"And gaily shines the Fairy-land—
But all is glistening show,
Like the idle gleam that December's beam
Can dart on ice and snow. 85

"And fading, like that varied gleam,
Is our inconstant shape,
Who now like knight and lady seem,
And now like dwarf and ape. 90

"It was between the night and day,
When the Fairy King has power,
That I sunk down in a sinful fray,
And, 'twixt life and death, was snatch'd away,
To the joyless Elfin bower. 96

"But wist I of a woman bold,
Who thrice my brow durst sign,
I might regain my mortal mold,
As fair a form as thine." 100

She cross'd him once—she cross'd him twice—
That lady was so brave;
The fouler grew his goblin hue,
The darker grew the cave.

She cross'd him thrice, that lady bold; 105
He rose beneath her hand
The fairest knight on Scottish mold,<sup>a</sup>
Her brother, Ethert Brand!

Merry it is in good greenwood,
When the mavis and merle are singing, 110
But merrier were they in Dunfermline gray
When all the bells were ringing.

EDMUND'S SONG

(From Rokeby, 1812)

CANTO III

XVI

O, Brignall banks are wild and fair,
And Greta woods<sup>1</sup> are green,
And you may gather garlands there,
Would grace a summer queen.
And as I rode by Dalton-hall, 5
Beneath the turrets high,
A Maiden on the castle wall
Was singing merrily,—

Chorus

"O, Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
And Greta woods are green; 10
I'd rather rove with Edmund there,
Than reign our English queen."—

"If, maiden, thou wouldst wend with me,
To leave both tower and town,
Thou first must guess what life lead we, 15
That dwell by dale and down?
And if thou canst that riddle read,
As read full well you may,
Then to the greenwood shalt thou speed,
As blithe as Queen of May."— 20

<sup>a</sup> Soil, ground.<sup>1</sup> On the Greta river in Yorkshire; the estate of Rokeby was situated at the junction of this river with the Tees.

Chorus

Yet sung she, "Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are green;
I'd rather rove with Edmund there,
Than reign our English queen.

"I read you, by your bugle-horn, 25
And by your palfrey good,
I read you for a Ranger sworn,
To keep the king's greenwood.—
"A Ranger, lady, winds his horn,
And 'tis at peep of light; 30
His blast is heard at merry morn,
And mine at dead of night."—

Chorus

Yet sung she, "Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are gay;
I would I were with Edmund there, 35
To reign his Queen of May!

"With burnish'd brand and musketoon,<sup>2</sup>
So gallantly you come,
I read you for a bold dragoon,
That lists the tuck<sup>3</sup> of drum."— 40
"I list no more the tuck of drum,
No more the trumpet hear;
But when the beetle sounds his hum,
My comrades take the spear.

Chorus

"And, O! though Brignall banks be fair, 45
And Greta woods be gay,
Yet mickle must the maiden dare,
Would reign my Queen of May!

"Maiden! a nameless life I lead,
A nameless death I'll die; 50
The fiend, whose lantern lights the mead,
Were better mate than I!
And when I'm with my comrades met,
Beneath the greenwood bough,
What once we were we all forget, 55
Nor think what we are now.

Chorus

"Yet Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
And Greta woods are green,
And you may gather garlands there
Would grace a summer queen."— 60

SONG

A WEARY LOT IS THINE

(From the same, CANTO III, XXVIII)

"A weary lot is thine, fair maid,
A weary lot is thine!
To pull the thorn thy brow to braid,
And press the rue for wine!"

<sup>2</sup> A short musket.<sup>3</sup> Beat.<sup>1</sup> Instead of the wine of life she has only rue, the plant associated with repentance and sorrow.

A lightsome eye, a soldier's mien, 5
 A feather of the blue,
 A doublet of the Lincoln green,—
 No more of me you knew,
 My love!
 No more of me you knew. 10
 "This morn is merry June, I trow,
 The rose is budding fain;
 But she shall bloom in winter snow,
 Ere we two meet again."
 He turn'd his charger as he spake, 15
 Upon the river shore,
 He gave his bridle-reins a shake,
 Said, "Adieu forever more,
 My love!
 And adieu forever more."— 20

SONG

ALLAN-A-DALE

(From the same, CANTO III, xxx)

Allan-a-Dale has no faggots for burning,
 Allan-a-Dale has no furrow for turning,
 Allan-a-Dale has no fleece for the spinning,
 Yet Allan-a-Dale has red gold for the winning.
 Come, read me my riddle! come, harken my tale! 5
 And tell me the craft of bold Allan-a-Dale.

The Baron of Ravensworth prances in pride,
 And he views his domains upon Arkindale side.
 The mere for his net, and the land for his game,
 The chase for the wild, and the park for the tame; 10

Yet the fish of the lake, and the deer of the vale,
 Are less free to Lord Dacre than Allan-a-Dale!

Allan-a-Dale was ne'er belted a knight,
 Though his spur be as sharp, and his blade be as bright; 15

Allan-a-Dale is no baron or lord,
 Yet twenty tall yeomen will draw at his word;
 And the best of our nobles his bonnet will vail,<sup>1</sup>
 Who at Rere-cross on Stanmore meets Allan-a-Dale.

Allan-a-Dale to his wooing is come;
 The mother, she ask'd of his household and home: 20

"Though the castle of Richmond stand fair on the hill,
 My hall," quoth bold Allan, "shows gallanter still;

'Tis the blue vault of heaven, with its crescent
 so pale,
 And with all its bright spangles!" said Allan-a-Dale.

The father was steel, and the mother was stone;
 They lifted the latch and they bade him begone;
 But loud, on the morrow, their wail and their cry: 27
 He has laugh'd on the lass with his bonny black eye,

And she fled to the forest to hear a love-tale, 29
 And the youth it was told by was Allan-a-Dale!

<sup>1</sup> Doff in token of submission.

SONG

THE CAVALIER

(From the same, CANTO V, xx)

While the dawn on the mountain was misty and gray,
 My true love has mounted his steed and away,
 Over hill, over valley, o'er dale, and o'er down;
 Heaven shield the brave Gallant that fights for the Crown!

He has doff'd the silk doublet the breast-plate to bear, 5
 He has placed the steel-cap o'er his long flowing hair,
 From his belt to his stirrup his broadsword hangs down,—
 Heaven shield the brave Gallant that fights for the Crown!

For the rights of fair England that broadsword he draws;
 Her King is his leader, her Church is his cause;
 His watchword is honour, his pay is renown,—
 God strike with the Gallant that strikes for the Crown! 12

They may boast of their Fairfax, their Waller, and all
 The round-headed rebels of Westminster Hall;
 But tell those bold traitors of London's proud town, 15
 That the spears of the North have encircled the Crown.

There's Derby and Cavendish, dread of their foes;
 There's Erin's high Ormond, and Scotland's Montrose!
 Would you match the base Skippon, and Massey, and Brown,
 With the Barons of England, that fight for the Crown? 20

Now joy to the crest of the brave Cavalier!
 Be his banner unconquer'd, resistless his spear,
 Till in peace and in triumph his toils he may drown,
 In a pledge to fair England, her Church, and her Crown.

JOCK 'OF HAZELDEAN

(1816)

I

"Why weep ye by the tide, ladie?
 Why weep ye by the tide?
 I'll wed ye to my youngest son,
 And ye sall be his bride:
 And ye sall be his bride, ladie, 5
 Sae comely to be seen"—
 But aye she loot' the tears down fa'
 For Jock of Hazeldean.

<sup>1</sup> Let.

II

"Now let this wilfu' grief be done,
And dry that cheek so pale; 10
Young Frank is chief of Errington
And lord of Langley-dale;
His step is first in peaceful ha',
His sword in battle keen"—
But aye she loot the tears down fa' 15
For Jock of Hazeldean.

III

"A chain of gold ye sall not lack,
Nor braid to bind your hair;
Nor mettled hound, nor managed hawk,
Nor palfrey fresh and fair; 20
And you, the foremost of them a',
Shall ride our forest-queen"—
But aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock of Hazeldean.

IV

The kirk was deck'd at morning-tide, 25
The tapers glimmered fair;
The priest and bridegroom wait the bride,
And dame and knight are there:
They sought her baith by bower and ha'
The ladie was not seen! 30
She's o'er the border and awa'
Wi' Jock of Hazeldean.

HARLAW

(From The Antiquary, 1816)

Now haud your tongue, baith wife and carle,<sup>1</sup>
And listen, great and sma',
And I will sing of Glenallan's Earl
That fought on the red Harlaw.

"The cronach's<sup>2</sup> cried on Bennachie, 5
And down the Don and a',
And hieland and lawland may mournfu' be
For the sair field of Harlaw.—

"They saddled a hundred milk-white steeds,
They hae bridled a hundred black, 10
With a chafron<sup>3</sup> of steel on each horse's head,
And a good knight upon his back."—

"They hadna ridden a mile, a mile,
A mile, but barely ten,
When Donald came branking<sup>4</sup> down the brae 15
Wi' twenty thousand men.

"Their tartans they were waving wide,
Their glaives<sup>5</sup> were glancing clear,
Their pibrochs<sup>6</sup> rung frae side to side
Would deafen ye to hear. 20

<sup>1</sup> Carle. Here = husband. <sup>2</sup> i. e., coronach, or dirge.

<sup>3</sup> The front part of the head piece of a war-horse's armor.

<sup>4</sup> Prancing.

<sup>5</sup> Swords.

<sup>6</sup> Martial music played on the bag pipes by the Highlanders.

"The great Earl in his stirrups stood
That Highland host to see:
Now here a knight that's stout and good
May prove a jeopardie:

"What wouldest thou do, my squire so gay, 25
That rides beside my reyne,
Were ye Glenallan's Earl the day,
And I were Roland Cheyne?

"To turn the rein were sin and shame,
To fight were wondrous peril, 30
What would ye do now, Roland Cheyne,
Were ye Glenallan's Earl?"

"Were I Glenallan's Earl this tide,<sup>7</sup>
And ye were Roland Cheyne,
The spur should be in my horse's side, 35
And the bridle upon his mane.

"If they hae twenty thousand blades,
And we twice ten times ten,
Yet they hae but their tartan plaids,
And we are mail-clad men. 40

"My horse shall ride through ranks sae rude,
As through the moorland fern,
Then ne'er let the gentle Norman blude
Grow cauld for Highland kerne."<sup>8</sup>

MADGE WILDFIRE'S SONG

(From The Heart of Midlothian, 1818)

"Proud Maisie is in the wood,
Walking so early;
Sweet Robin sits on the bush,
Singing so rarely.

"Tell me, thou bonny bird, 5
When shall I marry me?"
'When six braw<sup>1</sup> gentlemen
Kirkward shall carry ye. . . .'

"Who makes the bridal bed, Birdie, say truly?"— 10
'The grey-headed sexton,
That delves<sup>2</sup> the grave duly. . . .

"The glow-worm o'er grave and stone
Shall light thee steady; 15
The owl from the steeple sing,
'Welcome, proud lady.'"

BORDER BALLAD

(From The Monastery, 1820)

I

March, march, Ettrick and Teviotdale, Why the deil dinna ye march forward in order?

March, march, Eskdale and Liddesdale,
All the Blue Bonnets are bound for the Border.

Many a banner spread, 5
Flutters above your head,

<sup>7</sup> Time. <sup>8</sup> A soldier of the lowest rank; or a boor.

<sup>1</sup> Brave.

<sup>2</sup> Digs.

Many a crest that is famous in story;
 Mount and make ready then,
 Sons of the mountain glen,
 Fight for the Queen and the old Scottish glory! 10

II

Come from the hills where the hirsels<sup>1</sup> are grazing,
 Come from the glen of the buck and the roe;
 Come to the crag where the beacon is blazing,
 Come with the buckler, the lance, and the bow.
 Trumpets are sounding, 15
 War-steeds are bounding,
 Stand to your arms then, and march in good order;
 England shall many a day
 Tell of the bloody fray, 19
 When the Blue Bonnets came over the Border!

COUNTY GUY

(From Quentin Durward, 1823)

"Ah! County Guy, the hour is nigh,
 The sun has left the lea,
 The orange-flower perfumes the bower,
 The breeze is on the sea.
 The lark, his lay who thrill'd all day, 5
 Sits hush'd his partner nigh;
 Breeze, bird, and flower, confess the hour,
 But where is County Guy?"
 "The village maid steals through the shade,
 Her shepherd's suit to hear; 10
 To beauty shy, by lattice high,
 Sings high-born Cavalier.
 The star of Love, all stars above,
 Now reigns o'er earth and sky;
 And high and low the influence know— 15
 But where is County Guy?"

Charles Lamb

1775-1834

TO HESTER

(1805)

When maidens such as Hester die,
 Their place ye may not well supply,
 Though ye among a thousand try,
 With vain endeavour.
 A month or more hath she been dead, 5
 Yet cannot I by force be led
 To think upon the wormy bed,
 And her together.

A springy motion in her gait,
 A rising step, did indicate 10
 Of pride and joy no common rate,
 That flushed her spirit.

<sup>1</sup> A flock of sheep or a herd of cattle.

I know not by what name beside
 I shall it call;—if 'twas not pride,
 It was a joy to that allied,
 She did inherit. 15

Her parents held the Quaker rule,
 Which doth the human feeling cool,
 But she was train'd in Nature's school,
 Nature had blest her. 20

A waking eye, a prying mind,
 A heart that stirs, is hard to bind,
 A hawk's keen sight ye cannot blind,
 Ye could not Hester.

My sprightly neighbour, gone before 25
 To that unknown and silent shore,
 Shall we not meet, as heretofore,
 Some summer morning,

When from thy cheerful eyes a ray
 Hath struck a bliss upon the day, 30
 A bliss that would not go away,
 A sweet fore-warning?

THE OLD FAMILIAR FACES

I have had playmates, I have had companions,
 In my days of childhood, in my joyful school-
 days:
 All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I have been laughing, I have been carousing,
 Drinking late, sitting late, with my bosom cronies; 5
 All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I loved a Love once, fairest among women;
 Closed are her doors on me, I must not see her—
 All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I have a friend, a kinder friend has no man; 10
 Like an ingrate, I left my friend abruptly;
 Left him, to muse on the old familiar faces.

Ghost-like I paced round the haunts of my childhood,
 Earth seem'd a desert I was bound to traverse.
 Seeking to find the old familiar faces. 15

Friend of my bosom, thou more than a brother,
 Why wert not thou born in my father's dwelling?
 So might we talk of the old familiar faces,—

How some they have died, and some they have left me,
 And some are taken from me; all are departed;
 All, all are gone, the old familiar faces. 21

Walter Savage Landor

1775-1864

Ah! people were not half so wild
 In former days, when starchy mild, 30
 Upon her high-heel'd Essex smiled
 The Brave Queen Bess.

MILD IS THE PARTING YEAR, AND SWEET

(Collected Works, 1846)

Mild is the parting year, and sweet
 The odour of the falling spray;
 Life passes on more rudely fleet,
 And balmless is its closing day.
 I wait its close, I court its gloom, 5
 But mourn that never must there fall
 Or on my breast or on my tomb
 The tear that would have sooth'd it all.

AH WHAT AVAILS THE SCEPTERED RACE

(From the same)

Ah what avails the sceptered race,
 Ah what the form divine!
 What every virtue, every grace!
 Rose Aylmer, all were thine.
 Rose Aylmer, whom these wakeful eyes 5
 May weep, but never see,
 A night of memories and of sighs
 I consecrate to thee.

YES; I WRITE VERSES

(From the same)

Yes; I write verses now and then,
 But blunt and flaccid is my pen,
 No longer talkt of by young men
 As rather clever: 5
 In the last quarter are my eyes,
 You see it by their form and size;
 Is it not time then to be wise?
 Or now or never.
 Fairest that ever sprang from Eve! 10
 While Time allows the short reprieve,
 Just look at me! would you believe
 'Twas once a lover?
 I cannot clear the five-bar gate
 But, trying first its timber's state,
 Climb stiffly up, take breath, and wait 15
 To trundle over.
 Thro' gallopade<sup>1</sup> I cannot swing
 The entangling blooms of Beauty's spring:
 I cannot say the tender thing,
 Be't true or false, 20
 And am beginning to opine
 Those girls are only half-divine
 Whose waists yon wicked boys entwine
 In giddy waltz.
 I fear that arm above that shoulder, 25
 I wish them wiser, graver, older,
 Sedater, and no harm if colder
 And panting less.

<sup>1</sup> A kind of dance.TO ROBERT BROWNING

(From the same)

There is delight in singing, tho' none hear
 Beside the singer; and there is delight
 In praising, tho' the praiser sit alone
 And see the prais'd far off him, far above.
 Shakespeare is not our poet, but the world's, 5
 Therefore on him no speech! and brief for thee,
 Browning! Since Chaucer was alive and hale,
 No man hath walkt along our roads with step
 So active, so inquiring eye, or tongue
 So varied in discourse. But warmer climes 10 Give brighter plumage, stronger wing: the breeze
 Of Alpine heights thou playest with, borne on Beyond Sorrento and Amalfi, where
 The Siren waits thee, singing song for song.

INTRODUCTION TO THE LAST FRUIT OFF AN OLD TREE

(1853)

I strove with none, for none was worth my
 strife.
 Nature I loved, and, next to Nature, Art;
 I warmed both hands before the fire of Life;
 It sinks, and I am ready to depart.

Joseph Blanco White

1775-1841

SONNET TO NIGHT

(First published 1828)

Mysterious Night! when our first parent knew
 Thee by report Divine, and heard thy name,
 Did he not tremble for this goodly frame,
 This glorious canopy of light and blue?
 But through a curtain of translucent dew, 5
 Bathed in the hues of the great setting flame,
 Hesperus with the Host of Heaven came,
 And lo! creation broadened to man's view.
 Who could have guessed such darkness lay concealed
 Within thy beams, O Sun! or who divined 10
 Whilst bud, and flower, and insect stood revealed,
 Thou to such countless worlds hadst made us
 blind?
 Why should we, then, shun death with anxious
 strife,
 If Light conceals so much, wherefore not Life?

Thomas Campbell

1777-1844

YE MARINERS OF ENGLAND<sup>1</sup>

(1801)

Ye mariners of England
That guard our native seas,
Whose flag has braved a thousand years
The battle and the breeze!
Your glorious standard launch again 5
To match another foe,
And sweep through the deep,
While the stormy winds do blow;
While the battle rages loud and long,
And the stormy winds do blow. 10

The spirits of your fathers
Shall start from every wave!—
For the deck it was their field of fame,
And Ocean was their grave:
Where Blake<sup>2</sup> and mighty Nelson<sup>3</sup> fell 15
Your manly hearts shall glow,
As ye sweep through the deep,
While the stormy winds do blow;
While the battle rages loud and long,
And the stormy winds do blow. 20

Britannia needs no bulwark,
No towers along the steep;
Her march is o'er the mountain waves,
Her home is on the deep.
With thunders from her native oak 25
She quells the floods below—
As they roar on the shore,
Where the stormy winds do blow;
When the battle rages loud and long,
And the stormy winds do blow. 30

The meteor flag of England
Shall yet terrific burn,
Till danger's troubled night depart
And the star of peace return.
Then, then, ye ocean warriors!
35 Our song and feast shall flow
To the fame of your name,
When the storm has ceased to blow;
When the fiery fight is heard no more,
And the storm has ceased to blow. 40

HOHENLINDEN<sup>1</sup>

(1802)

On Linden, when the sun was low,
All bloodless lay th' untrodden snow,
And dark as winter was the flow
Of Iser, rolling rapidly.

<sup>1</sup> When this ode was written England was arrayed singly against France and the greater part of Europe, and her safety depended on the maintenance of her supremacy on the sea.

<sup>2</sup> Robert Blake (1599-1657), a great English admiral, particularly noted for his victories over the Dutch in 1652 and 1657.

<sup>3</sup> Horatio Nelson (afterwards Viscount), the greatest of England's admirals (1758-1805), who was killed in the Battle of Trafalgar. In the original version of the poem Sir Richard Grenville's name was used instead of Nelson's, who was then living.

<sup>1</sup> Campbell was near Hohenlinden, a village in upper

But Linden saw another sight,
When the drum beat at dead of night,
Commanding fires of death to light
The darkness of her scenery. 5

By torch and trumpet fast arrayed,
Each horseman drew his battle blade, 10
And furious every charger neighed,
To join the dreadful revelry.

Then shook the hills with thunder riven,
Then rushed the steed to battle driven,
And louder than the bolts of heaven, 15
Far flashed the red artillery.

But redder yet that light shall glow,
On Linden's hills of stained snow,
And bloodier yet the torrent flow
Of Iser, rolling rapidly. 20

'Tis morn, but scarce yon level sun
Can pierce the war-clouds, rolling dun,
Where furious Frank, and fiery Hun,
Shout in their sulphurous canopy.

The combat deepens. On, ye brave, 25
Who rush to glory, or the grave!
Wave, Munich! all thy banners wave,
And charge with all thy chivalry!

Few, few, shall part where many meet!
The snow shall be their winding sheet, 30
And every turf beneath their feet
Shall be a soldier's sepulchre.

BATTLE OF THE BALTIC<sup>1</sup>

(1809)

Of Nelson and the North
Sing the glorious day's renown,
When to battle fierce came forth 35
All the might of Denmark's crown,
And her arms along the deep proudly shone; 5
By each gun the lighted brand
In a bold determin'd hand,
And the Prince of all the land
Led them on.

Like leviathans afloat 10
Lay their bulwarks on the brine,
While the sign of battle flew
On the lofty British line:
It was ten of April morn by the chime;
As they drifted on their path, 15
There was silence deep as death,
And the boldest held his breath
For a time.

Bavaria, at the time of the battle there in 1800, between the victorious French and the allied Bavarians and Austrians.

<sup>1</sup> An English expedition under Sir Hyde Parker, with Nelson second in command, was sent to the Baltic against a confederacy formed by Russia, Sweden and Denmark. The Battle of the Baltic was fought on April 2, 1801, and Nelson, rather than Parker, was the hero of the day.

But the might of England flushed
To anticipate the scene,
And her van the fleetest rushed O'er the deadly space between—
"Hearts of oak," our captains cried, when each gun
From its adamant lips
Spread a death-shade round the ships,
Like the hurricane eclipse
Of the sun.

Again! again! again!
And the havoc did not slack,
Till a feeble cheer the Dane
To our cheering sent us back;—
Their shots along the deep slowly boom:—
Then ceased—and all is wail,
As they strike the shattered sail,
Or in conflagration pale
Light the gloom.

Out spoke the victor then,
As he hailed them o'er the wave;
"Ye are brothers! ye are men!
And we conquer but to save;
So peace instead of death let us bring:
But yield, proud foe, thy fleet
With the crews, at England's feet,
And make submission meet
To our King."

Then Denmark blest our chief,
That he gave her wounds repose;
And the sounds of joy and grief,
From her people wildly rose,
As death withdrew his shades from the day;
While the sun looked smiling bright
O'er a wide and woeful sight,
Where the fires of funeral light
Died away.

Now joy, old England, raise
For the tidings of thy might,
By the festal cities' blaze,
While the wine cup shines in light;
And yet amidst that joy and uproar,
Let us think of them that sleep,
Full many a fathom deep,
By thy wild and stormy steep,
Elsinore!<sup>2</sup>

Brave hearts! to Britain's pride
Once so faithful and so true,
On the deck of fame that died,
With the gallant good Riou,<sup>3</sup>
Soft sigh the winds of heaven o'er their grave!
While the billow mournful rolls,
And the mermaid's song condoles,
Singing glory to the souls
Of the brave!

SONG

"MEN OF ENGLAND"

Men of England! who inherit
Rights that cost your sires their blood,
Men whose undegenerate spirit
Has been proved on land and flood:
By the foes ye've fought uncounted,
By the glorious deeds ye've done,
Trophies captured—breaches mounted,
Navies conquered—kingdoms won!
Yet, remember, England gathers
Hence but fruitless wreaths of fame,
If the patriotism of your fathers
Glow not in your hearts the same.
What are monuments of bravery,
Where no public virtues bloom?
What avail in lands of slavery,
Trophied temples, arch and tomb?
Pageants!—Let the world revere us
For our people's rights and laws,
And the breasts of civic heroes
Bared in Freedom's holy cause.
Yours are Hampden's, Russell's glory,
Sydney's matchless fame is yours,—
Martyrs in heroic story,
Worth a hundred Agincourts!
We're the sons of sires that baffled
Crowned and mitred tyranny:
They defied the field and scaffold
For their birthrights—so will we!

SONG

TO THE EVENING STAR

Star that bringest home the bee,
And sett'st the weary labourer free!
If any star shed peace, 'tis thou,
That send'st it from above,
Appearing when Heaven's breath and brow,
Are sweet as hers we love.
Come to the luxuriant skies,
Whilst the landscape's odours rise,
Whilst far-off lowing herds are heard,
And songs, when toil is done,
From cottages whose smoke unstirred
Curls yellow in the sun.
Star of love's soft interviews,
Parted lovers on thee muse;
Their remembrancer in Heaven
Of thrilling vows thou art,
Too delicious to be riven
By absence from the heart.

LORD ULLIN'S DAUGHTER
(1804)

A Chieftan to the Highlands bound,
Cries, "Boatman, do not tarry!
And I'll give thee a silver pound,
To row us o'er the ferry."—

<sup>2</sup> A Danish sea-port town about twenty miles from Copenhagen.

<sup>3</sup> Captain Riou, who distinguished himself in an important part of the engagement.

"Now who be ye, would cross Lochgyle,
This dark and stormy water?"
"O, I'm the chief of Ulva's isle,
And this Lord Ullin's daughter,—

"And fast before her father's men
Three days we've fled together,
For should he find us in the glen,
My blood would stain the heather.

"His horsemen hard behind us ride;
Should they our steps discover,
Then who will cheer my bonnie bride
When they have slain her lover?"—

Out spoke the hardy Highland wight,
"I'll go, my chief—I'm ready:—
It is not for your silver bright;
But for your winsome lady:

"And by my word! the bonny bird
In danger shall not tarry:
So though the waves are raging white,
I'll row you o'er the ferry."—

By this the storm grew loud apace,
The water-wraith was shrieking;
And in the scowl of heaven each face
Grew dark as they were speaking.

But still as wilder blew the wind,
And as the night grew drearer,
Adown the glen rode armed men,
Their trampling sounded nearer.

"Oh, haste thee, haste!" the lady cries,
"Though tempests round us gather;
I'll meet the raging of the skies,
But not an angry father."—

The boat has left a stormy land,
A stormy sea before her,—
When, oh! too strong for human hand,
The tempest gathered o'er her.—

And still they rowed amidst the roar
Of waters fast prevailing;
Lord Ullin reached that fatal shore,
His wrath was changed to wailing.—

For sore dismayed, through storm and shade, 45
His child he hid discover:—
One lovely hand she stretched for aid,
And one was round her lover.

"Come back! come back!" he cried in grief,
"Across this stormy water: 50
And I'll forgive your Highland chief,
My daughter!—oh, my daughter!"—

'Twas vain: the loud waves lashed the shore,
Return or aid preventing:—
The waters wild went o'er his child, 55
And he was left lamenting.

Thomas Moore

1779–1852

AS SLOW OUR SHIP

(From Irish Melodies, 1807–1834)

As slow our ship her foamy track
Against the wind was cleaving,
Her trembling pennant still look'd back
To that dear isle 'twas leaving.
So loath we part from all we love, 5
From all the links that bind us;
So turn our hearts, where'er we rove,
To those we've left behind us!

When, round the bowl, of vanish'd years
We talk, with joyous seeming, 10
And smiles that might as well be tears,
So faint, so sad their beaming;
While mem'ry brings us back again
Each early tie that twin'd us,
Oh, sweet's the cup that circles then 15
To those we've left behind us!

And, when in other climes we meet
Some isle or vale enchanting,
Where all looks flow'ry, mild and sweet,
And nought but love is wanting; 20
We think how great had been our bliss,
If Heav'n had but assign'd us
To live and die in scenes like this,
With some we've left behind us!

As travellers oft look back at eve, 25
When eastward darkly going,
To gaze upon the light they leave
Still faint behind them glowing—
So, when the close of pleasure's day
To gloom hath near consign'd us, 30
We turn to catch one fading ray
Of joy that's left behind us.

THE HARP THAT ONCE THROUGH TARA'S HALLS<sup>1</sup>

(From the same)

The harp that once, through Tara's Halls
The soul of music shed,
Now hangs as mute on Tara's walls,
As if that soul were fled:—
So sleeps the pride of former days, 5
So glory's thrill is o'er;
And hearts, that once beat high for praise,
Now feel that pulse no more!

No more to chiefs and ladies bright
The harp of Tara swells; 10
The chord,<sup>2</sup> alone, that breaks at night,
Its tale of ruin tells:—
Thus freedom now so seldom wakes,
The only throb she gives
Is when some heart indignant breaks, 15
To show that still she lives!

<sup>1</sup> The palace of the ancient kings of Ireland, which is said to have stood on the Hill of Tara, in County Meath, Ireland.

<sup>2</sup> Cord, string.

SHE IS FAR FROM THE LAND

(From the same)

She is far from the land where her young Hero sleeps,

And lovers are round her, sighing;
But coldly she turns from their gaze, and weeps,
For her heart in his grave is lying!

She sings the wild song of her dear native plains,
Every note which he lov'd awaking;—
Ah! little they think, who delight in her strains,
How the heart of the Minstrel is breaking!

He had liv'd for his love, for his country he died,
They were all that to life had entwin'd him,
Nor soon shall the tears of his country be dried,
Nor long will his love stay behind him!

Oh! make her a grave where the sun-beams rest,
When they promise a glorious morrow;
They'll shine o'er her sleep, like a smile from the West,
From her own loved island of sorrow!

OFT IN THE STILLY NIGHT

(1816)

Oft, in the stilly night,
Ere Slumber's chain has bound me,
Fond Mem'ry brings the light
Of other days around me;
The smiles, the tears,
Of boyhood's years,
The words of love then spoken;
The eyes that shone,
Now dimm'd and gone,
The cheerful hearts now broken!
Thus, in the stilly night,
Ere Slumber's chain has bound me,
Sad Mem'ry brings the light
Of other days around me.

When I remember all
The friends, so link'd together,
I've seen around me fall,
Like leaves in wintry weather;
I feel like one
Who treads alone
Some banquet-hall deserted,
Whose lights are fled,
Whose garland's dead,
And all but he departed!
Thus, in the stilly night,
Ere Slumber's chain has bound me,
Sad Mem'ry brings the light
Of other days around me.

Ebenezer Elliott

1781-1849

A POET'S EPITAPH

Stop, Mortal! Here thy brother lies,
The Poet of the Poor.
His books were rivers, woods, and skies,
The meadow, and the moor;

His teachers were the torn hearts' wail, 5

The tyrant and the slave,
The street, the factory, the jail,
The palace—and the grave!
The meanest thing, earth's feeblest worm,
He feared to scorn or hate;
And honoured in a peasant's form
The equal of the great.

But if he loved the rich who make
The poor man's little more,
Ill could he praise the rich who take 15
From plundered labour's store.
A hand to do, a head to plan,
A heart to feel and dare—
Tell man's worst foes, here lies the man
Who drew them as they are. 20

James Henry Leigh Hunt

1784-1859

TO THE GRASSHOPPER AND THE CRICKET<sup>1</sup> (1816)

Green little vaulter in the sunny grass,
Catching your heart up at the feel of June,
Sole voice that's heard amidst the lazy noon,
When even the bees lag at the summoning brass:<sup>2</sup>

And you, warm little housekeeper, who class 5
With those who think the candles come too
soon,

Loving the fire, and with your tricksome tune
Nick the glad silent moments as they pass;
Oh sweet and tiny cousins, that belong,
One to the fields, the other to the hearth, 10
Both have your sunshine; both, though small,
are strong

At your clear hearts; and both seem giv'n to
earth

To sing in thoughtful ears this natural song—
In doors and out, summer and winter, Mirth.

Bryan Waller Procter

(Barry Cornwall)

1787-1874

A PETITION TO TIME (1850)

Touch us gently, Time!
Let us glide adown thy stream
Gently,—as we sometimes glide
Through a quiet dream!
Humble voyagers are We, 5
Husband, wife, and children three—(One is lost,—an angel, fled
To the azure overhead!)

Touch us gently, Time!
We've not proud nor soaring wings: 10
Our ambition, our content
Lies in simple things.
Humble voyagers are We,
O'er Life's dim unsounded sea,
Seeking only some calm clime:— 15
Touch us gently, gentle Time!

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Keats' sonnet and n., p. 529.<sup>2</sup> This refers to an old custom of beating on pans, at the time of the swarming of the bees, which was thought to prevent their leaving the premises.

THE SEA

The Sea! the Sea! the open Sea!
The blue, the fresh, the ever free!
Without a mark, without a bound,
It runneth the earth's wide regions 'round;
It plays with the clouds; it mocks the skies; 5
Or like a cradled creature lies.
I'm on the Sea! I'm on the Sea!
I am where I would ever be;
With the blue above, and the blue below,
And silence wheresoe'er I go; 10
If a storm should come and awake the deep,
What matter? I shall ride and sleep.
I love (oh! how I love) to ride
On the fierce foaming bursting tide,
When every mad wave drowns the moon, 15
Or whistles aloft his tempest tune,
And tells how goeth the world below,
And why the south-west blasts do blow.
I never was on the dull tame shore,
But I lov'd the great Sea more and more, 20
And backwards flew to her billowy breast,
Like a bird that seeketh its mother's nest;
And a mother she was, and is to me;
For I was born on the open Sea!
The waves were white, and red the morn, 25
In the noisy hour when I was born;
And the whale it whistled, the porpoise rolled,
And the dolphins bared their backs of gold;
And never was heard such an outcry wild
As welcomed to life the Ocean-child! 30
I've lived since then in calm and strife,
Full fifty summers a sailor's life,
With wealth to spend and a power to range,
But never have sought, nor sighed for change;
And Death, whenever he come to me, 35
Shall come on the wide unbounded Sea!

George Gordon Byron
1788-1824

HE WHO HATH BENT HIM O'ER THE DEAD

(From The Giaour, 1813)

He who hath bent him o'er the dead,
Ere the first day of death is fled,
The first dark day of nothingness, 70
The last of danger and distress,
(Before decay's effacing fingers
Have swept the lines where beauty lingers),
And mark'd the mild angelic air,
The rapture of repose that's there, 75
The fix'd, yet tender traits that streak
The languor of the placid cheek,
And—but for that sad shrouded eye,
That fires not, wins not, weeps not, now,
And but for that chill, changeless brow, 80
Where cold obstruction's apathy
Appals the gazing mourner's heart,
As if to him it could impart

The doom he dreads, yet dwells upon;
Yes, but for these, and these alone, 85
Some moments, ay, one treacherous hour
He still might doubt the tyrant's power;
So fair, so calm, so softly seal'd,
The first, last look by death reveal'd!
Such is the aspect of this shore; 90
'Tis Greece, but living Greece no more!
So coldly sweet, so deadly fair,
We start, for soul is wanting there.
Hers is the loveliness in death,
That parts not quite with parting breath; 95
But beauty with that fearful bloom,
That hue which haunts it to the tomb,
Expression's last receding ray,
A gilded halo hovering round decay,
The farewell beam of feeling past away! 100
Spark of that flame, perchance of heavenly
birth,
Which gleams, but warms no more its cherished
earth!
Clime of the unforgotten brave!
Whose land from plain to mountain-cave
Was freedom's home, or glory's grave! 105
Shrine of the mighty! can it be,
That this is all remains of thee?
Approach, thou craven crouching slave
Say, is not this Thermopylæ?
These waters blue that round you lave, 110
Oh servile offspring of the free—
Pronounce what sea, what shore is this?
The gulf, the rock of Salamis!
These scenes, their story not unknown,
Arise, and make again your own;
Snatch from the ashes of your sires
The embers of their former fires;
And he who in the strife expires
Will add to theirs a name of fear
That tyranny shall quake to hear, 120
And leave his sons a hope, a fame
They too will rather die than shame:
For freedom's battle once begun,
Bequeath'd by bleeding sire to son,
Though baffled oft, is ever won. 125
Bear witness, Greece, thy living page,
Attest it many a deathless age!
While kings, in dusty darkness hid,
Have left a nameless pyramid,
Thy heroes, though the general doom
Hath swept the column from their tomb,
A mightier monument command,
The mountains of their native land!
There points thy muse to stranger's eye
The graves of those that cannot die! 135
'Twere long to tell, and sad to trace,
Each step from splendour to disgrace;
Enough—no foreign foe could quell
Thy soul, till from itself it fell;
Yes! self-abasement paved the way 140
To villain-bonds and despot-sway.
What can he tell who treads thy shore?
No legend of thine olden time,
No theme on which the muse might soar
High as thine own in days of yore, 145
When man was worthy of thy clime.

THE DESTRUCTION OF SENNACHERIB<sup>1</sup>

(From Hebrew Melodies, 1815)

The Assyrian came down like the wolf on the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold;
And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the sea,
When the blue wave rolls nightly on deep Galilee.

Like the leaves of the forest when summer is green,
That host with their banners at sunset were seen:

Like the leaves of the forest when Autumn hath blown,
That host on the morrow lay withered and strown.

For the Angel of Death spread his wings on the blast,
And breathed in the face of the foe as he passed;
And the eyes of the sleepers waxed deadly and chill,
And their hearts but once heaved, and for ever grew still!

And there lay the steed with his nostril all wide,
But through it there rolled not the breath of his pride;
And the foam of his gasping lay white on the turf,
And cold as the spray of the rock-beating surf.

And there lay the rider distorted and pale,
With the dew on his brow, and the rust on his mail;
And the tents were all silent, the banners alone,
The lances uplifted, the trumpet unblown.

And the widows of Ashur<sup>2</sup> are loud in their wail,
And the idols are broke in the temple of Baal;
And the might of the Gentile, unsmeared by the sword,
Hath melted like snow in the glance of the Lord!

OH! SNATCH'D AWAY IN BEAUTY'S BLOOM

(From the same)

I

Oh! snatch'd away in beauty's bloom,
On thee shall press no ponderous tomb;
But on thy turf shall roses rear
Their leaves, the earliest of the year;
And the wild cypress wave in tender gloom:

<sup>1</sup> Sennacherib, King of Assyria (705-681 B. C.), was defeated in an expedition against Phœnicia and Palestine, and was compelled to abandon the siege of Jerusalem. See II Chron. xxxii.

<sup>2</sup> Widows of Ashur = Assyria.

II

And oft by yon blue gushing stream
Shall Sorrow lean her drooping head,
And feed deep thought with many a dream,
And lingering pause and lightly tread;
Fond wretch! as if her step disturb'd the dead!

III

Away! we know that tears are vain,
That death nor heeds nor hears distress.
Will this unteach us to complain?
Or make one mourner weep the less?
And thou—who tell'st me to forget,
Thy looks are wan, thine eyes are wet.

STANZAS FOR MUSIC

(1815)

"O Lachrymarum fons, tenero sacros!
Ducentium ortus ex animo: quater
Felix! in imo qui scatentem Pectore te, pia Nympha, sensit."

—Gray's Poemata.

I

There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away,
When the glow of early thought declines in feeling's dull decay;
'Tis not on youth's smooth cheek the blush alone, which fades so fast,
But the tender bloom of heart is gone, e'er youth itself be past.

II

Then the few whose spirits float above the wreck of happiness
Are driven o'er the shoals of guilt or ocean of excess:
The magnet of their course is gone, or only points in vain
The shore to which their shiver'd sail shall never stretch again.

III

Then the mortal coldness of the soul like death itself comes down;
It cannot feel for others' woes, it dare not dream its own;
That heavy chill has frozen o'er the fountain of our tears,
And though the eye may sparkle still, 'tis where the ice appears.

IV

Though wit may flash from fluent lips, and mirth distract the breast,
Through midnight hours that yield no more their former hope of rest;
'Tis but as ivy leaves around the ruin'd turret wreath,
All green and wildly fresh without, but worn and gray beneath.

<sup>1</sup> "O fount of tears, sprung from the tender heart of those who inspire the holy! Thrice blessed is he who feels thee, sacred Nymph, gush from his inmost being."

V

Oh could I feel as I have felt,—or be what I have been,
Or weep as I could once have wept o'er many a vanish'd scene:
As springs in deserts found seem sweet, all brackish though they be,
So midst the wither'd waste of life, those tears would flow to me. 20

SHE WALKS IN BEAUTY

(From the same)

I

She walks in beauty, like the night
Of cloudless climes and starry skies;
And all that's best of dark and bright
Meet in her aspect and her eyes:
Thus mellow'd to that tender light
Which heaven to gaudy day denies. 5

II

One shade the more, one ray the less,
Had half impair'd the nameless grace
Which waves in every raven tress,
Or softly lightens o'er her face; 10
Where thoughts serenely sweet express
How pure, how dear, their dwelling-place.

III

And on that cheek, and o'er that brow,
So soft, so calm, yet eloquent,
The smiles that win, the tints that glow, 15
But tell of days in goodness spent,
A mind at peace with all below,
A heart whose love is innocent!

SONNET ON CHILLON

(Introduction to The Prisoner of Chillon)

(1816)

Eternal spirit of the chainless mind!
Brightest in dungeons, Liberty! thou art,
For there thy habitation is the heart—
The heart which love of thee alone can bind;
And when thy sons to fetters are consign'd— 5
To fetters, and the damp vault's dayless
gloom,
Their country conquers with their martyrdom,
And Freedom's fame finds wings on every wind.
Chillon! thy prison is a holy place,
And thy sad floor an altar—for 'twas trod, 10
Until his very steps have left a trace
Worn, as if thy cold pavement were a sod,
By Bonnivard!<sup>1</sup>—May none those marks
efface!
For they appeal from tyranny to God.

<sup>1</sup> Bonnivard was the "Prisoner of Chillon," the chief figure in Byron's poem of that title. A man of republican views and of high character, he was imprisoned in the castle of Chillon about 1530, and remained there for six years.

CHILDE<sup>1</sup> HAROLD'S PILGRIMAGE

(1816)

CANTO III

III

In my youth's summer<sup>2</sup> I did sing of One, a
The wandering outlaw of his own dark
mind; 20
Again I seize the theme, then but begun,
And bear it with me, as the rushing wind
Bears the cloud onwards: in that Tale I find
The furrows of long thought, and dried-up tears, c
Which, ebbing, leave a sterile track behind, d
O'er which all heavily the journeying years 26
Plod the last sands of life,—where not a flower appears. . . . c

VIII

Something too much of this:—but now 'tis
past,
And the spell closes with its silent seal. 65
Long absent Harold re-appears at last;
He of the breast which fain no more would feel,
Wrung with the wounds which kill not, but ne'er heal;
Yet Time, who changes all, had altered him
In soul and aspect as in age: years steal 70
Fire from the mind as vigour from the limb;
And life's enchanted cup but sparkles near the brim.

IX

His had been quaff'd too quickly, and he found
The dregs were wormwood; but he fill'd
again,
And from a purer fount, on holier ground, 75
And deem'd its spring perpetual; but in vain!
Still round him clung invisibly a chain
Which gall'd forever, fettering though unseen,
And heavy though it clank'd not; worn with pain,
Which pined although it spoke not, and grew keen,
Entering with every step he took through many a scene. . . . 81

XII

But soon he knew himself the most unfit 100
Of men to herd with Man; with whom he held
Little in common; untaught to submit
His thoughts to others, though his soul was quell'd
In youth by his own thoughts; still uncom-
pell'd,

<sup>1</sup> Childe (the heir, of a noble house) is a title made familiar by the Old Ballads like Childe Waters, Childe Roland.

<sup>2</sup> The first two cantos appeared in 1812, or about four years previously.

He would not yield dominion of his mind 105
To spirits against whom his own rebell'd;
Proud though in desolation; which could find
A life within itself, to breathe without mankind.

XIII

Where rose the mountains, there to him
were friends;
Where roll'd the ocean, thereon was his
home; 110
Where a blue sky, and glowing clime, extends,
He had the passion and the power to roam;
The desert, forest, cavern, breaker's foam,
Were unto him companionship; they spake
A mutual language, clearer than the tome 115
Of his land's tongue, which he would oft forsake
For Nature's pages glass'd by sunbeams on the lake.

XIV

Like the Chaldean, he could watch the stars,
Till he had peopled them with beings bright
As their own beams; and earth, and earth-born jars,
And human frailties, were forgotten quite: 121
Could he have kept his spirit to that flight
He had been happy; but this clay will sink
Its spark immortal, envying it the light
To which it mounts, as if to break the link 125
That keeps us from yon heaven which woos us to its brink.

XV

But in Man's dwellings he became a thing
Restless and worn, and stern and wear-some,
Droop'd as a wild-born falcon with clipt
wing,
To whom the boundless air alone were
home: 130
Then came his fit again, which to o'ercome,
As eagerly the barr'd-up bird will beat
His breast and beak against his wiry dome
Till the blood tinge his plumage, so the heat
Of his impeded soul would through his bosom
eat. 135

XVI

Self-exiled Harold wanders forth again,
With naught of hope left, but with less of
gloom;
The very knowledge that he lived in vain,
That all was over on this side the tomb,
Had made Despair a smilingness assume, 140
Which, though 'twere wild,—as on the plunder'd wreck
When mariners would madly meet their
doom
With draughts intemperate on the sinking deck,—
Did yet inspire a cheer, which he forbore to check. . . . 144

XVIII

And Harold stands upon this place of skulls,
The grave of France, the deadly Waterloo; 155
How in an hour the power which gave annals
Its gifts, transferring fame as fleeting too!
In "pride of place"<sup>3</sup> here last the eagle flew,
Then tore with bloody talon the rent plain,
Pierced by the shaft of banded nations
through; 160
Ambition's life and labours all were vain;
He wears the shatter'd links of the world's broken chain. . . .

XXI

There was a sound of revelry by night,<sup>4</sup> 181
And Belgium's capital had gather'd then
Her Beauty and her Chivalry, and bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave
men;
A thousand hearts beat happily; and when 185
Music arose with its voluptuous swell,
Soft eyes look'd love to eyes which spake
again,
And all went merry as a marriage-bell;
But hush! hark! a deep sound strikes like a rising knell!

XXII

Did ye not hear it?—No; 'twas but the wind, 190
Or the car rattling o'er the stony street;
On with the dance! let joy be unconfined;
No sleep till morn, when Youth and Pleasure meet
To chase the glowing Hours with flying feet—
But, Hark!—that heavy sound breaks in once more
As if the clouds its echo would repeat; 196
And nearer, clearer, deadlier than before!
Arm! Arm! it is—it is—the cannon's opening roar!

XXIII

Within a window'd niche of that high hall
Sate Brunswick's fated chieftain;<sup>5</sup> he did hear 200
That sound the first amidst the festival,
And caught its tone with Death's prophetic
ear;
And when they smiled because he deem'd it near,
His heart more truly knew that peal too
well
Which stretch'd his father on a bloody bier, 205
And roused the vengeance blood alone could quell:
He rush'd into the field, and, foremost fighting fell.

<sup>3</sup> A term in falconry, applied to certain hawks that soar to a place high in the air, and from thence swoop upon their prey. V. Macb. II. iv.

<sup>4</sup> This stanza refers to a ball given by the Duchess of Richmond, at Brussels, on the night before the battle of Waterloo. The boom of cannon rang through the city, and the festivity was broken up by a rush to arms.

<sup>5</sup> Duke Frederick William of Brunswick, who lost his life fighting at Quatre Bras, 1815.

XXIV

Ah! then and there was hurrying to and fro,
 And gathering tears, and tremblings of distress,
 And cheeks all pale, which but an hour ago 210
 Blush'd at the praise of their own loveliness;
 And there were sudden partings, such as press
 The life from out young hearts, and choking
 sighs
 Which ne'er might be repeated; who could guess
 If ever more should meet those mutual
 eyes, 215
 Since upon night so sweet such awful morn could rise?

XXV

And there was mounting in hot haste: the steed,
 The mustering squadron, and the clattering
 car,
 Went pouring forward with impetuous speed,
 And swiftly forming in the ranks of war; 220
 And the deep thunder peal on peal afar;
 And near, the beat of the alarming drum
 Roused up the soldier ere the morning star;
 While throng'd the citizens with terror dumb,
 Or whispering, with white lips—"The foe!
 They come! they come!" 225

XXVI

And wild and high the "Cameron's gathering"
 ing" rose!
 The war-note of Lochiel, which Albyn's hills<sup>7</sup>
 Have heard, and heard, too, have her Saxon foes:—
 How in the noon of night that pibroch
 thrills, 229
 Savage and shrill! But with the breath which fills
 Their mountain-pipe, so fill the mountaineers
 With the fierce native daring which instils
 The stirring memory of a thousand years,
 And Evan's,<sup>8</sup> Donald's fame rings in each clansman's ears!

XXVII

And Ardennes waves above them her green leaves,
 Dewy with nature's tear-drops, as they pass,
 Grieving, if aught inanimate e'er grieves, 237
 Over the unreturning brave,—alas!
 Ere evening to be trodden like the grass
 Which now beneath them, but above shall grow 240
 In its next verdure, when this fiery mass
 Of living valour, rolling on the foe
 And burning with high hope, shall moulder cold and low.

<sup>6</sup> The tune played on the bagpipes to marshal the clan of Cameron. At Waterloo the Gordon Highlanders were commanded by Colonel Cameron, a descendant of the famous Highland Camerons of Lochiel.

<sup>7</sup> The Scotch Highlands.

<sup>8</sup> Sir Evan Cameron and his son Donald, famous ancestors of Colonel Cameron, who fought against England.

XXVIII

Last noon beheld them full of lusty life,
 Last eve in Beauty's circle proudly gay, 245
 The midnight brought the signal-sound of
 strife,
 The morn the marshalling in arms,—the day
 Battle's magnificently-stern array!
 The thunder-clouds close o'er it, which when rent
 The earth is cover'd thick with other clay, 250
 Which her own clay shall cover, heap'd and pent,
 Rider and horse,—friend, foe,—in one red burial blent! . . .

LXXXV

Clear, placid Leman! thy contrasted lake, 797
 With the wild world I dwell in, is a thing
 Which warns me, with its stillness, to forsake
 Earth's troubled waters for a purer spring. 800
 This quiet sail is as a noiseless wing
 To waft me from distraction; once I loved
 Torn ocean's roar, but thy soft murmuring
 Sounds sweet as if a sister's voice reproved,
 That I with stern delights should e'er have been so moved. 805

LXXXVI

It is the hush of night, and all between Thy margin and the mountains, dusk, yet clear,
 Mellow'd and mingling, yet distinctly seen,
 Save darken'd Jura, whose cap heights appear
 Precipitously steep; and drawing near, 810
 There breathes a living fragrance from the shore,
 Of flowers yet fresh with childhood; on the
 ear
 Drops the light drip of the suspended oar,
 Or chirps the grasshopper one good-night carol
 more;

LXXXVII

He is an evening reveller, who makes 815
 His life an infancy, and sings his fill;
 At intervals, some bird from out the brakes
 Starts into voice a moment, then is still.
 There seems a floating whisper on the hill,
 But that is fancy, for the starlight dew 820
 All silently their tears of love instil,
 Weeping themselves away, till they infuse
 Deep into Nature's breast the spirit of her hues.

LXXXVIII

Ye stars! which are the poetry of heaven!
 If in your bright leaves we would read the fate 825
 Of men and empires,—'tis to be forgiven,
 That in our aspirations to be great,
 Our destinies o'erleap their mortal state,
 And claim a kindred with you; for ye are
 A beauty and a mystery, and create 830
 In us such love and reverence from afar,
 That fortune, fame, power, life, have named themselves a star.

LXXXIX

All heaven and earth are still—though not in sleep,
But breathless, as we grow when feeling most;
And silent, as we stand in thoughts too deep:— 835
All heaven and earth are still: From the high host
Of stars, to the lull'd lake and mountain-coast,
All is concentr'd in a life intense,
Where not a beam, nor air, nor leaf is lost,
But hath a part of being, and a sense 840
Of that which is of all Creator and defence.

XC

Then stirs the feeling infinite, so felt
In solitude, where we are least alone;
A truth, which through our being then doth melt
And purifies from self: it is a tone, 845
The soul and source of music, which makes known Eternal harmony, and sheds a charm,
Like to the fabled Cytherea's<sup>9</sup> zone,
Binding all things with beauty;—'twould disarm
The spectre Death, had he substantial power to harm. 850

XCI

Not vainly did the early Persian make
His altar the high places and the peak
Of earth-o-ergazing mountains, and thus take
A fit and unwall'd temple, there to seek
The spirit, in whose honour shrines are weak, 855
Uprear'd of human hands. Come, and compare Columns and idol-dwellings, Goth or Greek,
With Nature's realms of worship, earth and air,
Nor fix on fond abodes to circumscribe thy pray'r!

XCII

The sky is changed!—and such a change—
Oh night, 860
And storm, and darkness, ye are wondrous strong,
Yet lovely in your strength, as is the light
Of a dark eye in woman! Far along,
From peak to peak, the rattling crags among Leaps the live thunder! Not from one lone cloud, 865
But every mountain now hath found a tongue,
And Jura answers, through her misty shroud,
Back to the joyous Alps, who call to her aloud!

XCIII

And this is in the night:—Most glorious night!
Thou wert not sent for slumber! let me be 870

• Venus.

A sharer in thy fierce and far delight,—
A portion of the tempest and of thee!
How the lit lake shines, a phosphoric sea,
And the big rain comes dancing to the earth!
And now again 'tis black,—and now, the glee 875
Of the loud hills shakes with its mountain-mirth,
As if they did rejoice o'er a young earthquake's birth.

XCIV

Now, where the swift Rhone cleaves his way between Heights which appear as lovers who have parted
In hate, whose mining depths so intervene,
That they can meet no more, though broken-hearted! 881
Though in their souls, which thus each other thwarted:
Love was the very root of the fond rage
Which blighted their life's bloom, and then departed:
Itself expired, but leaving them an age 885
Of years all winters,—war within themselves to wage.

XCv

Now, where the quick Rhone thus hath cleft his way,
The mightiest of the storms hath ta'en his stand:
For here, not one, but many, make their play,
And fling their thunderbolts from hand to hand, 890
Flashing and cast around: of all the band,
The brightest through these parted hills hath fork'd
His lightnings,—as if he did understand,
That in such gaps as desolation work'd,
There the hot shaft should blast whatever therein lurk'd. 895

XCVI

Sky, mountains, river, winds, lake, lightnings! Ye!
With night, and clouds, and thunder, and a soul
To make these felt and feeling, well may be Things that have made me watchful; the far roll
Of your departing voices, is the knoll 900
Of what in me is sleepless,—if I rest.
But where of ye, oh tempests! is the goal?
Are ye like those within the human breast?
Or do ye find, at length, like eagles, some high nest?

XCvII

Could I embody and unbosom now 905
That which is most within me,—could I weak
My thoughts upon expression, and thus throw
Soul, heart, mind, passions, feelings, strong or weak,

All that I would have sought, and all I seek,
 Bear, know, feel, and yet breathe—into one
 word, 910
 And that one word were Lightning, I would
 speak;
 But as it is, I live and die unheard,
 With a most voiceless thought, sheathing it as a sword. . . .

CANTO IV

(1818)

LXXVIII

Oh Rome! my country! city of the soul! 694
 The orphans of the heart must turn to thee,
 Lone mother of dead empires! and control
 In their shut breasts their petty misery.
 What are our woes and sufferance? Come and see
 The cypress, hear the owl, and plod your
 way
 O'er steps of broken thrones and temples,
 Ye! 700
 Whose agonies are evils of a day—
 A world is at our feet as fragile as our clay.

LXXIX

The Niobe<sup>10</sup> of nations! there she stands,
 Childless and crownless, in her voiceless woe,
 An empty urn within her wither'd hands, 705
 Whose holy dust was scatter'd long ago;
 The Scipio's tomb contains no ashes now;
 The very sepulchres lie tenantless
 Of their heroic dwellers: dost thou flow,
 Old Tiber! through a marble wilderness? 710
 Rise, with thy yellow waves, and mantle her distress.

LXXX

The Goth, the Christian, Time, War, Flood,
 and Fire,
 Have dealt upon the seven-hill'd city's pride;
 She saw her glories star by star expire,
 And up the steep, barbarian monarchs ride,
 Where the car climb'd the Capitol; far and wide 716
 Temple and tower went down, nor left a site:—
 Chaos of ruins! who shall trace the void,
 O'er the dim fragments cast a lunar light,
 And say, "here was, or is," where all is doubly
 night?

LXXXI

The double night of ages, and of her, 721
 Night's daughter, Ignorance, hath wrapt and wrap
 All round us; we but feel our way to err:
 The ocean hath his chart, the stars their map,
 And knowledge spreads them on her ample lap; 725
 But Rome is as the desert, where we steer
 Stumbling o'er recollections; now we clap
 Our hands, and cry "Eureka!" it is clear—
 Where but some false mirage of ruin rises near.

<sup>10</sup> The wife of Amphion, king of Thebes. She had six sons and six daughters, all of whom were slain through the jealousy of Latona.

LXXXII

Alas! the lofty city! and alas! 730
 The trebly hundred triumphs! and the day
 When Brutus made the dagger's edge surpass
 The conqueror's sword in bearing fame
 away!
 Alas, for Tully's<sup>11</sup> voice, and Virgil's lay,
 And Livy's pictured page!—but these shall be 735
 Her resurrection; all beside—decay.
 Alas for earth, for never shall we see
 That brightness in her eye she bore when Rome was free. . . .

CLXXV

But I forget.—My Pilgrim's shrine is won,
 And he and I must part,—so let it be,—
 His task and mine alike are nearly done;
 Yet once more let us look upon the sea; 1570
 The midland ocean breaks on him and me,
 And from the Alban Mount we now behold
 Our friend of youth, that ocean, which when we
 Beheld it last by Calpe's rock unfold
 Those waves, we follow'd on till the dark Euxine roll'd

CLXXVI

Upon the blue Symplegades: long years—Long, though not very many, since have
 done 1577
 Their work on both; some suffering and some tears
 Have left us nearly where we had begun:
 Yet not in vain our mortal race hath run,
 We have had our reward—and it is here; 1581
 That we can yet feel gladden'd by the sun,
 And reap from earth, sea, joy almost as
 dear
 As if there were no man to trouble what is clear.

CLXXVII

Oh! that the Desert were my dwelling-place,
 With one fair Spirit for my minister, 1586
 That I might all forget the human race,
 And, hating no one, love but only her!
 Ye Elements!—in whose ennobling stir
 I feel myself exalted—Can ye not 1590
 Accord me such a being? Do I err
 In deeming such inhabit many a spot?
 Though with them to converse can rarely be our lot.

CLXXVIII

There is a pleasure in the pathless woods,
 There is a rapture on the lonely shore, 1595
 There is society, where none intrudes,
 By the deep Sea, and music in its roar:
 I love not Man the less, but Nature more,
 From these our interviews, in which I steal
 From all I may be, or have been before, 1600
 To mingle with the Universe, and feel
 What I can ne'er express, yet cannot all conceal.

<sup>11</sup> Cicero.

CLXXIX

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue Ocean—roll!<sup>12</sup>
Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain,
Man marks the earth with ruin—his control
                                                                1605
Stops with the shore;—upon the watery plain
The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain
A shadow of man's ravage, save his own,
When, for a moment, like a drop of rain,
He sinks into thy depths with bubbling
groan,
                                                                1610 Without a grave, unknell'd, uncoffin'd, and unknown.

CLXXX

His steps are not upon thy paths,—thy fields
Are not a spoil for him,—thou dost arise
And shake him from thee; the vile strength
    he wields
For earth's destruction thou dost all despise,
Spurning him from thy bosom to the skies,
And send'st him, shivering in thy playful
    spray
And howling, to his Gods, where haply lies 1617
His petty hope in some near port or bay,
And dashest him again to earth:—there let him
    lay.

CLXXXI

The armaments which thunderstrike the walls 1621
Of rock-built cities, bidding nations quake,
And monarchs tremble in their capitals,
The oak leviathans, whose huge ribs make
Their clay creator the vain title take 1625
Of lord of thee, and arbiter of war;
These are thy toys, and, as the snowy flake,
They melt into thy yeast of waves, which
mar
Alike the Armada's pride, or spoils of Trafalgar.

CLXXXII

Thy shores are empires, changed in all save
thee—
Assyria, Greece, Rome, Carthage, what are they?
Thy waters wasted them while they were free, 1632
And many a tyrant since; their shores obey
The stranger, slave, or savage; their decay
Has dried up realms to deserts:—not so thou,
Unchangeable save to thy wild waves' play—
Time writes no wrinkle on thine azure
brow— 1637
Such as creation's dawn beheld, thou rollest
now.

<sup>12</sup> These lines suggest the following passage from Lucretius:

"So when wild tempests over ocean sweep
 Leaders, and legions, and the pomp of war;
 Their fleet a plaything in the hands of storms,
 How come the proud commanders then with prayers
 And votive gifts, imploring peace from gods!
 In vain: since not the less for prayers they oft
 In whirlwinds seized are borne to shades of death," etc.
 (De Rerum Natura, Bk. V. 1221. Good's trans.)

CLXXXIII

Thou glorious mirror, where the Almighty's
form
Glasses itself in tempests; in all time 1640
Calm or convulsed—in breeze, or gale, or
storm,
Icing the pole, or in the torrid clime
Dark-heaving;—boundless, endless, and sublime—
The image of Eternity—the throne
Of the Invisible; even from out thy slime 1645
The monsters of the deep are made; each zone
Obeys thee; thou goest forth, dread, fathomless, alone.

CLXXXIV

And I have loved thee, Ocean! and my joy
Of youthful sports was on thy breast to be Borne, like thy bubbles, onward: from a boy
I wanton'd with thy breakers—they to me
Were a delight; and if the freshening sea 1652
Made them a terror—'twas a pleasing fear,
For I was as it were a child of thee,
And trusted to thy billows far and near 1655
And laid my hand upon thy mane—as I do
here.

THE COLISEUM AT NIGHT

(From Manfred, Act III. iv, 1817)

The stars are forth, the moon above the tops 261
Of the snow-shining mountains.—Beautiful!
I linger yet with Nature, for the night
Hath been to me a more familiar face
Than that of man; and in her starry shade 265
Of dim and solitary loveliness,
I learn'd the language of another world.
I do remember me, that in my youth,
When I was wandering,—upon such a night
I stood within the Coliseum's wall, 270
Midst the chief relics of almighty Rome:
The trees which grew along the broken arches
Waved dark in the blue midnight, and the star
Shone through the rents of ruin; from afar
The watch-dog bay'd beyond the Tiber; and 275
More near from out the Cæsars' palace came
The owl's long cry, and, interruptedly,
Of distant sentinels the fitful song
Begun and died upon the gentle wind.
Some cypresses beyond the time worn breach
Appear'd to skirt the horizon, yet they stood 281
Within a bowshot.—Where the Cæsars dwelt,
And dwell the tuneless birds of night, amidst
A grove which springs through levell'd battlements,
And twines its roots with the imperial hearths,
Ivy usurps the laurel's place of growth;— 286
But the gladiator's bloody Circus stands,
A noble wreck in ruinous perfection!
While Cæsars' chambers and the Augustan halls,
Grovel on earth in indistinct decay,— 290
And thou didst shine, thou rolling moon, upon
All this, and cast a wide and tender light,

Which soften'd down the hoar austerity
Of rugg'd desolation, and fill'd up,
As 't were anew, the gaps of centuries, 295
Leaving that beautiful which still was so,
And making that which was not, till the place
Became religion, and the heart ran o'er
With silent worship of the great of old!— The dead, but sceptred sovereigns, who still rule 300
Our spirits from their urns.—

DON JUAN

CANTO III

(1821)

The isles of Greece! the isles of Greece!
Where burning Sappho loved and sung,—690
Where grew the arts of war and peace,—
Where Delos rose and Phoebus sprung!
Eternal summer gilds them yet,
But all, except their sun, is set.

The Scian and the Teian muse, 695
The hero's harp, the lover's lute,
Have found the fame your shores refuse;
Their place of birth alone is mute
To sounds which echo further west
Than your sires' "Islands of the Bless'd." 700

The mountains look on Marathon—
And Marathon looks on the sea;
And musing there an hour alone,
I dream'd that Greece might still be free,
For, standing on the Persians' grave, 705
I could not deem myself a slave.

A king sate on the rocky brow
Which looks o'er sea-born Salamis;
And ships, by thousands, lay below,
And men in nations;—all were his! 710
He counted them at break of day—
And when the sun set, where were they?

And where are they? and where art thou,
My country? On thy voiceless shore
The heroic lay is tuneless now—
The heroic bosom beats no more!
And must thy lyre, so long divine,
Degenerate into hands like mine?

'Tis something, in the dearth of fame,
Though link'd among a fetter'd race, 720
To feel at least a patriot's shame,
Even as I sing, suffuse my face;
For what is left the poet here?
For Greeks a blush—for Greece a tear.

Must we but weep o'er days more bless'd? 725
Must we but blush?—Our fathers bled.
Earth! render back from out thy breast
A remnant of thy Spartan dead!
Of the three hundred grant but three,
To make a new Thermopylae. 730

What, silent still? and silent all?
Ah! no;—the voices of the dead
Sound like a distant torrent's fall,
And answer, "Let one living head,
But one arise,—we come, we come!" 735
'Tis but the living who are dumb.

In vain—in vain: strike other chords;
Fill high the cup with Samian wine!
Leave battles to the Turkish hordes,
And shed the blood of Scio's vine! 740
Hark! rising to the ignoble call—
How answers each bold bacchanal!

You have the Pyrrhic dance as yet,
Where is the Pyrrhic phalanx gone?
Of two such lessons, why forget 745
The nobler and the manlier one?
You have the letters Cadmus gave—
Think ye he meant them for a slave?

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
We will not think of themes like these. 750
It made Anacreon's song divine:
He served—but served Polycrates—
A tyrant; but our masters then
Were still, at least, our countrymen.

The tyrant or the Chersonese 755
Was freedom's best and bravest friend,
That tyrant was Miltiades!
Oh! that the present hour would lend
Another despot of the kind!
Such claims as his were sure to bind. 760

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
On Suli's rock, and Parga's shore,
Exists the remnant of a line
Such as the Doric mothers bore;
And there, perhaps, some seed is sown, 765
The Heracleidan blood might own.

Trust not for freedom to the Franks—
They have a king who buys and sells.
In native swords, and native ranks,
The only hope of courage dwells; 770
But Turkish force, and Latin fraud,
Would break your shield, however broad.

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
Our virgins dance beneath the shade—
I see their glorious black eyes shine; 775
But, gazing on each glowing maid,
My own the burning tear-drop laves,
To think such breasts must suckle slaves.

Place me on Sunium's marbled steep—
Where nothing, save the waves and I, 780
May hear our mutual murmurs sweep;
There, swan-like, let me sing and die.
A land of slaves shall ne'er be mine—
Dash down yon cup of Samian wine! . . .

XC

And glory long has made the sages smile;
 'Tis something, nothing, words, illusion,
 wind— 810
 Depending more upon the historian's style
 Than on the name a person leaves behind:
 Troy owes to Homer what whist owes to Hoyle:
 The present century was growing blind
 To the great Marlborough's skill in giving knocks 815
 Until his late Life by Archdeacon Coxe.

XCI

Milton's the prince of poets—so we say;
 A little heavy, but no less divine:
 An independent being in his day—
 Learn'd, pious, temperate in love and wine;
 But his life falling into Johnson's way, 821
 We're told this great high-priest of all the Nine
 Was whipt at college—a harsh sire—odd spouse,
 For the first Mrs. Milton left his house.

XCII

All these are, certainly, entertaining facts, 825
 Like Shakespeare's stealing deer, Lord
 Bacon's bribes;
 Like Titus' youth, and Cæsar's earliest acts;
 Like Burns (whom Dr. Currie well describes) Like Cromwell's pranks;—but although truth exacts
 These amiable descriptions from the scribes,
 As most essential to their hero's story, 831
 They do not much contribute to his glory.

XCIII

All are not moralists, like Southey, when
 He prated to the world of "Pantisocracy;"<sup>1</sup>
 Or Wordsworth unexcised,<sup>2</sup> unhir'd, who then Season'd his pedlar poems<sup>3</sup> with democracy;
 Or Coleridge, long before his flighty pen 837
 Let to the Morning Post its aristocracy;
 When he and Southey, following the same path,
 Espoused two partners<sup>4</sup> (milliners of Bath). 840

XCIV

Such names at present cut a convict figure,
 The very Botany Bay<sup>5</sup> in moral geography;
 Their loyal treason, renegado vigour,
 Are good manure for their more bare biography.
 Wordsworth's last quarto, by the way, is bigger 845
 Than any since the birthday of typography;
 A clumsy, frowzy poem, call'd the "Excursion"<sup>6</sup>
 Writ in a manner which is my aversion.

<sup>1</sup> The equal rule of all. Southey and Coleridge, when young men, planned to found a Utopian society on the banks of the Susquehanna. They called it Pantisocracy.

<sup>2</sup> After ardently advocating Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity, in his youth, Wordsworth in later life became more conservative and even accepted a post under the government.

<sup>3</sup> An allusion to an early poem of Wordsworth's on Peter Bell, a pedlar.

<sup>4</sup> The Misses Fricker of Bath.

<sup>5</sup> The well known convict colony in New South Wales.

<sup>6</sup> Published in 1814.

XCV

He there builds up a formidable dyke
 Between his own and others' intellect; 850
 But Wordsworth's poem, and his followers, like
 Joanna Southcote's Shiloh,<sup>7</sup> and her sect,
 Are things which in this century don't strike
 The public mind,—so few are the elect;
 And the new births of both their stale virginities 855
 Have proved but dropsies taken for divinities. . . .

CI

T' our tale.—The feast was over, the slaves
 gone,
 The dwarfs and dancing girls had all retir'd;
 The Arab lore and poet's song were done,
 And every sound of revelry expir'd; 900
 The lady and her lover, left alone,
 The rosy flood of twilight sky admir'd;—
 Ave Maria! o'er the earth and sea,
 That heavenliest hour of Heaven is worthiest thee!

CII

Ave Maria! blessed be the hour! 905
 The time, the clime, the spot, where I so oft
 Have felt that moment in its fullest power
 Sink o'er the earth so beautiful and soft,
 While swung the deep bell in the distant tower,
 Or the faint dying day-hymn stole aloft, 910
 And not a breath crept through the rosy air,
 And yet the forest leaves seem stir'd with prayer. . . .

CV

Sweet hour of twilight!—in the solitude
 Of the pine forest, and the silent shore 930
 Which bounds Ravenna's<sup>8</sup> immemorial wood, Rooted where once the Adrian wave flow'd o'er,
 To where the last Cæsarean fortress stood,
 Evergreen forest! which Boccaccio's lore<sup>9</sup>
 And Dryden's lay made haunted ground to
 me, 935
 How have I loved the twilight hour and thee!

CVI

The shrill cicalas, people of the pine,
 Making their summer lives one ceaseless
 song,
 Were the sole echoes, save my steed's and
 mine,
 And vesper-bell's that rose the boughs
 along; 940

<sup>7</sup> Joanna Southcote was a visionary, born in Devon about 1750, who prophesied that she would give birth to a second Shiloh, or Prince of Peace, on Oct. 19th, 1814. Instead, she fell into a trance and died in the same year.

<sup>8</sup> The celebrated pine forest called La Pineta, the most venerable forest in Italy.

<sup>9</sup> Boccaccio chose this forest for the scene of a ghastly story, Nostalgia degli Onesti, in which the mounted spectre of a knight pursues with dogs the ghostly form of a woman who in life repelled his love with scorn. Dryden used the legend in his poem of Theodore and Honoria.

The spectre huntsman of Onesti's line,
 His hell-dogs, and their chase, and the fair
 throng
 Which learn'd from this example not to fly
 From a true lover, shadow'd my mind's eye.

CVII

Oh, Hesperus! thou bringest all good things—
 Home to the weary, to the hungry cheer, 946
 To the young bird the parent's brooding wings,
 The welcome stall to the o'erlabour'd steer;
 Whate'er of peace about our hearthstone clings,
 Whate'er our household gods protect of dear,
 Are gather'd round us by thy look of rest; 951
 Thou bring'st the child, too, to the mother's breast.

CVIII

Soft hour! which wakes the wish and melts the
 heart
 Of those who sail the seas, on the first day
 When they from their sweet friends are torn apart; 955
 Or fills with love the pilgrim on his way
 As the far bell of vesper makes him start,
 Seeming to weep the dying day's decay;
 Is this a fancy which our reason scorns?
 Ah! surely nothing dies but something mourns! . . . 960

ON THIS DAY I COMPLETE MY THIRTY-SIXTH YEAR

MISSOLOGHI, Jan. 22, 1824.

I

'Tis time this heart should be unmoved,
 Since others it hath ceased to move!
 Yet, though I cannot be beloved,
 Still let me love!

II

My days are in the yellow leaf 5
 The flowers and fruits of love are gone:
 The worm, the canker, and the grief
 Are mine alone!

III

The fire that on my bosom preys 10
 Is lone as some volcanic isle;
 No torch is kindled at its blaze—
 A funeral pile!

IV

The hope, the fear, the jealous care, 15
 The exalted portion of the pain
 And power of love I cannot share,
 But wear the chain.

V

But 'tis not thus—and 'tis not here—
 Such thoughts would shake my soul, nor now,
 Where glory decks the hero's bier,
 Or binds his brow. 20

VI

The sword, the banner, and the field,
 Glory and Greece around me see!
 The Spartan, borne upon his shield,
 Was nor more free.

VII

Awake (not Greece—she is awake!) 25,
 Awake, my spirit! Think through whom
 Thy life-blood tracks its parent lake,
 And then strike home!

VIII

Tread these reviving passions down, 30
 Unworthy manhood!—unto thee
 Indifferent should the smile or frown
 Of beauty be.

IX

If thou regret'st thy youth, why live:
 The land of honourable death
 Is here:—up to the field, and give Away thy breath!

X

Seek out—less often sought than found—
 A soldier's grave, for thee the best;
 Then look around, and choose thy ground,
 And take thy rest. 40

Percy Bysshe Shelley

1792–1822

ODE TO THE WEST WIND

(1819)

I

O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's being,
 Thou, from whose unseen presence the leaves
 dead
 Are driven, like ghosts from an enchanter fleeing,
 Yellow, and black, and pale, and hectic red,
 Pestilence-stricken multitudes: O thou, 5
 Who chariotest to their dark wintry bed

The wingèd seeds, where they lie cold and low,
 Each like a corpse within its grave, until Thine azure sister of the Spring shall blow

Her clarion o'er the dreaming earth, and fill 10
 (Driving sweet buds like flocks to feed in air)
 With living hues and odours plain and hill:

Wild Spirit, which art moving every where;
 Destroyer and preserver; hear, oh, hear!

II

Thou on whose stream, 'mid the steep sky's
 commotion, 15
 Loose clouds like earth's decaying leaves are
 shed,
 Shook from the tangled boughs of Heaven and Ocean,

Angels of rain and lightning: there are spread
On the blue surface of thine airy surge,
Like the bright hair uplifted from the head 20

Of some fierce Mænad,<sup>1</sup> even from the dim verge
Of the horizon to the zenith's height,
The locks of the approaching storm. Thou didge

Of the dying year, to which this closing night
Will be the dome of a vast sepulchre, 25
Vaulted with all thy congregated might

Of vapours, from whose solid atmosphere
Black rain, and fire, and hail will burst: oh,
hear!

III

Thou who didst waken from his summer dreams
The blue Mediterranean, where he lay, 30
Lulled by the coil of his crystalline streams,

Beside a pumice isle in Baia's<sup>2</sup> bay,
And saw in sleep old palaces and towers
Quivering within the wave's intenser day,

All overgrown with azure moss, and flowers 35
So sweet the sense faints picturing them! Thou
For whose path the Atlantic's level powers

Cleave themselves into chasms, while far below
The sea-blooms and the oozy woods which wear
The sapless foliage of the ocean know 40

Thy voice, and suddenly grow gray with fear,
And tremble and despoil themselves: oh, hear!

IV

If I were a dead leaf thou mightest bear;
If I were a swift cloud to fly with thee;
A wave to pant beneath thy power, and share 45

The impulse of thy strength, only less free
Than thou, O uncontrollable! If even
I were as in my boyhood, and could be

The comrade of thy wanderings over heaven,
As then, when to outstrip thy skye speed 50
Scarce seemed a vision; I would ne'er have striven

As thus with thee in prayer in my sore need.
Oh, lift me as a wave, a leaf, a cloud!
I fall upon the thorns of life! I bleed!

A heavy weight of hours has chained and bowed 55
One too like thee: tameless, and swift, and proud.

<sup>1</sup> A priestess of Bacchus, or Baccante. Mænad (derived from a Greek verb meaning to rage) suggests the frenzied enthusiasm of the worshippers at the Bacchic festivals.

<sup>2</sup> The modern Baja on the Bay of Naples; in classic times it was a luxurious and beautiful resort, and the ruins of some of its splendid buildings still remain.

V

Make me thy lyre, even as the forest is:
What if my leaves are falling like its own!
The tumult of thy mighty harmonies

Will take from both a deep, autumnal tone, 60
Sweet though in sadness. Be thou, Spirit fierce,
My spirit! Be thou me, impetuous one!

Drive my dead thoughts over the universe
Like withered leaves to quicken a new birth!
And, by the incantation of this verse, 65

Scatter, as from an unextinguished hearth
Ashes and sparks, my words among mankind!
Be through my lips to unawakened earth

The trumpet of a prophecy! O wind,
If Winter comes, can Spring be far behind? 70

TO A SKYLARK

(1820)

Hail to thee, blithe Spirit!
Bird thou never wert,
That from Heaven, or near it,
Pourest thy full heart
In profuse strains of unpremeditated art. 5

Higher still and higher
From the earth thou springest
Like a cloud of fire;
The blue deep thou wingest,
And singing still dost soar, and soaring ever singing. 10

In the golden lightning
Of the sunken sun,
O'er which clouds are bright'ning,
Thou dost float and run;
Like an unbodied joy whose race is just begun.

The pale purple even Melts around thy flight;
Like a star of heaven,
In the broad day-light
Thou art unseen,—but yet I hear thy shrill delight, 20

Keen as are the arrows
Of that silver sphere,
Whose intense lamp narrows
In the white dawn clear
Until we hardly see—we feel that it is there. 25

All the earth and air
With thy voice is loud,
As, when Night is bare,
From one lonely cloud
The moon rains out her beams, and Heaven is overflowed. 30

What thou art we know not;
What is most like thee?
From rainbow clouds there flow not
Drops so bright to see
As from thy presence showers a rain of melody.

Like a Poet hidden 36
 In the light of thought,
 Singing hymns unbidden
 Till the world is wrought
 To sympathy with hopes and fears it heeded not: 40

Like a high-born maiden
 In a palace tower,
 Soothing her love-laden
 Soul in secret hour
 With music sweet as love,—which overflows her bower: 45

Like a glow-worm golden
 In a dell of dew,
 Scattering unhehdden
 Its aerial hue
 Among the flowers and grass which screen it from the view: 50

Like a rose embowered
 In its own green leaves,
 By warm winds deflowered,
 Till the scent it gives Makes faint with too much sweet those heavy-winged thieves: 55

Sound of vernal showers
 On the twinkling grass,
 Rain-awakened flowers,
 All that ever was Joyous and clear and fresh, thy music doth surpass. 60

Teach us, Sprite or Bird,
 What sweet thoughts are thine;
 I have never heard
 Praise of love or wine
 That panted forth a flood of rapture so divine. 66

Chorus Hymnæal,
 Or triumphal chaunt,
 Matched with thine, would be all
 But an empty vaunt,
 A thing wherein we feel there is some hidden want. 70

What objects are the fountains
 Of thy happy strain?
 What fields or waves or mountains?
 What shapes of sky or plain?
 What love of thine own kind? what ignorance of
 pain? 75

With thy clear keen joyance
 Languor cannot be;
 Shadow of annoyance
 Never came near thee;
 Thou lovest—but ne'er knew love's sad
 satiety. 80

Waking or asleep
 Thou of death must deem Things more true and deep
 Than we mortals dream—
 Or how could thy notes flow in such a crystal stream? 85

We look before and after,
 And pine for what is not;
 Our sincerest laughter
 With some pain is fraught;
 Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest
 thought. 90

Yet if we could scorn
 Hate and pride and fear;
 If we were things born
 Not to shed a tear,
 I know not how thy joy we ever should come
 near. 95

Better than all measures
 Of delightful sound,
 Better than all treasures
 That in books are found,
 Thy skill to poet were, thou scorner of the
 ground! 100

Teach me half the gladness
 That thy brain must know,
 Such harmonious madness
 From my lips would flow,
 The world should listen then—as I am listening
 now. 105

THE CLOUD

(1820)

I bring fresh showers for the thirsting flowers,
 From the seas and the streams;
 I bear light shade for the leaves when laid
 In their noonday dreams.
 From my wings are shaken the dews that waken 5

The sweet buds every one,
 When rocked to rest on their mother's breast,
 As she dances about the sun.
 I wield the flail of the lashing hail,
 And whiten the green plains under, 10
 And then again I dissolve it in rain,
 And laugh as I pass in thunder.

I sift the snow on the mountains below,
 And their great pines groan aghast;
 And all the night 'tis my pillow white,
 While I sleep in the arms of the blast.
 Sublime on the towers of my skyey bowers,
 Lightning my pilot sits;
 In a cavern under is fettered the thunder,
 It struggles and howls by fits; 20

Over earth and ocean, with gentle motion,
 This pilot is guiding me,
 Lured by the love of the genii that move
 In the depths of the purple sea;
 Over the rills, and the crags, and the hills, 25
 Over the lakes and the plains,
 Wherever he dream, under mountain or stream,
 The Spirit he loves remains;
 And I all the while bask in heaven's blue smile,
 Whilst he is dissolving in rains. 30

OZYMANDIAS

(1817)

The sanguine sunrise, with his meteor eyes
 And his burning plumes outspread,
 Leaps on the back of my sailing rack,
 When the morning star shines dead;
 As on the jag of a mountain crag,
 Which an earthquake rocks and swings,
 An eagle alit one moment may sit
 In the light of its golden wings.
 And when sunset may breathe, from the lit sea
 beneath,
 Its ardours of rest and of love,
 And the crimson pall of eve may fall
 From the depth of heaven above,
 With wings folded I rest, on mine airy nest,
 As still as a brooding dove.

35

That orbèd maiden, with white fire laden,
 Whom mortals call the Moon,
 Glides glimmering o'er my fleece-like floor,
 By the midnight breezes strewn;
 And wherever the beat of her unseen feet,
 Which only the angels hear,
 May have broken the woof of my tent's thin
 roof,
 The stars peep behind her and peer;
 And I laugh to see them whirl and flee,
 Like a swarm of golden bees,
 When I widen the rent in my wind-built
 tent,
 Till the calm rivers, lakes and seas,
 Like strips of the sky fallen through me on
 high,
 Are each paved with the moon and these.

45

55

I bind the sun's throne with a burning zone,
 And the moon's with a girdle of pearl;
 The volcanoes are dim, and the stars reel and swim,
 When the whirlwinds my banner unfurl.
 From cape to cape, with a bridge-like shape,
 Over a torrent sea,
 Sunbeam-proof, I hang like a roof,—
 The mountains its columns be,
 The triumphal arch, through which I march,
 With hurricane, fire, and snow,
 When the powers of the air are chained to my chair,
 Is the million-coloured bow;
 The sphere-fire above its soft colours wove,
 While the moist earth was laughing below.

60

70

I am the daughter of earth and water,
 And the nursling of the sky;
 I pass through the pores of the ocean and shores;
 I change, but I cannot die.
 For after the rain, when with never a stain
 The pavilion of heaven is bare,
 And the winds and sunbeams with their convex gleams,
 Build up the blue dome of air,
 I silently laugh at my own cenotaph,
 And out of the caverns of rain,
 Like a child from the womb, like a ghost from the tomb,
 I arise and unbuild it again.

80

I met a traveller from an antique land
 Who said, Two vast and trunkless legs of stone
 Stand in the desert. Near them, on the sand,
 Half sunk, a shattered visage lies, whose frown,
 And wrinkled lip, and sneer of cold command,
 Tell that its sculptor well those passions read
 Which yet survive, stamped on these lifeless
 things,
 The hand that mocked them and the heart
 that fed;
 And on the pedestal these words appear:
 "My name is Ozymandias, king of kings:
 Look on my works, ye Mighty, and despair!"
 Nothing beside remains. Round the decay
 Of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare,
 The lone and level sands stretch far away.

ADONAIŠ<sup>1</sup>

(1821)

I

I weep for Adonais—he is dead!<sup>h</sup>
 Oh, weep for Adonais! though our tears<sup>h</sup> Thaw not the frost which binds so dear a head!<sup>a</sup>
 And thou, sad Hour, selected from all years<sup>h</sup>
 To mourn our loss, rouse thy obscure com-peers,<sup>h</sup>
 And teach them thine own sorrow; Say:
 "With me<sup>c</sup>
 Died Adonais; till the Future dares<sup>h</sup>
 Forget the Past, his fate and fame shall be<sup>c</sup>
 An echo and a light unto eternity!"<sup>c</sup>

5

II

Where wert thou, mighty Mother, when he lay,
 When thy Son lay, pierced by the Shaft which flies
 In darkness? where was lorn Urania
 When Adonais died? With veiled eyes,
 'Mid listening Echoes, in her Paradise
 She sate, while one, with soft enamoured breath,

15

<sup>1</sup> Keats, whose untimely loss to poetry is the theme of Adonais, died in Rome, Feb. 23, 1821, in his twenty-sixth year. Adonais was written in the following May (v. Stanzas xvi and xviii.). While not a close friend of Keats, Shelley had a sincere, increasing, but not an unequalled admiration for his poetry; moreover, he held the then prevalent, but unfounded, belief, that the young poet's death was the result of his grief and disappointment over the harsh and unfair criticism he had received. Hence, in writing Adonais, Shelley was influenced chiefly by two feelings: regret that a poet of high promise should have been "hotted from the stage of life," and passionate indignation against the perpetrator of the wrong. Under these circumstances, Shelley's elegy became a lament for Keats the poet, rather than for Keats the man, and its true theme is the loss that poetry (rather than Shelley himself) has sustained. Beginning with this theme, Shelley passes to general speculations on life, death, and the hereafter.

Adonais is modelled on two Greek elegies, that of Bion on Adonis (translated by Mrs. Browning), and of Moschus on Bion.

Rekindled all the fading melodies,
With which, like flowers that mock the corse
beneath,
He had adorned and hid the coming bulk of death.

III

Oh, weep for Adonais—he is dead!
Wake, melancholy Mother,<sup>2</sup> wake and weep! 20
Yet wherefore? Quench within their burning bed
Thy fiery tears, and let thy loud heart keep
Like his a mute and uncomplaining sleep;
For he is gone where all things wise and fair
Descend. Oh, dream not that the amorous
Deep 25
Will yet restore/him to the vital air;
Death feeds on his mute voice, and laughs at our despair.

IV

Most musical of mourners, weep again!
Lament anew, Urania!—He died,<sup>3</sup>
Who was the sire of an immortal strain, Blind, old, and lonely, when his country's pride 31
The priest, the slave, and the liberticide
Trampled and mocked with many a loathed rite
Of lust and blood; he went, unterrified,
Into the gulf of death; but his clear Sprite Yet reigns o'er earth, the third<sup>4</sup> among the sons of light. 36

V

Most musical of mourners, weep anew!
Not all to that bright station dared to climb;
And happier they their happiness who knew,
Whose tapers yet burn through that night of
time 40
In which suns perished; others more sublime,
Struck by the envious wrath of man or God,
Have sunk, extinct in their refulgent prime;
And some yet live, treading the thorny road,
Which leads, through toil and hate, to Fame's serene abode. 45

VI

But now, thy youngest, dearest one has perished,
The nursling of thy widowhood, who grew,
Like a pale flower by some sad maiden cherished

And fed with true-love tears instead of dew;

<sup>2</sup> Urania was the muse of astronomy. Urania means "the heavenly one," and Shelley, like Milton and Tennyson (taking the word Urania in a spiritual and not in a material sense), makes her the personification of the Heavenly Power, the Mother of all holy and beautiful things, and, hence, the inspirer, or Mother, of poets. (v. Par. Lost. vii. 1-5, sup. p. 223 and In Memoriam, xxxvii).

<sup>3</sup> Milton.

<sup>4</sup> If Shelley is speaking here of epic poets only, the two other poets of the trio are probably Homer and Dante. In this case, Milton would be "the third," not necessarily in greatness, but in chronological succession.

Most musical of mourners, weep anew! 50
Thy extreme hope, the loveliest and the
last,
The bloom, whose petals, nipt before they blew,
Died on the promise of the fruit, is waste;
The broken lily lies—the storm is overpast.

VII

To that high Capital,<sup>5</sup> where kingly Death
Keeps his pale court in beauty and decay, 56
He came; and bought, with price of purest
breath,
A grave among the eternal.—Come away!
Haste, while the vault of blue Italian day
Is yet his fitting charnel-roof! while still 60
He lies, as if in dewy sleep he lay;
Awake him not! surely he takes his fill
Of deep and liquid rest, forgetful of all ill.

VIII

He will awake no more, oh, never more!
Within the twilight chamber spreads apace
The shadow of white Death, and at the door 66
Invisible Corruption waits to trace
His extreme way to her dim dwelling-place;
The eternal Hunger sits, but pity and awe
Soothe her pale rage, nor dares she to deface
So fair a prey, till darkness and the law 71
Of change, shall o'er his sleep the mortal curtain draw.

IX

Oh, weep for Adonais!—The quick Dreams,
The passion-winged ministers of thought,
Who were his flocks, whom near the living
streams
Of his young spirit he fed, and whom he taught 76
The love which was its music, wander not,— Wander no more, from kindling brain to brain,
But droop there, whence they sprung; and mourn their lot Round the cold heart, where, after their sweet pain, 80
They ne'er will gather strength, or find a home
again.

X

And one with trembling hands clasps his cold head,
And fans him with her moonlight wings, and
cries,
"Our love, our hope, our sorrow, is not dead;
See, on the silken fringe of his faint eyes, 85
Like dew upon a sleeping flower, there lies A tear some Dream has loosened from his brain."
Lost Angel of a ruined Paradise!
She knew not 'twas her own; as with no stain
She faded, like a cloud which had outwipt its rain.

<sup>5</sup> Rome, where Keats is buried. He thus has literally "a grave among the eternal."

XI

One from a lucid urn of starry dew 91
 Washed his light limbs as if embalming them;
 Another clipt her profuse locks, and threw
 The wreath upon him, like an anadem,<sup>6</sup>
 Which frozen tears instead of pearls begem;
 Another in her wifful grief would break 96
 Her bow and winged reeds, as if to stem
 A greater loss with one which was more
 weak;
 And dull the barbèd fire against his frozen cheek.

XII

Another Splendour on his mouth alit, 100
 That mouth, whence it was wont to draw the
 breath
 Which gave it strength to pierce the guarded
 wit,
 And pass into the panting heart beneath
 With lightning and with music: the damp
 death
 Quenched its caress upon his icy lips; 105
 And, as a dying meteor stains a wreath
 Of moonlight vapour, which the cold night clips,
 It flushed through his pale limbs, and past to its eclipse.

XIII

And others came . . . Desires and Adora-tions,
 Winged Persuasions and veiled Destinies,
 Splendours, and Glooms, and glimmering
 Incarnations 111
 Of hopes and fears, and twilight Fantasies;
 And Sorrow, with her family of Sighs,
 And Pleasure, blind with tears, led by the gleam
 Of her own dying smile instead of eyes, 115
 Came in slow pomp;—the moving pomp might seem
 Like pageantry of mist on an autumnal stream.

XIV

All he had loved, and molded into thought,
 From shape, and hue, and odour, and sweet
 sound,
 Lamented Adonais. Morning sought 120
 Her eastern watch tower, and her hair unbound,
 Wet with the tears which should adorn the
 ground,
 Dimmed the ærial eyes that kindle day;
 Afar the melancholy thunder moaned,
 Pale Ocean in quiet slumber lay, 125
 And the wild winds flew round, sobbing in their dismay.

XV

Lost Echo sits amid the voiceless mountains,
 And feeds her grief with his remembered lay,
 And will no more reply to winds or fountains,
 Or amorous birds perched on the young green
 spray, 130
 Or herdsman's horn, or bell at closing day;

<sup>6</sup> Fillet, or garland, for the head.

Since she can mimic not his lips, more dear
 Than those for whose disdain she pined away
 Into a shadow of all sounds:—a drear
 Murmur, between their songs, is all the woodmen hear. 135

XVI

Grief made the young Spring wild, and she threw down
 Her kindling buds, as if she Autumn were,
 Or they dead leaves; since her delight is flown,
 For whom should she have waked the sullen
 year?
 To Phœbus was not Hyacinth so dear, 140
 Nor to himself Narcissus, as to both
 Thou, Adonais; wan they stand and sere
 Amid the faint companions of their youth,
 With dew all turned to tears; odour, to sighing
 ruth.

XVII

Thy spirit's sister, the lorn nightingale, 145
 Mourns not her mate with such melodious
 pain;
 Not so the eagle, who like thee could scale
 Heaven, and could nourish in the sun's domain
 Her mighty youth with morning, doth complain,
 Soaring and screaming round her empty
 nest, 150
 As Albion wails for thee: the curse of Cain
 Light on his head' who pierced thy innocent
 breast,
 And scared the angel soul that was its earthly guest!

XVIII

Ah woe is me! Winter is come and gone,
 But grief returns with the revolving year;
 The airs and streams renew their joyous tone; 156
 The ants, the bees, the swallows reappear;
 Fresh leaves and flowers deck the dead Seasons' bier;
 The amorous birds now pair in every brake,
 And build their mossy homes in field and brake;<sup>8</sup> 160
 And the green lizard and the golden snake,
 Like unimprisoned flames, out of their trance awake.

XIX

Through wood and stream and field and hill
 and Ocean,
 A quickening life from the Earth's heart has burst,
 As it has ever done, with change and motion,
 From the great morning of the world when first 166
 God dawned on Chaos; in its stream immersed

<sup>7</sup> i.e., on the head of the critic whose adverse review of Keats' Endymion in the Quarterly was erroneously supposed by Shelley to have caused the poet's death.

<sup>8</sup> Briar.

The lamps of Heaven flash with a softer
light;
All baser things pant with life's sacred thirst,
Diffuse themselves, and spend in love's
delight, 170
The beauty and the joy of their renewed might.

XX

The leprous corpse touched by this spirit tender,
Exhales itself in flowers of gentle breath;
Like incarnations of the stars, when splen-dour
Is changed to fragrance, they illumine death
And mock the merry worm that wakes beneath. 176
Nought we know dies. Shall that alone which knows
Be as a sword consumed before the sheath
By sightless lightning?—the intense atom glows
A moment, then is quenched in a most cold repose. 180

XXI

Alas! that all we loved of him should be,
But for our grief, as if it had not been,
And grief itself be mortal! Woe is me!
Whence are we, and why are we? of what scene
The actors or spectators? Great and mean Meet massed in death, who lends what life must borrow. 186
As long as skies are blue, and fields are green, Evening must usher night, night urge the morrow,
Month follow month with woe, and year wake year to sorrow.

XXII

He will awake no more, oh, never more! 190
"Wake thou," cried Misery, "childless
Mother, rise
Out of thy sleep, and slake, in thy heart's core,
A wound more fierce than his with tears and sighs."
And all the Dreams that watched Urania's
eyes,
And all the Echoes whom their sister's song
Had held in holy silence, cried, "Arise!" 196 Swift as a Thought by the snake Memory
stung,
From her ambrosial rest the fading Splendour sprung.

XXIII

She rose like an autumnal night, that springs
Out of the East, and follows wild and drear
The golden Day, which, on eternal wings, 201
Even as a ghost abandoning a bier,
Had left the Earth a corpse,—sorrow and fear
So struck, so roused, so rapt Urania;
So saddened round her like an atmosphere
Of stormy mist; so swept her on her way 206
Even to the mournful place where Adonais lay.

XXIV

Out of her secret Paradise she sped,
Through camps and cities rough with stone,
And steel,
And human hearts which, to her airy tread
Yielding not, wounded the invisible 211
Palms of her tender feet where'er they fell;
And barbèd tongues, and thoughts more sharp than they,
Rent the soft Form they never could repel,
Whose sacred blood, like the young tears of
May, 215
Paved with eternal flowers that undeserving
way.

XXV

In the death-chamber for a moment Death,
Shamed by the presence of that living Might,
Blushed to annihilation, and the breath
Revisited those lips, and life's pale light 220
Flashed through those limbs, so late her dear
delight.
"Leave me not wild and drear and comfort-less,
As silent lightning leaves the starless night!
Leave me not!" cried Urania; her distress Roused Death; Death rose and smiled, and met her vain caress. 225

XXVI

"Stay yet awhile! speak to me once again;
Kiss me, so long but as a kiss may live;
And in my heartless breast and burning brain
That word, that kiss, shall all thoughts else survive,
With food of saddest memory kept alive, 230
Now thou art dead, as if it were a part
Of thee, my Adonais! I would give
All that I am to be as thou now art!
But I am chained to Time, and cannot thence depart!

XXVII

"O gentle child, beautiful as thou wert, 235
Why didst thou leave the trodden paths of
men
Too soon, and with weak hands though mighty heart
Dare the unpastured dragon<sup>9</sup> in his den?
Defenceless as thou wert, oh, where was then Wisdom the mirrored shield, or scorn the spear? 240
Or hadst thou waited the full cycle, when Thy spirit should have filled its crescent
sphere,
The monsters of life's waste had fled from thee
like deer.

XXVIII

"The herded wolves, bold only to pursue;
The obscene ravens, clamorous o'er the dead;
The vultures, to the conqueror's banner
true, 246
Who feed where Desolation first has fed,
And whose wings rain contagion;—how they fled,

<sup>9</sup> The brutal critic, ravening for prey like a beast in his den. Unpastured (Lat. impastus), unfed, hungry.

When, like Apollo, from his golden bow
 The Pythian of the age<sup>10</sup> one arrow sped 250
 And smiled!—The spoilers tempt no second
 blow,
 They fawn on the proud feet that spurn them lying low.

XXIX

“The sun comes forth, and many reptiles spawn;
 He sets, and each ephemeral insect then
 Is gathered into death without a dawn, 255
 And the immortal stars awake again;
 So it is in the world of living men:
 A godlike mind soars forth, in its delight Making earth bare and veiling heaven, and when
 It sinks, the swarms that dimmed or shared its light 260
 Leave to its kindred lamps the spirit’s awful night.”

XXX

Thus ceased she: and the mountain shepherds<sup>11</sup> came,
 Their garlands sere, their magic mantles
 rent;
 The Pilgrim of Eternity,<sup>12</sup> whose fame
 Over his living head like Heaven is bent, 265
 An early but enduring monument,
 Came, veiling all the lightnings of his song
 In sorrow; from her wilds Ierne<sup>13</sup> sent
 The sweetest lyrist<sup>14</sup> of her saddest wrong,
 And love taught grief to fall like music from his tongue. 270

XXXI

Midst others of less note, came one frail
 Form,<sup>15</sup>
 A phantom among men; companionless
 As the last cloud of an expiring storm,
 Whose thunder is its knell; he, as I guess,
 Had gazed on Nature’s naked loveliness, 275
 Acteon-like, and now he fled astray
 With feeble steps o’er the world’s wilderness,
 And his own thoughts, along that rugged way, Pursued, like raging hounds, their father and their prey.

XXXII

A pardlike<sup>16</sup> Spirit beautiful and swift— 280
 A Love in desolation masked:—a Power
 Girt round with weakness;—it can scarce uplift
 The weight of the superincumbent hour;

<sup>10</sup> Byron, who slew the wolves, ravens, and vultures of the critical Reviews by a counter-attack in his English Bards and Scotch Reviewers. He is here likened to Apollo the Pythian, or the Python-slayer.

<sup>11</sup> Keats’ brother-poets. Their songs are hushed “in sorrow;” their laurel-wreaths are withered; their singing-robcs “rent” in token of grief. Shelley follows Lycidas, and other accepted models, in making his elegy pastoral in character.

<sup>12</sup> Byron, the poet of Childe Harold’s Pilgrimage.

<sup>13</sup> Ireland.

<sup>14</sup> Thomas Moore. By Ireland’s “saddest wrong” Shelley is supposed to mean the suppression of the insurrection of 1803, and the execution of the Irish leader Robert Emmet. Several songs of Moore, including O Breathe not his Name, were inspired by Emmet’s fate.

<sup>15</sup> Shelley himself.

<sup>16</sup> Leopard-like.

It is a dying lamp, a falling shower, 284
 A breaking billow;—even whilst we speak
 Is it not broken? On the withering flower
 The killing sun smiles brightly: on a cheek
 The life can burn in blood, even while the heart may break.

XXXIII

His head was bound with pansies overblown,
 And faded violets, white, and pied, and blue;
 And a light spear topped with a cypress cone,
 Round whose rude shaft dark ivy tresses grew 292
 Yet dripping with the forest’s noonday dew,
 Vibrated, as the ever-beating heart
 Shook the weak hand that grasped it: of that crew 295
 He came the last, neglected and apart;
 A herd-abandoned deer struck by the hunter’s dart.

XXXIV

All stood aloof, and at his partial moan Smiled through their tears; well knew that gentle band
 Who in another’s fate now wept his own, 300
 As in the accents of an unknown land
 He sang new sorrow; sad Urania scanned
 The Stranger’s mien, and murmured: “Who art thou?”
 He answered not, but with a sudden hand
 Made bare his branded and ensanguined
 brow, 305
 Which was like Cain’s or Christ’s—oh! that it should be so!

XXXV

What softer voice is hushed over the dead?<sup>17</sup>
 Athwart what brow is that dark mantle thrown?
 What form leans sadly o’er the white death-
 bed,
 In mockery of monumental stone, 310
 The heavy heart heaving without a moan?
 If it be He, who, gentlest of the wise,
 Taught, soothed, loved, honoured the departed one;
 Let me not vex with inharmonious sighs
 The silence of that heart’s accepted sacrifice. 315

XXXVI

Our Adonais has drunk poison—oh,
 What deaf and viperous murderer could crown
 Life’s early cup with such a draught of woe?
 The nameless worm would now itself disown;
 It felt, yet could escape the magic tone 320
 Whose prelude held all envy, hate and wrong,
 But what was howling in one breast alone,
 Silent with expectation of the song,
 Whose master’s hand is cold, whose silver lyre unstrung.

<sup>17</sup> The last poet-mourner is Leigh Hunt, the early friend of Keats in London, and the head of the “ Cockney-school ” of poetry with which Keats was at first associated.

XXXVII

Live thou,<sup>18</sup> whose infamy is not thy fame! 325
 Live! fear no heavier chastisement from me,
 Thou noteless blot on a remembered name!
 But be thyself, and know thyself to be!
 And ever at thy season be thou free
 To spill the venom when thy fangs o'erflow; Remorse and Self-contempt shall cling to thee; 331
 Hot Shame shall burn upon thy secret brow,
 And like a beaten hound tremble thou shalt—as now.

XXXVIII

Nor let us weep that our delight is fled Far from these carrion kites that scream
 below; 335
 He wakes or sleeps with the enduring dead;
 Thou canst not soar where he is sitting now.
 Dust to the dust! but the pure spirit shall flow
 Back to the burning fountain whence it came,
 A portion of the Eternal, which must glow Through time and change, unquenchably the same, 341
 Whilst thy cold embers choke the sordid hearth of shame.

XXXIX

Peace, peace! he is not dead,<sup>19</sup> he doth not sleep—
 He hath awakened from the dream of life—
 'Tis we, who, lost in stormy visions, keep 345
 With phantoms an unprofitable strife,
 And in mad trance, strike with our spirit's knife
 Invulnerable nothings. We decay
 Like corpses in a charnel; fear and grief
 Convulse us and consume us day by day, 350
 And cold hopes swarm like worms within our living clay.

XL

He has outsoared the shadow of our night;
 Envy and calumny and hate and pain,
 And that unrest which men miscall delight,
 Can touch him not and torture not again; 355
 From the contagion of the world's slow stain
 He is secure, and now can never mourn
 A heart grown cold, a head grown gray in
 vain;
 Nor, when the spirit's self has ceased to burn,
 With sparkless ashes load an unlamented urn.

XLI

He lives, he wakes—'tis Death is dead, not
 he; 361
 Mourn not for Adonais.—Thou young Dawn,
 Turn all thy dew to splendour, for from thee
 The spirit thou lamentest is not gone;

<sup>18</sup> i. e. Keats' hostile critic before referred to.

<sup>19</sup> The second natural division of the elegy begins with this stanza. The first part is devoted to grief for Keats, indignation at his critics, and regrets over his loss to poetry; this second part is chiefly occupied with general reflections suggested by the fact of death. The pre-dominant note of this second part is hope.

Ye caverns and ye forests, cease to moan! 365 Cease, ye faint flowers and fountains, and thou Air,
 Which like a mourning veil thy scarf hadst
 thrown
 O'er the abandoned Earth, now leave it bare Even to the joyous stars which smile on its despair!

XLII

He is made one with Nature: there is heard
 His voice in all her music, from the moan 371
 Of thunder, to the song of night's sweet bird;
 He is a presence to be felt and known
 In darkness and in light, from herb and stone, Spreading itself where'er that Power may move 375
 Which has withdrawn his being to its own;
 Which wields the world with never wearied
 love,
 Sustains it from beneath, and kindles it above.

XLIII

He is a portion of the loveliness
 Which once he made more lovely: he doth
 bear 380
 His part, while the one Spirit's plastic stress Sweeps through the dull sense world, compelling there,
 All new successions to the forms they wear;
 Torturing th' unwilling dross that checks its flight
 To its own likeness, as each mass may bear,
 And bursting in its beauty and its might 386
 From trees and beasts and men into the Heaven's light.

XLIV

The splendours of the firmament of time
 May be eclipsed, but are extinguished not;
 Like stars to their appointed height they climb, 390
 And death is a low mist which cannot blot
 The brightness it may veil. When lofty
 thought
 Lifts a young heart above its mortal lair,
 And love and life contend in it for what Shall be its earthly doom, the dead live there And move like winds of light on dark and stormy air. 396

XLV

The inheritors of unfulfilled renown
 Rose from their thrones,<sup>20</sup> built beyond mortal
 thought,
 Far in the Unapparent. Chatterton
 Rose pale,—his solemn agony had not 400
 Yet faded from him; Sidney, as he fought
 And as he fell and as he lived and loved,
 Sublimely mild, a Spirit without spot,
 Arose; and Lucan, by his death approved;
 Oblivion as they rose shrank like a thing re-proved. 405

<sup>20</sup> Keats having died young, is received into the company of those "immortal dead" whose promise of renown had, like his, been unfulfilled. Chatterton was not eighteen when he died, Sir Philip Sidney but thirty-two, and Lucan, who died because of his share in a conspiracy against Nero, about twenty-seven.

XLVI

And many more, whose names on Earth are dark,
But whose transmitted effluence cannot die
So long as fire outlives the parent spark,
Rose, robed in dazzling immortality.
"Thou art become as one of us," they cry; 410
"It was for thee yon kingless sphere has long
Swung blind in unascended majesty.
Silent alone amid a Heaven of song, Assume thy wingèd throne, thou Vesper of our throng!"

XLVII

Who mourns for Adonais? oh, come forth, 415
Fond wretch! and know thyself and him
aright.
Clasp with thy panting soul the pendulous
Earth;
As from a centre, dart thy spirit's light
Beyond all worlds, until its spacious might Satiates the void circumference; then shrink
Even to a point within our day and night; 421
And keep thy heart light lest it make thee sink
When hope has kindled hope, and lured thee to the brink.

XLVIII

Or go to Rome, which is the sepulchre
Oh, not of him, but of our joy: 'tis naught 425
That ages, empires, and religions there
Lie buried in the ravage they have wrought;
For such as he can lend,—they borrow not Glory from those who made the world their prey; 429
And he is gathered to the kings of thought
Who waged contention with their time's decay,
And of the past are all that cannot pass away.

XLIX

Go thou to Rome,—at once the Paradise,
The grave, the city, and the wilderness;
And where its wrecks like shattered mountains rise, 435
And flowering weeds, and fragrant cosses dress
The bones of Desolation's nakedness,
Pass, till the Spirit of the spot shall lead
Thy footsteps to a slope of green access,
Where, like an infant's smile, over the dead
A light of laughing flowers along the grass is spread. 441

L

And gray walls moulder round, on which dull
Time
Feeds, like slow fire upon a hoary brand;
And one keen pyramid with wedge sublime,
Pavilions the dust of him who planned 445
This refuge for his memory, doth stand
Like flame transformed to marble; and beneath
A field is spread, on which a newer band

Have pitched in Heaven's smile their camp of death,
Welcoming him we lose with scarce extinguished breath. 450

LI

Here pause: these graves are all too young as yet
To have outgrown the sorrow which consigned
Its charge to each; and if the seal is set,
Here, on one fountain of a mourning mind,
Break it not thou! too surely shalt thou
find 455
Thine own well full, if thou returnest home,
Of tears and gall. From the world's bitter
wind
Seek shelter in the shadow of the tomb.
What Adonais is, why fear we to become?

LII

The One remains, the many change and
pass; 460
Heaven's light forever shines, Earth's shadows fly;
Life, like a dome of many-coloured glass,
Stains the white radiance of Eternity,
Until Death tramples it to fragments.—Die,
If thou wouldst be with that which thou dost seek! 465
Follow where all is fled!—Rome's azure sky, Flowers, ruins, statues, music, words, are weak
The glory they transfuse with fitting truth to speak.

LIII

Why linger, why turn back, why shrink, my Heart?
Thy hopes are gone before; from all things
here 470
They have departed; thou shouldst now de-
part!
A light is past from the revolving year,
And man, and woman; and what still is dear
Attracts to crush, repels to make thee wither.
The soft sky smiles,—the low wind whispers
near; 475
'Tis Adonais calls! oh, hasten thither,
No more let Life divide what Death can join together.

LIV

That Light whose smile kindles the Universe,
That Beauty in which all things work and
move, 479
That Benediction which the eclipsing Curse
Of birth can quench not, that sustaining Love
Which through the web of being blindly
wove
By man and beast and earth and air and
sea,
Burns bright or dim, as each are mirrors of
The fire for which all thirst, now beams on
me, 485
Consuming the last clouds of cold mortality.

LV

The breath whose might I have invoked in
 song
 Descends on me; my spirit's bark is driven
 Far from the shore, far from the trembling
 throng
 Whose sails were never to the tempest
 given; 490
 The massy earth and spherèd skies are riven!
 I am borne darkly, fearfully, afar;
 Whilst, burning through the inmost veil of Heaven,
 The soul of Adonais, like a star,
 Beacons from the abode where the Eternal are. 495

TIME

(1821)

Unfathomable Sea! whose waves are years,
 Ocean of Time, whose waters of deep woe
 Are brackish with the salt of human tears!
 Thou shoreless flood, which in thy ebb and
 flow
 Claspest the limits of mortality, 5
 And sick of prey, yet howling on for more,
 Vomitest thy wrecks on its inhospitable shore;
 Treacherous on calm, and terrible in storm,
 Who shall put forth on thee,
 Unfathomable Sea? 10

TO —

(1821)

Music, when soft voices die,
 Vibrates in the memory;
 Odours, when sweet violets sicken;
 Live within the sense they quicken.

Rose leaves, when the rose is dead, 5
 Are heaped for the beloved's bed;
 And so thy thoughts, when thou are gone,
 Love itself shall slumber on.

TO NIGHT

(1821)

I

Swiftly walk over the western wave,
 Spirit of Night!
 Out of the misty eastern cave,
 Where all the long and lone daylight
 Thou wovest dreams of joy and fear, 5
 Which make thee terrible and dear,—
 Swift be thy flight!

II

Wrap thy form in a mantle gray,
 Star-inwrought!
 Blind with thine hair the eyes of Day;— 10
 Kiss her until she be wearied out;
 Then wander o'er city, and sea, and land,
 Touching all with thine opiate wand—
 Come, long-sought!

III

When I arose and saw the dawn, 15
 I sighed for thee;
 When light rode high, and the dew was gone,
 And noon lay heavy on flower and tree,
 And the weary Day turned to his rest,
 Lingered like an unloved guest, 20
 I sighed for thee.

IV

Thy brother Death came, and cried,
 Wouldst thou me?
 Thy sweet child Sleep, the filmy-eyed,
 Murmured like a noontide bee, 25
 Shall I nestle at thy side?
 Would'st thou me?—and I replied,
 No, not thee!

V

Death will come when thou art dead, 30
 Soon, too soon;
 Sleep will come when thou art fled;
 Of neither would I ask the boon
 I ask of thee, beloved Night,—
 Swift be thine approaching flight, 35
 Come soon, soon!

A LAMENT

(1821)

I

O world! O life! O time!
 On whose last steps I climb,
 Trembling at that where I had stood before;
 When will return the glory of your prime?
 No more—oh, never more! 5

II

Out of the day and night
 A joy has taken flight;
 Fresh spring, and summer, and winter hoar,
 Move my faint heart with grief, but with delight
 No more—oh, never more! 10

TO —

(1821)

I

One word is too often profaned
 For me to profane it,
 One feeling too falsely disdained
 For thee to disdain it;
 One hope is too like despair 5
 For prudence to smother,
 And pity from thee more dear
 Than that from another.

II

I can give not what men call love,
 But wilt thou accept not
 The worship the heart lifts above
 And the Heavens reject not,— 10

The desire of the moth for the star,
Of the night for the morrow,
The devotion to something afar
From the sphere of our sorrow? 15

John Keats

1795–1821

ENDYMION

(1818)

BOOK I

A thing of beauty is a joy forever:
Its loveliness increases; it will never Pass into nothingness; but still will keep
A bower quiet for us, and a sleep
Full of sweet dreams, and health, and quiet breathing. 5

Therefore, on every morrow, are we wreathing
A flowery band to bind us to the earth,
Spite of despondence, of the inhuman dearth
Of noble natures, of the gloomy days,
Of all the unhealthy and o'erdarkened ways 10
Made for our searching: yes, in spite of all,
Some shape of beauty moves away the pall
From our dark spirits. Such the sun, the moon,
Trees old and young, sprouting a shady boon
For simple sheep; and such are daffodils 15
With the green world they live in; and clear
rills

That for themselves a cooling covert make
'Gainst the hot season; the mid forest brake,
Rich with a sprinkling of fair musk-rose blooms:

And such too is the grandeur of the dooms 20
That we have imagined for the mighty dead;
All lovely tales that we have heard or read:
An endless fountain of immortal drink,
Pouring unto us from the heaven's brink.

Nor do we merely feel these essences 25
For one short hour; no, even as the trees
That whisper round a temple become soon
Dear as the temple's self, so does the moon,
The passion poesy, glories infinite,
Haunt us till they become a cheering light 30
Unto our souls, and bound to us so fast,
That, whether there be shine, or gloom o'er-
cast,

They always must be with us, or we die. . . .

SONNETS

ON FIRST LOOKING INTO CHAPMAN'S HOMER<sup>1</sup>

(Written 1816)

XI

Much have I travell'd in the realms of gold,
And many goodly states and kingdoms seen;
Round many western islands have I been
Which bards in fealty to Apollo hold.

<sup>1</sup> Chapman's translation of Homer (like the Paeire Quenee and the Elgin Marbles) early stimulated Keats' genius and helped to mould his taste. C. Cowden Clarke introduced Keats to the book in 1815. It is hardly necessary to add that Balboa, not Cortez, discovered the Pacific (l. 12).

Of one wide expanse had I been told That deep-brow'd Homer rul'd as his demesne;
Yet did I never breathe its pure serene
Till I heard Chapman speak out loud and bold:
Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
When a new planet swims into his ken; 10
Or like stout Cortez when with eagle eyes
He star'd at the Pacific—and all his men
Look'd at each other with a wild surmise—
Silent, upon a peak in Darien.

SONNET

(June, 1816)

To one who has been long in city pent,
'Tis very sweet to look into the fair
And open face of heaven,—to breathe a prayer

Full in the smile of the blue firmament.
Who is more happy, when, with heart's content, 5

Fatigued he sinks into some pleasant lair
Of wavy grass, and reads a debonair
And gentle tale of love and languishment?
Returning home at evening, with an ear
Catching the notes of Philomel,<sup>1</sup>—an eye 10
Watching the sailing cloudlets' bright career,
He mourns that day so soon has glided by:
E'en like the passage of an angel's tear
That falls through the clear ether silently.

XV

ON THE GRASSHOPPER AND CRICKET<sup>1</sup> (Written December 30th, 1816)

The poetry of earth is never dead:
When all the birds are faint with the hot sun,
And hide in cooling trees, a voice will run
From hedge to hedge about the new-mown
mead;

That is the Grasshopper's—he takes the lead 5
In summer luxury,—he has never done
With his delights; for when tired out with fun

He rests at ease beneath some pleasant weed.
The poetry of earth is ceasing never:

On a lone winter evening, when the frost 10
Has wrought a silence, from the stove
there shrills

The Cricket's song, in warmth increasing ever,
And seems to one in drowsiness half lost,
The Grasshopper's among some grassy
hills.

ON SEEING THE ELGIN MARBLES<sup>1</sup> FOR THE FIRST TIME (1817)

My spirit is too weak—mortality
Weights heavily on me like unwilling sleep,
And each imagined pinnacle and steep
Of godlike hardship, tells me I must die

<sup>1</sup> The nightingale.

<sup>1</sup> This sonnet and that of Hunt's (p. 507), were the result of a friendly competition.

<sup>1</sup> V. p. 562, n. 15.

Like a sick eagle looking at the sky. 5
 Yet 'tis a gentle luxury to weep
 That I have not the cloudy winds to keep,
 Fresh for the opening of the morning's eye.
 Such dim-conceiv'd glories of the brain
 Bring round the heart an indescribable feud;
 So do these wonders a most dizzy pain, 11
 That mingles Grecian grandeur with the rude
 Wasting of old Time—with a billowy main—
 A sun—a shadow of a magnitude.

ON THE SEA

It keeps eternal whisperings around
 Desolate shores, and with its mighty swell Gluts twice ten thousand caverns, till the spell
 Of Hecate leaves them their old shadowy sound.
 Often 'tis in such gentle temper found, 5
 That scarcely will the very smallest shell
 Be moved for days from whence it sometime
 fell,
 When last the winds of heaven were unbound.
 Oh ye! who have your eye-balls vex'd and tired,
 Feast them upon the wideness of the Sea; 10
 Oh ye! whose ears are dinn'd with uproar
 rude,
 Or fed too much with cloying melody,— Sit ye near some old cavern's mouth, and brood
 Until ye start, as if the sea-nymphs quired!

SONNET

Why did I laugh to-night? No voice will tell:
 No God, no Demon of severe response,
 Deigns to reply from Heaven or from Hell.
 Then to my human heart I turn at once.
 Heart! Thou and I are here sad and alone; 5
 I say, why did I laugh? O mortal pain!
 O Darkness! Darkness! ever must I moan,
 To question Heaven and Hell and Heart in vain.
 Why did I laugh? I know this Being's lease,
 My fancy to its utmost blisses spreads; 10
 Yet could I on this very midnight cease,
 And the world's gaudy ensigns see in shreds;
 Verse, Fame, and Beauty are intense indeed,
 But Death intenser—Death is Life's high meed.

SONNET

When I have fears that I may cease to be
 Before my pen has glean'd my teeming brain.
 Before high piled books in characterly,
 Hold like rich garners the full ripen'd grain;
 When I behold, upon the night's starr'd face, 5
 Huge cloudy symbols of a high romance,
 And think that I may never live to trace Their shadows, with the magic hand of
 chance;

And when I feel, fair creature of an hour,
 That I shall never look upon thee more, 10
 Never have relish in the faery power
 Of unreflecting love;—then on the shore
 Of the wide world I stand alone, and think
 Till love and fame to nothingness do sink.

LAST SONNET

Written on a Blank Page in Shakespeare's Poems, Facing A Lover's Complaint

(Written 1820)

Bright star, would I were steadfast as thou art
 Not in lone splendour hung aloft the night
 And watching, with eternal lids apart,
 Like nature's patient, sleepless Eremite,
 The moving waters at their priestlike task 5
 Of pure ablution round earth's human shores,
 Or gazing on the new soft-fallen mask
 Of snow upon the mountains and the moors—
 No—yet still steadfast, still unchangeable,
 Pillow'd upon my fair love's ripening breast,
 To feel for ever its soft fall and swell, 11
 Awake for ever in a sweet unrest,
 Still, still to hear her tender-taken breath,
 And so live ever—or else swoon to death.

THE EVE OF ST. AGNES

(1820)

I

St. Agnes' Eve!—Ah, bitter chill it was! 2
 The owl, for all his feathers, was a-cold; 3
 The hare limp'd trembling through the frozen grass, 4
 And silent was the flock in woolly fold: 5
 Numb were the Beadsman's<sup>2</sup> fingers, while he told 6
 His rosary, and while his frosted breath, 7
 Like pious incense from a censer old, 8
 Seem'd taking flight for heaven, without a
 death, 9
 Past the sweet Virgin's picture, while his prayer he saith. 10

II

His prayer he saith, this patient, holy man; 10
 Then takes his lamp, and riseth from his knees,
 And back returneth, meagre, barefoot, wan,
 Along the chapel aisle by slow degrees:
 The sculptur'd dead, on each side, seem to freeze,
 Emprison'd in black, purgatorial rails: 15
 Knights, ladies, praying in dumb orat'ries,
 He passeth by; and his weak spirit fails
 To think how they may ache in icy hoods and mails.

<sup>1</sup> The night of January 20th. It was supposed that by observing certain ceremonies on this night a maiden might see her future husband in her dreams.

<sup>2</sup> One who prays, particularly one who prays for others.

III

Northward he turneth through a little door,
 And scarce three steps, ere Music's golden tongue 20
 Flatter'd to tears this aged man and poor;
 But no—already had his deathbell rung;
 The joys of all his life were said and sung;
 His was harsh penance on St. Agnes' eve:
 Another way he went, and soon among 25
 Rough ashes sat he for his soul's reprieve,
 And all night kept awake, for sinners' sake to grieve.

IV

That ancient Beadsman heard the prelude soft;
 And so it chanc'd, for many a door was wide,
 From hurry to and fro. Soon, up aloft, 30
 The silver, snarling trumpets 'gan to chide:
 The level chambers, ready with their pride,
 Were glowing to receive a thousand guests:
 The carv'd angels, ever eager-ey'd,
 Star'd, where upon their heads the cornice rests, 35
 With hair blown back, and wings put crosswise on their breasts.

V

At length burst in the argent<sup>3</sup> revelry,
 With plume, tiara, and all rich array,
 Numerous as shadows haunting faerily
 The brain, newstuff'd in youth, with triumphs
 gay 40
 Of old romance. These let us wish away,
 And turn, sole-thoughted, to one Lady there,
 Whose heart had brooded, all that wintry
 day,
 On love, and wing'd St. Agnes' saintly care,
 As she had heard old dames full many times declare. 45

VI

They told her how, upon St. Agnes' eve,
 Young virgins might have visions of delight,
 And soft adorings from their loves receive
 Upon the honey'd middle of the night,
 If ceremonies due they did aright; 50
 As, supperless to bed they must retire,
 And couch supine their beauties, lily white;
 Nor look behind, nor sideways, but require
 Of Heaven with upward eyes for all that they desire.

VII

Full of this whim was thoughtful Madeline: 55
 The music, yearning like a God in pain,
 She scarcely heard: her maiden eyes divine
 Fix'd on the floor, saw many a sweeping train
 Pass by—she heeded not at all: in vain
 Came many a tiptoe, amorous cavalier, 60
 And back retir'd; not cool'd by high disdain,
 But she saw not: her heart was elsewhere:
 She sigh'd for Agnes' dreams, the sweetest of the year.

<sup>3</sup> Silver-bright, shining.

VIII

She danc'd along with vague, regardless eyes, Anxious her lips, her breathing quick and short: 65
 The hallow'd hour was near at hand: she sighs
 Amid the timbrels, and the throng'd resort
 Of whisperers in anger, or in sport;
 'Mid looks of love, defiance, hate, and scorn,
 Hoodwink'd with faery fancy; all amorn,<sup>4</sup> 70
 Save to St. Agnes and her lambs unshorn,<sup>5</sup>
 And all the bliss to be before to-morrow morn.

IX

So, purposing each moment to retire,
 She lingered still. Meantime, across the moors,
 Had come young Porphyro, with heart on fire 75
 For Madeline. Beside the portal doors, Buttress'd from moonlight, stands he, and implores
 All saints to give him sight of Madeline,
 But for one moment in the tedious hours,
 That he might gaze and worship all unseen; 80
 Perchance speak, kneel, touch, kiss—in sooth such things have been.

X

He ventures in: let no buzz'd whisper tell:
 All eyes be muffled, or a hundred swords
 Will storm his heart, Love's fev'rous citadel:
 For him, those chambers held barbarian hordes, 85
 Hyena foemen, and hot-blooded lords,
 Whose very dogs would execrations howl
 Against his lineage: not one breast affords
 Him any mercy, in that mansion foul.<sup>6</sup> Save one old beldame, weak in body and in soul. 90

XI

Ah, happy chance! the aged creature came,
 Shuffling along with ivory-headed wand,
 To where he stood, hid from the torch's flame,
 Behind a broad hall-pillar, far beyond
 The sound of merriment and chorus bland: 95
 He startled her; but soon she knew his face,
 And grasp'd his fingers in her palsied hand, Saying, "Mercy, Porphyro! hie thee from this place;
 "They are all here to-night, the whole bloodthirsty race!

XII

"Get hence! get hence! there's dwarfish
 Hildebrand; 100
 "He had a fever late, and in the fit
 "He curs'd thee and thine, both house and
 land:

<sup>4</sup> Dead, absorbed in thought (Fr. à la mort).

<sup>5</sup> On St. Agnes' Day, it was the custom in some places for the nuns to bring two white lambs to Church, and (when the Agnus Dei was chanted) to present them before the altar. The lambs, thus dedicated, were kept apart until shearing-time, and their fleece was regarded as holy. (v. Stanza xiii).

<sup>6</sup> Here = harmful, mischievous.

"Then there's that old Lord Maurice, not a whit
 "More tame for his grey hairs—Alas me! flit!
 "Flit like a ghost away."—"Ah, Gossip
 dear, 105
 "We're safe enough; here in this armchair sit,
 "And tell me how"— "Good Saints not here, not here:
 "Follow me, child, or else these stones will be thy bier."

XIII

He follow'd through a lowly archèd way,
 Brushing the cobwebs with his lofty plume, 110
 And as she muttered "Well-a-well-a-day!"
 He found him in a little moonlight room,
 Pale, lattic'd, chill, and silent as a tomb.
 "Now tell me where is Madeline," said he,
 "O tell me, Angela, by the holy loom 115
 "Which none but secret sisterhood may
 see,
 "When they St. Agnes' wool are weaving piously."

XIV

"St. Agnes! Ah! it is St. Agnes' Eve—
 "Yet men will murder upon holy days:
 "Thou must hold water in a witch's sieve, 120
 "And be liege-lord of all the Elves and Fays,
 "To venture so: it fills me with amaze
 "To see thee, Porphyro!—St. Agnes' Eve!
 "God's help! my lady fair the conjurer
 plays
 "This very night: good angels her deceive!
 "But let me laugh awhile, I've mickle time to grieve." 126

XV

Feebly she laugheth in the languid moon,
 While Porphyro upon her face doth look,
 Like puzzled urchin on an aged crone
 Who keepeth clos'd a wondrous riddle-book, 130
 As spectacted she sits in chimney nook.
 But soon his eyes grew brilliant, when she told
 His lady's purpose; and he scarce could brook
 Tears, at the thought of those enchantments
 cold,
 And Madeline asleep in lap of legends old. 135

XVI

Sudden a thought came like a full-blown rose,
 Flushing his brow, and in his pained heart
 Made purple riot: then doth he propose
 A stratagem, that makes the beldame start:
 "A cruel man and impious thou art: 140
 "Sweet lady, let her pray, and sleep, and
 dream
 "Alone with her good angels, far apart
 "From wicked men like thee. Go, go!—I deem
 "Thou canst not surely be the same that thou didst seem."

XVII

"I will not harm her, by all saints I swear," 145
 Quoth Porphyro: "O may I ne'er find grace
 "When my weak voice shall whisper its last
 prayer,
 "If one of her soft ringlets I displace,
 "Or look with ruffian passion in her face;
 "Good Angela, believe me by these tears; 150
 "Or I will, even in a moment's space,
 "Awake, with horrid shout, my foemen's
 ears,
 "And beard them, though they be more fang'd than wolves and bears."

XVIII

"Ah! why wilt thou affright a feeble soul?
 "A poor, weak, palsy-stricken, churchyard thing, 155
 "Whose passing-bell may ere the midnight toll;
 "Whose prayers for thee, each morn and evening,
 "Were never miss'd."—Thus plaining, doth she bring
 A gentler speech from burning Porphyro;
 So woful, and of such deep sorrowing, 160
 That Angela gives promise she will do Whatever he shall wish, betide her weal or woe.

XIX

Which was, to lead him, in close secrecy,
 Even to Madeline's chamber, and there hide
 Him in a closet, of such privacy 165
 That he might see her beauty unesp'y'd,
 And win perhaps that night a peerless bride,
 While legion'd fairies pac'd the coverlet,
 And pale enchantment held her sleepy-ey'd.
 Never on such a night<sup>7</sup> have lovers met, 170
 Since Merlin paid his Demon all the monstrous debt.

XX

"It shall be as thou wishest," said the Dame:
 "All cakes<sup>8</sup> and dainties shall be storèd there
 "Quickly on this feast-night: by the tambour frame
 "Her own lute thou wilt see: no time to spare, 175
 "For I am slow and feeble, and scarce dare
 "On such a catering trust my dizzy head.
 "Wait here, my child, with patience; kneel in prayer
 "The while: Ah! thou must needs the lady
 wed,
 "Or may I never leave my grave among the
 dead." 180

<sup>7</sup> The night after Merlin was shut up forever in a tree, a frightful tempest swept through the forest of Broceliande, in which this tree stood. As Merlin (according to some versions of the story) was the child of a "Demon," he said to have "paid" his "monstrous debt" when, his own magic being turned against him, he was overpowered by the wily Vivian.

<sup>8</sup> Delicacies.

XXI

So saying, she hobbled off with busy fear.
 The lover's endless minutes slowly pass'd!
 The dame return'd and whisper'd in his ear
 To follow her; with aged eyes aghast
 From fright of dim espial. Safe at last, 185
 Through many a dusky gallery, they gain
 The maiden's chamber, silken, hush'd, and chaste;
 Where Porphyro took covert, pleas'd again.
 His poor guide hurried back with agues in her brain.

XXII

Her falt'ring hand upon the balustrade, 190
 Old Angela was feeling for the stair,
 When Madeline, St. Agnes' charmed maid,
 Rose, like a mission'd<sup>9</sup> spirit, unaware:
 With silver taper's light, and pious care,
 She turn'd, and down the aged gossip led 195
 To a safe level matting. Now prepare,
 Young Porphyro, for gazing on that bed;
 She comes, she comes again, like ring-dove
 fray'd and fled.

XXIII

Out went the taper as she hurried in;
 Its little smoke, in pallid moonshine, died: 200
 She clos'd the door, she panted, all akin
 To spirits of the air, and visions wide:
 No uttered syllable, or, woe betide!
 But to her heart, her heart was voluble,
 Paining with eloquence her balmy side; 205
 As though a tongueless nightingale should swell
 Her throat in vain, and die, heart-stifled, in her dell.

XXIV

A casement high and triple-arch'd there was,
 All garlanded with carven imag'ries
 Of fruits, and flowers, and bunches of knot-grass, 210
 And diamonded with panes of quaint device,
 Innumerable of stains<sup>10</sup> and splendid dyes,
 As are the tiger-moth's deep-damask'd wings;
 And in the midst, 'mong thousand heraldries,
 And twilight saints, and dim emblazonings,
 A shielded scutcheon blush'd with blood of queens and kings. 216

XXV

Full on this casement shone the wintry moon,
 And threw warm gules on Madeline's fair
 breast,
 As down she knelt for heaven's grace and boon;
 Rose-bloom fell on her hands, together prest,
 And on her silver cross soft amethyst, 221
 And on her hair a glory, like a saint:
 She seem'd a splendid angel, newly drest,
 Save wings, for heaven:—Porphyro grew faint:
 She knelt, so pure a thing, so free from mortal taint. 225

<sup>9</sup> Commissioned.<sup>10</sup> Colors.

XXVI

Anon his heart revives: her vespers done,
 Of all its wreath'd pearls her hair she frees;
 Unclasps her warm'd jewels one by one;
 Loosens her fragrant bodice; by degrees
 Her rich attire creeps rustling to her knees:
 Half-hidden, like a mermaid in sea-weed, 231
 Pensive awhile she dreams awake, and sees,
 In fancy, fair St. Agnes in her bed,
 But dares not look behind, or all the charm is fled.

XXVII

Soon, trembling in her soft and chilly
 nest, 235
 In sort of wakeful swoon, perplex'd she
 lay,
 Until the poppi'd warmth of sleep oppress'd
 Her sooth'd limbs, and soul fatigued away;
 Flown, like a thought, until the morrow-
 day;
 Blissfully haven'd both from joy and
 pain; 240
 Clasp'd like a missal where swart Paynims pray:<sup>11</sup>
 Blinded alike from sunshine and from rain,
 As though a rose should shut, and be a bud
 again.

XXVIII

Stol'n to this paradise, and so entranced,
 Porphyro gaz'd upon her empty dress, 245
 And listened to her breathing, if it chanced
 To wake into a slumberous tenderness;
 Which when he heard, that minute did he bress
 And breath'd himself: then from the closet crept,
 Noiseless as fear in a wide wilderness, 250
 And over the hush'd carpet, silent, stept,
 And 'tween the curtains peep'd, where, lo!—
 how fast she slept.

XXIX

Then by the bed-side where the faded moon
 Made a dim, silver twilight, soft he set
 A table, and, half anguish'd, threw thereon
 A cloth of woven crimson, gold, and jet:— 256
 O for some drowsy Morphean amulet!<sup>12</sup>
 The boisterous, midnight, festive clarion,
 The kettle-drum and far-heard clarinet,
 Affray his ears, though but in dying tone:—
 The hall-door shuts again, and all the noise is gone. 261

XXX

And still she slept an azure-lidded sleep,
 In blanch'd linen, smooth, and lavender'd,
 While he from forth the closet brought a heap
 Of candied apple, quince, and plum, and gourd; 265
 With jellies soother<sup>13</sup> than the creamy curd,

<sup>11</sup> Swart Paynims = dark pagans. "Clasped like a missal in a land of pagans; that is to say, where Christian prayer-books must not be seen, and are, therefore, doubly cherished for the danger." Leigh Hunt.

<sup>12</sup> A charm capable of producing sleep.<sup>13</sup> Apparently = smother.

And lucent syrops, tinct with cinnamon;
Manna and dates, in argosy transferr'd
From Fez; and spiced dainties, every one,
From silken Samarcand<sup>14</sup> to cedar'd Lebanon.

XXXI

These delicacies he heap'd with glowing
hand 271
On golden dishes and in baskets bright
Of wreath'd silver: sumptuous they stand
In the retired quiet of the night,
Filling the chilly room with perfume light
"And now, my love, my seraph fair, awake!
"Thou art my heaven, and I thine hermit:
"Open thine eyes, for meek St. Agnes'
sake, 273
"Or I shall drowse beside thee, so my soul doth ache."

XXXII

Thus whispering, his warm, unnerv'd arm 280
Sank in her pillow. Shaded was her dream
By the dusk curtains:—'twas a midnight charm
Impossible to melt as icèd stream:
The lustrous salvers in the moonlight gleam;
Broad golden fringe upon the carpet lies: 285
It seem'd he never, never could redeem
From such a steadfast spell his lady's eyes;
So mus'd awhile, entoil'd in woof'd phantasies.

XXXIII

Awakening up, he took her hollow lute,— Tumultuous,—and,—in chords that tenderest be, 290
He play'd an ancient ditty, long since mute,
In Provence call'd, "La belle dame sans mercy:"<sup>15</sup>
Close to her ear touching the melody;—
Wherewith disturb'd, she utter'd a soft moan:
He ceas'd—she panted quick—and suddenly 295
Her blue affray'd eyes wide open shone:
Upon his knees he sank, pale as smoothsculptured-stone.

XXXIV

Her eyes were open, but she still beheld,
Now wide awake, the vision of her sleep:
There was a painful change, that nigh ex-
pell'd 300
The blisses of her dream so pure and deep;
At which fair Madeline began to weep,
And moan forth witless words with many a
sigh,
While still her gaze on Porphyro would keep;

<sup>14</sup> An ancient city in Turkestan. It was the capital of the great conqueror Timur, or Tamerlane, and, in his time, a center of learning and commerce.

<sup>15</sup> The title of a poem by Alain Chartier, court poet of Charles VI and Charles VII, of France. An English translation of this poem, erroneously attributed to Chaucer, and formerly included in editions of his works, had attracted Keats' fancy. Chartier's title was adopted by Keats as the title of one of his best lyrics (v. p. 535).

Who knelt, with join'd hands and piteous
eye, 305
Fearing to move or speak, she look'd so dream-ingly.

XXXV

"Ah, Porphyro!" said she, "but even now
"Thy voice was at sweet tremble in mine ear,
"Made tuneable with every sweetest vow;
"And those sad eyes were spiritual and clear;
"How chang'd thou art! how pallid, chill, and drear! 311
"Give me that voice again, my Porphyro,
"Those looks immortal, those complainings
dear!
"Oh leave me not in this eternal woe,
"For if thou diest, my Love, I know not where to go." 315

XXXVI

Beyond a mortal man impassion'd far
At these voluptuous accents, he arose,
Ethereal, flush'd, and like a throbbing star
Seen 'mid the sapphire heaven's deep repose;
Into her dream he melted, as the rose 320
Blended its odour with the violet,— Solution sweet: meantime the frost-wind
blows
Like Love's alarum pattering the sharp sleet Against the window-panes; St. Agnes' moon hath set.

XXXVII

'Tis dark; quick pattereth the flaw-blown sleet: 325
"This is no dream, my bride, my Madeline!"
'Tis dark: the icèd gusts still rave and beat:
"No dream, alas! alas! and woe is mine!
"Porphyro will leave me here to fade and pine.—
"Cruel! what traitor could thee hither
bring? 330
"I curse not, for my heart is lost in thine,
"Though thou forsakest a deceived thing;—
"A dove forlorn and lost with sick unpruned wing."

XXXVIII

"My Madeline! sweet dreamer! lovely bride!
"Say, may I be for aye thy vassal blest? 335
"Thy beauty's shield, heart-shap'd and vermilion dy'd?
"Ah, silver shrine, here will I take my rest
"After so many hours of toil and quest,
"A famish'd pilgrim,—sav'd by miracle.
"Though I have found, I will not rob thy
nest 340
"Saving of thy sweet self; if thou think'st
well
"To trust, fair Madeline, to no rude infidel.

XXXIX

"Hark! 'tis an elfin-storm from faery land,
"Of haggard seeming, but a boon indeed:
"Arise—arise! the morning is at hand;— 345
"The bloated wassailers will never heed:—
"Let us away, my love, with happy speed;

"There are no ears to hear, or eyes to see,—
 "Drown'd all in Rhenish and the sleepy
 mead:
 "Awake! arise! my love, and fearless be, 350
 "For o'er the southern moors I have a home for thee."

XL

She hurried at his words, beset with fears,
 For there were sleeping dragons all around,
 At glaring watch, perhaps, with ready spears—
 Down the wide stairs a darkling way they found.— 355
 In all the house was heard no human sound.
 A chain-droop'd lamp was flickering by each
 door;
 The arras rich with horseman, hawk, and hound,
 Flutter'd in the besieging wind's uproar;
 And the long carpets rose along the gusty floor. 360

XLI

They glide, like phantoms, into the wide hall;
 Like phantoms, to the iron porch, they glide;
 Where lay the Porter, in uneasy sprawl,
 With a huge empty flagon by his side:
 The wakeful bloodhound rose, and shook his hide, 365
 But his sagacious eye an inmate owns:
 By one, and one, the bolts full easy slide:—
 The chains lie silent on the footworn stones;
 The key turns, and the door upon its hinges groans.

XLII

And they are gone: ay, ages long ago 370
 These lovers fled away into the storm.
 That night the Baron dreamt of many a woe,
 And all his warrior-guests, with shade and
 form
 Of witch, and demon, and large coffin-worm,
 Were long be-nightmar'd. Angela the old 375
 Died palsy-twitch'd, with meagre face de-
 form;
 The Beadsman, after thousand aves told,
 For aye unsought-for slept among his ashes cold.

ROBIN HOOD

TO A FRIEND

(Pub. 1820)

No! those days are gone away,
 And their hours are old and gray,
 And their minutes buried all
 Under the down-trodden pall
 Of the leaves of many years: 5
 Many times have winter's shears,
 Frozen North, and chilling East,
 Sounded tempests to the feast
 Of the forests whispering fleeces,
 Since men knew not rents nor leases. 10

No, the bugle sounds no more,
 And the twanging bow no more;
 Silent is the ivory shrill
 Past the heath and up the hill;

There is no mid-forest laugh, 15
 Where lone echo gives the half
 To some wight, amaz'd to hear
 Jestings, deep in forest drear.

On the fairest time in June
 You may go with sun or moon, 20
 Or the seven stars to light you,
 Or the polar ray to right you;
 But you never may behold
 Little John, or Robin bold;
 Never one, of all the clan, 25
 Thrumming on an empty can
 Some old hunting ditty, while
 He doth his green way beguile
 To fair hostess Merriment,
 Down beside the pasture Trent; 30
 For he left the merry tale
 Messenger for spicy ale.

Gone the merry morris din;
 Gone, the song of Gamelyn;
 Gone, the tough-belted outlaw 35
 Idling in the "grené shawe;"
 All are gone away and past!
 And if Robin should be cast
 Sudden from his turf'd grave,
 And if Marian should have 40
 Once again her forest days,
 She would weep, and he would craze:
 He would swear, for all his oaks,
 Fall'n beneath the dockyard strokes,
 Have rotted on the briny seas; 45
 She would weep that her wild bees
 Sang not to her—strange! that honey
 Can't be got without hard money!

So it is: yet let us sing,
 Honour to the old bow string! 50
 Honour to the bugle-horn!
 Honour to the woods unshorn!
 Honour to the Lincoln green!
 Honour to the archer keen!
 Honour to tight little John, 55
 And the horse he rode upon!
 Honour to bold Robin Hood!
 Sleeping in the underwood!
 Honour to maid Marian,
 And to all the Sherwood-clan! 60
 Though their days have hurried by
 Let us two a burden try.

LA BELLE DAME SANS MERCI!

(1820)

I

Ah, what can ail thee, wretched wight,
 Alone and palely loitering;
 The sedge is wither'd from the lake,
 And no birds sing.

II

Ah, what can ail thee, wretched wight, 5
 So haggard and so woe-begone?
 The squirrel's granary is full,
 And the harvest's done.

1 V. note to Eve of St. Agnes, xxxiii, p. 534.

III

I see a lily on thy brow,
With anguish moist and fever dew; 10
And on thy cheek a fading rose
Fast withereth too.

IV

I met a lady in the meads,
Full beautiful, a faery's child;
Her hair was long, her foot was light, 15
And her eyes were wild.

V

I set her on my pacing steed,
And nothing else saw all day long;
For sideways would she lean and sing
A faery's song. 20

VI

I made a garland for her head,
And bracelets too, and fragrant zone;
She look'd at me as she did love,
And made sweet moan.

VII

She found me roots of relish sweet, 25
And honey wild, and manna dew;
And sure in language strange she said,
I love thee true.

VIII

She took me to her elfin grot,
And there she gaz'd and sigh'd deep; 30
And there I shut her wild sad eyes—
So kissed to sleep.

IX

And there we slumber'd on the moss,
And there I dream'd, ah woe betide,
The latest dream I ever dream'd, 35
On the cold hill side.

X

I saw pale kings, and princes too,
Pale warriors, death-pale were they all;
Who cry'd—"La belle Dame sans merci
Hath thee in thrall!" 40

XI

I saw their starv'd lips in the gloom,
With horrid warning gap'd wide,
And I awoke, and found me here
On the cold hill side.

XII

And this is why I sojourn here 45
Alone and palely loitering,
Though the sedge is wither'd from the lake
And no birds sing.

ODE TO A NIGHTINGALE

(1819)

I

My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness pains
My sense, as though of hemlock I had drunk,

Or emptied some dull opiate to the drains
One minute past, and Lethe-wards had sunk:
'Tis not through envy of thy happy lot, 5
But being too happy in thine happiness,—
That thou, light-winged Dryad of the trees,

In some melodious plot
Of beechen green, and shadows numberless,
Singest of summer in full-throated ease. 10

II

O, for a draught of vintage! that hath been a
Cool'd a long age in the deep-delv'd earth,
Tasting of Flora and the country green, a Dance, and Provençal song, and sunburnt mirth! b

O for a beaker full of the warm South, c 15
Full of the true, the blushful Hippocrene, b
With beaded bubbles winking at the brim,
And purple-stained mouth; c
That I might drink, and leave the world unseen, c
And with thee fade away into the forest dim: d 20

III

Fade far away, dissolve, and quite forget
What thou among the leaves hast never known,
The weariness, the fever, and the fret
Here, where men sit and hear each other
groan;
Where palsy shakes a few, sad, last gray hairs, 25
Where youth grows pale, and spectre-thin,
and dies;

Where but to think is to be full of sorrow
And leaden-ey'd despairs,
Where Beauty cannot keep her lustrous eyes,
Or new Love pine at them beyond tomorrow. 30

IV

Away! away! for I will fly to thee,
Not charioted by Bacchus and his pards, a
But on the viewless wings of Poesy,
Though the dull brain perplexes and retards:
Already with thee! tender is the night, 35

And haply the Queen-Moon is on her throne,
Cluster'd around by all her starry Fays;
But here there is no light,
Save what from heaven is with the breezes blown

Through verdurous glooms and winding mossy ways. 40

V

I cannot see what flowers are at my feet,
Nor what soft incense hangs upon the boughs,
But, in embalm'd darkness, guess each sweet
Wherewith the seasonable month endows

<sup>1</sup> A fountain sacred to the Muses on Mt. Helicon.
"The true . . . Hippocrene = wine, whose aid is afterwards rejected (Stanza IV).

<sup>2</sup> Leopards. In a painting by Titian in the National Gallery, London, Bacchus, the god of Wine, is represented as descending from a chariot drawn by leopards.

The grass, the thicket, and the fruit-tree wild;<sup>45</sup>
 White hawthorn, and the pastoral eglantine;
 Fast fading violets cover'd up in leaves;
 And mid-May's eldest child,
 The coming musk-rose, full of dewy wine,
 The murmurous haunt of flies on summer
 eves. 50

VI

Darkling I listen; and, for many a time
 I have been half in love with easeful Death,
 Call'd him soft names in many a musèd rhyme,
 To take into the air my quiet breath;
 Now more than ever seems it rich to die, 55
 To cease upon the midnight with no pain,
 While thou art pouring forth thy soul abroad
 In such an ecstasy!
 Still wouldst thou sing, and I have ears in vain—
 To thy high requiem become a sod. 60

VII

Thou wast not born for death, immortal Bird!
 No hungry generations tread thee down;
 The voice I hear this passing night was heard
 In ancient days by emperor and clown:
 Perhaps the self-same song that found a path 65
 Through the sad heart of Ruth, when, sick for home,
 She stood in tears amid the alien corn;
 The same that oft-times hath
 Charm'd magic casements, opening on the foam
 Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn! 70

VIII

Forlorn! the very word is like a bell
 To toll me back from thee to my sole self!
 Adieu! the fancy cannot cheat so well
 As she is fam'd to do, deceiving elf.
 Adieu! adieu! thy plaintive anthem fades 75
 Past the near meadows, over the still stream,
 Up the hill-side; and now 'tis buried deep
 In the next valley-glades:
 Was it a vision, or a waking dream?
 Fled is that music:—Do I wake or sleep? 80

ODE ON A GRECIAN URN

(Written 1819)

I

Thou still unravish'd bride of quietness,
 Thou foster-child of silence and slow time,
 Sylvan historian, who canst thus express
 A flowery tale more sweetly than our rhyme:
 What leaf-fring'd legend haunts about thy shape 5
 Of deities or mortals, or of both,
 In Tempe<sup>1</sup> or the dales of Arcady?
 What men or gods are these? What maid-ens loth?
 What mad pursuit? What struggle to escape?
 What pipes and timbrels? What wild ecstasy? 10

<sup>1</sup> A valley in Thessaly, celebrated for its beauty.

II

Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard
 Are sweeter; therefore, ye soft pipes, play on;
 Not to the sensual ear, but, more endear'd,
 Pipe to the spirit, ditties of no tone:
 Fair youth, beneath the trees, thou canst not leave 15
 Thy song, nor ever can those trees be bare;
 Bold Lover, never, never canst thou kiss,
 Though winning near the goal—yet, do not
 grieve;
 She cannot fade, though thou hast not thy bliss,
 For ever wilt thou love, and she be fair! 20

III

Ah! happy, happy boughs! that cannot shed
 Your leaves, nor ever bid the Spring adieu;
 And, happy melodist, unwearied,
 For ever piping songs for ever new;
 More happy love! more happy, happy love! 25
 For ever warm and still to be enjoy'd,
 For ever panting, and for ever young;
 All breathing human passion far above, 28
 That leaves a heart high-sorrowful and cloy'd
 A burning forehead, and a parching tongue.

IV

Who are these coming to the sacrifice?
 To what green altar, O mysterious priest,
 Lead'st thou that heifer lowing at the skies,
 And all her silken flanks with garlands drest?
 What little town by river or sea shore, 35
 Or mountain-built with peaceful citadel,
 Is emptied of this folk, this pious morn?
 And, little town, thy streets for evermore
 Will silent be; and not a soul to tell
 Why thou art desolate, can e'er return. 40

V

O Attic shape! Fair attitude! with brede<sup>2</sup>
 Of marble men and maidens overwrought,
 With forest branches and the trodden weed;
 Thou, silent form, dost tease us out of
 thought
 As doth eternity: Cold Pastoral! 45
 When old age shall this generation waste,
 Thou shalt remain, in midst of other woe
 Than ours, a friend to man, to whom thou say'st,
 "Beauty is truth, truth beauty,"—that is all Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know. 50

TO AUTUMN

(Written 1819 ?)

I

Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness,
 Close bosom-friend of the maturing sun;
 Conspiring with him how to load and bless
 With fruit the vines that round the thatch-eaves run;

<sup>2</sup> The urn is "overwrought" with the shapes of "men and maidens" gracefully interwoven, so that the succession of figures, enrolling the vase like a fillet, or band, is spoken of as a brede, or braid.

To bend with apples the moss'd cottage-trees, 5
 And fill all fruit with ripeness to the core;
 To swell the gourd, and plump the hazel shells
 With a sweet kernel; to set budding more,
 And still more, later flowers for the bees,
 Until they think warm days will never cease, 10
 For Summer has o'er-brimmed their clammy cells.

II

Who hath not seen thee oft amid thy store?
 Sometimes whoever seeks abroad may find
 Thee sitting careless on a granary floor,
 Thy hair soft-lifted by the winnowing wind; 15
 Or on a half-reap'd furrow sound asleep, Drows'd with the fume of poppies, while thy hook
 Spares the next swath and all its twin'd flowers:
 And sometimes like a gleaner thou dost keep
 Steady thy laden head across a brook; 20
 Or by a cyder-press, with patient look,
 Thou watchest the last oozy hours by hours.

III

Where are the songs of Spring? Ay, where are they? a
 Think not of them, thou hast thy music too, — b
 While barr'd clouds bloom the soft-dying day, a 25
 And touch the stubble-plains with rosy hue; b
 Then in a wailful choir the small gnats mourn c
 Among the river sallows, ' borne aloft d
 Or sinking as the light wind lives or dies; e
 And full-grown lambs loud bleat from hilly
 bourn; c 30
 Hedge-cricket sing; and now with treble soft d
 The red-breast whistles from a garden croft; d
 And gathering swallows twitter in the skies. e

ODE ON MELANCHOLY

(Pub. 1820)

I

No, no, go not to Lethe, neither twist
 Wolf's-bane, tight-rooted, for its poisonous
 wine;
 Nor suffer thy pale forehead to be kiss'd
 By nightshade, ruby grape of Proserpine;
 Make not your rosary of yew-berries, 5
 Nor let the beetle, nor the death-moth be
 Your mournful Psyche, nor the downy owl
 A partner in your sorrow's mysteries;
 For shade to shade will come too drowsily,
 And drown the wakeful anguish of the soul. 10

II

But when the melancholy fit shall fall
 Sudden from heaven like a weeping cloud,

1 Willows.

That fosters the droop-headed flowers all,
 And hides the green hill in an April shroud;
 Then glut thy sorrow on a morning rose, 15
 Or on the rainbow of the salt sand-wave,
 Or on the wealth of globed peonies;
 Or if thy mistress some rich anger shows,
 Emprison her soft hand, and let her rave,
 And feed deep, deep upon her peerless
 eyes. 20

III

She dwells with Beauty—Beauty that must die; d
 And Joy, whose hand is ever at his lips b
 Bidding adieu; and aching Pleasure nigh a Turning to poison while the bee-mouth sips: b
 Ay, in the very temple of Delight c 25
 Veil'd Melancholy has her sovran shrine, d
 Though seen of none save him whose strenuous tongue e
 Can burst Joy's grape against his palate fine; d
 His soul shall taste the sadness of her might, c
 And be among her cloudy trophies hung. e 30

Charles Wolfe

1791-1823

THE BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE
AT CORUNNA<sup>1</sup>

(1817)

Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note,
 As his corse to the rampart we hurried; b
 Not a soldier discharged his farewell shot
 O'er the grave where our hero was buried. c
 We buried him darkly at dead of night, 5
 The sods with our bayonets turning;
 By the struggling moonbeam's misty light,
 And the lantern dimly burning.
 No useless coffin enclosed his breast,
 Not in sheet nor in shroud we wound him; 10
 But he lay like a warrior taking his rest
 With his martial cloak around him.
 Few and short were the prayers we said,
 And we spoke not a word of sorrow;
 But we steadfastly gazed on the face that was
 dead, 15
 And we bitterly thought of the morrow.
 We thought as we hollowed his narrow bed
 And smoothed down his lonely pillow,
 That the foe and the stranger would tread o'er
 his head,
 And we far away on the billow! 20
 Lightly they'll talk of the spirit that's gone,
 And o'er his cold ashes upbraid him—
 But little he'll reck, if they let him sleep on
 In the grave where a Briton has laid him.
 But half of our heavy task was done 25
 When the clock struck the hour for retiring;
 And we heard the distant and random gun;
 That the foe was sullenly firing.

<sup>1</sup> For an account of Moore's gallant death, v. Napier's Peninsular War I, Bk. IV, Ch. V.

Slowly and sadly we laid him down, 29
 From the field of his fame fresh and gory;
 We carved not a line and we raised not a stone,
 But we left him alone with his glory.

William Motherwell

1797-1834

JEANIE MORRISON

(From Poems, 1832)

I've wandered east, I've wandered west,
 Through mony a weary way;
 But never, never can forget
 The luve o' life's young day!
 The fire that's blawn on Beltane e'en, 5
 May weel be black gin Yule:
 But blacker fa' awaits the heart
 Where first fond luve grows cule.

O dear, dear Jeanie Morrison,
 The thochts o' bygone years 10
 Still fling their shadows owre my path,
 And blind my een wi' saut, saut tears,
 They blind my een wi' saut, saut tears,
 And sair and sick I pine,
 As Memory idly summons up 15
 The blithe blinks o' langsyne.

'Twas then we luvit ilk ither weel,
 'Twas then we twa did part;
 Sweet time, sad time!—twa bairns at schule,
 Twa bairns, and but ae heart! 20
 'Twas then we sat on ae laigh bink,
 To leir ilk ither lea;<sup>1</sup>
 And tones, and looks, and smiles were shed,
 Remembered evermair.

I wonder, Jeanie, aften yet, 25
 When sitting on that bink,
 Cheek touchin' cheek, loof<sup>2</sup> locked in loof,
 What our wee heads could think!
 When baith bent down owre ae braid page,
 Wi' ae buik on our knee, 30
 Thy lips were on thy lesson, but
 My lesson was in thee.

Oh, mind ye how we hung our heads,
 How cheeks brent red wi' shame,
 Whene'er the schule-weans, laughin' said, 35
 We cleek'd thegither hame?
 And mind ye o' the Saturdays
 (The schule then skail't at noon),
 When we ran off to speel the braes—
 The broomy braes o' June. 40

My head rins round and round about,
 My heart flows like a sea,
 As, ane by ane, the thochts rush back
 O' schule-time and o' thee.
 Oh, mornin' life! Oh, mornin' luve! 45
 Oh, lightsome days and lang,
 When hinnied hopes around our hearts,
 Like simmer blossoms, sprang!

Oh, mind ye, luve, how aft we left
 The deavin' dinsome toun, 50

To wander by the green burnside,
 And hear its waters croon?
 The simmer leaves hung owre our heads,
 The flowers burst round our feet,
 And in the gloamin' o' the wud 55
 The throssil whusslit sweet.

The throssil whusslit in the wud,
 The burn sung to the trees,
 And we, with Nature's heart in tune,
 Concerted harmonies; 60
 And on the knowe abune the burn
 For hours thegither sat
 In the silentness o' joy, till baith
 Wi' very gladness grat.

Ay, ay, dear Jeanie Morrison, 65
 Tears tinkled down your cheek,
 Like dew-buds on a rose, yet nane
 Had ony power to speak!
 That was a time, a blessed time,
 When hearts were fresh and young, 70
 When freely gushed all feelings forth,
 Unsyllabled—unsung!

I marvel, Jeanie Morrison,
 Gin I hae been to thee
 As closely twined wi' earliest thochts 75
 As ye hae been to me?
 Oh! tell me gin their music fills
 Thine ear as it does mine:
 Oh! say gin e'er your heart grows great
 Wi' dreamings o' langsyne? 80

I've wandered east, I've wandered west,
 I've borne a weary lot:
 But in my wanderings, far or near,
 Ye never were forgot.
 The fount that first burst frae this heart, 85
 Still travels on its way;
 And channels deeper as it rins
 The luve o' life's young day.

O dear, dear Jeanie Morrison,
 Since we were sindered young, 90
 I've never seen your face, nor heard
 The music of your tongue:
 But I could hug all wretchedness,
 And happy could I dee,
 Did I but ken your heart still dreamed 95
 O' bygone days and me!

Sir Walter Scott

1771-1832

SELECTIONS FROM SCOTT'S JOURNAL

(Edinburgh) November 20, 1825.—I have all my life regretted that I did not keep a Journal. I have myself lost recollection of much that was interesting, and I have deprived my family and the public of some curious information, by not carrying this resolution into effect. I have bethought me, on seeing lately some volumes of Byron's notes, that he probably had hit upon the right way of keeping such a memorandum-book, by

<sup>1</sup> i. e. to teach each other the lesson. Lea = lore, learning.

<sup>2</sup> Palm, or hand.

throwing aside all pretence of regularity and order, and marking down events just as they occurred to recollection. I will try this plan; and behold I have a handsome locked volume, such as might serve for a lady's album.

December 18. An odd thought strikes me; when I die will the Journal of these days be taken out of the ebony cabinet at Abbotsford, and read as the transient pout of a man worth £60,000, with wonder that the well-seeming Baronet should ever have experienced such a hitch? Or will it be found in some obscure lodging-house, where the decayed son of chivalry has hung up his scutcheon for some 20s. a week, and where one or two old friends will look grave and whisper to each other, "Poor gentleman," "A well-meaning man," "Nobody's enemy but his own," "Thought his parts could never wear out," "Family poorly left," "Pity he took that foolish title"? Who can answer this question?

What a life mine has been!—half educated, almost wholly neglected or left to myself, stuffing my head with most nonsensical trash, and undervalued in society for a time by most of my companions, getting forward and held a bold and clever fellow, contrary to the opinion of all who thought me a mere dreamer, broken-hearted for two years, my heart handsomely-pieced again, but the crack will remain to my dying day. Rich and poor four or five times, once on the verge of ruin, yet opened new sources of wealth almost overflowing. Now taken in my pitch of pride, and nearly winged (unless the good news hold), because London chooses to be in an uproar, and in a tumult of bulls and bears, a poor inoffensive lion like myself is pushed to the wall. And what is to be the end of it? God knows. And so ends the catechism.

March 14, 1826. Read again, and for the third time at least, Miss Austen's very finely written novel of Pride and Prejudice. That young lady had a talent for describing the involvements and feelings and characters of ordinary life, which is to me the most wonderful I ever met with. The Big Bow-wow strain I can do myself like any now going; but the exquisite touch, which renders ordinary commonplace things and characters interesting, from the truth of the description and the sentiment, is denied to me. What a pity such a gifted creature died so early!

April 1.—Ex uno die discite omnes.<sup>1</sup> Rose at seven or sooner, studied, and wrote till breakfast with Anne,<sup>2</sup> about a quarter before ten. Lady Scott seldom able to rise till twelve or one. Then I write or study again till one. At that hour to-day I drove to Huntly Burn, and walked home by one of the hundred and one pleasing paths which I have made through the woods I have planted—now chatting with Tom Purdie, who carries my plaid, and speaks when he pleases, telling long stories of hits and misses in shooting twenty years back—sometimes chewing the cud of sweet and bitter fancy—and sometimes attending to the humours of two curious little terriers of the Dandie Dinmont breed, together with a noble wolf-hound puppy which Glengarry had given me to replace Maida. This brings me down to the very moment I do tell—the rest is prophetic. I will feel sleepy when this book is locked, and perhaps sleep until Dalgleish brings the dinner summons. Then I will have a chat with Lady S. and Anne; some broth or soup, a slice of plain meat—a man's chief business, in Dr. Johnson's estimation, is briefly despatched. Half an hour with my family, and half an hour's coquetting with a cigar, a tumbler of weak whisky and water, and a novel perhaps, lead on to tea, which sometimes consumes another half hour of chat; then write or read in my own room till ten o'clock at night; a little bread and then a glass of porter, and to bed.

August 15. I write on, though a little afflicted with the oppression on my chest. Sometimes I think it is something dangerous, but as it always goes away on change of posture, it cannot be speedily so. I want to finish my task, and then good-night. I will never relax my labour in these affairs, either for fear of pain or for love of life. I will die a free man if working will do it. Accordingly, to-day I cleared the ninth leaf, which is the tenth part of a volume, in two days—four and a half leaves a day.

March 21, 1827. Wrote till twelve, then out upon the heights though the day was stormy, and faced the gale bravely. Tom Purdie was not with me. He would have obliged me to keep the sheltered ground. But, I don't know—

"Even in our ashes live our wonted fires."

There is a touch of the old spirit in me yet that bids me brave the tempest,—the spirit that, in spite of manifold infirmities, made me a roaring boy in my youth, a desperate climber, a bold rider, a deep drinker, and a stout player at single-stick, of all which valuable qualities there are now but slender remains. I worked hard when I came in, and finished five pages.

March 16, 1831. The affair with Mr. Cadell being settled, I have only to arrange a set of regular employment for my time, without over-fatiguing myself. What I at present practice seems active enough for my capacity, and even if I should reach the three score and ten, from which I am thrice three years distant, or nearer ten, the time may pass honourably, usefully, and profitably, both to myself and other people. My ordinary runs thus:—Rise at a quarter before seven; at a quarter after nine breakfast, with eggs, or in the single number, at least; before breakfast private letters, etc.; after breakfast Mr. Laidlaw comes at ten, and we write together till one. I am greatly helped by this excellent man, who takes pains to write a good hand, and supplies the want of my own fingers as far as another person can. We work seriously at the task of the day till one o'clock, when I sometimes walk—not often, however, having failed in strength, and suffering great pain even from a very short walk. Oftener I take the pony for an hour or two and ride about the doors; the exercise is humbling enough, for I require to be lifted on horseback by two servants, and one goes with me to take care I do not fall off and break my bones, a catastrophe very like to happen. My proud promenade à pied or à cheval, as it happens, concludes by three o'clock. An hour intervenes for making up my Journal and such light work. At four comes dinner,—a plate of broth or soup, much condemned by the doctors, a bit of plain meat, no liquors stronger than small beer, and so I sit quiet to six o'clock, when Mr. Laidlaw returns, and remains with me till nine or three quarters past, as it happens. Then I have a bowl of porridge and milk, which I eat with the appetite of a child. I forgot to say that after dinner I am allowed half a glass of whiskey or gin made into weak grog. I never wish for any more, nor do I in my secret soul long for cigars, though once so fond of them. About six hours per day is good working, if I can keep it up.

<sup>1</sup> From one day learn a'll. Cf. Vergil, Æn. II. 65.

<sup>2</sup> Scott's daughter.

May 4, 1831. My pronunciation is a good deal improved. My time glides away ill employed, but I am afraid of the palsy. I should not like to be pinned to my chair. But I believe even that kind of life is more endurable than we could suppose. Your wishes are limited to your little circle—yet the idea is terrible to a man who has been active. My own circle in bodily matters is daily narrowing; not so in intellectual matters, but I am perhaps a bad judge. The plough is coming to the end of the furrow, so it is likely I shall not reach the common goal of mortal life by a few years. I am now in my sixtieth year only, and

"Three score and ten years do sum up."

October. I have been very ill, and if not quite unable to write, I have been unfit to do so. I have wrought however, at two Waverly things, but not well, and, what is worse, past mending. A total prostration of bodily strength is my chief complaint. I cannot walk half a mile. There is, besides, some mental confusion, with the extent of which I am not perhaps fully acquainted. I am perhaps setting. I am myself inclined to think so, and, like a day that has been admired as a fine one, the light of it sets down amid mists and storms. I neither regret nor fear the approach of death if it is coming. I would compound for a little pain instead of this heartless muddiness of mind which renders me incapable of anything rational. The expense of my journey will be something considerable, which I can provide against by borrowing £500 from Mr. Gibson. To Mr. Cadell I owe already, with the cancels on these apoplectic books, about £200, and must run it up to £500 more at least; yet this heavy burthen would be easily borne if I were to be the Walter Scott I once was; but the change is great.

Samuel Taylor Coleridge

1772-1834

THE WANDERINGS OF CAIN<sup>1</sup>

CANTO II

(Written 1798)

"A little further, O my father, yet a little further, and we shall come into the open moonlight." Their road was through a forest of fir-trees; at its entrance the trees stood at distances from each other, and the path was broad, and the moonlight shadows reposed upon it, and appeared quietly to inhabit that solitude. But soon the path winded and became narrow; the sun at high noon sometimes speckled, but never illumined it, and now it was dark as a cavern.

"It is dark, O my father!" said Enos, "but the path under our feet is smooth and soft, and we shall soon come out into the open moonlight."

"Lead on, my child!" said Cain: "guide

<sup>1</sup> Coleridge tells us that while he was living near Wordsworth, at Nether-Stowey in 1798, they agreed to write in concert a "prose-poem" on the story of Cain and Abel in three cantos. Wordsworth was to write the first canto, Coleridge the second, and whoever finished his part first, was to undertake the third. The second canto, The Wanderings of Cain, was the only part ever written. It is well known that Coleridge did not consider meter essential to poetry.

the one, the incidents and agents were to be, in part at least, supernatural; and the excellence aimed at was to consist in the interesting of the affections by the dramatic truth of such emotions, as would naturally accompany such situations, supposing them real. And real in this sense they have been to every human being who, from whatever source of delusion, has at any time believed himself under supernatural agency. For the second class, subjects were to be chosen from ordinary life; the characters and incidents were to be such as will be found in every village and its vicinity, where there is a meditative and feeling mind to seek after them, or to notice them, when they present themselves.

In this idea originated the plan of the Lyrical Ballads,<sup>1</sup> in which it was agreed, that my endeavors should be directed to persons and characters supernatural, or at least romantic; yet so as to transfer from our inward nature a human interest and a semblance of truth sufficient to procure for these shadows of imagination that willing suspension of disbelief for the moment, which constitutes poetic faith. Mr. Wordsworth, on the other hand, was to propose to himself as his object, to give the charm of novelty to things of every day, and to excite a feeling analogous to the supernatural, by awakening the mind's attention to the lethargy of custom, and directing it to the loveliness and the wonders of the world before us; an inexhaustible treasure, but for which, in consequence of the film of familiarity and selfish solicitude we have eyes, yet see not, ears that hear not, and hearts that neither feel nor understand.

With this view I wrote The Ancient Mariner, and was preparing among other poems, The Dark Ladie, and the Christable, in which I should have more nearly realized my ideal than I had done in my first attempt. But Mr. Wordsworth's industry had proved so much more successful, and the number of his poems so much greater, that my compositions, instead of forming a balance, appeared rather an interpolation of heterogeneous matter. Mr. Wordsworth added two or three poems written in his own character, in the impassioned, lofty, and sustained diction, which is characteristic of his genius. In this form the Lyrical Ballads were published; and were presented by him, as an experiment, whether subjects, which from their nature rejected the usual ornaments and extra-colloquial style of poems in general, might not be so managed in the language of ordinary life as to produce the pleasurable interest, which it is the peculiar business of poetry to impart. To the second edition he added a preface of considerable length; in which, notwithstanding some passages of apparently a contrary import, he was understood to contend for the extension of this style to poetry of all kinds, and to reject as vicious and indefensible all phrases and forms of speech that were not included in what he (unfortunately, I think, adopting an equivocal expression) called the language of real life. From this preface, prefixed to poems in which it was impossible to deny the presence of original genius, however mistaken its direction might be deemed, arose the whole long continued controversy. For from the conjunction of perceived power with supposed heresy I explain the inveteracy and in some instances, I grieve to say, the acrimonious passions, with which the controversy has been conducted by the assailants.

Had Mr. Wordsworth's poems been the silly, the childish things, which they were for a long time described as being; had they been really distinguished from the compositions of other poets merely by meanness of language and inanity of thought; had they indeed contained nothing more than what is found in the parodies and pretended imitations of them; they must have sunk at once, a dead weight, into the slough of oblivion, and have dragged the preface along with them. But year after year increased the number of Mr. Wordsworth's admirers. They were found too not in the lower classes of the reading public, but chiefly among young men of strong sensibility and meditative minds; and their admiration (inflamed perhaps in some degree by opposition) was distinguished by its intensity, I might almost say, by its religious fervor.

CHARACTERISTICS OF SHAKESPEARE'S DRAMAS

(Lectures Upon Shakespeare, 1818)

Poetry in essence is as familiar to barbarous as to civilized nations. The Laplander and the savage Indian are cheered by it as well as the inhabitants of London and Paris;—its spirit takes up and incorporates surrounding materials, as a plant clothes itself with soil and climate, whilst it exhibits the working of a vital principle within independent of all accidental circumstances. And to judge with fairness of an author's works, we ought to distinguish what is inward and essential from what is outward and circumstantial. It is essential to poetry that it be simple, and appeal to the elements and primary laws of our nature; that it be sensuous, and by its imagery elicit truth at a flash; that it be impassioned, and be able to move our feelings and awaken our affections. In comparing different poets with each other, we should inquire which have brought into the fullest play our imagination and our reason, or have created the greatest excitement and produced the completest harmony. If we consider great exquisiteness of language and sweetness of metre alone, it is impossible to deny to Pope the character of a delightful writer; but whether he be a poet, must depend upon our definition of the word; and, doubtless, if everything that pleases be poetry, Pope's satires and epistles must be poetry. This, I must say, that poetry, as distinguished from other modes of composition, does not rest in metre, and that it is not poetry, if it make no appeal to our passions or our imagination. One character belongs to all true poets, that they write from a principle within, not originating in any thing without; and that the true poet's work in its form, its shapings, and its modifications, is distinguished from all other works that assume to belong to the class of poetry, as a natural from an artificial flower, or as the mimic garden of a child from an enamelled meadow. In the former the flowers are broken from their stems and stuck into the ground; they are beautiful to the eye and fragrant to the sense, but their colors soon fade and their odor is transient as the smile of the planter;—while the meadow may be visited again and again with renewed delight; its beauty is innate in the soil, and its bloom is of the freshness of nature.

<sup>1</sup> Lyrical Ballads, published in 1798, was the epoch-making book of poems in which Wordsworth and Coleridge first appeared as important poets.

The next ground of critical judgment, and point of comparison, will be as to how far a given poet has been influenced by accidental circumstances. As a living poet must surely write, not for the ages past, but for that in which he lives, and those which are to follow, it is, on the one hand, natural that he should not violate, and on the other, necessary that he should not depend on, the mere manners and modes of his day. See how little does Shakespeare leave us to regret that he was born in his particular age! The great era in modern times was what is called the Restoration of Letters;—the ages preceding it are called the dark ages; but it would be more wise, perhaps, to call them the ages in which we were in the dark. It is usually overlooked that the supposed dark period was not universal, but partial, or successive, or alternate; that the dark age of England was not the dark age of Italy, but that one country was in its light and vigor, whilst another was in its gloom and bondage. But no sooner had the Reformation sounded through Europe like the blast of an archangel's trumpet, than from king to peasant there arose an enthusiasm for knowledge; the discovery of a manuscript became the subject of an embassy; Erasmus read by moonlight, because he could not afford a torch, and begged a penny, not for the love of charity, but for the love of learning. The three great points of attention were religion, morals, and taste; men of genius as well as men of learning, who in this age need to be so widely distinguished, then alike became copyists of the ancients; and this, indeed, was the only way by which the taste of mankind could be improved, or their understandings informed. Whilst Dante imagined himself a humble follower of Virgil, and Ariosto of Homer, they were both unconscious of that greater power working within them, which in many points carried them beyond their supposed originals. All great discoveries bear the stamp of the age in which they are made;—hence we perceive the effects of the purer religion of the moderns, visible for the most part in their lives; and in reading their works we should not content ourselves with the mere narrative of events long since passed, but should learn to apply their maxims and conduct to ourselves.

Having intimated that times and manners lend their form and pressure to genius, let me once more draw a slight parallel between the ancient and modern stage, the stages of Greece and of England. The Greeks were polytheists; their religion was local; almost the only object of all their knowledge, art, and taste, was their gods; and, accordingly, their productions were, if the expression may be allowed, statuesque, whilst those of the moderns are picturesque. The Greeks reared a structure, which in its parts, and as a whole, filled the mind with the calm and elevated impression of perfect beauty, and symmetrical proportion. The moderns also produced a whole, a more striking whole; but it was by blending materials and fusing the parts together. And as the Pantheon is to York Minster or Westminster Abbey, so is Sophocles compared with Shakespeare; in the one a completeness, a satisfaction, an excellence, on which the mind rests with complacency; in the other a multitude of interlaced materials, great and little, magnificent and mean, accompanied, indeed, with a sense of a falling short of perfection, and yet at the same time, so promising of our social and individual progression, that we would not, if we could, exchange it for that repose of the mind which dwells on the forms of symmetry

the one, the incidents and agents were to be, in part at least, supernatural; and the excellence aimed at was to consist in the interesting of the affections by the dramatic truth of such emotions, as would naturally accompany such situations, supposing them real. And real in this sense they have been to every human being who, from whatever source of delusion, has at any time believed himself under supernatural agency. For the second class, subjects were to be chosen from ordinary life; the characters and incidents were to be such as will be found in every village and its vicinity, where there is a meditative and feeling mind to seek after them, or to notice them, when they present themselves.

In this idea originated the plan of the Lyrical Ballads,<sup>1</sup> in which it was agreed, that my endeavors should be directed to persons and characters supernatural, or at least romantic; yet so as to transfer from our inward nature a human interest and a semblance of truth sufficient to procure for these shadows of imagination that willing suspension of disbelief for the moment, which constitutes poetic faith. Mr. Wordsworth, on the other hand, was to propose to himself as his object, to give the charm of novelty to things of every day, and to excite a feeling analogous to the supernatural, by awakening the mind's attention to the lethargy of custom, and directing it to the loveliness and the wonders of the world before us; an inexhaustible treasure, but for which, in consequence of the film of familiarity and selfish solicitude we have eyes, yet see not, ears that hear not, and hearts that neither feel nor understand.

With this view I wrote The Ancient Mariner, and was preparing among other poems, The Dark Ladie, and the Christable, in which I should have more nearly realized my ideal than I had done in my first attempt. But Mr. Wordsworth's industry had proved so much more successful, and the number of his poems so much greater, that my compositions, instead of forming a balance, appeared rather an interpolation of heterogeneous matter. Mr. Wordsworth added two or three poems written in his own character, in the impassioned, lofty, and sustained diction, which is characteristic of his genius. In this form the Lyrical Ballads were published; and were presented by him, as an experiment, whether subjects, which from their nature rejected the usual ornaments and extra-colloquial style of poems in general, might not be so managed in the language of ordinary life as to produce the pleasurable interest, which it is the peculiar business of poetry to impart. To the second edition he added a preface of considerable length; in which, notwithstanding some passages of apparently a contrary import, he was understood to contend for the extension of this style to poetry of all kinds, and to reject as vicious and indefensible all phrases and forms of speech that were not included in what he (unfortunately, I think, adopting an equivocal expression) called the language of real life. From this preface, prefixed to poems in which it was impossible to deny the presence of original genius, however mistaken its direction might be deemed, arose the whole long continued controversy. For from the conjunction of perceived power with supposed heresy I explain the inveteracy and in some instances, I grieve to say, the acrimonious passions, with which the controversy has been conducted by the assailants.

Had Mr. Wordsworth's poems been the silly, the childish things, which they were for a long time described as being; had they been really distinguished from the compositions of other poets merely by meanness of language and inanity of thought; had they indeed contained nothing more than what is found in the parodies and pretended imitations of them; they must have sunk at once, a dead weight, into the slough of oblivion, and have dragged the preface along with them. But year after year increased the number of Mr. Wordsworth's admirers. They were found too not in the lower classes of the reading public, but chiefly among young men of strong sensibility and meditative minds; and their admiration (inflamed perhaps in some degree by opposition) was distinguished by its intensity, I might almost say, by its religious fervor.

CHARACTERISTICS OF SHAKESPEARE'S DRAMAS

(Lectures Upon Shakespeare, 1818)

Poetry in essence is as familiar to barbarous as to civilized nations. The Laplander and the savage Indian are cheered by it as well as the inhabitants of London and Paris;—its spirit takes up and incorporates surrounding materials, as a plant clothes itself with soil and climate, whilst it exhibits the working of a vital principle within independent of all accidental circumstances. And to judge with fairness of an author's works, we ought to distinguish what is inward and essential from what is outward and circumstantial. It is essential to poetry that it be simple, and appeal to the elements and primary laws of our nature; that it be sensuous, and by its imagery elicit truth at a flash; that it be impassioned, and be able to move our feelings and awaken our affections. In comparing different poets with each other, we should inquire which have brought into the fullest play our imagination and our reason, or have created the greatest excitement and produced the completest harmony. If we consider great exquisiteness of language and sweetness of metre alone, it is impossible to deny to Pope the character of a delightful writer; but whether he be a poet, must depend upon our definition of the word; and, doubtless, if everything that pleases be poetry, Pope's satires and epistles must be poetry. This, I must say, that poetry, as distinguished from other modes of composition, does not rest in metre, and that it is not poetry, if it make no appeal to our passions or our imagination. One character belongs to all true poets, that they write from a principle within, not originating in any thing without; and that the true poet's work in its form, its shapings, and its modifications, is distinguished from all other works that assume to belong to the class of poetry, as a natural from an artificial flower, or as the mimic garden of a child from an enamelled meadow. In the former the flowers are broken from their stems and stuck into the ground; they are beautiful to the eye and fragrant to the sense, but their colors soon fade and their odor is transient as the smile of the planter;—while the meadow may be visited again and again with renewed delight; its beauty is innate in the soil, and its bloom is of the freshness of nature.

<sup>1</sup> Lyrical Ballads, published in 1798, was the epoch-making book of poems in which Wordsworth and Coleridge first appeared as important poets.

The next ground of critical judgment, and point of comparison, will be as to how far a given poet has been influenced by accidental circumstances. As a living poet must surely write, not for the ages past, but for that in which he lives, and those which are to follow, it is, on the one hand, natural that he should not violate, and on the other, necessary that he should not depend on, the mere manners and modes of his day. See how little does Shakespeare leave us to regret that he was born in his particular age! The great era in modern times was what is called the Restoration of Letters;—the ages preceding it are called the dark ages; but it would be more wise, perhaps, to call them the ages in which we were in the dark. It is usually overlooked that the supposed dark period was not universal, but partial, or successive, or alternate; that the dark age of England was not the dark age of Italy, but that one country was in its light and vigor, whilst another was in its gloom and bondage. But no sooner had the Reformation sounded through Europe like the blast of an archangel's trumpet, than from king to peasant there arose an enthusiasm for knowledge; the discovery of a manuscript became the subject of an embassy; Erasmus read by moonlight, because he could not afford a torch, and begged a penny, not for the love of charity, but for the love of learning. The three great points of attention were religion, morals, and taste; men of genius as well as men of learning, who in this age need to be so widely distinguished, then alike became copyists of the ancients; and this, indeed, was the only way by which the taste of mankind could be improved, or their understandings informed. Whilst Dante imagined himself a humble follower of Virgil, and Ariosto of Homer, they were both unconscious of that greater power working within them, which in many points carried them beyond their supposed originals. All great discoveries bear the stamp of the age in which they are made;—hence we perceive the effects of the purer religion of the moderns, visible for the most part in their lives; and in reading their works we should not content ourselves with the mere narrative of events long since passed, but should learn to apply their maxims and conduct to ourselves.

Having intimated that times and manners lend their form and pressure to genius, let me once more draw a slight parallel between the ancient and modern stage, the stages of Greece and of England. The Greeks were polytheists; their religion was local; almost the only object of all their knowledge, art, and taste, was their gods; and, accordingly, their productions were, if the expression may be allowed, statuesque, whilst those of the moderns are picturesque. The Greeks reared a structure, which in its parts, and as a whole, filled the mind with the calm and elevated impression of perfect beauty, and symmetrical proportion. The moderns also produced a whole, a more striking whole; but it was by blending materials and fusing the parts together. And as the Pantheon is to York Minster or Westminster Abbey, so is Sophocles compared with Shakespeare; in the one a completeness, a satisfaction, an excellence, on which the mind rests with complacency; in the other a multitude of interlaced materials, great and little, magnificent and mean, accompanied, indeed, with a sense of a falling short of perfection, and yet at the same time, so promising of our social and individual progression, that we would not, if we could, exchange it for that repose of the mind which dwells on the forms of symmetry in the acquiescent admiration of grace. This general characteristic of the ancient and modern drama might be illustrated by a parallel of the ancient and modern music;—the one consisting of melody arising from a succession only of pleasing sounds,—the modern embracing harmony also, the result of combination and the effect of a whole.

I have said, and I say it again, that great as was the genius of Shakespeare, his judgment was at least equal to it. Of this any one will be convinced, who attentively considers those points in which the dramas of Greece and England differ, from the dissimilitude of circumstances by which each was modified and influenced. The Greek stage had its origin in the ceremonies of a sacrifice, such as of the goat to Bacchus, whom we most erroneously regard as merely the jolly god of wine;—for among the ancients he was venerable, as the symbol of that power which acts without our consciousness in the vital energies of nature,—the vinum mundi,<sup>1</sup>—as Apollo was that of the conscious agency of our intellectual being. The heroes of old under the influences of this Bacchic enthusiasm, performed more than human actions;—hence tales of the favourite champions soon passed into dialogue. On the Greek stage the chorus was always before the audience; the curtain was never dropped, as we should say; and change of place being therefore, in general, impossible, the absurd notion of condemning it merely as improbable in itself was never entertained by any one. If we can believe ourselves at Thebes in one act, we may believe ourselves at Athens in the next. If a story lasts twenty-four hours or twenty-four years, it is equally improbable. There seems to be no just boundary but what the feelings prescribe. But on the Greek stage where the same persons were perpetually before the audience, great judgment was necessary in venturing on any such change. The poets never, therefore, attempted to impose on the senses by bringing places to men, but they did bring men to places, as in the well-known instance in the Eumenides,<sup>2</sup> where during an evident retirement of the chorus from the orchestra, the scene is changed to Athens, and Orestes is first introduced in the temple of Minerva, and the chorus of Furies come in afterwards in pursuit of him.

In the Greek drama there were no formal divisions into scenes and acts; there were no means, therefore, of allowing for the necessary lapse of time between one part of the dialogue and another, and unity of time in a strict sense was, of course, impossible. To overcome that difficulty of accounting for time, which is effected on the modern stage by dropping a curtain, the judgment and great genius supplied music and measured motion, and with the lyric ode filled up the vacuity. In the story of the Agamemnon of Æschylus, the capture of Troy is supposed to be announced by a fire lighted on the Asiatic shore, and the transmission of the signal by successive beacons to Mycenæ. The signal is first seen at the 21st line, and the herald from Troy itself enters at the 486th, and Agamemnon himself at the 783d line. But the practical absurdity of this was not felt by the audience, who, in imagination, stretched minutes into hours, while they listened to the lofty narrative odes of the chorus which almost entirely filled up the interspace. Another fact deserves attention here, namely, that regularly on the Greek stage a drama, or acted story, consisted in reality of three dramas, called together a trilogy, and performed consecutively in the course of one day. Now you may conceive a tragedy of Shakespeare's a trilogy connected in one single representation. Divide Lear into three parts and each would be a play with the ancients; or take the three Æschylean dramas<sup>3</sup> of Agamemnon, and divide them into, or call them, as many acts, and they together would be one play. The first act would comprise the usurpation of Ægisthus, and the murder of Agamemnon; the second, the revenge of Orestes, and the murder of his mother; and the third, the penance and absolution of Orestes;—occupying a period of twenty-two years.

The stage in Shakespeare's time was a naked room with a blanket for a curtain; but he made it a field for monarchs. That law of unity, which has its foundations, not in the factitious necessity of custom, but in nature itself, the unity of feeling, is everywhere and at all times observed by Shakespeare in his plays. Read Romeo and Juliet;—all is youth and spring,—youth with its follies, its virtues, its precipitancies;—spring with its odours, its flowers, and its transiency; it is one and the same feeling that commences, goes through, and ends the play. The old men, the Capulets and the Montagues, are not common old men; they have an eagerness, a heartiness, a vehemence, the effect of spring; with Romeo, his change of passion, his sudden marriage, and his rash death, are all the effects of youth;—whilst in Juliet love had all that is tender and melancholy in the nightingale, all that is voluptuous in the rose, with whatever is sweet in the freshness of the spring; but it ends with a long deep sigh like the last breeze of the Italian evening. This unity of feeling and character pervades every drama of Shakespeare.

<sup>1</sup> The wine of the world.

<sup>2</sup> Æschylus's Eumenides, V. 230-239.

<sup>3</sup> Agamemnon, Choephori, Eumenides.

It seems to me that his plays are distinguished from those of all other dramatic poets by the following characteristics:

1. Expectation in preference to surprise. It is like the true reading of the passage—"God said, Let there be light, and there was light;"—not there was light. As the feeling with which we startle at a shooting star compared with that of watching the sunrise at the pre-established moment, such and so low is surprise compared with expectation.

2. Signal adherence to the great law of nature, that all opposites tend to attract and temper each other. Passion in Shakespeare generally displays libertinism, but involves morality; and if there are exceptions to this, they are, independently of their intrinsic value, all of them indicative of individual character, and, like the farewell admonitions of the parent, have an end beyond the parental relation. Thus the Countess's beautiful precepts to Bertram, by elevating her character, raise that of Helena<sup>4</sup> her favourite, and soften down the point in her which Shakespeare does not mean us not to see, but to see and to forgive, and at length to justify. And so it is in Polonius, who is the personified memory of wisdom no longer actually possessed. This admirable character is always misrepresented on the stage. Shakespeare never intended to exhibit him as a buffoon; for although it was natural that Hamlet,—a young man of fire and genius, detesting formality, and disliking Polonius on political grounds, as imagining that he had assisted his uncle in his usurpation,—should express himself satirically,—yet this must not be taken as exactly the poet's conception of him. In Polonius a certain induration of character had arisen from long habits of business; but take his advice to Laertes, and Ophelia's reverence for his memory, and we shall see that he was meant to be represented as a statesman somewhat past his faculties—his recollections of life all full of wisdom, and showing a knowledge of human nature, whilst that immediately takes place before him, and escapes from him, is indicative of weakness.

But as in Homer all the deities are in armour, even Venus; so in Shakespeare all the characters are strong. Hence real folly and dulness are made the vehicles of wisdom. There is no difficulty of one being a fool to imitate a fool; but to be, remain, and speak like a wise man and a great wit, and yet so as to give a vivid representation of a veritable fool,—hic labor, hoc opus est.<sup>5</sup> A drunken constable is not uncommon, nor hard to draw; but see and examine what goes to make up a Dogberry.<sup>6</sup>

3. Keeping at all times in the high road of life. Shakespeare has no innocent adulteries, no interesting incests, no virtuous vice;—he never renders that amiable which religion and reason alike teach us to detest, or clothes impurity in the garb of virtue, like Beaumont and Fletcher, the Kotzebues<sup>7</sup> of the day. Shakespeare's fathers are roused by ingratitude, his husbands stung by unfaithfulness; in him, in short, the affections are wounded in those points in which all may, nay, must, feel.

Let the morality of Shakespeare be contrasted with that of the writers of his own, or the succeeding age, or of those of the present day, who boast their superiority in this respect. No one can dispute that the result of such a comparison is altogether in favour of Shakespeare;—even the letters of women of high rank in his age were often coarser than his writings. If he occasionally disgusts a keen sense of delicacy, he never injures the mind; he neither excites, nor flatters passion, in order to degrade the subject of it; he does not use the faulty thing for a faulty purpose, nor carries on warfare against virtue, by causing wickedness to appear as no wickedness, through the medium of a morbid sympathy with the unfortunate. In Shakespeare vice never walks as in twilight; nothing is purposely out of its place;—he inverts not the order of nature and propriety,—does not make every magistrate a drunkard or glutton, nor every poor man meek, humane, and temperate; he has no benevolent butchers, nor any sentimental ratcatchers.

4. Independence of the dramatic interest on the plot. The interest in the plot is always in fact on account of the characters, not vice versa, as in almost all other writers; the plot is a mere canvass and no more. Hence arises the true justification of the same stratagem being used in regard to Benedict and Beatrice,—the vanity in each being alike. Take away from the Much Ado About Nothing all that which is not indispensable to the plot, either as having little to do with it, or, at best, like Dogberry and his comrades, forced into the service, when any other less ingeniously absurd watchmen and night constables would

<sup>5</sup> "This is the toil, this the work," a misquotation of Vergil's Hoc opus, hic labor est.

<sup>6</sup> The foolish watchman in Much Ado About Nothing.

<sup>4</sup> Bertram, Helena, are characters in All's Well that Ends Well.

<sup>7</sup> August F. F. von Kotzebue, a German dramatist born in 1761. His plays are pervaded by the tone of moral laxity.

have answered the mere necessities of the action;—take away Benedict, Beatrice, Dogberry, and the reaction of the former on the character of Hero,—and what would remain? In other writers the main agent of the plot is always the prominent character; in Shakespeare it is so, or is not so, as the character is in itself calculated, or not calculated, to form the plot. Don John is the mainspring of the plot of this play; but he is merely shown and then withdrawn.

5. Independence of the interest on the story as the groundwork of the plot. Hence Shakespeare never took the trouble of inventing stories. It was enough for him to select from those that had already been invented or recorded such as had one or other, or both, of two recommendations, namely, suitability to his particular purpose, and their being parts of popular tradition,—names of which we had often heard, and of their fortunes, and as to which all we wanted was, to see the man himself. So it is just the man himself, the Lear, the Shylock, the Richard, that Shakespeare makes us for the first time acquainted with. Omit the first scene in Lear, and yet every thing will remain; so the first and second scenes in the Merchant of Venice. Indeed it is universally true.

6. Interfusion of the lyrical—that which in its very essence is poetical—not only with the dramatic, as in the plays of Metastasio,<sup>8</sup> where at the end of the scene comes the aria as the exit speech of the character,—but also in and through the dramatic. Songs in Shakespeare are introduced as songs only, just as songs are in real life, beautifully as some of them are characteristic of the person who has sung or called for them, as Desdemona's "Willow," and Ophelia's wild snatches, and the sweet carollings in As You Like It. But the whole of the Midsummer Night's Dream is one continued specimen of the dramatised lyrical. And observe how exquisitely the dramatic of Hotspur;—

Marry, and I'm glad on't with all my heart;
I'd rather be a kitten and cry—mew, &c.
melts away into the lyric of Mortimer;—
I understand thy looks: that pretty Welsh
Which thou pourest down from these swelling heavens,
I am too perfect in, &c.
Henry IV, Part 1, Act iii, sc. 1.

7. The characters of the dramatis personæ, like those in real life, are to be inferred by the reader;—they are not told to him. And it is well worth remarking that Shakespeare's characters, like those in real life, are very commonly misunderstood, and almost always understood by different persons in different ways. The causes are the same in either case. If you take only what the friends of the character say, you may be deceived, and still more so, if that which his enemies say; nay, even the character himself sees himself through the medium of his character, and not exactly as he is. Take all together, not omitting a shrewd hint from the clown or the fool, and perhaps your impression will be right; and you may know whether you have in fact discovered the poet's own idea, by all the speeches receiving light from it, and attesting its reality by reflecting it.

<sup>8</sup> An Italian Dramatist (1698–1782), and court-poet at Vienna, who wrote lyric dramas, various composers supplying the music for each.

Lastly, in Shakespeare the heterogeneous is united, as it is in nature. You must not suppose a pressure or passion always acting on or in the character!—Passion in Shakespeare is that by which the individual is distinguished from others, not that which makes a different kind of him. Shakespeare followed the main march of the human affections. He entered into no analysis of the passions or faiths of men, but assured himself that such and such passions and faiths were grounded in our common nature, and not in the mere accidents of ignorance or disease. This is an important consideration and constitutes our Shakespeare the morning star, the guide and the pioneer, of true philosophy.

Robert Southey

1774–1843

THE BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR

(From Life of Nelson, 1813)

His [Nelson's] services were as willingly accepted as they were offered, and Lord Barham,<sup>1</sup> giving him the list of the navy, desired him to choose his own officers. "Choose yourself, my lord," was his reply; "the same spirit actuates the whole profession: you cannot choose wrong." Lord Barham then desired him to say what ships and how many he would wish, in addition to the fleet which he was going to command, and said they should follow him as soon as each was ready. No appointment was ever more in unison with the feelings and judgment of the whole nation. They, like

<sup>1</sup> Charles Middleton (1726–1813), who had then been recently appointed First Lord of the Admiralty (April 30, 1805), and raised to the peerage as Lord Barham, after a long and honorable career in the navy.

Lady Hamilton,<sup>2</sup> thought that the destruction of the combined fleets ought properly to be Nelson's work; that he who had been

"Half around the sea-girt ball,
The hunter of the recreant Gaul,"<sup>3</sup>

ought to reap the spoils of the chase which he had watched so long and so perseveringly pursued.

Unremitting exertions were made to equip the ships which he had chosen, and especially to refit the Victory, which was once more to bear his flag. Before he left London he called at his upholsterer's, where the coffin<sup>4</sup> which Captain Hallowell had given him was deposited, and desired that its history might be engraven upon the lid, saying it was highly probable he might want it on his return. He seemed, indeed, to have been impressed with an expectation that he should fall in the battle. In a letter to his brother, written immediately after his return, he had said: "We must not talk of Sir Robert Calder's battle.<sup>5</sup> I might not have done so much with my small force. If I had fallen in with them, you might probably have been a lord before I wished, for I know they meant to make a dead set at the Victory." Nelson had once regarded the prospect of death with gloomy satisfaction; it was when he anticipated the upbraidings of his wife and the displeasure of his venerable father. The state of his feelings now was expressed in his private journal in these words: "Friday night (Sept. 13th), at half-past ten, I drove from dear, dear Merton, where I left all which I hold dear in this world, to go to serve my king and country. May the great God whom I adore enable me to fulfil the expectations of my country! And if it is His good pleasure that I should return, my thanks will never cease being offered up to the throne of His mercy. If it is His good providence to cut short my days upon earth, I bow with the greatest submission; relying that He will protect those so dear to me whom I may leave behind. His will be done. Amen! Amen! Amen!"<sup>6</sup>

Early on the following morning he reached Portsmouth, and having despatched his business on shore, endeavoured to elude the populace

<sup>2</sup> A beautiful adventuress, who gained an unfortunate influence over Nelson. His attachment to her brought about his separation from his wife.

<sup>3</sup> From the Songs of Trafalgar, by John Wilson Croker. Croker was secretary of the Admiralty when the Life of Nelson was published, and it was to him that Southey dedicated his book.

<sup>4</sup> This coffin was made of the main-mast of the French ship L'Orient, which had been one of the ships in the fleet defeated by Nelson in the battle of the Nile, 1798. It was presented to Nelson by Capt. Hallowell, that the great Admiral might be buried in one of his trophies.

<sup>5</sup> An engagement between the Franco-Spanish fleet and the English, which took place off Cape Finisterre, July 22, 1805. Calder was severely criticised for not winning a decisive victory.

by taking a by-way to the beach, but a crowd collected in his train, pressing forward to obtain sight of his face; many were in tears, and many knelt down before him, and blessed him as he passed. England has had many heroes, but never one who so entirely possessed the love of his fellow-countrymen as Nelson. All men knew that his heart was as humane as it was fearless; that there was not in his nature the slightest alloy of selfishness or cupidity, but that with perfect and entire devotion he served his country with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his strength; and therefore they loved him as truly and as fervently as he loved England. They pressed upon the parapet to gaze after him when his barge pushed off, and he was returning their cheers by waving his hat. The sentinels, who endeavoured to prevent them from trespassing upon this ground, were wedged among the crowd, and an officer who, not very prudently upon such an occasion, ordered them to drive the people down with their bayonets, was compelled speedily to retreat; for the people would not be debarred from gazing till the last moment upon the hero—the darling hero—of England. . . .

About half-past nine in the morning of the 19th the Mars, being the nearest to the fleet of the ships which formed the line of communication with the frigates in-shore, repeated the signal that the enemy were coming out of port.<sup>6</sup> The wind was at this time very light, with partial breezes, mostly from the S. S. W. Nelson ordered the signal to be made for a chase in the south-east quarter. About two the repeating ships announced that the enemy were at sea. All night the British fleet continued under all sail, steering to the southeast. At daybreak<sup>7</sup> they were in the entrance of the Straits, but the enemy were not in sight. About seven, one of the frigates made signal that the enemy were bearing north. Upon this the Victory hove-to, and shortly afterwards Nelson made sail again to the northward. In the afternoon the wind blew fresh from the south-west, and the English began to fear that the foe might be forced to return to port.

A little before sunset, however, Blackwood,<sup>8</sup> in the Euryalus, telegraphed that they appeared determined to go to the westward. "And that," said the Admiral in his diary, "they shall not do, if it is in the power of Nelson and Bronte to prevent them." Nelson had signified to Blackwood that he depended upon him to keep sight of the enemy. They were observed so well that all their motions were made known to him, and, as they wore twice, he inferred that that they were aiming to keep the port of Cadiz open, and would retreat there as soon as they saw the British fleet; for this reason he was very careful not to approach near enough to be seen by them during the night. At daybreak the combined fleets<sup>9</sup> were distinctly seen from the Victory's deck, formed in a close line of battle ahead, on the starboard tack, about twelve miles to leeward, and standing to the south. Our fleet consisted of twenty-seven sail of the line and four frigates;<sup>10</sup> theirs of thirty-three and seven large frigates. Their superiority was greater in size and weight of metal than in numbers. They had four thousand troops on board; and the best riflemen who could be procured, many of them Tyrolese, were dispersed through the ships. Little did the Tyrolese, and little did the Spaniards at that day, imagine what horrors the wicked tyrant whom they served was preparing for their country.

<sup>6</sup> i. e., Cadiz.

<sup>7</sup> On October 21, 1805, the day of the battle of Trafalgar.

<sup>8</sup> Sir Henry Blackwood (1770-1832), had been given command of the in-shore squadron, with the duty of keeping the Admiral informed of every move of the enemy.

Soon after daylight Nelson came upon deck. The 21st of October was a festival in his family, because on that day his uncle, Captain Suckling in the Dreadnought, with two other line-of-battle ships, had beaten off a French squadron of four sail of the line and three frigates.<sup>11</sup> Nelson, with that sort of superstition from which few persons are entirely exempt, had more than once expressed his persuasion that this was to be the day of his battle also, and he was well pleased at seeing his prediction about to be verified. The wind was now from the west—light breezes, with a long heavy swell. Signal was made to bear down upon the enemy in two lines, and the fleet set all sail. Collingwood,<sup>12</sup> in the Royal Sovereign, led the lee line of thirteen ships; the Victory led the weather line of fourteen. Having seen that all was as it should be, Nelson retired to his cabin and wrote the following prayer:—"May the great God whom I worship grant to my country, and for the benefit of Europe in general, a great and glorious victory, and may no misconduct in anyone tarnish it, and may humanity after victory be the predominant feature in the British fleet! For myself individually,—I commit my life to Him that made me, and may His blessing alight on my endeavours for serving my country faithfully! To Him I resign myself, and the just cause which is entrusted to me to defend. Amen, Amen, Amen." . . .

Blackwood went on board the Victory about six. He found him in good spirits, but very calm; not in that exhilaration which he had felt upon entering into battle at Aboukir and Copenhagen; he knew that his own life would be particularly aimed at, and seems to have looked for death with almost as sure an expectation as for victory. His whole attention was fixed upon the enemy. They tacked to the northward, and formed their line on the larboard tack; thus bringing the shoals of Trafalgar and St. Pedro under the lee of the British and keeping the port of Cadiz open for themselves. This was judiciously done; and Nelson, aware of all the advantages which it gave them, made signal to prepare to anchor.

Villeneuve<sup>13</sup> was a skilful seaman, worthy of serving a better master and a better cause. His plan of defence was as well conceived and as original as the plan of attack. He formed the fleet in a double line, every alternate ship being about a cable's length<sup>14</sup> to windward of her second ahead and astern. Nelson, certain of a triumphant issue to the day, asked Blackwood what he should consider as a victory. That officer answered that, considering the handsome way in which battle was offered by the enemy, their apparent determination for a fair trial of strength, and the situation of the land, he thought it would be a glorious result if fourteen were captured. He replied: "I shall not be satisfied with less than twenty." Soon afterwards he asked him if he did not think there was a signal wanting. Captain Blackwood made answer that he thought the whole fleet seemed very clearly to understand what they were about. These words were scarcely spoken before that signal was made which will be remembered as long as the language or even the memory of England shall endure—Nelson's last signal: "ENGLAND EXPECTS EVERY MAN TO DO HIS DUTY!" It was received throughout the fleet with a shout of answering acclamation, made sublime by the spirit which it breathed and the feeling which it expressed. "Now," said Lord Nelson, "I can do no more. We must trust to the great Disposer of all events and the justice of our cause. I thank God for this great opportunity of doing my duty."

He wore that day, as usual, his Admiral's frock-coat, bearing on the left breast four stars of the different orders with which he was in-

<sup>9</sup> In 1805 Spain formed an alliance with France, and agreed to furnish twenty-five ships of the line and eleven frigates for the combined fleet.

<sup>10</sup> Sail of the line corresponded to the modern battle ships and were so called because of their heavy armament, which enabled them to take a place in the line of battle. Frigates were fast sailers, corresponding to the modern cruisers; Nelson called them "the eyes of the fleet."

<sup>11</sup> The action referred to took place in 1757 off Cape Francois in the West Indies, when Capt. Suckling, under Commodore Forrest attacked and disabled a powerful French squadron.

<sup>12</sup> Cuthbert Collingwood (1750-1810) was next in command to Nelson, with the rank of Vice-Admiral.

<sup>13</sup> The French Admiral. <sup>14</sup> A cable's length is 600 feet.

vested. Ornaments which rendered him so conspicuous a mark for the enemy were beheld with ominous apprehensions by his officers. It was known that there were riflemen on board the French ships, and it could not be doubted but that his life would be particularly aimed at. They communicated their fears to each other, and the surgeon, Mr. Beatty,<sup>15</sup> spoke to the chaplain, Dr. Scott, and to Mr. Scott, the public secretary, desiring that some person would entreat him to change his dress or cover the stars; but they knew that such a request would highly displease him. "In honour I gained them," he had said when such a thing had been hinted to him formerly, "and in honour I will die with them." Mr. Beatty, however, would not have been deterred by any fear of exciting his displeasure from speaking to him himself upon a subject in which the weal of England, as well as the life of Nelson, was concerned; but he was ordered from the deck before he could find an opportunity. This was a point upon which Nelson's officers knew that it was hopeless to remonstrate or reason with him; but both Blackwood and his own captain, Hardy, represented to him how advantageous to the fleet it would be for him to keep out of action as long as possible, and he consented at last to let the Leviathan and the Téméraire, which were sailing abreast of the Victory, be ordered to pass ahead. Yet even here the last infirmity of this noble mind was indulged, for these ships could not pass ahead if the Victory continued to carry all her sail, and so far was Nelson from shortening sail that it was evident he took pleasure in pressing on, and rendering it impossible for them to obey his own orders. A long swell was setting into the Bay of Cadiz. Our ships, crowding all sail, moved majestically before it, with light winds from the south-west. The sun shone on the sails of the enemy; and their well-formed line, with their numerous three-deckers, made an appearance which any other assailants would have thought formidable; but the British sailors only admired the beauty and the splendour of the spectacle, and, in full confidence of winning what they saw, remarked to each other what a fine sight yonder ships would make at Spithead.<sup>16</sup>

The French Admiral, from the Bucentaure beheld the new manner in which his enemy was advancing—Nelson and Collingwood each leading his line; and pointing them out to his officers, he is said to have exclaimed that such conduct could not fail to be successful. Yet

Villeneuve had made his own dispositions with the utmost skill, and the fleets under his command waited for the attack with perfect coolness. Ten minutes before twelve they opened their fire. Eight or nine of the ships immediately ahead of the Victory, and across her bows, fired single guns at her to ascertain whether she was yet within their range. As soon as Nelson perceived that their shot passed over him he desired Blackwood and Captain Prowse, of the Sirius, to repair to their respective frigates, and on their way to tell all the captains of the line-of-battle ships that he depended on their exertions, and that, if by the prescribed mode of attack they found it impracticable to get into action immediately, they might adopt whatever they thought best, provided it led them quickly and closely alongside an enemy. As they were standing on the front of the poop, Blackwood took him by the hand, saying he hoped soon to return and find him in possession of twenty prizes. He replied, "God bless you, Blackwood; I shall never see you again."

Nelson's column was steered about two points more to the north than Collingwood's, in order to cut off the enemy's escape into Cadiz. The lee line, therefore, was first engaged. "See," cried Nelson, pointing to the Royal Sovereign,<sup>17</sup> as she steered right for the centre of the enemy's line, cut through it astern of the Santa Anna, three-decker, and engaged her at the muzzle of her guns on the starboard side; "see how that noble fellow Collingwood carries his ship into action!" Collingwood, delighted at being first in the heat of the fire, and knowing the feelings of his Commander and old friend, turned to his captain and exclaimed, "Rotherham, what would Nelson give to be here!" Both these brave officers perhaps at this moment thought of Nelson with gratitude for a circumstance which had occurred on the preceding day. Admiral Collingwood, with some of the captains, having gone on board the Victory to receive instructions, Nelson inquired of him where his captain was, and was told in reply that they were not upon good terms with each other. "Terms!" said Nelson, "good terms with each other!" Immediately he sent a boat for Captain Rotherham, led him, as soon as he arrived, to Collingwood, and saying, "Look, yonder are the enemy!" bade them shake hands like Englishmen.

The enemy continued to fire a gun at a time at the Victory till they saw that a shot had passed through her main-top-gallant sail; then they opened their broadsides, aiming chiefly at her rigging, in the hope of disabling her before she could close with them. Nelson, as usual, had hoisted several flags, lest one should be shot away. The enemy showed no colours till late in the action, when they began to feel the necessity of having them to strike. For this reason the Santissima Trinidad—Nelson's old acquaintance, as he used to call her—was distinguishable only by her four decks, and to the bow of this opponent he ordered the Victory to be steered. Meantime an incessant raking fire was kept up upon the Victory. The Admiral's secretary was one of the first who fell; he was killed by a cannon-shot while conversing with Hardy. Captain Adair, of the marines, with the help of a sailor, endeavoured to remove the body from Nelson's sight, who had a great regard for Mr. Scott; but he anxiously asked, "Is that poor Scott that's gone?" and being informed that it was indeed so, exclaimed, "Poor fellow!" Presently a double-headed shot struck a party of marines who were drawn up on the poop, and killed eight of them, upon which Nelson immediately desired Captain Adair to disperse his men round the ship, that they might not suffer so much from being together. A few minutes afterwards a shot struck the fore-brace bits on the quarter-deck, and passed between Nelson and Hardy, a splinter from the bit tearing off Hardy's buckle and bruising his foot. Both stopped and looked anxiously at each other: each supposed the other to be wounded. Nelson then smiled, and said: "This is too warm work, Hardy, to last long."

<sup>15</sup> Afterwards Sir William Beatty, physician to the fleet. Beatty's Narration of Lord Nelson's Death was Southey's chief authority for this part of his book.

<sup>16</sup> Off the south coast of England, between the Isle of Wight and Portsmouth; a station for the British navy.

<sup>17</sup> Collingwood's ship, being new-coppered, outailed the other ships by three-quarters of a mile, and for twenty minutes stood the combined fire of the enemy alone.

The Victory had not yet returned a single gun; fifty of her men had been by this time killed or wounded, and her main-topmast, with all her studding-sails and their booms, shot away. Nelson declared that in all his battles he had seen nothing which surpassed the cool courage of his crew on this occasion. At four minutes after twelve she opened her fire from both sides of her deck. It was not possible to break the enemy's line without running on board<sup>13</sup> one of their ships; Hardy informed him of this, and asked him which he would prefer. Nelson replied: "Take your choice, Hardy; it does not signify much." The master was ordered to put the helm to port, and the Victory ran on board the Redoubtable just as her tiller-ropes were shot away. The French ship received her with a broadside, then instantly let down her lower-deck ports for fear of being boarded through them, and never afterwards fired a great gun during the action. Her tops, like those of all the enemy's ships, were filled with riflemen. Nelson never placed musketry in his tops; he had a strong dislike to the practice, not merely because it endangers setting fire to the sails, but also because it is a murderous sort of warfare, by which individuals may suffer, and a commander now and then be picked off, but which never can decide the fate of a general engagement.

<sup>13</sup> Alongside, for boarding purposes.

Captain Harvey, in the Téméraire, fell on board the Redoubtable on the other side; another enemy was in like manner on board the Téméraire; so that these four ships formed as compact a tier as if they had been moored together, their heads all lying the same way. The lieutenants of the Victory, seeing this depressed their guns of the middle and lower decks, and fired with a diminished charge, lest the shot should pass through and injure the Téméraire; and because there was danger that the Redoubtable might take fire from the lower-deck guns, the muzzles of which touched her side when they were run out, the fireman of each gun stood ready with a bucket of water, which, as soon as the gun was discharged, he dashed into the hole made by the shot. An incessant fire was kept up from the Victory from both sides; her larboard guns playing upon the Bucentaure and the huge Santissima Trinidad.

It had been part of Nelson's prayer that the British fleet might be distinguished by humanity in the victory which he expected. Setting an example himself, he twice gave orders to cease firing upon the Redoubtable, supposing that she had struck, because her great guns were silent; for, as she carried no flag, there was no means of instantly ascertaining the fact. From this ship, which he had thus twice spared, he received his death. A ball fired from her mizzen-top, which in the then situation of the two vessels was not more than fifteen yards from that part of the deck where he was standing struck the epaulette on his left shoulder about a quarter after one, just in the heat of action. He fell upon his face, on the spot which was covered with his poor secretary's blood. Hardy, who was a few steps from him, turning round, saw three men raising him up. "They have done for me at last, Hardy!" said he. "I hope not!" cried Hardy. "Yes," he replied, "my back-bone is shot through!" Yet even now, not for a moment losing his presence of mind, he observed, as they were carrying him down the ladder, that the tiller-ropes, which had been shot away, were not yet replaced, and ordered that new ones should be rove immediately. Then, that he might not be seen by the crew, he took out his handkerchief, and covered his face and his stars. Had he but concealed these badges of honour from the enemy, England perhaps would not have had cause to receive with sorrow the news of the battle of Trafalgar. The cockpit was crowded with wounded and dying men, over whose bodies he was with some difficulty conveyed, and laid upon a pallet in the midshipmen's berth. It was soon perceived upon examination that the wound was mortal. This, however, was concealed from all except Captain Hardy, the chaplain, and the medical attendants. He himself being certain, from the sensation in his back and the gush of blood he felt momentarily within his breast, that no human care could avail him, insisted that the surgeon should leave him, and attend to those to whom he might be useful; "for," said he, "you can do nothing for me." All that could be done was to fan him with paper, and frequently to give him lemonade to alleviate his intense thirst. He was in great pain, and expressed much anxiety for the event of the action, which now began to declare itself. As often as a ship struck, the crew of the Victory hurraed, and at every hurra a visible expression of joy gleamed in the eyes and marked the countenance of the dying hero. But he became impatient to see Captain Hardy; and as that officer, though often sent for, could not leave the deck, Nelson feared that some fatal cause prevented him, and repeatedly cried: "Will no one bring Hardy to me? He must be killed! He is surely dead!" An hour and ten minutes elapsed from the time when Nelson received his wound before Hardy could come to him. They shook hands in silence; Hardy in vain struggling to suppress the feelings of that most painful and yet sublimest moment. "Well, Hardy," said Nelson, "how goes the day with us?"—"Very well," replied Hardy, "ten ships have struck, but five of the van have tacked and show an intention to bear down upon the Victory. I have called two or three of our fresh ships round, and have no doubt of giving them a drubbing."—"I hope," said Nelson, "none of our ships have struck?" Hardy answered, "There was no fear of that." Then, and not till then, Nelson spoke of himself. "I am a dead man, Hardy," said he, "I am going fast; it will be all over with me soon. Come nearer to me. Let my dear Lady Hamilton have my hair and all other things belonging to me." Hardy observed that he hoped Mr. Beatty could yet hold out some prospect of life. "Oh, no!" he replied, "it is impossible; my back is shot through. Beatty will tell you so." Captain Hardy then once more shook hands with him, and with a heart almost bursting hastened upon deck.

By this time all feeling below the breast was gone; and Nelson, having made the surgeon ascertain this, said to him: "You know I am gone. I know it. I feel something rising in my breast"—putting his hand on his left side—"which tells me so." And upon Beatty's inquiring whether his pain was very great, he replied, "So great that he wished he was dead. Yet," said he in a lower voice, "one would like to live a little longer too!" And after a few minutes, in the same under-tone, he added: "What would become of poor Lady Hamilton if she knew my situation?" Next to his country she occupied his thoughts. Captain Hardy, some fifty minutes after he had left the cockpit, returned, and again taking the hand of his dying friend and Commander, congratulated him on having gained a complete victory. How many of the enemy were taken he did not know, as it was impossible to perceive them distinctly, but fourteen or fifteen at least. "That's well!" cried Nelson, "but I bargained for twenty." And then in a stronger voice he said: "Anchor, Hardy, anchor." Hardy upon this hinted that Admiral Collingwood would take upon himself the direction of affairs. "Not while I live, Hardy," said the dying Nelson, ineffectually endeavouring to raise himself from the bed. "Do you anchor." His previous order for preparing to anchor had shown how clearly he foresaw the necessity of this. Presently, calling Hardy back, he said to him in low voice: "Don't throw me overboard!" and he desired that he might be buried by his parents unless it should please the king to order otherwise. Then, reverting to private feelings, "Take care of my dear Lady Hamilton, Hardy; take care of poor Lady Hamilton. Kiss me, Hardy!" said he. Hardy knelt down and kissed his cheek, and Nelson said: "Now I am satisfied. Thank God I have done my duty!" Hardy stood over him in silence for a moment or two, then knelt again, and kissed his forehead. "Who is that?" said Nelson; and being informed, he replied: "God bless you, Hardy!" And Hardy then left him for ever.

Nelson now desired to be turned upon his right side, and said: "I wish I had not left the deck, for I shall soon be gone." Death was indeed rapidly approaching. He said to the chaplain: "Doctor, I have not been a great sinner." And after a short pause: "Remember that I leave Lady Hamilton and my daughter Horatia as a legacy to my country." His articulation now became difficult, but he was distinctly heard to say: "Thank God, I have done my duty!" These words he repeatedly pronounced, and they were the last words which he uttered. He expired at thirty minutes after four, three hours and a quarter after he had received his wound. . . .

The death of Nelson was felt in England as something more than a public calamity; men started at the intelligence and turned pale, as if they had heard of the loss of a dear friend. An object of our admiration and affection, of our pride and of our hopes, was suddenly taken from us; and it seemed as if we had never till then known how deeply we loved and revered him. What the country had lost in its great naval hero—the greatest of our own and of all former times—was scarcely taken into the account of grief. So perfectly indeed had he performed his part that the maritime war

After the battle of Trafalgar was considered at an end: the fleets of the enemy were not merely defeated, but destroyed; new navies must be built, and a new race of seamen reared for them, before the possibility of their invading our shores could again be contemplated. It was not, therefore, from any selfish reflection upon the magnitude of our loss that we mourned for him; the general sorrow was of a higher character. The people of England grieved that funeral ceremonies, and public monuments, and posthumous rewards were all which they could now bestow upon him whom the king, the Legislature, and the nation would have alike delighted to honour; whom every tongue would have blessed; whose presence in every village through which he might have passed would have wakened the church bells, have given school-boys a holiday, have drawn children from their sports to gaze upon him, and "old men from the chimney-corner" to look upon Nelson ere they died. The victory of Trafalgar was celebrated, indeed, with the usual forms of rejoicing, but they were without joy; for such already was the glory of the British navy through Nelson's surpassing genius that it scarcely seemed to receive any addition from the most signal victory that ever was achieved upon the seas; and the destruction of this mighty fleet, by which all the maritime schemes of France were totally frustrated, hardly appeared to add to our security or strength; for while Nelson was living, to watch the combined squadrons of the enemy, we felt ourselves as secure as now, when they were no longer in existence.

There was reason to suppose, from the appearances upon opening the body, that in the course of nature he might have attained, like his father, to a good old age. Yet he cannot be said to have fallen prematurely whose work was done, nor ought he to be lamented who died so full of honours and at the height of human fame. The most triumphant death is that of the martyr; the most awful that of the martyred patriot; the most splendid that of the hero in the hour of victory; and if the chariot and the horses of fire had been vouchsafed for Nelson's translation, he could scarcely have departed in a brighter blaze of glory. He has left us, not indeed his mantle of inspiration, but a name and an example which are at this hour inspiring thousands of the youth of England—a name which is our pride, and an example which will continue to be our shield and our strength. Thus it is that the spirits of the great and the wise continue to live and to act after them, verifying in this sense the language of the old mythologist:

Τοι μὲν δαίμονες εἰσὶ, Διὸς μεγάλου διὰ βουλὰς
Ἑσθλοὶ, ἐπιχθόνιοι, φύλακες θνητῶν ἀνθρώπων.<sup>19</sup>

Charles Lamb

1775-1834

DREAM CHILDREN: A REVERY

(Essays of Elia, 1822-24)

Children love to listen to stories about their elders, when they were children; to stretch their imagination to the conception of a traditional great-uncle, or grandame whom they never saw. It was in this spirit that my little ones crept about me the other evening to hear about their great-grandmother Field,<sup>1</sup> who lived in a great house in Norfolk (a hundred times bigger than that in which they and Papa lived) which had been the scene—so at least it was generally believed in that part of the country—of the tragic incidents which they had lately become familiar with from the ballad of the Children in the Wood.<sup>2</sup> Certain it is that the whole story of the children and their cruel uncle was to be seen fairly carved out in wood upon the chimney piece of the great hall, the whole story down to the Robin Redbreasts, till a foolish rich person pulled it down to set up a marble one of modern invention in its stead, with no story upon it. Here Alice put out one of her dear mother's looks, too tender to be called upbraiding. Then I went on to say, how religious and how good their great-grandmother Field was, how beloved and respected by everybody, though she was not <sup>19</sup> "Shining spirits there are that dwell upon earth among mortals, Prompting illustrious deeds, and fulfilling the counsel of Zeus." Hesiod, Works and Days, 122.

<sup>1</sup> Lamb's maternal grandmother, Mary Field, was for fifty years housekeeper to the Plummer family. Recollections of their "fine old family mansion" at Blakesmoor enter into his essay, and form the subject of the essay Blakesmoor in H. . . .shire. Lamb, in his fondness for disguising facts, here places it in Norfolk.

<sup>2</sup> The familiar old ballad, known also as Babes in the Wood.

indeed the mistress of this great house, but had only the charge of it (and yet in some respects she might be said to be the mistress of it too) committed to her by the owner, who preferred living in a newer and more fashionable mansion which he had purchased somewhere in the adjoining county; but still she lived in it in a manner as if it had been her own, and kept up the dignity of the great house in a sort while she lived, which afterwards came to decay, and was nearly pulled down, and all its old ornaments stripped and carried away to the owner's other house, where they were set up, and looked as awkward as if some one were to carry away the old tombs they had seen lately at the Abbey, and stick them up in Lady C's tawdry gilt drawing-room. Here John smiled, as much as to say, "that would be foolish indeed." And then I told how, when she came to die, her funeral was attended by a concourse of all the poor, and some of the gentry too, of the neighbourhood for many miles round, to show their respect for her memory, because she had been such a good and religious woman; so good indeed that she knew all the Psalter by heart, ay, and a great part of the Testament besides. Here little Alice spread her hands. Then I told what a tall, upright, graceful person their great-grandmother Field once was; and how in her youth she was esteemed the best dancer—here Alice's little right foot played an involuntary movement, till, upon my looking grave, it desisted—the best dancer, I was saying, in the county, till a cruel disease, called a cancer came, and bowed her down with pain; but it could never bend her good spirits, or make them stoop, but they were still upright, because she was so good and religious. Then I told how she was used to sleep by herself in a lone chamber of the great lone house; and how she believed that an apparition of two infants was to be seen at midnight gliding up and down the great staircase near where she slept, but she said "those innocents would do her no harm;" and how frightened I used to be, though in those days I had my maid to sleep with me, because I was never half so good or religious as she—and yet I never saw the infants. Here John expanded all his eyebrows and tried to look courageous. Then I told how good she was to all her grandchildren, having us to the great house in the holy-days, where I in particular used to spend many hours by myself, in gazing upon the old busts of the twelve Cæsars, that had been Emperors of Rome, till the old marble heads would seem to live again, or I to be turned into marble with them; how I never could be tired with roaming about that huge mansion, with its vast empty rooms, with their worn-out hangings, fluttering tapestry, and carved oaken panels, with the gilding almost rubbed out—sometimes in the spacious old-fashioned gardens, which I had almost to myself, unless when now and then a solitary gardening man would cross me—and how the nectarines and peaches hung upon the walls, without my ever offering to pluck them, because they were forbidden fruit, unless now and then,—and because I had more pleasure in strolling about among the old melancholy-looking yew-trees, or the firs, and picking up the red berries, and the fir-apples, which were good for nothing but to look at—or in lying about upon the fresh grass with all the fine garden smells around me—or basking in the orangery, till I could almost fancy myself ripening too along with the oranges and the limes in that grateful warmth—or in watching the dace that darted to and fro in the fish-pond, at the bottom of the garden, with here and there a great sulky pike hanging midway down the water in silent state, as if it mocked at their impertinent friskings,—I had more pleasure in these busy-idle diversions than in all the sweet flavours of peaches, nectarines, oranges, and such-like common baits of children. Here John slyly deposited back upon the plate a bunch of grapes, which, not unobserved by Alice, he had meditated dividing with her, and both seemed willing to relinquish them for the present as irrelevant. Then, in somewhat a more heightened tone, I told how, though their great-grandmother Field loved all her grandchildren, yet in an especial manner she might be said to love their uncle, John L—; because he was so handsome and spirited a youth, and a king to the rest of us; and, instead of moping about in solitary corners, like some of us, he would mount the most mettlesome horse he could get, when but an imp no bigger than themselves, and make it carry him half over the county in a morning, and join the hunters when there were any out—and yet he loved the old great house and gardens too, but had too much spirit to be always pent up within their boundaries—and how their uncle grew up to man's estate as brave as he was handsome, to the admiration of everybody, but of their great-grandmother Field most especially; and how he used to carry me upon his back when I was a lame-footed boy—for he was a good bit older than me—many a mile when I could not walk for pain;—and how in after life he became lame-footed too, and I did not always (I fear)

* Lamb's brother John, twelve years his senior, had died a short time before this essay was written.

DETACHED THOUGHTS ON BOOKS AND READING

(Last Essays, 1833)

make allowances enough for him when he was impatient and in pain, nor remember sufficiently how considerate he had been to me when I was lame-footed; and how when he died, though he had not been dead an hour, it seemed as if he had died a great while ago, such a distance there is betwixt life and death; and how I bore his death as I thought pretty well at first, but afterwards it haunted and haunted me; and though I did not cry or take it to heart as some do, and as I think he would have done if I had died, yet I missed him all day long, and knew not till then how much I had loved him. I missed his kindness, and I missed his crossness, and wished him to be alive again, to be quarrelling with him (for we quarrelled sometimes), rather than not have him again, and was as uneasy without him, as he, their poor uncle, must have been when the doctor took off his limb—Here the children fell a-crying, and asked if their little mourning which they had on was not for Uncle John, and they looked up, and prayed me not to go on about their uncle, but to tell them some stories about their pretty dead mother. Then I told how for seven long years, in hope sometimes, sometimes in despair, yet persisting ever, I courted the fair Alice W—n; and as much as children could understand, I explained, to them what coyness, and difficulty, and denial meant in maidens—when suddenly turning to Alice, the soul of the first Alice looked out at her eyes with such a reality of representation, that I became in doubt which of them stood there before me, or whose that bright hair was; and while I stood gazing, both the children gradually grew fainter to my view, receding, and still receding, till nothing at last but two mournful features were seen in the uttermost distance, which, without speech, strangely impressed upon me the effects of speech: “We are not of Alice,<sup>4</sup> nor of thee, nor are we children at all. The children of Alice call Bartrum father. We are nothing; less than nothing, and dreams. We are only what might have been, and must wait upon the tedious shores of Lethe<sup>5</sup> millions of ages before we have existence, and a name;”—and immediately awaking, I found myself quietly seated in my bachelor armchair, where I had fallen asleep, with the faithful Bridget<sup>6</sup> unchanged by my side—but John L. (or James Elia) was gone forever.

<sup>4</sup> Lamb never married. He gave up his courtship of the “fair Alice” in order to devote his life to the care of his afflicted sister Mary.

<sup>5</sup> The river of forgetfulness in Greek mythology.

<sup>6</sup> The cousin Bridget of the Essays of Elia is Lamb's sister Mary.

To mind the inside of a book is to entertain one's self with the forced product of another man's brain. Now I think a man of quality and breeding may be much amused with the natural sprouts of his own.—Lord Foppington, in The Relapse.

An ingenious acquaintance of my own was so much struck with this bright sally of his Lordship, that he has left off reading altogether, to the great improvement of his originality. At the hazard of losing some credit on this head, I must confess that I dedicate no inconsiderable portion of my time to other people's thoughts. I dream away my life in others' speculations. I love to lose myself in other men's minds. When I am not walking, I am reading; I cannot sit and think. Books think for me.

I have no repugnances. Shaftsbury<sup>2</sup> is not too genteel for me, nor Jonathan Wild<sup>3</sup> too low. I can read anything which I call a book. There are things in that shape which I cannot allow for such.

In this catalogue of books which are no books—biblia a-biblia—I reckon Court Calendars, Directories, Pocket-Books, Draught Boards,<sup>4</sup> bound and lettered on the back, Scientific Treatises, Almanacs, Statutes at Large: the works of Hume, Gibbon, Robertson, Beattie, Soame Jenyns, and generally, all those volumes which “no gentleman's library should be without:” the Histories of Flavius Josephus (that learned Jew), and Paley's Moral Philosophy. With these exceptions, I can read almost anything. I bless my stars for a taste so catholic, so unexcluding.

I confess that it moves my spleen to see these things in books' clothing perched upon shelves like false saints, usurpers of true shrines, intruders into the sanctuary, thrusting out the legitimate occupants. To reach down a well-bound semblance of a volume, and hope it some kind-hearted playbook, then, opening what “seem its leaves,” to come bolt upon a withering Population Essay.<sup>5</sup> To expect a

<sup>1</sup> A shallow, affected dandy in Sir John Vanbrugh's play, The Relapse, 1697.

<sup>2</sup> Anthony Ashley Cooper, third Earl of Shaftsbury (1671–1713). A moral philosopher and generally considered a model of the genteel style in writing.

<sup>3</sup> A famous English thief (c. 1682–1725). He is the subject of Fielding's satire, History of a Life of the Late Mr. Jonathan Wild the Great (1743).

<sup>4</sup> Folding checker-boards, made outwardly to resemble books.

<sup>5</sup> Malthus, an English economist, published in 1798 his famous essay on the Principle of Population.

Steele, or a Farquhar, and find — Adam Smith.<sup>6</sup> To view a well-arranged assortment of block-headed Encyclopædias (Anglicanas or Metropolitanas) set out in an array of russia, or morocco, when a tithe of that good leather would comfortably reclothe my shivering folios; would renovate Paracelsus<sup>7</sup> himself, and enable old Raymund Lully<sup>8</sup> to look like himself again in the world. I never see these impostors, but I long to strip them, to warm my ragged veterans in their spoils.

To be strong-backed and neat-bound is the desideratum of a volume. Magnificence comes after. This, when it can be afforded, is not to be lavished upon all kinds of books indiscriminately. I would not dress a set of Magazines, for instance, in full suit. The dishabille, or half-binding (with russia backs ever) is our costume. A Shakespeare or a Milton (unless the first editions), it were mere foppery to trick out in gay apparel. The possession of them confers no distinction. The exterior of them (the things themselves being so common), strange to say, raises no sweet emotions, no tickling sense of property in the owner. Thomson's Seasons, again, looks best (I maintain it) a little torn and dog's-eared. How beautiful to a genuine lover of reading are the sullied leaves, and worn-out appearance, nay, the very odour (beyond russia), if we would not forget kind feelings in fastidiousness, of an old "Circulating Library" Tom Jones, or Vicar of Wakefield! How they speak of the thousand thumbs that have turned over their pages with delight!—of the lone sempstress, whom they may have cheered (milliner, or harder-working mantua-maker) after her long day's needle-toil, running far into midnight, when she has snatched an hour, ill spared from sleep, to steep her cares, as in some Lethean cup, in spelling out their enchanting contents! Who would have them a whit less soiled? what better condition could we desire to see them in?

In some respects the better a book is, the less it demands from binding. Fielding, Smollett, Sterne, and all that class of perpetually self-reproductive volumes—Great Nature's Stereotypes—we see them individually perish with less regret, because we know the copies of them to be "eternæ." But where a book is at once both good and rare—where the individual is almost the species, and when that perishes,

We know not where is that Promethean torch
That can its light relumine,—<sup>9</sup>

such a book, for instance, as the Life of the Duke of Newcastle, by his Duchess<sup>10</sup>—no casket is rich enough, no casing sufficiently durable, to honour and keep safe such a jewel.

Not only rare volumes of this description, which seem hopeless ever to be reprinted, but old editions of writers, such as Sir Philip Sydney, Bishop Taylor, Milton in his prose works, Fuller—of whom we have reprints; yet the books themselves, though they go about, and are talked of here and there, we know have not enderzined themselves (nor possibly ever will) in the national heart, so as to become stock books—it is good to possess these in durable and costly covers. I do not care for a First Folio of Shakespeare.<sup>11</sup> [You cannot make a pet book of an author whom everybody reads.] I rather prefer the common editions of Rowe and Tonson,<sup>12</sup> without notes, and with plates, which, being so execrably bad, serve as maps or modest remembrancers to the text; and, without pretending to any supposable emulation with it, are so much better than the Shakespeare gallery engravings,<sup>13</sup> which did. I have a community of feeling with my countrymen about his Plays, and I like those editions of him best which have been oftenest tumbled about and handled.—On the contrary, I cannot read Beaumont and Fletcher but in Folio. The Octavo editions are painful to look at. I have no sympathy with them. If they were as much read as the current editions of the other poet, I should prefer them in that shape to the older one. I do not know a more heartless sight than the reprint of the Anatomy of Melancholy.<sup>14</sup> What need was there of unearthing the bones of that fantastic old great man, to expose them in a winding sheet of the newest fashion to modern censure? what hapless stationer could dream of Burton ever becoming popular?—The wretched Malone<sup>15</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Quoted by memory from Othello, V. ii. 12.

"I know not where is that Promethean heat
That can thy light relume."

<sup>10</sup> Margaret Cavendish, Duchess of Newcastle (1624–74), a famous beauty, and voluminous writer of plays and poems. Her Life of William Cavendish, Duke of Newcastle (1667), is generally considered a masterpiece.

<sup>11</sup> The first collected edition of Shakespeare's works, 1623.

<sup>12</sup> Nicholas Rowe edited the first critical edition of Shakespeare; it was published by Tonson in 1709.

<sup>13</sup> The Shakespeare gallery of John Boydell, who in 1786 began the publication of a series of prints illustrative of Shakespeare's plays, after pictures painted for him by English artists; he built a gallery in Pall Mall for their exhibition.

<sup>14</sup> By Robert Burton (1577–1740), see p. 229, supra.

<sup>15</sup> "This happened in 1793 on the occasion of Malone's visit to Stratford to examine the municipal and other records of that town, for the purpose of his edition." Ainger.

<sup>6</sup> The author of the Wealth of Nations, and the founder of modern political economy.

<sup>7</sup> A celebrated German physician, alchemist, and philosopher (1493–1541).

<sup>8</sup> A mediæval philosopher and alchemist, author of a system of logic. The presence of Paracelsus and Lully in Lamb's library suggest his fondness for quaint and out-of-the-way reading.

could not do worse, when he bribed the sexton of Stratford church to let him whitewash the painted effigy of old Shakespeare, which stood there, in rude but lively fashion depicted, to the very colour of the cheek, the eye, the eyebrow, hair, the very dress he used to wear—the only authentic testimony we had, however imperfect, of these curious parts and parcels of him. They covered him over with a coat of white paint. By —, if I had been a justice of peace for Warwickshire, I would have clapt both commentator and sexton fast in the stocks, for a pair of meddling sacrilegious varlets.

I think I see them at their work—these sapient trouble-tombs.

Shall I be thought fantastical if I confess, that the names of some of our poets sound sweeter, and have a finer relish to the ear—to mine, at least—than that of Milton or Shakespeare? It may be, that the latter are more staled and rung upon in common discourse. The sweetest names, and which carry a perfume in the mention, are, Kit Marlowe, Drayton, Drummond of Hawthornden, and Cowley.

Much depends upon when and where you read a book. In the five or six impatient minutes, before the dinner is quite ready, who would think of taking up the Fairy Queen for a stopgap, or a volume of Bishop Andrewes' sermons?

Milton almost requires a solemn service of music to be played before you enter upon him. But he brings his music, to which, who listens, had need bring docile thoughts, and purged ears.

Winter evenings—the world shut out—without less of ceremony the gentle Shakespeare enters. At such a season the Tempest, or his own Winter's Tale—

These two poets you cannot avoid reading aloud—to yourself, or (as it chances) to some single person listening. More than one—and it degenerates into an audience.

Books of quick interest, that hurry on for incidents, are for the eye to glide over only. It will not do to read them out. I could never listen to even the better kind of modern novels without extreme irksomeness.

A newspaper, read out, is intolerable. In some of the Bank offices it is the custom (to save so much individual time) for one of the clerks—who is the best scholar—to commence upon the Times, or the Chronicle and recite its entire contents aloud, pro bono publico. With every advantage of lungs and elocution, the effect is singularly vapid. In barbers' shops and public-houses a fellow will get up and spell out a paragraph, which he communicates as some discovery. Another follows with his selection. So the entire journal transpires at length by piecemeal. Seldom-readers are slow readers, and, without this expedient, no one in the company would probably ever travel through the contents of a whole paper.

Newspapers always excite curiosity. No one ever lays one down without a feeling of disappointment.

What an eternal time that gentleman in black, at Nando's,<sup>17</sup> keeps the paper! I am sick of hearing the waiter bawling out incessantly, "The Chronicle is in hand, Sir."

Coming into an inn at night—having ordered your supper—what can be more delightful than to find lying in the window-seat, left there time out of mind by the carelessness of some former guest,—two or three numbers of the old Town and Country Magazine, with its amusing tête-à-tête pictures—"The Royal Lover and Lady G—"; "The Melting Platonie and the old Beau,"—and such-like antiquated scandal? Would you exchange it—at that time, and in that place—for a better book?

Poor Tobin,<sup>18</sup> who latterly fell blind, did not regret it so much for the weightier kinds of reading—the Paradise Lost, or Comus, he could have read to him—but he missed the pleasure of skimming over with his own eye a magazine, or a light pamphlet.

I should not care to be caught in the serious avenues of some cathedral alone, and reading Candide.<sup>19</sup>

I do not remember a more whimsical surprise than having been once detected—by a familiar damsel—reclined at my ease upon the grass, on Primrose Hill<sup>20</sup> (her Cythera) reading Pamela.<sup>21</sup> There was nothing in the book to make a man seriously ashamed at the exposure, but as she seated herself down by me, and seemed determined to read in company, I could have wished it had been—any other book. We read on very sociably for a few pages; and, not finding the author much to her taste, she got up, and—went away. Gentle casuist, I leave it to thee to conjecture, whether the blush (for there was one between us) was the property of the nymph or the swain in this dilemma. From me you shall never get the secret.

<sup>17</sup> A London coffee-house.

<sup>18</sup> John Tobin, a dramatist, whose life had recently been published.

<sup>19</sup> A philosophical novel by Voltaire, whose sceptical, scoffing spirit Lamb felt would ill harmonize with the associations of a cathedral.

<sup>20</sup> Primrose Hill was north of Regent's Park. The "familiar damsel" arose from the grass, as Venus did from the sea-foam at the isle of Cythera.

<sup>21</sup> A novel by Samuel Richardson.

<sup>16</sup> Author of sermons, and a member of the commission appointed by James I to make the King James' Version of the Bible, which appeared in 1611.

I am not much a friend to out-of-doors reading. I cannot settle my spirits to it. I knew a Unitarian minister, who was generally to be seen upon Snow Hill (as yet Skinner's Street was not), between the hours of ten and eleven in the morning, studying a volume of Lardner.<sup>22</sup> I own this to have been a strain of abstraction beyond my reach. I used to admire how he sidled along, keeping clear of secular contacts. An illiterate encounter with a porter's knot,<sup>23</sup> or a breadbasket, would have quickly put to flight all the theology I am master of, and have left me worse than indifferent to the five points.<sup>24</sup>

There is a class of street-readers, whom I can never contemplate without affection—the poor gentry, who, not having wherewithal to buy or hire a book, filch a little learning at the open stalls—the owner, with his hard eye, casting envious looks at them all the while, and thinking when they will have done. Venturing tenderly, page after page, expecting every moment when he shall interpose his interdiction, and yet unable to deny themselves the gratification, they “snatch a fearful joy.” Martin B—, in this way, by daily fragments, got through two volumes of Clarissa,<sup>25</sup> when the stallkeeper damped his laudable ambition, by asking him (it was in his younger days) whether he meant to purchase the work. M. declares, that under no circumstance in his life did he ever peruse a book with half the satisfaction which he took in those uneasy snatches. A quaint poetess<sup>27</sup> of our day has moralized upon this subject in two very touching but homely stanzas:

I saw a boy with eager eye
Open a book upon a stall,
And read, as he'd devour it all;
Which, when the stall-man did espy,
Soon to the boy I heard him call,
“You Sir, you never buy a book,
Therefore in one you shall not look.”
The boy pass'd slowly on, and with a sigh
He wish'd he never had been taught to read,
Then of the old churl's books he should have had no need.

Of sufferings the poor have many,
Which never can the rich annoy.
I soon perceived another boy,
Who look'd as if he had not any Food, for that day at least,—enjoy
The sight of cold meat in a tavern larder.

<sup>22</sup> Nathaniel Lardner (1684–1768), wrote a noted defense of the Christian religion, which was used as a theological text book.

<sup>23</sup> A pad used by porters for carrying trunks.

<sup>24</sup> The leading tenets of Calvinistic theology.

<sup>25</sup> Martin Burney, an unsuccessful lawyer, who died in London, 1852.

<sup>26</sup> Clarissa Harlowe, a novel by Richardson in eight volumes.

<sup>27</sup> Mary Lamb.

This boy's case, then thought I, is surely harder,
Thus hungry, longing, thus without a penny,
Beholding choice of dainty dressed meat:
No wonder if he wish he ne'er had learn'd to eat.

THE SUPERANNUATED MAN

(From the same)

Sera tamen respexit Libertas.<sup>1</sup> Vergil.

A Clerk I was in London gay. O'Keefe.

If peradventure, Reader, it has been thy lot to waste the golden years of thy life—thy shining youth—in the irksome confinement of an office; to have thy prison-days prolonged through middle age down to decrepitude and silver hairs, without hope of release or respite; to have lived to forget that there are such things as holidays, or to remember them but as the prerogatives of childhood; then, and then only, will you be able to appreciate my deliverance.

It is now six-and-thirty years<sup>2</sup> since I took my seat at the desk in Mincing Lane.<sup>3</sup> Melancholy was the transition at fourteen from the abundant playtime, and the frequently-intervening vacations of school days, to the eight, nine, and sometimes ten hours' a-day attendance at the counting-house. But time partially reconciles us to anything. I gradually became content—doggedly contented, as wild animals in cages.

It is true I had my Sundays to myself; but Sundays, admirable as the institution of them is for purposes of worship, are for that very reason the very worst adapted for days of unbending and recreation. In particular, there is a gloom for me attendant upon a city Sunday, a weight in the air. I miss the cheerful cries of London, the music, and the ballad-singers,—the buzz and stirring murmur of the streets. Those eternal bells depress me. The closed shops repel me. Prints, pictures, all the glittering and endless succession of knacks and gewgaws, and ostentatiously displayed wares of tradesmen, which make a weekday saunter through the less busy parts of the metropolis so delightful—are shut out. No book-stalls deliciously to idle over—no busy faces to create the idle man who contemplates them ever passing by—the very face of business a charm by contrast to his temporary relaxation from it. Nothing to be seen but unhappy countenances—or half-happy at best—of emancipated 'prentices and little tradesfolks, with here and there a servant-maid that has got leave to go out, who, slaving all the week, with the habit has lost almost the capacity of enjoying a free hour; and lively expressing the holowness of a day's pleasuring. The very strollers in the fields on that day look anything but comfortable.

<sup>1</sup> The line in Vergil is: Libertas, quae sera tamen respexit inertem, Liberty, though late, at last looks on the idle.

<sup>2</sup> Lamb was a clerk in the office of the East India Company from 1792–1825. From 1789–92 he had been in the South Sea House. He was retired on a pension of £450, two-thirds of his salary at the time of his retirement.

<sup>3</sup> The South Sea House was on Mincing Lane, and the East India House was not far away.

But besides Sundays, I had a day at Easter, and a day at Christmas, with a full week in the summer to go and air myself in my native fields of Hertfordshire.<sup>4</sup> This last was a great indulgence; and the prospect of its recurrence, I believe, alone kept me up through the year, and made my durance tolerable. But when the week came round, did the glittering phantom of the distance keep touch with me? or rather was it not a series of seven uneasy days, spent in restless pursuit of pleasure, and a wearisome anxiety to find out how to make the most of them? Where was the quiet, where the promised rest? Before I had a taste of it it was vanished. I was at the desk again, counting upon the fifty-one tedious weeks that must intervene before such another snatch would come. Still the prospect of its coming threw something of an illumination upon the darker side of my captivity. Without it, as I have said, I could scarcely have sustained my thralldom.

Independently of the rigours of attendance, I have ever been haunted with a sense (perhaps a mere caprice) of incapacity for business. This, during my latter years, had increased to such a degree, that it was visible in all the lines of my countenance. My health and my good spirits flagged. I had perpetually a dread of some crisis, to which I should be found unequal. Besides my daylight servitude, I served over again all night in my sleep, and would awake with terrors of imaginary false entries, errors in my accounts, and the like. I was fifty years of age, and no prospect of emancipation presented itself. I had grown to my desk, as it were; and the wood had entered into my soul.

My fellows in the office would sometimes rally me upon the trouble legible in my countenance; but I did not know that it had raised the suspicions of any of my employers, when on the fifth of last month, a day ever to be remembered by me, L——<sup>5</sup>, the junior partner in the firm, calling me on one side, directly taxed me with my bad looks, and frankly inquired the cause of them. So taxed, I honestly made confession of my infirmity, and added that I was afraid that I should eventually be obliged to resign his service. He spoke some words of course to hearten me, and there the matter rested. A whole week I remained labouring under the impression that I had acted imprudently in my disclosure; that I had foolishly given a handle against myself, and had been anticipating my own dismissal. A week passed in this manner, the most anxious one, I verily believe, in my whole life, when on the evening of the 12th of April, just as I was about quitting my desk to go home (it might be about eight o'clock,) I received an awful summons to attend the presence of the whole assembled firm in the formidable back parlour. I thought now my time is surely come, I have done for myself, I am going to be told that they have no longer occasion for me. L——, I could see, smiled at the terror I was in, which was a little relief to me,—when to my utter astonishment B——, the eldest partner, began a formal harangue to me on the length of my services, my very meritorious conduct during the whole of the time (the deuce, thought I, how did he find out that? I protest I never had the confidence to think as much). He went on to descant on the expediency of retiring at a certain time of life, (how my heart panted!) and asking me a few questions as to the amount of my own property, of which I have a little, ended with a proposal, to which his three partners nodded a grave assent, that I should accept from the house, which I had served so well, a pension for life to the amount of two-thirds of my accustomed salary—a magnificent offer! I do not know what I answered between surprise and gratitude, but it was understood that I accepted their proposal, and I was told that I was free from that hour to leave their service. I stammered out a bow, and at just ten minutes after eight I went home—forever. This noble benefit—gratitude forbids me to conceal their names—I owe to the kindness of the most munificent firm in the world—the house of Boldero, Merryweather, Bosanquet, and Lacy.

Esto perpetua!<sup>6</sup>

For the first day or two I felt stunned—overwhelmed. I could only apprehend my felicity; I was too confused to taste it sincerely. I wandered about, thinking I was happy, and knowing that I was not. I was in the condition of a prisoner in the old Bastille,<sup>7</sup> suddenly <sup>4</sup> Strictly speaking, Lamb's "native fields" were the London streets, but he often visited relatives in Hertfordshire.

<sup>5</sup> The names of Boldero, Merryweather, Bosanquet, and Lacy, mentioned further on, were invented by Lamb.

<sup>6</sup> May you live forever.

<sup>7</sup> The prison in Paris, the storming of which on July 14, 1789, marked the beginning of the French Revolution.

let loose after a forty years' confinement. I could scarce trust myself with myself. It was like passing out of Time into Eternity,—for it is a sort of Eternity for a man to have his Time all to himself. It seemed to me that I had more time on my hands than I could ever manage. From a poor man, poor in Time, I was suddenly lifted up into a vast revenue; I could see no end of my possessions; I wanted some steward, or judicious bailiff, to manage my estates in Time for me. And here let me caution persons grown old in active business, not lightly nor without weighing their own resources, to forego their customary employment all at once, for there may be danger in it. I feel it by myself, but I know that my resources are sufficient; and now that those first giddy raptures have subsided, I have a quiet home-feeling of the blessedness of my condition. I am in no hurry. Having all holidays, I am as though I had none. If Time hung heavy upon me, I could walk it away; but I do not walk all day long, as I used to do in those old transient holidays, thirty miles a day, to make the most of them. If Time were troublesome, I could read it away; but I do not read in that violent measure, with which, having no Time my own but candlelight Time, I used to weary out my head and eyesight in bygone winters. I walk, read, or scribble (as now) just when the fit seizes me. I no longer hunt after pleasure; I let it come to me. I am like the man.

... that's born and has his years come to him, In some green desert.

"Years!" you will say; "what is this superannuated simpleton calculating upon? He has already told us he is past fifty."

I have indeed lived nominally fifty years, but deduct out of them the hours which I have lived to other people, and not to myself, and you will find me still a young fellow. For that is the only true Time which a man can properly call his own, that which he has all to himself; the rest, though in some sense he may be said to live it, is other people's Time, not his. The remnant of my poor days, long or short, is at least multiplied for me threefold. My ten next years, if I stretch so far, will be as long as any preceding thirty. 'Tis a fair rule-of-three sum.

Among the strange fantasies which beset me at the commencement of my freedom, and of which all traces are not gone, one was, that a vast tract of Time had intervened since I quitted the Counting-House. I could not conceive of it as an affair of yesterday. The partners, and the clerks with whom I had for so many years, and for so many hours of each day in the year, been closely associated—being suddenly removed from them—they seemed as dead to me. There is a fine passage, which may serve to illustrate this fancy, in a Tragedy by Sir Robert Howard,<sup>8</sup> speaking of a friend's death:—

... 'Twas but just now he went away;
I have not since had time to shed a tear;
And yet the distance does the same appear
As if he had been a thousand years from me.
Time takes no measure in Eternity.

To dissipate this awkward feeling, I have been fain to go among them once or twice since; to visit my old desk-fellows—my co-brethren of the quill—that I had left below in the state militant. Not all the kindness with which they received me could quite restore to me that pleasant familiarity, which I had heretofore enjoyed among them. We cracked some of our old jokes, but methought they went off but faintly. My old desk; the peg where I hung my hat, were appropriated to another. I knew it must be, but I could not take it kindly. D—I take me, if I did not feel some remorse—beast, if I had not—at quitting my old compeers, the faithful partners of my toils for six-and-thirty years, that soothed for me with their jokes and conundrums the ruggedness of my professional road. Had it been so rugged then, after all? or was I a coward simply? Well, it is too late to repent; and I also know that these suggestions are a common fallacy of the mind on such occasions. But my heart smote me. I had violently broken the bands betwixt us. It was at least not courteous. I shall be some time before I get quite reconciled to the separation. Farewell, old cronies, yet not for long, for again and again I will come among ye, if I shall have your leave. Farewell Ch—, dry, sarcastic, and friendly! Do—, mild, slow to move, and gentlemanly! Pl—, officious to do, and to volunteer, good services!—and thou, thou dreary pile, fit mansion for a Gresham<sup>9</sup> or a Whittington<sup>10</sup> of old, stately house of Merchants; with thy labyrinthine passages, and light-excluding, pent-up offices, where candles for one-half the year supplied the place of the sun's light; unhealthy contributor to my weal, stern fosterer of my living, farewell! In thee remain, and not in the obscure collection of some wandering bookseller, my "works!"

<sup>8</sup> Dryden's brother-in-law, and joint author with him of the Indian Queen. The lines are from the Vestal Virgin, or The Roman Ladies.

<sup>9</sup> Thomas Gresham (d. 1579?), a noted financier of Elizabeth's time, was the founder of the Royal Exchange and of Gresham College.

<sup>10</sup> Sir Richard Whittington (d. 1423) was a famous Lord Mayor of London.

There let them rest, as I do from my labours, piled on thy massy shelves, more MSS. in folio than ever Aquinas<sup>11</sup> left, and full as useful! My mantle I bequeath among ye.

A fortnight has passed since the date of my first communication. At that period I was approaching to tranquillity, but had not reached it. I boasted of a calm indeed, but it was comparative only. Something of the first flutter was left; an unsettling sense of novelty; the dazzle to weak eyes of unaccustomed light. I missed my old chains, forsooth, as if they had been some necessary part of my apparel.

was a poor Carthusian,<sup>12</sup> from strict cellular discipline suddenly by some revolution returned upon the world. I am now as if I had never been other than my own master. It is natural to me to go where I please, to do what I please. I find myself at eleven o'clock in the day in Bond Street,<sup>13</sup> and it seems to me that I have been sauntering there at that very hour for years past. I digress into Soho, to explore a bookstall. Methinks I have been thirty years a collector. There is nothing strange nor new in it. I find myself before a fine picture in the morning. Was it ever otherwise? What has become of Fish Street Hill? Where is Fenchurch Street?<sup>14</sup> Stones of old Mincing Lane, which I have worn with my daily pilgrimage for six-and-thirty years, to the footsteps of what tollrow clerk are your everlasting flints now vocal? I indent the gayer flags of Pall Mall. It is 'Change time, and I am strangely among the Elgin marbles.<sup>15</sup> It was no hyperbole when I ventured to compare the change in my condition to a passing into another world. Time stands still in a manner to me. I have lost all distinction of season. I do not know the day of the week or of the month. Each day used to be individually felt by me in its reference to the foreign post-days; in its distance from, or propinquity to, the next Sunday. I had my Wednesday feelings, my Saturday nights' sensations. The genius of each day was upon me distinctly during the whole of it, affecting my appetite, spirits, &c. The phantom of the next day, with the dreary five to follow, sate as a load upon my poor Sabbath recreations. What charm has washed that Ethiop white? What is gone of Black

Monday? All days are the same. Sunday itself—that unfortunate failure of a holiday, as it too often proved, what with my sense of its fugitiveness, and over-care to get the greatest quantity of pleasure out of it—is melted down into a week-day. I can spare to go to church now, without grudging the huge cantle which it used to seem to cut out of the holiday. I have Time for everything. I can visit a sick friend. I can interrupt the man of much occupation when he is busiest. I can insult over him with an invitation to take a day's pleasure with me to Windsor this fine May-morning. It is Lucretian pleasure<sup>16</sup> to behold the poor drudges, whom I have left behind in the world, carking and caring; like horses in a mill, drudging on in the same eternal round—and what is it all for? A man can never have too much Time to himself, nor too little to do. Had I a little son, I would christen him Nothing-To-Do; he should do nothing. Man, I verily believe, is out of his element as long as he is operative. I am altogether for the life contemplative. Will no kindly earthquake come and swallow up those accursed cotton mills? Take me that lumber of a desk there, and bowl it down

As low as to the fiends.<sup>17</sup>

I am no longer . . . , clerk to the Firm of, &c. I am Retired Leisure. I am to be met with in trim gardens. I am already come to be known by my vacant face and careless gesture, perambulating at no fixed pace, nor with any settled purpose. I walk about; not to and from. They tell me, a certain cum dignitate air, that has been buried so long with my other good parts, has begun to shoot forth in my person. I grow into gentility perceptibly. When I take up a newspaper, it is to read the state of the opera. Opus operatum est.<sup>18</sup> I have done all that I came into this world to do. I have worked task-work, and have the rest of the day to myself.

ON THE DEATH OF COLERIDGE

(Nov. 21, 1834)

When I heard of the death of Coleridge, it was without grief. It seemed to me that he long had been on the confines of the next world,—that he had a hunger for eternity. I grieved

<sup>11</sup> The famous scholastic theologian, Thomas Aquinas (d. 1274).

<sup>12</sup> The Carthusians were an order of Monks founded in 1030; their discipline was very strict.

<sup>13</sup> In the "West End" the quarter of fashionable shops. Pall Mall and Soho Square are in the same locality. <sup>14</sup> Streets in the City near the India House. See note on Fish street, pp. 280, 292.

<sup>15</sup> The Elgin marbles, among the finest specimens of Greek sculpture, were originally part of the decorations of the Parthenon. They are now in the British Museum, having been brought from Greece by the Earl of Elgin. See Keats' Sonnet, p. 529.

<sup>16</sup> An allusion to a famous passage in Lucretius: Sweet it is, when the winds are troubling the waters on the wide sea, to contemplate from the shore the great hardship of another, not because it is a delicious satisfaction to feel that anyone should be made miserable, but because it is consoling to discern from what evils we ourselves are free.—De Rerum Natura, II. 1-4.

<sup>17</sup> From the player's declamation in Hamlet, II. ii. 475.

<sup>18</sup> My work is done.

then that I could not grieve. But, since, I feel how great a part he was of me. His great and dear spirit haunts me. I cannot think a thought, I cannot make a criticism on men and books, without an ineffectual turning and reference to him. He was the proof and touchstone of all my cogitations. He was a Grecian (or in the first form) at Christ's Hospital, where I was Deputy-Grecian; and the same subordination and deference to him I have preserved through a life-long acquaintance. Great in his writings, he was greatest in his conversation. In him was disproved that old maxim, that we should allow every one his share of talk. He would talk from morn to dewy eve, nor cease till far midnight; yet who ever would interrupt him? who would obstruct that continuous flow of converse, fetched from Helicon or Zion?<sup>1</sup> He had the tact of making the unintelligible seem plain. Many who read the abstruser parts of his "Friend" would complain that his works did not answer to his spoken wisdom. They were identical. But he had a tone in oral delivery which seemed to convey sense to those who were otherwise imperfect recipients. He was my fifty-years-old friend without a dissension. Never saw I his likeness, nor probably the world can see again. I seem to love the house he died at more passionately than when he lived. I love the faithful Gilman<sup>2</sup> more than while they exercised their virtues towards him living. What was his mansion is consecrated to me a chapel.

KING LEAR

(From The Tragedies of Shakespeare, Collected Works, 1818)

The truth is, the Characters of Shakespeare are so much the objects of meditation rather than of interest or curiosity as to their actions, that while we are reading any of his great criminal characters,—Macbeth, Richard, even Iago,—we think not so much of the crimes which they commit, as of the ambition, the aspiring spirit, the intellectual activity, which prompts them to overleap those moral fences. Barnwell<sup>3</sup> is a wretched murderer; there is a certain fitness between his neck and the rope; he is the legitimate heir to the gallows; nobody who thinks at all can think of any alleviating circumstances in his case to make him a fit object of mercy. Or to take an instance from the higher tragedy, what else but a mere assassin is Glenalvon?<sup>2</sup> Do we think of anything but of the crime which he commits, and the rack which he deserves? That is all which we really think about him. Whereas in corresponding characters in Shakespeare, so little do the actions comparatively affect us, that while the impulses, the inner mind in all its perverted greatness, solely seems real and is exclusively attended to, the crime is comparatively nothing. But when we see these things represented, the acts which they do are comparatively everything, their impulses nothing. The state of sublime emotion into which we are elevated by those images of night and horror which Macbeth is made to utter, that solemn prelude with which he entertains the time till the bell shall strike which is to call him to murder Duncan,—when we no longer read it in a book, when we have given up that vantage-ground of abstraction which reading possesses over seeing, and come to see a man in his bodily shape before our eyes actually preparing to commit a murder, if the acting be true and impressive, as I have witnessed it in Mr. K.'s<sup>3</sup> performance of that part, the painful anxiety about the act, the natural longing to prevent it while it yet seems unperpetrated, the too close pressing semblance of reality, give a pain and an uneasiness which totally destroy all the delight which the words in the book convey, where the deed doing never presses upon us with the painful sense of presence; it rather seems to belong to history,—to something past and inevitable, if it has anything to do with time at all. The sublime images, the poetry alone, is that which is present to our minds in the reading.

<sup>1</sup> i. e. from Greek or Hebrew literature, or perhaps more generally from profane or sacred letters.

<sup>2</sup> Coleridge had found a refuge in his last years in the house of Mr. Gilman, a physician who had helped him in his struggle against the opium habit.

<sup>3</sup> A character in a prose tragedy of that name by George Lillo (1693-1739).

So to see Lear acted,—to see an old man tottering about the stage with a walking-stick, turned out of doors by his daughters in a rainy night, has nothing in it but what is painful and disgusting. We want to take him into shelter and relieve him. That is all the feeling which the acting of Lear ever produced in me. But the Lear of Shakespeare cannot be acted. The contemptible machinery by which they mimic the storm which he goes out in, is not more inadequate to represent the horrors of the real elements, than any actor can be to represent Lear; they might more easily propose to personate the Satan of Milton upon a stage, or one of Michael Angelo's terrible figures. The greatness of Lear is not in corporal dimension, but in intellectual: the explosions of his passion are terrible as a volcano: they are storms turning up and disclosing to the bottom, that sea, his mind, with all its vast riches. It is his mind which is laid bare. This case of flesh and blood seems too insignificant to be thought on; even as he himself neglects it. On the stage we see nothing but corporal infirmities and weakness, the impotence of rage; while we read it, we see not Lear, but we are Lear,—we are in his mind, we are sustained by a grandeur which baffles the malice of daughters and storms; in the aberrations of his reason, we discover a mighty irregular power of reasoning, immethodized from the ordinary purposes of life, but exerting its powers, as the wind blows where it listeth, at will upon the corruptions and abuses of mankind. What have looks, or tones, to do with that sublime identification of his age with that of the heavens themselves, when, in his reproaches to them for conniving at the injustice of his children, he reminds them that “they themselves are old?” What gesture shall we appropriate to this? What has the voice or the eye to do with such things? But the play is beyond all art, as the tamperings with it show; it is too hard and stony; it must have love-scenes, and a happy ending. It is not enough that Cordelia is a daughter, she must shine as a lover too. Tate<sup>4</sup> has put his hook in the nostrils of this Leviathan, for Garrick<sup>5</sup> and his followers, the showmen of the scene, to draw the mighty beast about more easily. A happy ending!—as if the living martyrdom that Lear had gone through,—the flaying of his feelings alive, did not make a fair dismissal from the stage of life the only decorous thing for him. If he is to live and be happy after, if he could sustain this world’s burden after, why all this pudder and preparation,—why torment us with all this unnecessary sympathy? As if the childish pleasure of getting his gilt robes and sceptre again could tempt him to act over again his misused station,—as if, at his years and with his experience, anything was left but to die.

<sup>2</sup> A character in John Home's tragedy Douglas, acted in Edinburgh, 1756.

<sup>3</sup> Edmund Kean (1787?-1833), the most famous English tragedian of his day, especially in Shakespearean rôles.

Walter Sabage Llandor

1775-1864

ESSEX AND SPENSER<sup>1</sup>

(Imaginary Conversations, 1834)

Essex. Instantly on hearing of thy arrival from Ireland, I sent a message to thee, good Edmund, that I might learn, from one so ju-

<sup>4</sup> Nahum Tate (1652-1715), a poet and playwright who gained an unenviable reputation as an adapter of several of Shakespeare’s plays, among them King Lear. In his version, Cordelia survives and marries Edgar.

<sup>5</sup> David Garrick, the celebrated English actor, a contemporary of Dr. Johnson.

<sup>1</sup> In 1580 the poet Spenser went to Ireland as secretary

to Lord Grey, the Lord Deputy of Ireland, who undertook to put down the rebellion of Desmond, a powerful Munster chief. The English policy involved extermination of the natives and the desolation of the country. In the eyes of Englishmen the Irish chiefs were a band of barbarians, the enemies of law and order, and Spenser came to look upon the Irish with the loathing that animated most Englishmen of his time. He spent practically the rest of his life in Ireland as an agent of the government, and was rewarded for his services by the grant of Killeenham Castle, formerly a Desmond possession, in County Cork. In 1594 there was a new uprising in Ulster, headed by Hugh O’Neill, Earl of Tyrone. By 1598 the rebellion had spread to Munster, and Killeenham Castle was sacked and burnt. Spenser and his wife escaped, but their young child perished in the flames. The poet returned to England just as the Queen was preparing to send her favorite Essex to end the rebellion. It is at this juncture that the conversation between Essex and Spenser is imagined by Llandor to have taken place.

<sup>2</sup> The law of retaliation, as “an eye for an eye,” etc.

Spenser. Wisely and well considered; but more worthy of her judgment than her affection. May your lordship overcome, as you have ever done, the difficulties and dangers to you foreseen.

Essex. We grow weak by striking at random; and knowing that I must strike, and strike heavily, I would fain see exactly where the stroke shall fall.

Some attribute to the Irish all sorts of excesses; others tell us that these are old stories; that there is not a more inoffensive race of merry creatures under heaven, and that their crimes are all hatched for them here in England, by the incubation of printers’ boys, and are brought to market at times of distressing dearth in news. From all that I myself have seen of them, I can only say that the civilized (I mean the richer and titled) are as susceptible of heat as iron, and as impenetrable to light as granite. The half-barbarous are probably worse; the utterly barbarous may be somewhat better. Like game-cocks, they must spur when they meet. One fights because he fights an Englishman; another, because the fellow he quarrels with comes from a distant county; a third, because the next parish is an eyesore to him, and his fist-mate is from it. The only thing in which they all agree as proper law is the tooth-for-tooth act.<sup>2</sup> Luckily, we have a bishop who is a native, and we call him before the Queen. He represented to Her Majesty that everything in old Ireland tended to re-produce its kind,—crimes among others; and he declared frankly that if an honest man is murdered, or, what is dearer to an honest man, if his honour is wounded in the person of his wife, it must be expected that he will retaliate. Her Majesty delivered it as her opin-

45

to Lord Grey, the Lord Deputy of Ireland, who undertook to put down the rebellion of Desmond, a powerful Munster chief. The English policy involved extermination of the natives and the desolation of the country. In the eyes of Englishmen the Irish chiefs were a band of barbarians, the enemies of law and order, and Spenser came to look upon the Irish with the loathing that animated most Englishmen of his time. He spent practically the rest of his life in Ireland as an agent of the government, and was rewarded for his services by the grant of Killeenham Castle, formerly a Desmond possession, in County Cork. In 1594 there was a new uprising in Ulster, headed by Hugh O’Neill, Earl of Tyrone. By 1598 the rebellion had spread to Munster, and Killeenham Castle was sacked and burnt. Spenser and his wife escaped, but their young child perished in the flames. The poet returned to England just as the Queen was preparing to send her favorite Essex to end the rebellion. It is at this juncture that the conversation between Essex and Spenser is imagined by Llandor to have taken place.

<sup>2</sup> The law of retaliation, as “an eye for an eye,” etc.

ion, that the latter case of vindictiveness was more likely to take effect than the former. But the bishop replied, that in his conscience he could not answer for either if the man was up. The dean of the same diocese gave us a more favourable report. Being a justice of the peace, he averred most solemnly that no man ever had complained to him of murder, excepting one who had lost so many fore-teeth by a cudgel that his deposition could not be taken 10 exactly; added to which, his head was a little clouded with drunkenness; furthermore, that extremely few women had adduced sufficiently clear proofs of violence, excepting those who were wilful, and resisted with tooth and nail. 15 In all which cases, it was difficult—nay, impossible—to ascertain which violence began first and lasted longest.

There is not a nation upon earth that pretends to be so superlatively generous and high-minded; and there is not one (I speak from experience) so utterly base and venal. I have positive proof that the nobility, in a mass, are agreed to sell, for a stipulated sum, all their rights and privileges, so much per man; and the Queen is inclined thereunto. But would our Parliament consent to pay money for a cargo of rotten pilchards?<sup>3</sup> And would not our captains be readier to swamp than to import them? The noisiest rogues in that kingdom, if not quieted by a halter, may be quieted by making them brief-collectors,<sup>4</sup> and by allowing them, first, to encourage the incendiary; then, to denounce and hang them; and, lastly, to collect all the money they can, running up 35 and down with the whining ferocity of half-starved hyenas, under pretence of repairing the damages their exhausted country hath sustained. Others ask, modestly, a few thousands a year, and no more, from those whom they represent to us as naked and famished; and prove clearly, to every dispassionate man who hath a single drop of free blood in his veins, that at least this pittance is due to them for abandoning their liberal and lucrative profes- 40 sions, and for endangering their valuable lives on the tempestuous seas, in order that the voice of truth may sound for once upon the shores of England, and humanity cast her shadow on the council-chamber.

I gave a dinner to a party of these fellows a few weeks ago. I know not how many kings and princes were among them, nor how many poets and prophets and legislators and sages. When they were half-drunk, they coaxed and threatened; when they had gone somewhat deeper, they joked, and croaked and hic-coughed, and wept over sweet Ireland; and, when they could neither stand nor sit any longer, they fell upon their knees and their 5 noddles, and swore that limbs, life, liberty, Ireland, and God himself, were all at the Queen's service. It was only their holy religion, the religion of their forefathers,—here sobs interrupted some, howls others, execrations more, and the liquor they had engulfed the rest. I looked down on them with stupor and astonishment, seeing faces, forms, dresses, much like ours, and recollecting their ignorance, levity, and ferocity. My pages drew them gently 10 by the heels down the steps; my grooms set them upright (inasmuch as might be) on their horses; and the people in the streets, shouting and pelting, sent forward the beasts to their straw.

Various plans have been laid before us for civilizing or coercing them. Among the pacific, it was proposed to make an offer to five hundred of the richer Jews in the Hansetowns<sup>5</sup> and in Poland, who should be raised to the dignity 25 of the Irish peerage, and endowed with four thousand acres of good forfeited land, on condition of each paying two thousand pounds, and of keeping up ten horsemen and twenty foot, Germans or Poles, in readiness for service.

The Catholics bear nowhere such ill-will toward Jews as toward Protestants. Brooks make even worse neighbors than oceans do.

I myself saw no objection to the measure; but our gracious Queen declared she had an insuperable one,—they stank! We all acknowledged the strength of the argument, and took out our handkerchiefs. Lord Burleigh almost fainted; and Raleigh wondered how the Emperor Titus could bring up his men against 40 Jerusalem.

"Ah!" said he, looking reverentially at Her Majesty, "the star of Berenice shone above him!"<sup>6</sup> And what evil influence could that star not quell! what malignancy could it not annihilate!"

Hereupon he touched the earth with his brow, until the Queen said,—

"Sir Walter! lift me up those laurels."

At which manifestation of princely good-will 50 he was advancing to kiss Her Majesty's hand; but she waved it, and said sharply,—

"Stand there, dog!"

<sup>5</sup> The towns of the Hanseatic League, of northern Germany and the neighboring countries, which were leagued together for commercial protection and the general benefit of trade.

<sup>6</sup> i. e. above Titus during his siege of Jerusalem, 70 A. D. During this expedition, Titus became infatuated with the beautiful Jewess Berenice and the star of Berenice is supposed to have been potent enough to enable Titus to "bring up his men against Jerusalem" in spite of the evil odors of the Jews.

<sup>3</sup> A fish similar to a herring.

<sup>4</sup> Men holding licenses to collect money for the repairing of churches, or for the payment of losses by fire, etc.

Now what tale have you for us?

Spenser. Interrogate me, my lord, that I may answer each question distinctly, my mind being in sad confusion at what I have seen and undergone.

Essex. Give me thy account and opinion of these very affairs as thou leftest them; for I would rather know one part well than all imperfectly; and the violences of which I have heard within the day surpass belief.

Why weepest thou, my gentle Spenser? Have the rebels sacked thy house?

Spenser. They have plundered and utterly destroyed it.

Essex. I grieve for thee, and will see thee 15 righted.

Spenser. In this they have little harmed me.

Essex. How! I have heard it reported that thy grounds are fertile, and thy mansion large and pleasant.

Spenser. If river and lake and meadow-ground and mountain could render any place the abode of pleasantness, pleasant was mine, indeed!

On the lovely banks of Mulla<sup>7</sup> I found deep 25 contentment. Under the dark alders did I muse and meditate. Innocent hopes were my gravest cares, and my playfullest fancy was with kindly wishes. Ah! surely of all cruelties the worst is to extinguish our kindness. Mine 30 is gone: I love the people and the land no longer. My lord, ask me not about them: I may speak injuriously.

Essex. Think rather, then, of thy happier hours and busier occupations; these likewise 35 may instruct me.

Spenser. The first seeds I sowed in the garden, ere the old castle was made habitable for my lovely bride, were acorns from Penshurst.<sup>8</sup> I planted a little oak before my mansion at the birth of each child. My sons, I said to 40 myself, shall often play in the shade of them when I am gone; and every year shall they take the measure of their growth, as fondly as I take theirs.

Essex. Well, well; but let not this thought make thee weep so bitterly.

Spenser. Poison may ooze from beautiful plants; deadly grief from dearest reminiscences.

I must grieve, I must weep: it seems the law 50 of God, and the only one that men are not disposed to contravene. In the performance of this alone do they effectually aid one another.

Essex. Spenser! I wish I had at hand any arguments or persuasions, of force sufficient 55 to remove thy sorrow; but, really, I am not in the habit of seeing men grieve at anything except the loss of favour at court, or of a hawk, or of a buckhound. And were I to swear out 5 my condolences to a man of thy discernment, in the same round roll-call phrases we employ with one another upon these occasions, I should be guilty, not of insincerity, but of insolence. True grief hath ever something sacred in it; 10 and, when it visiteth a wise man and a brave one, is most holy.

<sup>7</sup> This stream flowed near Spenser's castle of Kilcolman, in Munster.

<sup>8</sup> Penshurst was the splendid estate of the Sidneys in the western part of Kent. Sir Philip Sidney was one of Spenser's heroes and patrons.

Nay, kiss not my hand: he whom God smiteth hath God with him. In his presence what am I?

Spenser. Never so great, my lord, as at this hour, when you see aright who is greater. May he guide your counsels, and preserve your life and glory!

Essex. Where are thy friends? Are they 20 with thee?

Spenser. Ah, where, indeed! Generous, true-hearted Philip! where art thou, whose presence was unto me peace and safety; whose smile was contentment, and whose praise re- 25 nown? My lord! I cannot but think of him among still heavier losses: he was my earliest friend, and would have taught me wisdom.

Essex. Pastoral poetry, my dear Spenser, doth not require tears and lamentations. Dry 30 thine eyes; rebuild thine house: the Queen and Council, I venture to promise thee, will make ample amends for every evil thou hast sustained. What! does that enforce thee to wail yet louder?

Spenser. Pardon me, bear with me, most 35 noble heart! I have lost what no Council, no Queen, no Essex, can restore.

Essex. We will see that. There are other swords, and other arms to wield them, besides a Leicester's and a Raleigh's. Others can crush 40 their enemies, and serve their friends.

Spenser. O my sweet child! And of many so powerful, many so wise and so beneficent, was there none to save thee? None! None!

Essex. I now perceive that thou lamentest 45 what almost every father is destined to lament. Happiness must be bought, although the payment may be delayed. Consider; the same calamity might have befallen thee here in London. Neither the houses of ambassadors, nor the palaces of kings, nor the altars of God himself, are asylums against death. How do I know but under this very roof there may sleep some latent calamity, that in an instant shall cover with gloom every inmate of the house, 50 and every far dependent?

Spenser. God avert it!

Essex. Every day, every hour of the year, do hundreds mourn what thou mournest.

Spenser. Oh, no, no, no! Calamities there are around us; calamities there are all over the earth; calamities there are in all seasons: but none in any season, none in any place, like mine.

Essex. So say all fathers, so say all husbands. Look at any old mansion-house, and let the sun shine as gloriously as it may on the golden vanes, or the arms recently quartered over the gateway or the embayed window, and on the happy pair that haply is toying at it: nevertheless, thou mayest say that of a certainty the same fabric hath seen much sorrow within its chambers, and heard many wailings; and each time this was the heaviest stroke of all. Funerals have passed along through the stout-hearted knights upon the wainscot, and amid the laughing nymphs upon the arras. Old servants have shaken their heads as if somebody had deceived them, when they found that beauty and nobility could perish.

Edmund! the things that are too true pass by us as if they were not true at all; and when they have singled us out, then only do they strike us. Thou and I must go too. Perhaps the next year may blow us away with its fallen leaves.

Spenser. For you, my lord, many years (I trust) are waiting: I shall never see those fallen leaves. No leaf, no bud, will spring upon the earth before I sink into her breast for ever.

Essex. Thou, who art wiser than most men, shouldst bear with patience, equanimity, and courage what is common to all.

Spenser. Enough, enough, enough! have all men seen their infant burned to ashes before their eyes?

Essex. Gracious God! Merciful Father! what is this?

Spenser. Burned alive! burned to ashes! burned to ashes! The flames dart their serpent tongues through the nursery window. I cannot quit thee, my Elizabeth! I cannot lay down our Edmund! Oh, these flames! They persecute, they enthrall me; they curl round my temples; they hiss upon my brain; they taunt me with their fierce, foul voices; they carp at me, they wither me, they consume me, throwing back to me a little of life to roll and suffer in, with their fangs upon me. Ask me, my lord, the things you wish to know from me: I may answer them; I am now composed again. Command me, my gracious lord! I would yet serve you: soon I shall be unable. You have stooped to raise me up; you have borne with me; you have pitied me, even like one not powerful. You have brought comfort, and will leave it with me; for gratitude is comfort.

Oh! my memory stands all a tip-toe on one burning point: when it drops from it, then it perishes. Spare me: ask me nothing; let me weep before you in peace,—the kindest act of greatness.

Essex. I should rather have dared to mount into the midst of the conflagration than I now dare entreat thee not to weep. The tears that overflow thy heart, my Spenser, will stanch and heal it in their sacred stream; but not without hope in God.

Spenser. My hope in God is that I may soon see again what he has taken from me. Amid the myriads of angels, there is not one so beautiful; and even he (if there be any) who is appointed my guardian could never love me so. Ah! these are idle thoughts, vain wanderings, distempered dreams. If there ever were guardian angels, he who so wanted one—my helpless boy—would not have left these arms upon my knees.

Essex. God help and sustain thee too, gentle Spenser! I never will desert thee. But what am I? Great they have called me! Alas, how powerless then and infantile is greatness in the presence of calamity! Come, give me thy hand: let us walk up and down the gallery. Bravely done! I will envy no more a Sidney or a Raleigh.

William Hazlitt

1778-1830

HAMLET

(From The Characters of Shakespeare's Plays, 1817)

This is that Hamlet the Dane, whom we read of in our youth, and whom we may be said almost to remember in our after-years; he who made that famous soliloquy on life, who gave the advice to the players, who thought "this goodly frame, the earth, a sterile promontory, and this brave o'er-hanging firmament, the air, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire," a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours;" whom "man delighted not, nor woman neither;" he who talked with the grave-diggers, and moralised on Yorick's skull; the schoolfellow of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern at Wittenberg; the friend of Horatio; the lover of Ophelia; he that was mad and sent to England; the slow avenger of his father's death; who lived at the court of Horwendillus five hundred years before we were born, but all whose thoughts we seem to know as well as we do our own, because we have read them in Shakespeare.

Hamlet is a name: his speeches and sayings but the idle coinage of the poet's brain. What then, are they not real? They are as real as our own thoughts. Their reality is in the reader's mind. It is we who are Hamlet. This play has a prophetic truth, which is above that of history. Whoever has become thoughtful and melancholy through his own mishaps or those of others; whoever has born about with him the clouded brow of reflection, and thought himself "too much i' the sun;" whoever has seen the golden lamp of day dimmed by envious mists rising in his own breast, and could find in the world before him only a dull blank with nothing left remarkable in it; whoever has known "the pangs of despised love, the insolence of office, or the spurns which patient merit of the unworthy takes;" he who has felt his mind sink within him, and sadness cling to his heart like a malady; who has had his hopes blighted and his youth staggered by the apparitions of strange things; who cannot be well at ease, while he sees evil hovering near him like a spectre; whose powers of action have been eaten up by thought, he to whom the universe seems infinite, and himself nothing; whose bitterness of soul makes him careless of consequences, and who goes to a play as his best resource to shove off, to a second remove, the evils of life by a mock representation of them—this is the true Hamlet.

We have been so used to this tragedy that we hardly know how to criticise it any more than we should know how to describe our own faces. But we must make such observations as we can. It is the one of Shakespeare's plays that we think of the oftenest, because it abounds most in striking reflections on human life, and because the distresses of Hamlet are transferred, by the turn of his mind, to the general account of humanity. Whatever happens to him we apply to ourselves, because he applies it so himself as a means of general reasoning. He is a great moraliser, and what makes him worth attending to is, that he moralises on his own feelings and experience. He is not a common-place pedant. If Lear is distinguished by the greatest depth of passion, Hamlet is the most remarkable for the ingenuity, originality, and unstudied development of character. Shakespeare had more magnanimity than any other poet, and he has shown more of it in this play than in any other. There is no attempt to force an interest: everything is left for time and circumstances to unfold. The attention is excited without effort, the incidents succeed each other as matters of course, the characters think and speak and act just as they might do, if left entirely to themselves. There is no set purpose, no straining at a point. The observations are suggested by the passing scene—the gusts of passion come and go like sounds of music borne on the wind. The whole play is an exact transcript of what might be supposed to have taken place at the court of Denmark, at the remote period of time fixed upon, before the modern refinements in morals and manners were heard of. It would have been interesting enough to have been admitted as a by-stander in such a scene, at such a time, to have heard and witnessed something of what was going on. But here we are more than spectators. We have not only "the outward pageants and the signs of grief;" but "we have that within which passes show." We read the thoughts of the heart, we catch the passions living as they rise. Other dramatic writers give us very fine versions and paraphrases of nature; but Shakespeare, together with his own comments, gives us the original text, that we may judge for ourselves. This is a very great advantage.

The character of Hamlet stands quite by itself. It is not a character marked by strength of will, or even of passion, but by refinement of thought and sentiment. Hamlet is as little of the hero as a man can well be; but he is a young and princely novice, full of high enthusiasm and quick sensibility—the sport of circumstances, questioning with fortune and refining on his own feelings, and forced from the natural bias of his disposition by the strangeness of his situation. He seems incapable of deliberate action, and is only hurried into extremities on the spur of the occasion, when he has no time to reflect, as in the scene where he kills Polonius, and again, where he alters the letters which Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are taking with them to England, purporting his death. At other times, when he is most bound to act, he remains puzzled, undecided and skeptical, dallies with his purposes, till the occasion is lost, and finds out some pretence to relapse into indolence and thoughtfulness again. For this reason he refuses to kill the King when he is at his prayers. . . .

He is the prince of philosophical speculators, and because he cannot have his revenge perfect, according to the most refined idea his wish can form, he declines it altogether. So he scruples to trust the suggestions of the ghost, contrives the scene of the play to have surer proof of his uncle's guilt, and then rests satisfied with this confirmation of his suspicions, and the success of his experiment, instead of acting upon it. Yet he is sensible of his own weakness, taxes himself with it, and tries to reason himself out of it. . . . Still, he does nothing; and this very speculation on his own infirmity only affords him another occasion for indulging it. It is not from any want of attachment to his father or of abhorrence of his murder that Hamlet is thus dilatory, but it is more to his taste to indulge his imagination in reflecting upon the enormity of the crime and refining on his schemes of vengeance, than to put them into immediate practice. His ruling passion is to think, not to act; and any vague pretext that flatters this propensity instantly diverts him from his previous purposes.

THE ENGLISH AND THEIR LITERATURE

(From The Age of Elizabeth, 1821)

We are a nation of islanders, and we cannot help it; nor mend ourselves if we would. We are something in ourselves, nothing when we try to ape others. Music and painting are not our forte: for what we have done in that way has been little, and that borrowed from others with great difficulty. But we may boast of our poets and philosophers. That's something. We have had strong heads and sound hearts among us. Thrown on one side of the world, and left to bustle for ourselves, we have fought out many a battle for truth and freedom. That is our natural style; and it were to be wished we had in no instance departed from it. Our situation has given us a certain cast of thought and character; and our liberty has enabled us to make the most of it. We are of a stiff clay, not moulded into every fashion, with stubborn joints not easily bent. We are slow to think, and therefore impressions do not work upon us till they act in masses. We are not forward to express our feelings, and therefore they do not come from us till they force their way in the most impetuous eloquence. Our language is, as it were, to begin anew, and we make use of the most singular and boldest combinations to explain ourselves. Our wit comes from us, "like birdlime, brains and all."<sup>1</sup> We pay too little attention to form and method, leave our works in an unfinished state, but still the materials we work in are solid and of nature's mint; we do not deal in counterfeits. We both under and overdo, but we keep an eye to the prominent features, the main chance. We are more for weight than show; care only about what interests ourselves, instead of trying to impose upon others by plausible appearances, and are obstinate and intractable in not conforming to common rules, by which many arrive at their ends with half the real waste of thought and trouble. We neglect all but the principal object, gather our force to make a great blow, bring it down, and relapse into sluggishness and indifference again. Materiam superabat opus,<sup>2</sup> cannot be said of us. We may be accused of grossness, but not of flimsiness; of extravagance, but not of affectation; of want of art and refinement, but not of a want of truth and nature. Our literature, in a word, is Gothic and grotesque; unequal and irregular; not cast in a previous mould, nor of one uniform texture, but of great weight in the whole, and of incomparable value in the best parts. It aims at an excess of beauty or power, hits or misses, and is either very good indeed, or absolutely good for nothing. This character applies in particular to our literature in the age of Elizabeth, which is its best period, before the introduction of a rage for French rules and French models; for whatever may be the value of our own original style of composition, there can be neither offense nor presumption in saying, that it is at least better than our second-hand imitations of others. Our understanding (such as it is, and must remain to be good for anything) is not a thoroughfare for common places, smooth as the palm of one's hand, but full of knotty points and jutting excrescences, rough, uneven, overgrown with brambles; and I like this aspect of the mind (as some one said of the country), where nature keeps a good deal of the soil in her own hands. Perhaps the genius of our poetry has more of Pan than of Apollo;<sup>3</sup> "but Pan is a God, Apollo is no more!"<sup>4</sup>

ON THE FEELING OF IMMORTALITY IN YOUTH

(From Winterslow, 1850)

No young man believes he shall ever die. It was a saying of my brother's, and a fine one. There is a feeling of Eternity in youth which makes us amends for everything. To be young is to be one of the Immortals. One half of time indeed is spent—the other half remains in store for us with all its countless treasures, for there is no line drawn, and we see no limit to our hopes and wishes. We make the coming age our own—

"The vast, the unbounded prospect lies before us."<sup>1</sup>

Death, old age, are words without a meaning, a dream, a fiction, with which we have nothing

<sup>1</sup> Quoted from memory from Othello, II. i. 127. Bird-lime is a sticky substance used to spread on twigs for the purpose of catching birds.

<sup>2</sup> The work ever excelled the matter. Ovid, Met. II. 5.

<sup>3</sup> i. e. more of nature than of art.

<sup>4</sup> Quoted from Lyly's play Midas, Act IV. 1.

<sup>1</sup> "The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me." Addison's Cato, V. i. 13. V. p. 295.

to do. Others may have undergone, or may still undergo them—we “bear a charmed life,”<sup>2</sup> which laughs to scorn all such idle fancies. As, in setting out on a delightful journey, we strain our eager sight forward,

“Bidding the lovely scenes at distance hail,”<sup>3</sup>

and see no end to prospect after prospect, new objects presenting themselves as we advance, so in the outset of life we see no end to our desires nor to the opportunities of gratifying them. We have as yet found no obstacle, no disposition to flag, and it seems that we can go on so forever. We look round in a new world, full of life and motion, and ceaseless progress, and feel in ourselves all the vigour and spirit to keep pace with it, and do not foresee from any present signs how we shall be left behind in the race, decline into old age, and drop into the grave. It is the simplicity and, as it were, abstractedness of our feelings in youth that (so to speak) identifies us with nature and (our experience being weak and our passions strong) makes us fancy ourselves immortal like it. Our short-lived connection with being, we fondly flatter ourselves, is an indissoluble and lasting union. As infants smile and sleep, we are rocked in the cradle of our desires, and hushed into fancied security by the roar of the universe around us—we quaff the cup of life with eager thirst without draining it, and joy and hope seem ever mantling to the brim—objects press around us, filling the mind with their magnitude and with the throng of desires that wait upon them, so that there is no room for the thoughts of death. We are too much dazzled by the gorgeousness and novelty of the bright waking dream about us to discern the dim shadow lingering for us in the distance. Nor would the hold that life has taken of us permit us to detach our thoughts that way, even if we could. We are too much absorbed in present objects and pursuits. While the spirit of youth remains unimpaired, ere “the wine of life is drunk,”<sup>4</sup> we are like people intoxicated or in a fever, who are hurried away by the violence of their own sensations: it is only as present objects begin to pall upon the sense, as we have been disappointed in our favourite pursuits, cut off from our closest ties, that we by degrees become weaned from the world, that passion loosens its hold upon futurity, and that we begin to contemplate as in a glass darkly the possibility of parting with it for good. Till then, the example of others 55 has no effect upon us. Casualties we avoid; the slow approaches of age we play at hide and seek with. Like the foolish fish scullion in Sterne,<sup>5</sup> who hears that Master Bobby is dead, our only reflection is, “So am not I!” The idea of death, instead of staggering our confidence, only seems to strengthen and enhance our sense of the possession and enjoyment of life. Others may fall around us like leaves, or be mowed down by the scythe of Time like grass: these are but metaphors to the unreflecting, buoyant ears and overweening presumption of youth. It is not till we see the flowers of Love, Hope, and Joy withering around us, that we give up the flattering delusions that before led us on, and that the emptiness and dreariness of the prospect before us reconciles us hypothetically to the silence of the grave.

Life is indeed a strange gift, and its privileges are most mysterious. No wonder when it is first granted to us, that our gratitude, our admiration, and our delight should prevent us from reflecting on our own nothingness, or from thinking it will ever be recalled. Our first and strongest impressions are borrowed from the mighty scene that is opened to us, and we unconsciously transfer its durability as well as its splendour to ourselves. So newly found, we cannot think of parting with it yet, or at least put off that consideration sine die.<sup>6</sup> Like a rustic at a fair, we are full of amazement and rapture, and have no thought of going home, or that it will soon be night. We know our existence only by ourselves, and confound our knowledge with the objects of it. We and Nature are therefore one. Otherwise the illusion, the “feast of reason and the flow of soul,”<sup>7</sup> to which we are invited, is a mockery and a cruel insult. We do not go from a play till the last act is ended, and the lights are about to be extinguished. But the fairy face of Nature still shines on: shall we be called away before the curtain falls, or ere we have scarce had a glimpse of what is going on? Like children, our step-mother Nature holds us up to see the raree-show<sup>8</sup> of the universe, and then, as if we were a burden to her to support, lets us fall down again. Yet what brave sublunary things does not this pageant present, like a ball or fête of the universe!

To see the golden sun, the azure sky, the out-stretched ocean; to walk upon the green earth, and be lord of a thousand creatures;

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Macbeth, V. viii, 12.

<sup>3</sup> “Still it whispered, promised pleasure,
And bid the lovely scenes at distance hail”

Collins, Ode On The Passions.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Macbeth, II. iii, 100. “The wine of life is drawn.”

<sup>5</sup> From Tristram Shandy, Bk. V, ch. 7.

<sup>6</sup> “Without day,” a legal or parliamentary phrase used of an adjournment taken without fixing a day for re-assembling.

<sup>7</sup> Pope, Satires, I, 128.

<sup>8</sup> A show carried about in a box, like a puppet show.

to look down yawning precipices or over distant sunny valleys; to see the world spread out under one's feet on a map; to bring the stars near; to view the smallest insects through a microscope; to read history, and consider the revolutions of empire and the successions of generations; to hear of the glory of Tyre, of Sidon, of Babylon, and of Susa,<sup>9</sup> and to say all these were before me and are now nothing; to say I exist in such a point of time, and in such a point of space; to be a spectator and a part of its ever-moving scene; to witness the change of season, of spring and autumn, of winter and summer; to feel hot and cold, pleasure and pain, beauty and deformity, right and wrong; to be sensible to the accidents of nature; to consider the mighty world of eye and ear; to listen to the stock-dove's notes amid the forest deep; to journey over moor and mountain; to hear the midnight sainted choir; to visit lighted halls, or the cathedral's gloom, or sit in crowded theatres and see life itself mocked; to study the works of art and refine the sense of beauty to agony; to worship fame, and to dream of immortality; to look upon the Vatican, and to read Shakespeare; to gather up the wisdom of the ancients, and to pry into the future; to listen to the trump of war, the shout of victory; to question history as to the movements of the human heart; to seek for truth; to plead the cause of humanity; to overlook the world as if time and nature poured their treasures at our feet—to be and to do all this and then in a moment to be nothing—to have it all snatched from us as by a juggler's trick, or a phantasmagoria! There is something in this transition from all to nothing that shocks us and damps the enthusiasm of youth new flushed with hope and pleasure, and we cast the comfortless thought as far from us as we can. In the first enjoyment of the estate of life we discard the fear of debts and duns, and never think of the final payment of our great debt to Nature. Art we know is long; life, we flatter ourselves, should be so too. We see no end of the difficulties and delays we have to encounter: perfection is slow of attainment, and we must have time to accomplish it in. The fame of the great names we look up to is immortal: and shall not we who contemplate it imbibe a portion of ethereal fire, the divina particula aurea,<sup>10</sup> which nothing can extinguish? A wrinkle in Rembrandt or in Nature takes whole days to resolve itself into its component parts, its softenings and its sharpnesses; we refine upon our perfections, and unfold the intricacies of nature. What a prospect for the future! What a task have we not begun! And shall we be arrested in the middle of it? We do not count our time thus employed lost, or our pains thrown away; we do not flag or grow tired, but gain new vigour at our endless task. Shall Time, then, grudge us to finish what we have begun, and have formed a compact with Nature to do? Why not fill up the blank that is left us in this manner? I have looked for hours at a Rembrandt without being conscious of the flight of time, but with ever new wonder and delight, have thought that not only my own but another existence I could pass in the same manner. This rarefied, refined existence seemed to have no end, nor stint, nor principle of decay in it. The print would remain long after I who looked on it had become the prey of worms. The thing seems in itself out of all reason: health, strength, appetite are opposed to the idea of death, and we are not ready to credit it till we have found our illusions vanished, and our hopes grown cold.

Objects in youth, from novelty, &c., are stamped upon the brain with such force and integrity that one thinks nothing can remove or obliterate them. They are riveted there, and appear to us as an element of our nature. It must be a mere violence that destroys them, not a natural decay. In the very strength of this persuasion we seem to enjoy an age by anticipation. We melt down years into a single moment of intense sympathy, and by anticipating the fruits defy the ravages of time. If, then, a single moment of our lives is worth years, shall we set any limits to its total value and extent? Again, does it not happen that so secure do we think ourselves of an indefinite period of existence, that at times, when left to ourselves, and impatient of novelty, we feel annoyed at what seems to us the slow and creeping progress of time, and argue that if it always moves at this tedious snail's pace it will never come to an end? How ready are we to sacrifice any space of time which separates us from a favourite object, little thinking that before long we shall find it move too fast.

For my part, I started in life with the French Revolution, and I have lived, alas! to see the end of it. But I did not foresee this result. My sun arose with the first dawn of liberty, and I did not think how soon both must set. The new impulse to ardour given to men's minds imparted a congenial warmth and glow to mine; we were strong to run a race together, and I little dreamed that long before mine was set, the sun of liberty<sup>11</sup> would turn to blood, or set once more in the night of despotism. Since then, I confess, I have no longer felt myself young, for with that my hopes fell.

<sup>9</sup> A royal Persian residence.

<sup>10</sup> "Particles of divine air." It was the doctrine of the Pythagoreans and the Stoics that our souls were emanations from the Divine mind.

<sup>11</sup> An allusion to the Reign of Terror, and the accession of Napoleon.

I have since turned my thoughts to gathering up some of the fragments of my early recollections, and putting them into a form to which I might occasionally revert. The future was barred to my progress, and I turned for consolation and encouragement to the past. It is thus that, while we find our personal and substantial identity vanishing from us, we strive to gain a reflected and vicarious one in our thoughts: we do not like to perish wholly, and wish to bequeath our names, at least, to posterity. As long as we can make our cherished thoughts and nearest interests live in the minds of others, we do not appear to have retired altogether from the stage. We still occupy the breasts of others, and exert an influence and power over them, and it is only our bodies that are reduced to dust and powder. Our favourite speculations still find encouragement, and we make as great a figure in the eye of the world, or perhaps a greater, than in our lifetime. The demands of our self-love are thus satisfied, and these are the most imperious and unremitting. Besides, if by our intellectual superiority we survive ourselves in this world, by our virtues and faith we may attain an interest in another, and a higher state of being, and may thus be recipients<sup>12</sup> at the same time of men and of angels.

"E'en from the tomb the voice of Nature cries, E'en in our ashes live their wonted fires."<sup>13</sup>

As we grow old, our sense of the value of time becomes vivid. Nothing else, indeed, seems of any consequence. We can never cease wondering that that which has ever been should cease to be. We find many things remain the same: why then should there be change in us. This adds a convulsive grasp of whatever is, a sense of a fallacious hollowness in all we see. Instead of the full, pulpy feeling of youth, tasting existence and every object in it, all is flat and vapid,—a whited sepulchre, fair without, but full of ravening and all uncleanness within. The world is a witch that puts us off with false shows and appearances. The simplicity of youth, the confiding expectation, the boundless raptures, are gone: we only think of getting out of it as well as we can, and without any great mischance or annoyance. The flush of illusion, even the complacent retrospect of past joys and hopes, is over: if we can slip out of life without indignity, can escape with little <sup>12</sup> i. e. we may obtain immortality on earth by our "intellectual superiority," and in heaven by our "virtues and faith," and so be received by men and by angels.

<sup>13</sup> Gray's Elegy.

bodily infirmity, and frame our minds to the calm and respectable composure of still-life before we return to physical nothingness, it is as much as we can expect. We do not die wholly at our deaths: we have moulder'd away gradually long before. Faculty after faculty, interest after interest, attachment after attachment disappear: we are torn from ourselves while living, year after year sees us no longer the same, and death only consigns the last fragment of what we were to the grave. That we should wear out by slow stages, and dwindle at last into nothing, is not wonderful, when even in our prime our strongest impressions leave little trace but for the moment, and we are the creatures of petty circumstance. How little effect is made on us in our best days by the books we have read, the scenes we have witnessed, the sensations we have gone through! Think only of the feelings we experience in reading a fine romance (one of Sir Walter's, for instance); what beauty, what sublimity, what interest, what heart-rending emotions! You would suppose the feelings you then experienced would last for ever, or subdue the mind to their own harmony and tone: while we are reading it seems as if nothing could ever put us out of our way, or trouble us:—the first splash of mud that we get on entering the street, the first twopence we are cheated out of, the feeling vanishes clean out of our minds, and we become the prey of petty and annoying circumstance. The mind soars to the lofty: it is at home in the grovelling, the disagreeable, and the little. And yet we wonder that age should be feeble and querulous,—that the freshness of youth should fade away. Both worlds would hardly satisfy the extravagance of our desires and of our presumption.

Thomas De Quincey

(1785–1859)

LEVANA AND OUR LADIES OF SORROW

(From Suspiria de Profundis, 1845)

Oftentimes at Oxford I saw Levana in my dreams. I knew her by her Roman symbols. Who is Levana? Reader, that do not pretend to have leisure for very much scholarship, you will not be angry with me for telling you. Levana was the Roman goddess that performed for the newborn infant the earliest office of ennobling kindness,—typical, by its mode, of that grandeur which belongs to man everywhere, and of that benignity in powers invisible which even in Pagan worlds sometimes descends to sustain it. At the very moment of birth, just as the infant tasted for the first time the atmosphere of our troubled planet, it was laid on the ground. That might bear different interpretations. But immediately, lest so grand a creature should grovel there for more than one instant, either the paternal hand, as proxy for the goddess Levana, or some near kinsman, as proxy for the father, raised it upright, bade it look erect as the king of all this world, and presented its forehead to the stars, saying, perhaps in his heart, "Behold what is greater than yourselves!" This symbolic act represented the function of Levana. And that mysterious lady, who never revealed her face (except to me in dreams), but always acted by delegation, had her name from the Latin verb (as still it is the Italian verb) levare, to raise aloft.

This is the explanation of Levana. And hence it has arisen that some people have understood by Levana the tutelary power that controls the education of the nursery. She, that would not suffer at his birth even a prefigurative or mimic degradation for her awful ward, far less could be supposed to suffer the real degradation attaching to the non-development of his powers. She therefore, watches over human education. Now, the word edūco, with the penultimate short, was derived (by a process often exemplified in the crystallization of languages) from the word edūco, with the penultimate long. Whatsoever educēs, or develops, educates. By the education of Levana, therefore, is meant,—not the poor machinery that moves by spelling-books and grammars, but by that mighty system of central forces hidden in the deep bosom of human life, which by passion, by strife, by temptation, by the energies of resistance, works forever upon children,—resting not day or night, any more than the mighty wheel of day and night themselves, whose moments, like restless spokes, are glimmering forever as they revolve.

If, then, these are the ministries by which Levana works, how profoundly must she reverence the agencies of grief! But you, reader! think,—that children generally are not liable to grief such as mine. There are two senses in the word generally,—the sense of Euclid, where it means universally (or in the whole extent of the genus), and a foolish sense of this world, where it means usually. Now, I am far from saying that children universally are capable of grief like mine. But there are more than you ever heard of who die of grief in this island of ours. I will tell you a common case. The rules of Eton<sup>1</sup> require that a boy on the foundation<sup>2</sup> should be there twelve years: he is superannuated<sup>3</sup> at eighteen, consequently he must come at six. Children torn away from mothers and sisters at that age not unfrequently die. I speak of what I know. The complaint is not entered by the registrar as grief; but that it is. Grief of that sort, and at that age, has killed more than ever have been counted among its martyrs.

Therefore it is that Levana often communes with the powers that shake man's heart: therefore it is that she dotes upon grief. "These ladies," said I softly to myself, on seeing the ministers with whom Levana was conversing, "these are the Sorrows; and they are three in number, as the Graces are three, who dress man's life with beauty: the Parcæ are three, who weave the dark arras of man's life in their mysterious loom always with colours sad in part, sometimes angry with tragic crimson and black; the Furies are three, who visit with retributions called from the other side of the grave offences that walk upon this; and at once even the Muses<sup>4</sup> were but three, who fit the harp, the trumpet, or the lute,<sup>5</sup> to the great burdens of man's impassioned creations. These are the Sorrows, all three of whom I know." The last words I say now; but in Oxford<sup>6</sup> I said, "one of whom I know, and the others too surely I shall know." For already, in my fervent youth, I saw (dimly relieved upon the dark background of my dreams) the imperfect lineaments of the awful sisters. These sisters—by what name shall we call them?

If I say simply, "The Sorrows," there will be a chance of mistaking the term; it might be understood of individual sorrow,—separate cases of sorrow,—whereas I want a term expressing the mighty abstractions that incarnate themselves in all individual sufferings of man's heart; and I wish to have these abstractions presented as impersonations, that is, as clothed with human attributes of life, and with functions pointing to flesh. Let us call them therefore, Our Ladies of Sorrow. I know them

<sup>1</sup> One of the oldest and most aristocratic of the "public schools" in England. It is situated on the Thames opposite Windsor, and was founded by Henry VI in 1441. See Gray's Ode, p. 427.

<sup>2</sup> There are about seventy boys on the foundation or endowment; i. e. holding a scholarship.

<sup>3</sup> i. e. required to leave on account of age.

<sup>4</sup> Pausanias states that originally three muses were worshipped on Mount Helicon, namely, Meletē (Meditation), Mnēmē (Memory), and Aodē (Song).

<sup>5</sup> Each instrument seems chosen by De Quincey to suggest a different province of emotion: the harp for religious feeling; the trumpet for patriotism and martial ardor; and the lute for love and sentiment.

<sup>6</sup> De Quincey matriculated at Worcester College at Oxford in 1803, aged nineteen. It was during his stay there that he began the use of opium.

thoroughly, and have walked in all their kingdoms. Three sisters they are, of one mysterious household; and their paths are wide apart; but of their dominion there is no end. Them I saw often conversing with Levana, and sometimes about myself. Do they talk, then? Oh, no! Mighty phantoms like these disdain the infirmities of language. They may utter voices through the organs of man when they dwell in human hearts, but amongst themselves is no voice nor sound; eternal silence reigns in their kingdoms. They spoke not, as they talked with Levana; they whispered not; they sang not; though oftentimes methought they might have sung: for I upon earth had heard their mysteries oftentimes deciphered by harp and timbrel, by dulcimer and organ. Like God, whose servants they are, they utter their pleasure not by sounds that perish, or by words that go astray, but by signs in heaven, by changes on earth, by pulses in secret rivers, heraldries painted on darkness, and hieroglyphics written on the tablets of the brain. They wheeled in mazes; I spelled the steps. They telegraphed from afar; I read the signals. They conspired together; and on the mirrors of darkness my eye traced the plots. Theirs were the symbols; mine are the words.

What is it the sisters are? What is it that they do? Let me describe their form, and their presence; if form it were that still fluctuated in its outline; or presence it were that forever advanced to the front, or forever receded amongst shades.

The eldest of the three is named Mater Lachrymarum, Our Lady of Tears. She it is that night and day raves and moans, calling for vanished faces. She stood in Rama,<sup>7</sup> where a voice was heard of lamentation,—Rachel weeping for her children, and refused to be comforted. She it was that stood in Bethlehem on the night when Herod's sword swept its nurseries of Innocents, and the little feet were stiffened forever, which, heard at times as they tottered along floors overhead, woke pulses of love in household hearts that were not unmarked in heaven.

Her eyes are sweet and subtle, wild and sleepy, by turns; oftentimes rising to the clouds, oftentimes challenging the heavens. She wears a diadem round her head. And I knew by childish memories that she could go abroad upon the winds, when she heard that sobbing of litanies, or the thundering of organs, and when she beheld the mustering of summer clouds. This sister, the elder, it is that carries keys more than papal<sup>8</sup> at her girdle, which open every cottage and every palace. She, to my knowledge, sat all last summer by the bedside of the blind beggar, him that so often and so gladly I talked with, whose pious daughter eight years old, with the sunny countenance, resisted the temptations of play and village mirth to travel all day long on dusty roads with her afflicted father. For this did God send her a great reward. In the spring-time of the year, and whilst yet her own spring was budding, he recalled her to himself. But her blind father mourns forever over her; still he dreams at midnight that the little guiding hand is locked within his own; and still he awakens to a darkness that is now within a second and a deeper darkness. This Mater Lachrymarum also has been sitting all this winter<sup>9</sup> of 1844-5 within the bedchamber of the Czar, bringing before his eyes a daughter (not less pious) that vanished to God not less suddenly, and left behind her a darkness not less profound. By the power of the keys it is that Our Lady of Tears glides a ghostly intruder into the chambers of sleepless men, sleepless women, sleepless children, from Ganges to the Nile, from Nile to Mississippi. And her, because she is the first-born of her house, and has the widest empire, let us honour with the title of "Madonna."

The second sister is called Mater Suspiriorum, Our Lady of Sighs. She never scales the clouds, nor walks abroad upon the winds. She wears no diadem. And her eyes, if they were ever seen, would be neither sweet nor subtle; no man could read their story; they would be found filled with perishing dreams, and with wrecks of forgotten delirium. But she raises not her eyes; her head, on which sits a dilapidated turban, droops forever, forever fastens on the dust. She weeps not. She groans not. But she sighs inaudibly at intervals. Her sister, Madonna, is oftentimes stormy and frantic, raging in the highest against heaven, and demanding back her darlings. But Our Lady of Sighs never clamours, never defies, dreams not of rebellious aspirations. She is humble to abjectness. Hers is the meekness that belongs to the hopeless. Murmur she may, but it is in her sleep. Whisper she may, but it is to herself in the twilight. Mutter she does at times, but it is in solitary places that are desolate as she is desolate, in ruined cities, and when the sun has gone down to his rest. This sister is the

to the Pope, as the successor of St. Peter, are given the keys of the kingdom of heaven.

<sup>9</sup> The Czar, Nicholas I. visited London in June, 1844. The death of his daughter, the Princess Alexandra, in the following August, aroused universal sympathy for him in England.

<sup>7</sup> Jeremiah, xxxi. 15, and St. Matt., ii. 18.

<sup>8</sup> In allusion to the belief in the Roman Church that visitor of the Pariah,<sup>10</sup> of the Jew,<sup>11</sup> of the bondsman to the oar in the Mediterranean galleys; of the English criminal in Norfolk Island,<sup>12</sup> blotted out from the books of remembrance in sweet far-off England; of the baffled penitent reverting his eyes forever upon a solitary grave, which to him seems the altar overthrown of some past and bloody sacrifice, on which altar no obligations can now be availing, whether towards pardon that he might implore, or towards reparation that he might attempt. Every slave that at noonday looks up to the tropical sun with timid reproach, as he points with one hand to the earth, our general mother, but for him a stepmother,<sup>15</sup>—as he points with the other hand to the Bible, our general teacher, but against him sealed and sequestered;—every woman sitting in darkness, without love to shelter her head, or hope to illumine her solitude, because the heaven-born instincts kindling in her nature germs of holy affections, which God implanted in her womanly bosom, having been stifled by social necessities, now burn sullenly to waste, like sepulchral lamps amongst the ancients; every 25 hand. Touching my head, she beckoned to Our Lady of Sighs; and what she spoke, translated out of the signs which (except in dreams) no man reads; was this:—

“Lo! here is he, whom in childhood I dedicated to my altars. This is he that once I made my darling. Him I led astray, him I beguiled, and from heaven I stole away his young heart to mine. Through me did he become idolatrous; and through me it was, by languishing desires, that he worshipped the worm and prayed to the wormy grave. Holy was the grave to him; lovely was its darkness; saintly its corruption. Him, this young idolater, I have seasoned for thee, dear gentle Sister of 40 Sighs! Do thou take him now to thy heart, and season him for our dreadful sister. And thou,”—turning to the Mater Tenebrarum, she said, “wicked sister, that temptest and hatest, do thou take him from her. See that thy sceptre lie heavy on his head. Suffer not woman and her tenderness to sit near him in his darkness. Banish the frailties of hope, wither the relenting of love, scorch the fountains of tears, curse him as only thou canst curse. So shall he be accomplished<sup>16</sup> in the furnace, so shall he see the things that ought not to be seen, sights that are abominable, and secrets that are unutterable. So shall he read elder truths, sad truths, grand truths, fearful 55 truths. So shall he rise again before he dies. And so shall our commission be accomplished for ebbing or for flowing tide, may be read from the very ground. She is the defier of God. She also is the mother of lunacies, and the suggestress of suicides. Deep lie the roots of 5 her power; but narrow is the nation that she rules. For she can approach only those in whom a profound nature has been upheaved by central convulsions; in whom the heart trembles and the brain rocks under conspiracies of tempest from without and tempest from within. Madonna moves with uncertain steps, fast or slow, but still with tragic grace. Our Lady of Sighs creeps timidly and stealthily. But this youngest sister moves with incalculable motions, bounding, and with a tiger's leaps. She carries no key; for, though coming rarely amongst men, she storms all doors at which she is permitted to enter at all. And her name is Mater Tenebrarum,—Our Lady of Darkness. These were the Semnai Theai,<sup>15</sup> or Sublime Goddesses, these were the Eumenides, or Gracious Ladies (so called by antiquity in shuddering propitiation), of my Oxford dreams. Madonna spoke. She spoke by her mysterious

But the third sister, who is also the youngest!—Hush! whisper whilst we talk of her! Her kingdom is not large, or else no flesh should live; but within that kingdom all power is hers. Her head, turreted like that of Cybele,<sup>14</sup> raises 45 her almost beyond the reach of sight. She droops not; and her eyes rising so high might be hidden by distance. But, being what they are, they cannot be hidden; through the treble veil of crape that she wears, the fierce light of 50 a blazing misery, that rests not for matins or for vespers, for noon of day or noon of night,

<sup>10</sup> A low caste Hindoo, employed in India for menial labor; a social outcast.

<sup>11</sup> In allusion to the terrible persecutions of the Jews.

<sup>12</sup> Norfolk Island off the east coast of Australia, formerly the site of a penal colony.

<sup>13</sup> Cf. Genesis, ix., 27.

<sup>14</sup> The wife of Chronos and mother of the gods; in early Greek mythology, represented as sitting between lions with a mural crown on her head.

<sup>15</sup> Another name for the Furies, called semnai, or sublime, in “shuddering propitiation” by the Athenians, who worshipped them.

<sup>16</sup> Perfected, made complete.

which from God we had,—to plague his heart until we had unfolded the capacities of his spirit."

THE ENGLISH MAIL-COACH

1849

(Abridged)

SECTION THE FIRST

THE GLORY OF MOTION

Some twenty or more years before I matriculated at Oxford, Mr. Palmer,<sup>1</sup> at that time M.P. for Bath, had accomplished two things, very hard to do on our little planet, the Earth, however cheap they may be held by eccentric people in comets—he had invented mail-coaches, and he had married the daughter of a duke. He was, therefore, just twice as great a man as Galileo, who did certainly invent (or, which is the same thing, discover) the satellites of Jupiter, those very next things extant to mail-coaches in the two capital pretensions of speed and keeping time, but, on the other hand, who did not marry the daughter of a duke.

These mail-coaches, as organised by Mr. Palmer, are entitled to a circumstantial notice from myself, having had so large a share in developing the anarchies of my subsequent dreams; an agency which they accomplished, 1st, through velocity, at that time unprecedented—for they first revealed the glory of motion; 2ndly, through grand effects for the eye between lamp-light and the darkness upon solitary roads; 3rdly, through animal beauty and power so often displayed in the class of horses selected for this mail service; 4thly, through the conscious presence of a central intellect, that, in the midst of vast distances—of storms, of darkness, of danger—overruled all obstacles into one steady co-operation to a national result. For my own feeling, this post-office service spoke as by some mighty orchestra, where a thousand instruments, all disregarding each other, and so far in danger of discord, yet all obedient as slaves to the supreme bâton of some great leader, terminate in a perfection of harmony like that of heart, brain, and lungs, in a healthy animal organisation. But, finally, that particular element in this whole combination which most impressed myself, and through which it is that to this hour Mr. Palmer's mail-coach system tyrannises over my dreams by terror and terrific beauty, lay in the awful political mission which at that time it fulfilled. The mail-coach it was that distributed over the face of the land, like the opening of apocalyptic vials, the heart-shaking news of Trafalgar, of Salamanca, of Vittoria, of Waterloo.<sup>2</sup> These were the harvests that, in the grandeur of their reaping, redeemed the tears and blood in which they had been sown. Neither was the meanest peasant so much below the grandeur and the sorrow of the times as to confound battles such as these, which were gradually moulding the destinies of Christendom, with the vulgar conflicts of ordinary warfare, so often no more than gladiatorial trials of national prowess. The victories of England in this stupendous contest rose of themselves as natural Te Deums to heaven; and it was felt by the thoughtful that such victories, at such a crisis of general prostration, were not more beneficial to ourselves than finally to France, our enemy, and to the nations of all western or central Europe, through whose pusillanimity it was that the French domination had prospered. . . .

<sup>1</sup> John Palmer (1742-1818), a public-spirited citizen of Bath, observing "that the state-post was the slowest mode of conveyance in the country" and that it took letters three days to pass between Bristol and London, while he could cover the distance in one day, laid before Pitt a plan for conveying the mail in government coaches, which were to maintain a uniform speed of 8 to 10 miles an hour. After much discussion, in which Palmer was supported by Pitt, but opposed by the postal authorities, a service between Bristol and London was inaugurated, and Palmer himself despatched the first mail-coach from Bristol, Aug. 2, 1784. By the autumn of 1785 mail-coaches were running to most of the important English cities and towns, and in the following year the service was extended to Edinburgh. Palmer was rewarded by Pitt with an appointment as comptroller-general of the Post Office.

No dignity is perfect which does not at some point ally itself with the mysterious. The connection of the mail with the state and the executive government—a connection obvious, but yet not strictly defined—gave to the whole mail establishment an official grandeur which did us service on the roads, and invested us with seasonable terrors. Not the less impressive were those terrors, because their legal limits were imperfectly ascertained. Look at those turnpike gates; with what deferential hurry, with what an obedient start, they fly open at our approach! Look at that long line of carts and carters ahead, audaciously usurping the very crest of the road. Ah! traitors, they do not hear us as yet; but as soon as the dreadful blast of our horn reaches them with proclamation of our approach, see with what frenzy of trepidation they fly to their horses' heads, and deprecate our wrath by the precipitation of their crane-neck quarterings.<sup>3</sup> Treason they feel to be their crime; each individual carter feels himself under the ban of confiscation and attainder;<sup>4</sup> his blood is attained through six generations; and nothing is wanting but the headsman and his axe, the block and the saw-dust, to close up the vista of his horrors. What! shall it be within benefit of clergy<sup>5</sup> to delay the king's message on the high road?—to interrupt the great respirations, ebb and flood, systole and diastole,<sup>6</sup> of the national intercourse?—to endanger the safety of tidings, running day and night between all nations and languages? Or can it be fancied amongst the weakest of men, that the bodies of the criminals will be given up to their widows for Christian burial? Now the doubts which were raised as to our powers did more to wrap them in terror, by wrapping them in uncertainty, than could have been effected by the sharpest definitions of the law from the Quarter Sessions.<sup>7</sup> We, on our parts (we, the collective mail, I mean), did our utmost to exalt the idea of our privileges by the insolence with which we wielded them. Whether this insolence rested upon law that gave it a sanction, or upon conscious power that haughtily dispensed with that sanction, equally it spoke from a potential station, and the agent, in each particular insolence of the moment, was viewed reverentially, as one having authority.

<sup>2</sup> All battles in the Napoleonic wars.

<sup>3</sup> Crossing the road from side to side so as to avoid ruts, etc.

Sometimes after breakfast his majesty's mail would become frisky; and in its difficult wheelings amongst the intricacies of early markets, it would upset an apple-cart, a cart loaded with eggs, &c. Huge was the affliction and dismay, awful was the smash. I, as far as possible, endeavoured in such a case to represent the conscience and moral sensibilities of the mail; and, when wildernesses of eggs were lying poached under our horses' hoofs, then would I stretch forth my hands in sorrow, saying (in words too celebrated at that time, from the false echoes of Marengo),<sup>8</sup> "Ah! wherefore have we not time to weep over you?" which was evidently impossible, since, in fact, we had not time to laugh over them. Tied to post-office allowance, in some cases of fifty minutes for eleven miles, could the royal mail pretend to undertake the offices of sympathy and condolence? Could it be expected to provide tears for the accidents of the road? If even it seemed to trample on humanity, it did so, I felt, in discharge of its own more peremptory duties.

Upholding the morality of the mail, à fortiori<sup>9</sup> I upheld its rights; as a matter of duty I stretched to the uttermost its privilege of imperial precedency, and astonished weak minds by the feudal powers which I hinted to be lurking constructively in the charters of this proud establishment. Once I remember being on the box of the Holyhead mail, between Shrewsbury and Oswestry, when a tawdry thing from Birmingham, some "Tallyho" or "Highflyer," all flaunting with green and gold, came up alongside of us. What a contrast to our royal simplicity of form and colour in this plebeian wretch! The single ornament on our dark ground of chocolate colour was the mighty shield of the imperial arms, but emblazoned in proportions as modest as a signet-ring bears to a seal of office. Even this was displayed only on a single panel, whispering, rather than proclaiming, our relations to the mighty state; whilst the beast from Birmingham, our green-and-gold friend from false, fleeting, perjured Brummagem,<sup>10</sup> had as much writing and painting on its sprawling flanks as would have puzzled a decipherer from the tombs of Luxor.<sup>11</sup> For some time this Birmingham machine ran along by our side—a piece of familiarity that already of itself seemed to me sufficiently jacobinical. But all at once a movement of the horses announced a desperate intention of leaving us behind. "Do you see that?" I said to the coachman.—"I see," was his short answer. He was wide awake, yet he waited longer than seemed prudent; for the horses of our audacious opponent had a disagreeable air of freshness and power. But his motive was loyal; his wish was, that the Birmingham conceit should be full-blown before he froze it. When that seemed right, he unloosed, or, to speak by a stronger word, he sprang, his known resources: he slipped our royal horses like cheetahs, or hunting-leopards, after the affrighted game. How they could retain such a reserve of fiery power after the work they had accomplished, seemed hard <sup>4</sup> Attainder, deprived the attainted of all the civil rights of a free citizen. He was "dead in the eyes of the law," and could neither inherit nor transmit property.

<sup>5</sup> A technical phrase in Old English Law, signifying the exemption of the clergy from criminal proceedings in the King's courts.

<sup>6</sup> In physiology the alternate contraction and expansion of the heart by which the circulation of the blood is effected.

<sup>7</sup> A Court originally so called from the fact that its sessions were held quarterly. The administration of the highway laws was one of its functions.

<sup>8</sup> At the battle of Marengo, June 14, 1800, the French General Desaix, by his timely arrival, saved Napoleon from defeat, but was himself killed. The story that Napoleon on hearing of his death said: "Ah, wherefore have we not time to weep over you!" is called by De Quincey a "theatrical fiction."

<sup>9</sup> A technical term in logic equivalent to "all the more so."

<sup>10</sup> An old form of Birmingham, still in colloquial use, and often applied to cheap jewelry, for the manufacture of which Birmingham is noted. Cf. Rich. III. i. iv. 55:—"Clarence is come,—false, fleeting, perjured Clarence, That stabbed me in the field by Tewksbury."

<sup>11</sup> In upper Egypt, on the site of the ancient capital of Egypt, is famous for its temples and tombs.

to explain. But on our side, besides the physical superiority, was a tower of moral strength, namely, the king's name, "which they upon the adverse faction wanted." Passing them without an effort, as it seemed, we threw them into the rear with so lengthening an interval between us, as proved in itself the bitterest mockery of their presumption; whilst our guard blew back a shattering blast of triumph, that was really too painfully full of derision.

I mention this little incident for its connection with what followed. A Welsh rustic sitting behind me, asked if I had not felt my heart burn within me during the progress of the race? I said, with philosophic calmness, No; because we were not racing with a mail, so that no glory could be gained. In fact, it was sufficiently mortifying that such a Birmingham thing should dare to challenge us. The Welshman replied, that he didn't see that; for that a cat might look at a king, and a Brummagem coach might lawfully race the Holyhead mail. "Race us, if you like," I replied, "though even that has an air of sedition, but not beat us. This would have been treason; for its own sake I am glad that the 'Tallyho' was disappointed." So dissatisfied did the Welshman seem with this opinion, that at last I was obliged to tell him a very fine story from one of our elder dramatists—viz., that once, in some far oriental kingdom, when the sultan of all the land, with his princes, ladies, and chief omrahs,<sup>12</sup> were flying their falcons, a hawk suddenly flew at a majestic eagle; and in defiance of the eagle's natural advantages, in contempt also of the eagle's traditional royalty, and before the whole assembled field of astonished spectators from Agra and Lahore, killed the eagle on the spot. Amazement seized the sultan at the unequal contest, and burning admiration for its unparalleled result. He commanded that the hawk should be brought before him; he caressed the bird with enthusiasm; and he ordered that, for the commemoration of his matchless courage, a diadem of gold and rubies should be solemnly placed on the hawk's head; but then that, immediately after this solemn coronation, the bird should be led off to execution, as the most valiant indeed of traitors, but not the less a traitor, as having dared to rise rebelliously against his liege lord and anointed sovereign, the eagle. "Now," said I to the Welshman, "to you and me, as men of refined sensibilities, how painful it would have been that this poor Brummagem brute, the 'Tallyho,' in the impossible case of a victory over us, should have been crowned with Birmingham tinsel, with paste diamonds, and Roman pearls,<sup>13</sup> and then led off to instant execution." The Welshman doubted if that could be warranted by law. And when I hinted at the 6th of Edward Longshanks, chap. 18,<sup>14</sup> for regulating the precedence of coaches as being probably the statute relied on for the capital punishment of such offences, he replied drily, that "if the attempt to pass a mail really were treasonable, it was a pity that the 'Tallyho' appeared to have so imperfect an acquaintance with law."

The modern modes of travelling cannot compare with the old mail-coach system in grandeur and power. They boast of more velocity, not, however, as a consciousness, but as a fact of our lifeless knowledge, resting upon alien evidence; as, for instance, because somebody says that we have gone fifty miles in the hour, though we are far from feeling it as a personal experience, or upon the evidence of a result, as that actually we find ourselves in York four hours after leaving London. Apart from such an assertion, or such a result, I myself am little aware of the pace. But, seated on the old mail-coach, we needed no evidence out of ourselves to indicate the velocity. On this system the word was, Non magna loquimur, as upon railways, but vivimus.<sup>15</sup> Yes, "magna vivimus;" we do not make verbal ostentation of our grandeurs, we realise our grandeurs in act, and in the very experience of life. The vital experience of the glad animal sensibilities made doubts impossible on the question of our speed; we heard our speed, we saw it, we felt it as a thrilling; and this speed was not the product of blind insensate agencies, that had no sympathy to give, but was incarnated in the fiery eyeballs of the noblest amongst brutes, in his dilated nostril, spasmodic muscles, and thunder-beating hoofs. The sensibility of the horse, uttering itself in the maniac light of his eye, might be the last vibration of such a movement; the glory of Salamanca might be the first. But the intervening links that connected them, that spread the earthquake of battle into the eyeball of the horse, were the heart of man and its electric thrillings—kindling in the rapture of the fiery strife, and then propagating its own tumults by contagious shouts and gestures to the heart of his servant the horse.

But now, on the new system of travelling, iron tubes and boilers have disconnected man's heart from the ministers of his locomotion.

<sup>13</sup> i. e. imitation pearls.

<sup>14</sup> A humorous invention of De Quincey's. The 6th of Edward Longshanks would be a statute passed in 1278. Coaches were not known in England until much later.

<sup>15</sup> "We do not talk great things, we live them."

<sup>12</sup> A plural of the Arabic amir, a commander, a nobleman.

Nile nor Trafalgar<sup>16</sup> has power to raise an extra bubble in a steam-kettle. The galvanic cycle is broken up for ever; man's imperial nature no longer sends itself forward through the electric sensibility of the horse; the interagencies are gone in the mode of communication between the horse and his master, out of which grew so many aspects of sublimity under accidents of mists that hid, or sudden blazes that revealed, of mobs that agitated, or midnight solitudes that awed. Tidings, fitted to convulse all nations, must henceforwards travel by culinary process; and the trumpet that once announced from afar the laurelled mail, heart-shaking, when heard screaming on the wind, and proclaiming itself through the darkness to every village or solitary house on its route, has now given way for ever to the pot-walloppings<sup>17</sup> of the boiler.

Thus have perished multiform openings for public expressions of interest, scenical yet natural, in great national tidings; for revelations of faces and groups that could not offer themselves amongst the fluctuating mobs of a railway station. The gatherings of gazers about a laurelled mail had one centre, and acknowledged one sole interest. But the crowds attending at a railway station have as little unity as running water, and own as many centres as there are separate carriages in the train. . . .

GOING DOWN WITH VICTORY

But the grandest chapter of our experience, within the whole mail coach service, was on those occasions when we went down from London with the news of victory. A period of about ten years stretched from Trafalgar to Waterloo; the second and third years of which period (1806 and 1807) were comparatively sterile; but the other nine (from 1805 to 1815 inclusively) furnished a long succession of victories; the least of which, in such a contest of Titans, had an inappreciable value of position—partly for its absolute interference with the plans of our enemy, but still more from its keeping alive through central Europe the sense of a deep-seated vulnerability in France. Even to tease the coasts of our enemy, to mortify them by continual blockades, to insult them by capturing if it were but a baubling schooner under the eyes of their arrogant armies, repeated from time to time a sullen proclamation of power lodged in one quarter to which the hopes of Christendom turned in secret. How much more loudly must this proclamation have spoken in the audacity of having bearded the élite of their troops, and having beaten them in pitched battles! Five years of life it was worth paying down for the privilege of an outside place on a mail-coach, when carrying down the first tidings of any such event. And it is to be noted that, from our insular situation, and the multitude of our frigates disposable for the rapid transmission of intelligence, rarely did an unauthorised rumour steal away a prelibation<sup>19</sup> from the first aroma of the regular despatches. The government news was generally the earliest news.

From eight p. m. to fifteen or twenty minutes later, imagine the mails assembled on parade in Lombard Street,<sup>20</sup> where, at that time, and not in St. Martin's-le-Grand, was seated the General Post-office. In what exact strength we mustered I do not remember; but, from the length of each separate attelage, we filled the street, though a long one, and though we were drawn up in double file. On any night the spectacle was beautiful. The absolute perfection of all the appointments about the carriages and the harness, their strength, their brilliant cleanliness, their beautiful simplicity—but, more than all, the royal magnificence of the horses—were what might first have fixed the attention. Every carriage, on every morning in the year, was taken down to an official inspector for examination—wheels, axles, linchpins, pole, glasses, lamps, were all critically probed and tested. Every part of every carriage had been cleaned, every horse had been groomed, with as much rigour as if they belonged to a private gentleman; and that part of the spectacle offered itself always. But the night before us is a night of victory; and, behold to the ordinary display, what a heart-shaking addition!—horses, men, carriages, all are dressed in laurels and flowers, oak-leaves and ribbons. The guards, as being officially his Majesty's servants, and of the coachmen such as are within the privilege of the post-office, wear the royal liveries of course; and as it is summer (for all the land victories were naturally won in summer), they wear, on this fine evening, these liveries exposed to view, without any covering of upper coats. Such a costume, and the elaborate arrangement of the laurels in their hats, dilate their hearts, by giving to them openly a personal connection with the great news, in which already they have the general interest of patriotism. That great national sentiment surmounts and quells

<sup>16</sup> Nelson destroyed the French fleet in the battle of the Nile, fought in Aboukir Bay, Aug. 1, 1798. For Trafalgar see Southey's account, p. 543, supra.

<sup>17</sup> The sound made as a pot in boiling. The design of the whole passage is to belittle the steam engine by comparing it to a tea-kettle.

<sup>18</sup> Petty, trifling.

<sup>19</sup> Foretaste.

<sup>20</sup> Near the Bank of England. The General Post Office in St. Martin le Grand, was built in 1825-29.

all sense of ordinary distinctions. Those passengers who happen to be gentlemen are now hardly to be distinguished as such except by dress; for the usual reserve of their manner in speaking to the attendants has on this night melted away. One heart, one pride, one glory, connects every man by the transcendent bond of his national blood. The spectators, who are numerous beyond precedent, express their sympathy with these fervent feelings by continual hurrahs. Every moment are shouted aloud by the post-office servants, and summoned to draw up, the great ancestral names of cities known to history through a thousand years—Lincoln, Winchester, Portsmouth, Gloucester, Oxford, Bristol, Manchester, York, Newcastle, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Perth, Stirling, Aberdeen—expressing the grandeur of the empire by the antiquity of its towns, and the grandeur of the mail establishment by the diffusive radiation of its separate missions. Every moment you hear the thunder of lids locked down upon the mail-bags. That sound to each individual mail is the signal for drawing off, which process is the finest part of the entire spectacle. Then come the horses into play. Horses! can these be horses that bound off with the action and gestures of leopards? What stir!—what sea-like ferment!—what a thundering of wheels!—what a trampling of hoofs!—what a sounding of trumpets!—what farweller cheers!—what redoubling peals of brotherly congratulation, connecting the name of the particular mail—"Liverpool for ever!"—with the name of the particular victory—"Badajoz<sup>21</sup> for ever!" or "Salamanca for ever!" The half-slumbering consciousness that, all night long, and all the next day—perhaps for even a longer period—many of these mails, like fire racing along a train of gunpowder, will be kindling at every instant new successions of burning joy, has an obscure effect of multiplying the victory itself, by multiplying to the imagination into infinity the stages of its progressive diffusion. A fiery arrow seems to be let loose, which from that moment is destined to travel, without intermission, westwards for three hundred miles—northwards for six hundred; and the sympathy of our Lombard Street friends at parting is exalted a hundred-fold by a sort of visionary sympathy with the yet slumbering sympathies which in so vast a succession we are going to awake.

Liberated from the embarrassments of the City, and issuing into the broad uncrowded avenues of the northern suburbs, we soon begin to enter upon our natural pace of ten miles an hour. In the broad light of the summer evening, the sun, perhaps, only just at the point of setting, we are seen from every storey of every house. Heads of every age crowd to the windows—young and old understand the language of our victorious symbols—and rolling volleys of sympathising cheers run along us, behind us, and before us. The beggar, rearing himself against the wall, forgets his lameness—real or assumed—thinks not of his whining trade, but stands erect with bold exulting smiles, as we pass him. The victory has healed him, and says, Be thou whole! Women and children, from garrets alike and cellars, through infinite London, look down or look up with loving eyes upon our gay ribbons and our martial laurels: sometimes kiss their hands; sometimes hang out, as signals of affection, pocket-handkerchiefs, aprons, dusters, anything that, by catching the summer breezes, will express an aerial jubilation. On the London side of Barnet,<sup>22</sup> to which we draw near within a few minutes after nine, observe that private carriage which is approaching us. The weather being so warm, the glasses are all down; and one may read, as on the stage of a theatre, everything that goes on within. It contains three ladies—one likely to be "mamma," and two of seventeen or eighteen, who are probably her daughters. What lovely animation, what beautiful, unpremeditated pantomime, explaining to us every syllable that passes in these ingenuous girls! By the sudden start and raising of the hands, on first discovering our laurelled equipage!—by the sudden movement and appeal to the elder lady from both of them—and by the heightened colour on their animated countenances, we can almost hear them saying, "See, see! Look at their laurels! Oh, mamma! there has been a great battle in Spain; and it has been a great victory." In a moment we are on the point of passing them. We passengers—I on the box, and the two on the roof behind me—raise our hats to the ladies; the coachman makes his professional salute with the whip; the guard even, though punctilious on the matter of his dignity as an officer under the crown, touches his hat. The ladies move to us, in return, with a winning graciousness of gesture; all smile, on each side in a way that nobody could misunderstand, and that nothing short of a grand national sympathy could so instantaneously prompt. Will these ladies say that we are nothing to them? Oh, no; they will not say that. They cannot deny—they do not deny—that for this night they are our sisters; gentle or simple, scholar or illiterate servant, for twelve hours to come,

<sup>21</sup> In Spain, taken by Wellington in 1812.

<sup>22</sup> Eleven miles north of London.

we on the outside have the honour to be their brothers. Those poor women, again, who stop to gaze upon us with delight at the entrance of Barnet, and seem, by their air of weariness, to be returning from labour—do you mean to say that they are washerwomen and charwomen? Oh, my poor friend, you are quite mistaken. I assure you they stand in a far higher rank; for this one night they feel themselves by birth-right to be daughters of England, and answer to no humbler title.

Every joy, however, even rapturous joy—such is the sad law of earth—may carry with it grief, or fear of grief, to some. Three miles beyond Barnet, we see approaching us another private carriage, nearly repeating the circumstances of the former case. Here, also, the glasses are all down—here, also, is an elderly lady seated; but the two daughters are missing; for the single young person sitting by the lady's side, seems to be an attendant—so I judge from her dress, and her air of respectful reserve. The lady is in mourning; and her countenance expresses sorrow. At first she does not look up; so that I believe she is not aware of our approach, until she hears the measured beating of our horses' hoofs. Then she raises her eyes to settle them painfully on our triumphal equipage. Our decorations explain the case to her at once; but she beholds them with apparent anxiety, or even with terror. Some time before this, I, finding it difficult to hit a flying mark, when embarrassed by the coachman's person and reins intervening, had given to the guard a "Courier" evening paper, containing the gazette,<sup>23</sup> for the next carriage that might pass.

Accordingly he tossed it in, so folded that the huge capitals expressing some such legend as—GLORIOUS VICTORY, might catch the eye at once. To see the paper, however, at all, interpreted as it was by our ensigns of triumph, explained everything; and, if the guard were right in thinking the lady to have received it with a gesture of horror, it could not be doubtful that she had suffered some deep personal affliction in connection with this Spanish war.

Here, now, was the case of one who, having formerly suffered, might, erroneously perhaps, be distressing herself with anticipations of another similar suffering. That same night, and hardly three hours later, occurred the reverse case. A poor woman, who too probably would find herself, in a day or two, to have suffered the heaviest of afflictions by the battle, blindly allowed herself to express an exultation so unmeasured in the news and its details, as gave to her the appearance which amongst Celtic Highlanders is called fey.<sup>24</sup> This was at some little town where we changed horses an hour or two after midnight. Some fair or wake had kept the people up out of their beds, and had occasioned a partial illumination of the stalls and booths, presenting an unusual but very impressive effect. We saw many lights moving about as we drew near; and perhaps the most striking scene on the whole route was our reception at this place. The flashing of torches and the beautiful radiance of blue lights (technically, Bengal lights) upon the heads of our horses; the fine effect of such a showery and ghostly illumination falling upon our flowers and glittering laurels; whilst all around ourselves, that formed a centre of light, the darkness gathered on the rear and flanks in massy blackness; these optical splendours, together with the prodigious enthusiasm of the people, composed a picture at once scenical and affecting, theatrical and holy. As we stayed for three or four minutes, I alighted; and immediately from a dismantled stall in the street, where no doubt she had been presiding through the earlier part of the night, advanced eagerly a middle-aged woman. The sight of my newspaper it was that had drawn her attention upon myself. The victory which we were carrying down to the provinces on this occasion, was the imperfect one of Talavera<sup>25</sup>—imperfect for its results, such was the virtual treachery of the Spanish general, Cuesta, but not imperfect in its ever-memorable heroism. I told her the main outline of the battle. The agitation of her enthusiasm had been so conspicuous when listening, and when first applying for information, that I could not but ask her if she had not some relative in the Peninsular army. Oh yes; her only son was there. In what regiment? He was a trooper in the 23rd Dragoons. My heart sank within me as she made that answer. This sublime regiment, which an Englishman should never mention without raising his hat to their memory, had made the most memorable and effective charge recorded in military annals. They leaped their horses—over a trench where they could, into it, and with the result of death or mutilation when they could not. What proportion cleared the trench is nowhere stated. Those who did, closed up and went down upon the enemy with such <sup>24</sup> Not a Gaelic word, but an Old English word retained in the Scotch. In Old English poetry it was applied to warriors who were "doomed" to fall in battle. In its Scotch use it implies a state of high spirits and wild exaltation in the person unconscious of his doom.

<sup>25</sup> Talavera de la Reina, at the confluence of the Alberche and the Tagus, where the English under Sir Arthur Wellesley (afterward Duke of Wellington) and the Spanish under Cuesta were attacked by the French under Marshal Victor and Joseph Bonaparte, July 27, 1809.

<sup>23</sup> i. e. the official report of the battle.

divinity of fervour (I use the word divinity by design: the inspiration of God must have prompted this movement to those whom even then He was calling to His presence), that two results followed. As regarded the enemy, this 23rd Dragoons, not, I believe, originally three hundred and fifty strong, paralysed a French column, six thousand strong, then ascended the hill, and fixed the gaze of the whole French army. As regarded themselves, the 23rd were supposed at first to have been barely not annihilated; but eventually, I believe, about one in four survived. And this, then, was the regiment—a regiment already for some hours glorified and hallowed to the ear of all London, as lying stretched, by a large majority, upon one bloody aceldama<sup>26</sup>—in which the young trooper served whose mother was now talking in a spirit of such joyous enthusiasm. Did I tell her the truth? Had I the heart to break up her dreams? No. To-morrow, said I to myself—to-morrow, or the next day, will publish the worst. For one night more, wherefore should she not sleep in peace? After to-morrow, the chances are too many that peace will forsake her pillow. This brief respite, then, let her owe to my gift and my forbearance. But, if I told her not of the bloody price that had been paid, not, therefore, was I silent on the contributions from her son's regiment to that day's service and glory. I showed her not the funeral banners under which the noble regiment was sleeping. I lifted not the overshadowing laurels from the bloody trench in which horse and rider lay mangled together. But I told her how these dear children of England, officers and privates, had leaped their horses over all obstacles as gaily as hunters to the morning's chase. I told her how they rode their horses into the mists of death (saying to myself, but not saying to her), and laid down their young lives for thee, O mother England! as willingly—poured out their noble blood as cheerfully—as ever, after a long day's sport, when infants, they had rested their wearied heads upon their mother's knees, or had sunk to sleep in her arms. Strange it is, yet true, that she seemed to have no fears for her son's safety, even after this knowledge that the 23rd Dragoons had been memorably engaged; but so much was she enraptured by the knowledge that his regiment, and therefore that he, had rendered conspicuous service in the dreadful conflict—a service which had actually made them, within the last twelve hours, the foremost topic of conversation in London—so absolutely was fear swallowed up in joy—that, in the mere simplicity of her fervent nature, the poor woman threw her arms round my neck, as she thought of her son, and gave to me the kiss which secretly was meant for him.

“The field of blood.” See Acts i. 19.

VIII. THE VICTORIAN AGE

c. 1837-1900

Alfred Tennyson

1809-1892

SONG—THE OWL

(From Poems Chiefly Lyrical, 1830)

I

When cats run home and light is come,
And dew is cold upon the ground,
And the far-off stream is dumb,
And the whirring sail goes round,
And the whirring sail goes round;
Alone and warming his five wits,
The white owl in the belfry sits.

5

II

When merry milkmaids click the latch,
And rarely smells the new-mown hay,
And the cock hath sung beneath the thatch 10
Twice or thrice his roundelay,
Twice or thrice his roundelay;
Alone and warming his five wits,
The white owl in the belfry sits.

THE PALACE OF ART<sup>1</sup>

(From Poems, 1832)

To . . .

WITH THE FOLLOWING POEM

I send you here a sort of allegory,
(For you will understand it) of a soul,
A sinful soul possess'd of many gifts,
A spacious garden full of flowering weeds,
A glorious Devil, large in heart and brain,
That did love Beauty only (Beauty seen 5
In all varieties of mould and mind),
And Knowledge for its beauty; or if Good,
Good only for its beauty, seeing not
That Beauty, Good, and Knowledge, are three 10 sisters
That doat upon each other, friends to man,
Living together under the same roof,
And never can be sunder'd without tears.
And he that shuts Love out, in turn shall be Shut out from Love, and on her threshold lie 15
Howling in outer darkness. Not for this
Was common clay ta'en from the common earth,
Moulded by God, and temper'd with the tears
Of angels to the perfect shape of man.

5

10

15

THE PALACE OF ART

I built my soul a lordly pleasure-house,
Wherein at ease for aye to dwell,
I said "O soul, make merry and carouse,
Dear soul, for all is well."

A huge crag-platform, smooth as burnish'd
brass,
I chose. The ranged ramparts bright
From level meadow-bases of deep grass
Suddenly scaled the light.

5

Thereon I built it firm. Of ledge or shelf
The rock rose clear, or winding stair.
My soul would live alone unto herself 10
In her high palace there.

And "while the world runs round and round,"
I said
"Reign thou apart a quiet king,
Still as, while Saturn whirls, his steadfast
shade 15
Sleeps on his luminous ring."

To which my soul made answer readily:
"Trust me, in bliss I shall abide
In this great mansion, that is built for me,
So royal-rich and wide." 20

Four courts I made, East, West and South and North,
In each a squared lawn, wherefrom
The golden gorge of dragons spouted forth
A flood of fountain-foam.

And round the cool green courts there ran a row
Of cloisters, branch'd like mighty woods,
Echoing all night to that sonorous flow
Of spouted fountain-floods;

25

And round the roofs a gilded gallery
That lent broad verge<sup>1</sup> to distant lands, 30
Far as the wild swan wings, to where the sky
Dipt down to sea and sands.

From those four jets four currents in one swell
Across the mountain stream'd below
In misty folds, that floating as they fell 35
Lit up a torrent-bow.

And high on every peak a statue seem'd
To hang on tiptoe, tossing up
A cloud of incense of all odor steam'd
From out a golden cup. 40

<sup>1</sup> Horizon; a peculiarly Tennysonian use.

<sup>1</sup> Tennyson wrote the following notes on this poem in 1890: "Trench said to me, when we were at Trinity together, 'Tennyson, we cannot live in art.'" "The Palace of Art" is the embodiment of my own belief that the Godlike life is with man and for man, that 'Beauty, Good, and Knowledge are three sisters,' etc." (Memoir, by H. Tennyson, I. 118.) Tennyson made a number of changes in this poem, especially for the edition of 1842. The version here given is the final and more familiar one.

So that she thought, "And who shall gaze upon
My palace with unblinded eyes,
While this great bow will waver in the sun,
And that sweet incense rise?"

For that sweet incense rose and never fail'd 45
And, while day sank or mounted higher,
The light aerial gallery, golden-rail'd,
Burnt like a fringe of fire.

Likewise the deep-set windows, stain'd and traced,
Would seem slow-flaming crimson fires 50
From shadow'd grots of arches interlaced,
And tipt with frost-like spires.

Full of long-sounding corridors it was,
That over-vaulted grateful gloom,
Thro' which the livelong day my soul did
pass, 55
Well-pleased, from room to room.

Full of great rooms and small the palace stood,
All various, each a perfect whole
From living Nature, fit for every mood
And change of my still soul. 60

For some were hung with arras green and blue,
Showing a gaudy summer-morn,
Where with puff'd cheek the belted hunter blew
His wreathed bugle-horn.

One seem'd all dark and red—a tract of sand, 65
And some one pacing there alone,
Who paced for ever in a glimmering land,
Lit with a low large moon.

One show'd an iron coast and angry waves.
You seem'd to hear them climb and fall 70
And roar rock-thwarted under bellowing caves,
Beneath the windy wall.

And one, a full-fed river winding slow
By herds upon an endless plain,
The ragged rims of thunder brooding low, 75
With shadow-streaks of rain.

And one, the reapers at their sultry toil.
In front they bound the sheaves. Behind
Were realms of upland, prodigal in oil,
And hoary to the wind. 80

And one a foreground black with stones and slags;
Beyond, a line of heights; and higher
All barr'd with long white cloud the scornful crags;
And highest, snow and fire. 84

And one, an English home—gray twilight pour'd
On dewy pastures, dewy trees,
Softer than sleep—all things in order stored,
A haunt of ancient Peace.

"To appreciate this touch, one must have seen a grove of olive-trees, when the peculiar whitish-gray underside of the leaves is turned up by the wind." Rolfe.

Nor these alone, but every landscape fair,
As fit for every mood of mind, 90
Or gay, or grave, or sweet, or stern, was there,
Not less than truth design'd.

Or the maid-mother by a crucifix,
In tracts of pasture sunny-warm,
Beneath branch-work of costly sardonyx 95
Sat smiling, babe in arm.

Or in a clear-walled city on the sea,
Near gilded organ-pipes, her hair
Wound with white roses, slept Saint Cecily;<sup>3</sup>
An angel look'd at her. 100

Or thronging all one porch of Paradise
A group of Hours bow'd to see
The dying Islamite, with hands and eyes
That said, we wait for thee.

Or mythic Uther's deeply-wounded son<sup>4</sup> 105
In some fair space of sloping greens
Lay, dozing in the vale of Avalon,
And watch'd by weeping queens.

Or hollowing one hand against his ear,
To list a footfall, ere he saw 110
The wood-nymph, stay'd the Ausonian king<sup>5</sup>
to hear
Of wisdom and of law.

Or over hills with peaky tops engrail'd,
And many a tract of palm and rice,
The throne of Indian Cama<sup>6</sup> slowly sail'd 115
A summer fann'd with spice.

Or sweet Europa's mantle blew unclasp'd,
From off her shoulder backward borne;
From one hand droop'd a crocus; one hand
grasp'd
The mild bull's golden horn. 120

Or else flush'd Ganymede, his rosy thigh
Half buried in the eagle's down,
Sole as a flying star shot thro' the sky
Above the pillar'd town.

Nor these alone; but every legend fair 125
Which the supreme Caucasian mind
Carved out of Nature for itself was there,
Not less than life design'd.

Then in the towers I placed great bells that swung,
Moved of themselves, with silver sound; 130
And with choice paintings of wise men I hung
The royal dais round.

<sup>3</sup> St. Cecilia, the patron saint of music, whose harmonies brought an angel down from heaven. Cf. Dryden's Song for St. Cecilia's Day, p. 277, and his Alexander's Feast, p. 278, supra.

<sup>4</sup> King Arthur, according to legend the son of Uther Pendragon.

<sup>5</sup> Numa Pompilius, according to legend the second King of Rome. The "wood-nymph," Egeria, met him in a grove near the city, and there taught him how to frame laws and religious ceremonies for his people.

<sup>6</sup> Or Kama, the Hindoo god of love.

For there was Milton like a seraph strong,
Beside him Shakespeare bland and mild;
And there the world-worn Dante grasped his
song, 135
And somewhat grimly smiled.

And there the Ionian father of the rest;<sup>7</sup>
A million wrinkles carved his skin;
A hundred winters snow'd upon his breast,
From cheek and throat and chin. 140

Above, the fair hall-ceiling stately-set
Many an arch high up did lift,
And angels rising and descending met
With interchange of gift.

Below was all mosaic choicely plann'd 145
With cycles of the human tale
Of this wide world, the times of every land
So wrought they will not fail.

The people here, a beast of burden slow, Toil'd onward, prick'd with goads and stings; 150

Here play'd, a tiger, rolling to and fro
The heads and crowns of kings;
Here rose, an athlete, strong to break or bind
All force in bonds that might endure,
And here once more like some sick man declined, 155
And trusted any cure.

But over these she trod; and those great bells
Began to chime. She took her throne;
She sat betwixt the shining oriels,
To sing her songs alone. 160

And thro' the topmost oriels' colored flame
Two godlike faces gazed below;
Plato the wise, and large-brow'd Verulam,<sup>8</sup>
The first of those who know.

And all those names that in their motion were Full-welling fountain-heads of change, 166
Betwixt the slender shafts were blazon'd fair
In diverse raiment strange;

Thro' which the lights, rose, amber, emerald,
blue,
Flush'd in her temples and her eyes, 170
And from her lips, as morn from Memnon,<sup>9</sup>
drew
Rivers of melodies.

No nightingale delighteth to prolong
Her low preamble all alone,
More than my soul to hear her echo'd song 175
Throb thro' the ribbed stone;

Singing and murmuring in her feastful mirth,
Joying to feel herself alive,
Lord over Nature, Lord of the visible earth,
Lord of the senses five; 180

<sup>7</sup> Homer.

<sup>8</sup> Francis Bacon, who was made Baron Verulam.

<sup>9</sup> A hero in the Trojan war. His name was erroneously given by the Greeks to a colossal statue at Thebes, which was said to give forth a musical sound when the rays of the rising sun touched the stone.

Communing with herself: "All these are mine,
And let the world have peace or wars,
'Tis one to me." She—when young might divine
Crown'd dying day with stars,

Making sweet close of his delicious toils— 185
Lit light in wreaths and anadems,<sup>10</sup>
And pure quintessences of precious oils
In hollow'd moons of gems,

To mimic heaven; and clapt her hands and cried,
"I marvel if my still delight 190
In this great house so royal-rich and wide
Be flattered to the height.

"O all things fair to sate my various eyes!
O shapes and hues that please me well!
O silent faces of the Great and Wise, 195
My Gods, with whom I dwell!

"O Godlike isolation which art mine,
I can but count thee perfect gain,
What time I watch the darkening droves of swine
That range on yonder plain. 200

"In filthy sloughs they roll a prurient king,
They graze and wallow, breed and sleep;
And oft some brainless devil enters in,
And drives them to the deep." 211

Then of the moral instinct would she prate 205
And of the rising from the dead,
As hers by right of full-accomplished Fate;
And at the last she said:

"I take possession of man's mind and deed.
I care not what the sects may brawl. 210
I sit as God holding no form of creed,
But contemplating all."

Full oft the riddle of the painful earth
Flash'd thro' her as she sat alone,
Yet not the less held she her solemn mirth, 215
And intellectual throne.

And so she throve and prosper'd; so three years
She prosper'd; on the fourth she fell,
Like Herod, when the shout was in his ears,<sup>12</sup>
Struck thro' with pangs of hell. 220

Lest she should fail and perish utterly,
God, before whom ever lie bare
The abysmal deeps of personality,
Plagued her with sore despair.

When she would think, where'er she turn'd her
sight 225
The airy hand confusion wrought,
Wrote, "Mene, mene,"<sup>13</sup> and divided quite
The kingdom of her thought.

<sup>10</sup> Garlands, chaplets.

<sup>11</sup> St. Matt., viii. 32.

<sup>12</sup> V. Acts, xii. 21-23.

<sup>13</sup> Dan., v. 23-29, but read the whole chapter and note the points of resemblance between the "sinful soul" and both Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar.

Deep dread and loathing of her solitude
 Fell on her, from which mood was born 230
 Scorn of herself; again, from out that mood
 Laughter at her self-scorn.

"What! is not this my place of strength,"
 she said,
 "My spacious mansion built for me,
 Whereof the strong foundation-stones were laid 235
 Since my first memory?"

But in dark corners of her palace stood
 Uncertain shapes; and unawares
 On white-eyed phantasms weeping tears of blood,
 And horrible nightmares, 240

And hollow shades enclosing hearts of flame,
 And with dim fretted foreheads all,
 On corpses three-months-old at noon she came,
 That stood against the wall.

A spot of dull stagnation, without light 245
 Or power of movement, seem'd my soul,
 Mid onward-sloping motions infinite
 Making for one sure goal;

A still salt pool, lock'd in with bars of sand,
 Left on the shore, that hears all night 250
 The plunging seas draw backward from the land
 Their moon-led waters white;

A star that with the choral starry dance
 Join'd not, but stood, and standing saw
 The hollow orb of moving Circumstance 255
 Roll'd round by one fix'd law.

Back on herself her serpent pride had curl'd.
 "No voice," she shrieked in that lone hall,
 "No voice breaks thro' the stillness of this world;
 One deep, deep silence all!" 260

She, mouldering with the dull earth's mouldering
 sod,
 Inwrapt tenfold in slothful shame,
 Lay there exiled from eternal God.
 Lost to her place and name;

And death and life she hated equally, 265
 And nothing saw, for her despair,
 But dreadful time, dreadful eternity,
 No comfort anywhere;

Remaining utterly confused with fears,
 And ever worse with growing time, 270
 And ever unrelieved by dismal tears,
 And all alone in crime.

Shut up as in a crumbling tomb, girt round
 With blackness as a solid wall,
 Far off she seem'd to hear the dully sound 275
 Of human footsteps fall;

As in strange lands a traveller walking slow,
 In doubt and great perplexity,
 A little before moonrise hears the low
 Moan of an unknown sea; 280

And knows not if it be thunder, or a sound
 Of rocks thrown down, or one deep cry
 Of great wild beasts; then thinketh, "I have found
 A new land, but I die."

She howl'd aloud, "I am on fire within. 285
 There comes no murmur of reply.
 What is it that will take away my sin,
 And save me lest I die?"

So when four years were wholly finished,
 She threw her royal robes away. 290
 "Make me a cottage in the vale," she said,
 "Where I may mourn and pray."

"Yet pull not down my palace towers, that are
 So lightly, beautifully built;
 Perchance I may return with others there 295
 When I have purged my guilt."

THE LOTOS-EATERS

(From Poems, 1832)

"Courage!" he said,<sup>1</sup> and pointed toward the
 land,
 "This mounting wave will roll us shoreward
 soon."

In the afternoon they came unto a land
 In which it seemed always afternoon.
 All round the coast the languid air did swoon, 5
 Breathing like one that hath a weary dream.
 Full-faced above the valley stood the moon;
 And, like a downward smoke, the slender stream
 Along the cliff to fall and pause and fall did seem.

A land of streams! some, like a downward
 smoke, 10
 Slow-dropping veils of thinnest lawn, did go;
 And some thro' wavering lights and shadows
 broke,
 Rolling a slumbrous sheet of foam below.
 They saw the gleaming river seaward flow
 From the inner land; far off, three mountaintops, 15
 Three silent pinnacles of aged snow,
 Stood sunset-flushed; and, dew'd with showery
 drops,
 Up-clomb the shadowy pine above the woven copse.

The charmed sunset linger'd low adown
 In the red West; thro' mountain clefts the dale 20
 Was seen far inland, and the yellow down
 Border'd with palm, and many a winding vale

<sup>1</sup> i. e. Ulysses. The poem is founded on a passage in Homer's Odyssey, Bk. IX.

And meadow, set with slender galingale;<sup>2</sup>
 A land where all things always seem'd the same!
 And round about the keel with faces pale, 25
 Dark faces pale against that rosy flame,
 The mild-eyed melancholy Lotos-eaters came.

Branches they bore of that enchanted stem,
 Laden with flower and fruit, whereof they gave
 To each, but whoso did receive of them 30
 And taste, to him the gushing of the wave
 Far, far away did seem to mourn and rave
 On alien shores; and if his fellow spake,
 His voice was thin, as voices from the grave;
 And deep-asleep he seem'd, yet all awake, 35
 And music in his ears his beating heart did make.

They sat them down upon the yellow sand,
 Between the sun and moon upon the shore;
 And sweet it was to dream of Fatherland,
 Of child, and wife, and slave; but evermore 40
 Most Weary seem'd the sea, weary the oar,
 Weary the wandering fields of barren foam.
 Then some one said, "We will return no more;"
 And all at once they sang, "Our island home
 Is far beyond the wave; we will no longer 45 roam."

CHORIC SONG

I

There is sweet music here that softer falls
 Than petals from blown roses on the grass,
 Or night-dews on still waters between walls
 Of shadowy granite, in a gleaming pass;
 Music that gentlier on the spirit lies, 5
 Than tired eyelids upon tired eyes;
 Music that brings sweet sleep down from the blissful skies.

Here are cool mosses deep,
 And thro' the moss the ivies creep,
 And in the stream the long-leaved flowers 10
 weep,
 And from the craggy ledge the poppy hangs in sleep.

II

hy are we weigh'd upon with heaviness,
 And utterly consumed with sharp distress,
 While all things else have rest from weariness?
 All things have rest: why should we toil alone, 15
 We only toil, who are the first of things,
 And make perpetual moan,
 Still from one sorrow to another thrown;
 Nor ever fold our wings,
 And cease from wanderings, 20
 Nor steep our brows in slumber's holy balm;
 Nor harken what the inner spirit sings,
 "There is no joy but calm!"—
 Why should we only toil, the roof and crown of things?

III

Lo! in the middle of the wood, 25
 The folded leaf is woo'd from out the bud
 With winds upon the branch, and there
 Grows green and broad, and takes no care,

<sup>2</sup> A sedge with an aromatic root, sometimes called the English Galangal.

Sun-steep'd at noon, and in the moon
 Nightly dew-fed; and turning yellow 30
 Falls, and floats adown the air.
 Lo! sweeten'd with the summer light,
 The full-juiced apple, waxing over-mellow,
 Drops in a silent autumn night.
 All its allotted length of days 35
 The flower ripens in its place,
 Ripens and fades, and falls, and hath no toil,
 Fast-rooted in the fruitful soil.

IV

Hateful is the dark-blue sky,
 Vaulted o'er the dark-blue sea. 40
 Death is the end of life; ah, why Should life all labor be?
 Let us alone. Time driveth onward fast,
 And in a little while our lips are dumb.
 Let us alone. What is it that will last? 45
 All things are taken from us, and become Portions and parcels of the dreadful past.
 Let us alone. What pleasure can we have To war with evil? Is there any peace
 In ever climbing up the climbing wave? 50
 All things have rest, and ripen toward the grave
 In silence—ripen, fall and cease:
 Give us long rest or death, dark death, or dreamful ease.

V

How sweet it were, hearing the downward
 stream,
 With half-shut eyes ever to seem 55
 Falling asleep in a half-dream!
 To dream and dream, like yonder amber light,
 Which will not leave the myrrh-bush on the
 height;
 To hear each other's whispered speech;
 Eating the Lotos day by day, 60
 To watch the crisping ripples on the beach,
 And tender curving lines of creamy spray;
 To lend our hearts and spirits wholly
 To the influence of mild-minded melancholy;
 To muse and brood and live again in memory, 65
 With those old faces of our infancy
 Heap'd over with a mound of grass,
 Two handfuls of white dust, shut in an urn of brass!

VI

Dear is the memory of our wedded lives,
 And dear the last embraces of our wives 70
 And their warm tears; but all hath suffer'd
 change;
 For surely now our household hearths are cold,
 Our sons inherit us, our looks are strange,
 And we should come like ghosts to trouble joy.
 Or else the island princes over-bold 75
 Have eat our substance, and the minstrel sings
 Before them of the ten years' war in Troy,
 And our great deeds, as half-forgotten things.
 Is there confusion in the little isle?
 Let what is broken so remain. 80
 The Gods are hard to reconcile;
 'Tis hard to settle order once again.
 There is confusion worse than death,
 Trouble on trouble, pain on pain,

Long labor unto aged breath, 85
Sore task to hearts worn out by many wars
And eyes grown dim with gazing on the pilot-stars.

VII

But, propt on beds of amaranth<sup>1</sup> and moly,<sup>2</sup>
How sweet—while warm airs lull us, blowing lowly—
With half-dropt eyelid still, 90
Beneath a heaven dark and holy,
To watch the long bright river drawing slowly
His waters from the purple hill—
To hear the dewy echoes calling 94
From cave to cave thro' the thick-twined vine—
To watch the emerald-color'd water falling
Thro' many a woven acanthus-wreath divine!
Only to hear and see the far-off sparkling brine,
Only to hear were sweet, stretch'd out beneath the pine.

VIII

The Lotos blooms below the barren peak, 100
The Lotos blows by every winding creek;
All day the wind breathes low with mellow
tone;
Thro' every hollow cave and alley lone
Round and round the spicy downs the yellow
Lotos-dust is blown.
We have had enough of action, and of motion
we, 105
Roll'd to starboard, roll'd to larboard, when the surge was seething free,
Where the wallowing monster spouted his foam-fountains in the sea.
Let us swear an oath, and keep it with an equal
mind,
In the hollow Lotos-land to live and lie re-
clined
On the hills like Gods together, careless of mankind. 110
For they lie beside their nectar, and the bolts are hurl'd
Far below them in the valleys, and the clouds are lightly curl'd
Round their golden houses, girdled with the gleaming world;
Where they smile in secret, looking over wasted lands,
Blight and famine, plague and earthquake,
roaring deeps and fiery sands, 115
Clanging fights, and flaming towns, and sinking ships, and praying hands.
But they smile, they find a music centred in a doleful song
Steaming up, a lamentation and an ancient tale of wrong,
Like a tale of little meaning tho' the words are strong;
Chanted from an ill-used race of men that cleave the soil, 120
Sow the seed, and reap the harvest, with enduring toil,
Storing yearly little dues of wheat, and wine
and oil;

<sup>1</sup> A imaginary flower which was supposed never to fade.

<sup>2</sup> The plant given to Ulysses by Mercury; it was to protect him against the witchcraft of Circe.

Till they perish and they suffer—some, 'tis whisper'd—down in hell Suffer endless anguish, others in Elysian valleys dwell,
Resting weary limbs at last on beds of asphodel.
Surely, surely, slumber is more sweet than toil, the shore 126
Than labor in the deep mid-ocean, wind and wave and oar;
O, rest ye, brother mariners, we will not wander
more.

YOU ASK ME WHY THOUGH ILL AT EASE<sup>1</sup>

(Written in 1833, first printed 1842)

You ask me, why, tho' ill at ease,
Within this region I subsist,
Whose spirits falter in the mist,
And languish for the purple seas.

It is the land that freemen till, 5
That sober-suited Freedom chose,
The land, where girt with friends or foes
A man may speak the thing he will;

A land of settled government,
A land of just and old renown, 10
Where Freedom slowly broadens down
From precedent to precedent;

Where faction seldom gathers head,
But, by degrees to fullness wrought,
The strength of some diffusive thought 15
Hath time and space to work and spread.

Should banded unions persecute
Opinion, and induce a time
When single thought is civil crime,
And individual freedom mute, 20

Tho' power should make from land to land
The name of Britain trebly great—
Tho' every channel of the State
Should fill and choke with golden sand—

Yet waft me from the harbor-mouth, 25
Wild wind: I seek a warmer sky,
And I will see before I die
The palms and temples of the South.

OF OLD SAT FREEDOM ON THE HEIGHTS

(Written in 1833, first published 1842)

Of old sat Freedom on the heights,
The thunders breaking at her feet;
Above her shook the starry lights;
She heard the torrents meet.

<sup>1</sup> Aubrey De Vere wrote of this and of the following poem (Of Old Sat Freedom on the Heights): "If I remember right they were suggested by some popular demonstrations connected with the Reform Bill of 1832, and its rejection by the House of Lords." See the whole passage in Memoir, by H. Tennyson, I. 506.

There in her place she did rejoice,
Self-gather'd<sup>1</sup> in her prophet-mind,
But fragments of her mighty voice
Came rolling on the wind.

5 When the centuries behind me like a fruitful land reposed;
When I clung to all the present for the promise that it closed.

Then stopt she down thro' town and field
To mingle with the human race,
And part by part to men reveal'd
The fullness of her face—

10 When I dipt into the future far as human eye could see;
Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be.— 15

Grave mother of majestic works,
From her isle-altar gazing down,
Who, Godlike, grasps the triple forks,
And, king-like, wears the crown.

15 In the Spring a fuller crimson comes upon the robin's breast;
In the Spring the wanton lapwing gets himself
another crest;

Her open eyes desire the truth.
The wisdom of a thousand years
Is in them. May perpetual youth
Keep dry their light from tears;

In the Spring a livelier iris changes on the bur-nish'd dove;
In the Spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love. 20

That her fair form may stand and shine,
Make bright our days and light our dreams,
Turning to scorn with lips divine
The falsehood of extremes!

Then her cheek was pale and thinner than should be for one so young,
And her eyes on all my motions with a mute observance hung.

LOCKSLEY HALL<sup>1</sup>

(From Poems, 1842)

Comrades, leave me here a little, while as yet
'tis early morn:
Leave me here, and when you want me, sound
upon the bugle-horn.

And I said, "My Cousin Amy, speak, and speak the truth to me,
Trust me, cousin, all the current of my being sets to thee."

'Tis the place, and all around it, as of old, the curlews call,
Dreary gleams about the moorland flying over
Locksley Hall;

On her pallid cheek and forehead came a colour and a light, 25
As I have seen the rosy red flushing in the northern night.

Locksley Hall, that in the distance overlooks the sandy tracts, 5
And the hollow-ocean ridges roaring into cataracts.

And she turn'd—her bosom shaken with a sudden storm of sighs—
All the spirit deeply dawning in the dark of hazel eyes—

Many a night from yonder ivied casement, ere I went to rest,
Did I look on great Orion sloping slowly to the West.

Saying, "I have hid my feelings, fearing they should do me wrong;"
Saying, "Dost thou love me, cousin?" weeping,
"I have loved thee long." 30

Many a night I saw the Pleiads, rising thro' the mellow shade,
Glitter like a swarm of fire-flies tangled in a silver braid. 10

Love took up the glass of Time, and turn'd it in his glowing hands,
Every moment, lightly shaken, ran itself in golden sands.

Here about the beach I wander'd, nourishing a youth sublime
With the fairy tales of science, and the long result of Time;

Love took up the harp of Life, and smote on all the chords with might;
Smote the chord of Self, that, trembling, pass'd in music out of sight.

<sup>1</sup> Wrapped up in herself, self-centered.

<sup>1</sup> Tennyson says of this poem: "The whole poem represents young life, its good side, its deficiencies, and its yearnings." He tells us further that "'Locksley Hall' is an imaginary place (tho' the coast is Lincolnshire), and the hero is imaginary." (Memoir, by H. Tennyson, I. 195). But the poem represents not merely young life in general, but a young man at a time when youth in England was stirred by great changes, by the marvels of invention and of scientific discovery.

Many a morning on the moorland did we hear the copses ring, 35
And her whisper throng'd my pulses with the fullness of the Spring.

Many an evening by the waters did we watch
the stately ships,
And our spirits rush'd together at the touching of the lips.

O my cousin, shallow-hearted! O my Amy,
mine no more!
O the dreary, dreary moorland! O the barren, barren shore! 40

Falsar than all fancy fathoms, falsar than all songs have sung,
Puppet to a father's threat, and servile to a shrewish tongue!

Is it well to wish thee happy?—having known me—to decline
On a range of lower feelings and a narrower heart than mine!

Yet it shall be: thou shalt lower to his level day
by day, 45
What is fine within thee growing coarse to sympathise with clay.

As the husband is, the wife is: thou art mated with a clown,
And the grossness of his nature will have weight to drag thee down.

He will hold thee, when his passion shall have spent its novel force,
Something better than his dog, a little dearer than his horse. 50

What is this? his eyes are heavy: think not they are glazed with wine.
Go to him: it is thy duty: kiss him: take his hand in thine.

It may be my lord is weary, that his brain is over-wrought:
Soothe him with thy finer fancies, touch him
with thy lighter thought.

He will answer to the purpose, easy things to understand— 55
Better thou wert dead before me, tho' I slew thee with my hand!

Better thou and I were lying, hidden from the heart's disgrace,
Roll'd in one another's arms, and silent in a last embrace. 60

Cursed be the social wants that sin against the strength of youth!<sup>2</sup> Cursed be the social lies that warp us from the living truth! 60

Cursed be the sickly forms that err from honest
Nature's rule!
Cursed be the gold that gilds the straitened forehead of the fool!

Well—'tis well that I should bluster!—Hadst thou less unworthy proved—
Would to God—for I had loved thee more than ever wife was loved.

Am I mad, that I should cherish that which bears but bitter fruit? 65
I will pluck it from my bosom, tho' my heart be at the root.

Never, tho' my mortal summers to such length of years should come
As the many-winter'd crow that leads the clanging rookery home.

Where is comfort? in division of the records of the mind?
Can I part her from herself, and love her, as I knew her, kind? 70

I remember one that perish'd: sweetly did she speak and move:
Such a one do I remember, whom to look at was to love.

Can I think of her as dead, and love her for the love she bore?
No—she never loved me truly: love is love forevermore.

Comfort? comfort scorn'd of devils! this is truth the poet sings,<sup>3</sup> 75
That a sorrow's crown of sorrow is remembering happier things.

Drug thy memories, lest thou learn it, lest thy heart be put to proof,
In the dead unhappy night, and when the rain
is on the roof.

Like a dog, he hunts in dreams, and thou art
staring at the wall,
Where the dying night-lamp flickers, and the shadows rise and fall. 80

Then a hand shall pass before thee, pointing to his drunken sleep,
To thy widow'd marriage-pillows, to the tears that thou wilt weep.

Thou shalt hear the "Never, never," whisper'd by the phantom years,
And a song from out the distance in the ringing of thine ears;

And an eye shall vex thee, looking ancient kindness on thy pain. 85
Turn thee, turn thee on thy pillow: get thee to thy rest again.

Nay, but Nature brings thee solace; for a tender voice will cry.
'Tis a purer life than thine; a lip to drain thy trouble dry.

<sup>2</sup> Dante. "There is no greater pain than to recall a happy time in misery." Inf., v. 121.

<sup>3</sup> Tennyson is generally regarded as ultra-conservative, but on some points he differed widely from the accepted, upper-class opinion of the time. Like Ruskin, he was impressed with the danger of the modern money-getting spirit, and he protested in many poems against allowing a worship of wealth and social position to stand in the way of an otherwise desirable marriage. (Cf. Aylmer's Field, Maud, and The Miller's Daughter.)

Baby lips will laugh me down: my latest rival brings thee rest.
Baby fingers, waxen touches, press me from the mother's breast. 90

O, the child too clothes the father with a dear-ness not his due.
Half is thine and half is his: it will be worthy of the two.

O, I see thee, old and formal, fitted to thy petty
part,
With a little hoard of maxims preaching down a daughter's heart.

"They were dangerous guides the feelings—she herself was not exempt— 95
Truly, she herself had suffer'd"—Perish in thy self-contempt!

Overlive it—lower yet—be happy! wherefore should I care?
I myself must mix with action, lest I wither by despair.

What is that which I should turn to, lighting upon days like these?
Every door is barr'd with gold, and opens but to golden keys. 100

Every gate is throng'd with suitors, all the markets overflow.
I have but an angry fancy: what is that which I should do?

I had been content to perish, falling on the foe-
man's ground,
When the ranks are roll'd in vapour, and the winds are laid with sound.

But the jingling of the guinea helps the hurt that Honour feels, 105
And the nations do but murmur, snarling at each other's heels.

Can I but relive in sadness? I will turn that earlier page.
Hide me from my deep emotion, O thou wondrous Mother-Age!

Make me feel the wild pulsation that I felt before the strife,
When I heard my days before me, and the tumult of my life; 110

Yearning for the large excitement that the coming years would yield,
Eager-hearted as a boy when first he leaves his father's field.

And at night along the dusky highway near and nearer drawn,
Sees in heaven the light of London flaring like a dreary dawn;

And his spirit leaps within him to be gone
before him then, 115
Underneath the light he looks at, in among the throngs of men;

Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new:<sup>4</sup>
That which they have done but earnest of the things that they shall do:

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye
could see,
Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonder
that would be; 120

Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down
with costly bales;

Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rain'd a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue;

Far along the world-wide whisper of the south-
wind rushing warm, 125
With the standards of the peoples plunging thro' the thunder-storm;

Till the war-drum throb'd no longer, and the battle-flags were furl'd,
In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the
world.

There the common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber, lapt in universal law. 130

So I triumph'd ere my passion sweeping thro'
me left me dry,
Left me with the palsied heart, and left me with the jaundiced eye;

Eye, to which all order festers, all things here are out of joint:
Science moves, but slowly, slowly, creeping on
from point to point:

Slowly comes a hungry people, as a lion creeping nigher, 135
Glares at one that nods and winks behind a slowly-dying fire.

Yet I doubt not thro' the ages one increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men are widen'd with the process of the suns.

What is that to him that reaps not harvest of his youthful joys,
Tho' the deep heart of existence beat forever
like a boy's? 140

<sup>4</sup>The system of railroad transportation in England dates from about 1830; the electric telegraph was patented in 1837, and steam-communication between England and the United States began in the following year. The increasing application of steam and electricity worked a great and inevitable change in social conditions.

Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers, and he bears a laden breast,
Full of sad experience, moving toward the stillness of his rest.

Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers, and I linger on the shore,
And the individual withers, and the world is more and more.

Hark, my merry comrades call me, sounding on the bugle-horn, 145
They to whom my foolish passion were a target
for their scorn:

Shall it not be scorn to me to harp on such a moulder'd string?
I am shamed thro' all my nature to have loved so slight a thing.

Weakness to be wroth with weakness! woman's pleasure, woman's pain—
Nature made them blinder motions bounded in a shallower brain: 150

Woman is the lesser man, and all thy passions,
match'd with mine,
Are as moonlight unto sunlight, and as water unto wine—

Here at least, where nature sickens, nothing.
Ah for some retreat
Deep in yonder shining Orient, where my life began to beat;

Where in wild Mahratta-battle<sup>6</sup> fell my father, evil-starr'd;— 155
I was left a trampled orphan, and a selfish uncle's ward.

Or to burst all links of habit—there to wander
far away,
On from island unto island at the gateways of the day.

Larger constellations burning, mellow moons
and happy skies,
Breadths of tropic shade and palms in cluster,
knots of Paradise. 160

Never comes the trader, never floats an European flag,
Slides the bird o'er lustrous woodland, swings
the trailer from the crag;

Droops the heavy-blossom'd bower, hangs the heavy-fruit'd tree—
Summer isles of Eden lying in dark-purple spheres of sea.

There methinks would be enjoyment more than in this march of mind, 165
In the steamship, in the railway, in the thoughts that shake mankind.

There the passions cramp'd no longer shall have scope and breathing space;
I will take some savage woman, she shall rear
my dusky race.

Iron-jointed, supple-sinew'd, they shall dive,
and they shall run,
Catch the wild goat by the hair, and hurl their lances in the sun; 170

Whistle back the parrot's call, and leap the rainbows of the brooks,
Not with blinded eyesight poring over miserable books—

Fool, again the dream, the fancy! but I know
my words are wild,
But I count the gray barbarian lower than the Christian child.

I, to herd with narrow foreheads, vacant of our glorious gains, 175
Like a beast with lower pleasures, like a beast with lower pains!

Mated with a squalid savage—what to me were sun or clime?
I the heir of all the ages, in the foremost files of
time—

I that rather held it better men should perish
one by one,
Than that earth should stand at gaze like Joshua's moon in Ajalon!<sup>8</sup> 180

Not in vain the distance beacons. Forward, forward let us range,
Let the great world spin forever down the ringing grooves of change.<sup>7</sup>

Thro' the shadow of the globe we sweep into the younger day:
Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay.

Mother-Age (for mine I knew not) help me as when life begun: 185
Rift the hills, and roll the waters, flash the lightnings, weigh the Sun.

O, I see the crescent promise of my spirit hath not set.
Ancient founts of inspiration well thro' all my fancy yet.

Howsoever these things be, a long farewell to Locksley Hall!
Now for me the woods may wither, now for me
the roof-tree fall. 190

<sup>6</sup> Joshua, x., 12.

<sup>7</sup> Tennyson tells us: "When I went by the first train from Liverpool to Manchester (1830), I thought that the wheels ran in a groove. It was black night and there was such a vast crowd round the train at the station that we could not see the wheels. Then I made this line." H. Tennyson, Memoirs, I. 195.

<sup>8</sup> i. e. in a battle with the Mahrattas, a Hindoo race in India, engaged in frequent conflicts with the British. They were decisively beaten in 1816-18.

Comes a vapour from the margin, blackening
over heath andholt, Cramming all the blast before it, in its breast a thunderbolt.

Let it fall on Locksley Hall, with rain or hail,
or fire or snow;
For the mighty wind arises, roaring seaward,
and I go.

ULYSSES<sup>1</sup>

(From Poems, 1842)

It little profits that an idle king,
By this still hearth, among these barren crags,
Match'd with an aged wife, I mete and dole
Unequal laws unto a savage race,
That hoard, and sleep, and feed, and know not
me. 5

I cannot rest from travel: I will drink
Life to the lees: all times I have enjoy'd Greatly, have suffer'd greatly, both with those
That loved me, and alone; on shore, and when Thro' scudding drifts the rainy Hyades<sup>2</sup> 10
Vext the dim sea: I am become a name;
For always roaming with a hungry heart
Much have I seen and known; cities of men
And manners, climates, councils, governments,
Myself not least, but honour'd of them all; 15
And drunk delight of battle with my peers,
Far on the ringing plains of windy Troy.
I am a part of all that I have met;
Yet all experience is an arch wherethro'
Gleams that untravell'd world, whose margin fades 20

Forever and forever when I move.
How dull it is to pause, to make an end,
To rust unburnish'd, not to shine in use!
As tho' to breathe were life. Life piled on life
Were all too little, and of one to me 25
Little remains: but every hour is saved
From that eternal silence, something more,
A bringer of new things; and vile it were
For some three suns to store and hoard myself,
And this gray spirit yearning in desire 30
To follow knowledge like a sinking star,
Beyond the utmost bound of human thought.
This is my son, mine own Telemachus,
To whom I leave the sceptre and the isle—
Well-loved of me, discerning to fulfil 35
This labour, by slow prudence to make mild
A rugged people, and thro' soft degrees
Subdue them to the useful and the good.
Most blameless is he, centred in the sphere
Of common duties, decent not to fail 40
In offices of tenderness, and pay

Meet adoration to my household gods,
When I am gone. He works his work, I mine.
There lies the port; the vessel puffs her sail:
There gloom the dark broad seas. My mariners, 45
Souls that have toil'd and wrought, and thought with me—

That ever with a frolic welcome took
The thunder and the sunshine, and opposed
Free hearts, free foreheads—you and I are old;
Old age hath yet his honour and his toil; 50
Death closes all: but something ere the end,
Some work of noble note, may yet be done,
Not unbecoming men that strove with Gods.
The lights begin to twinkle from the rocks:
The long day wanes: the slow moon climbs: the
deep 55
Moans round with many voices. Come, my friends,

'Tis not too late to seek a newer world.
Push off, and sitting well in order smite
The sounding furrows; for my purpose holds )
To sail beyond the sunset, and the baths 60
Of all the western stars, until I die.
It may be that the gulfs will wash us down:
It may be we shall touch the Happy Isles,
And see the great Achilles, whom we knew.
Tho' much is taken, much abides; and tho' 65
We are not now that strength which in old days Moved earth and heaven; that which we are,
we are;
(One equal temper of heroic hearts, )
Made weak by time and fate, but strong in will
To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield. 70

SIR GALAHAD

(From Poems, 1842)

My good blade carves the casques of men,
My tough lance thrusteth sure,
My strength is as the strength of ten,
Because my heart is pure. 5
The shattering trumpet shrilleth high, 5
The hard brands shiver on the steel,
The splinter'd spear-shafts crack and fly,
The horse and rider reel:
They reel, they roll in clanging lists,
And when the tide of combat stands, 10
Perfume and flowers fall in showers,
That lightly rain from ladies' hands.

How sweet are looks that ladies bend
On whom their favours fall!
For them I battle till the end, 15
To save from shame and thrall:
But all my heart is drawn above,
My knees are bow'd in crypt and shrine;
I never felt the kiss of love,
Nor maiden's hand in mine. 20
More bounteous aspects on me beam,
Me mightier transports move and thrill;
So keep I fair thro' faith and prayer
A virgin heart in work and will.

<sup>1</sup> This poem is a contrast study to the Lotus Eaters. Hallam Tennyson tells us (Memoirs, I., 196) that it was written soon after Arthur Hallam's death, and that it gave Tennyson's "feeling about the need of going forward and braving the struggle of life, perhaps more simply than anything in In Memoriam." The immediate source of the poem is a passage in Dante's Inf., xxvi., 90.

<sup>2</sup> A group of stars in the constellation of Taurus, their rising at a certain time of the year was associated with the beginning of the rainy season. Cf. Vergil, Aeneid, I., 744.

When down the stormy crescent goes,
 A light before me swims,
 Between dark stems the forest glows,
 I hear a noise of hymns:
 Then by some secret shrine I ride;
 I hear a voice but none are there;
 The stalls are void, the doors are wide,
 The tapers burning fair.
 Fair gleams the snowy altar-cloth,
 The silver vessels sparkle clean,
 The shrill bell rings, the censer swings,
 And solemn chaunts resound between.

Sometimes on lonely mountain-meres
 I find a magic bark;
 I leap on board: no helmsmen steers:
 I float till all is dark.
 A gentle sound, an awful light!
 Three angels bear the holy Grail:
 With folded feet, in stoles of white,
 On sleeping wings they sail.
 Ah, blessed vision! blood of God!
 My spirit beats her mortal bars,
 As down dark tides the glory slides,
 And star-like mingles with the stars.

When on my goodly charger borne
 Thro' dreaming towns I go,
 The cock crows ere the Christmas morn,
 The streets are dumb with snow.
 The tempest crackles on the leads,
 And, ringing, springs from brand and mail;
 But o'er the dark a glory spreads,
 And gilds the driving hail.
 I leave the plain, I climb the height;
 No branchy thicket shelter yields;
 But blessed forms in whistling storms
 Fly o'er waste fens and windy fields.

A maiden knight—to me is given
 Such hope, I know not fear;
 I yearn to breathe the airs of heaven
 That often meet me here.
 I muse on joy that will not cease,
 Pure spaces clothed in living beams,
 Pure lilies of eternal peace,
 Whose odours haunt my dreams;
 And, stricken by an angel's hand,
 This mortal armour that I wear,
 This weight and size, this heart and eyes,
 Are touch'd, are turn'd to finest air.

The clouds are broken in the sky,
 And thro' the mountain-walls
 A rolling organ-harmony
 Swells up, and shakes and falls.
 Then move the trees, the copses nod,
 Wings flutter, voices hover clear:
 "O just and faithful knight of God!
 Ride on! the prize is near."
 So pass I hostel, hall, and grange;
 By bridge and ford, by park and pale,
 All-arm'd I ride, whate'er betide
 Until I find the holy Grail.

25

THE EPIC

(INTRODUCTION TO MORTE D'ARTHUR)

(From Poems, 1842)

At Francis Allen's on the Christmas-eve,—
 The game of forfeits done—the girls all kiss'd
 Beneath the sacred bush and past away—
 The parson Holmes, the poet Everard Hall,
 The host, and I sat round the wassail-bowl, 5
 Then half-way ebb'd: and there we held a talk,
 How all the old honour had from Christmas
 gone,
 Or gone or dwindled down to some old games
 In some odd nooks like this; till I, tired out
 With cutting eights that day upon the pond, 10
 Where, three times slipping from the outer edge,
 I bump'd the ice into three several stars,
 Fell in a doze; and half-awake I heard
 The parson taking wide and wider sweeps,
 Now harping on the church-commissioners, 15
 Now hawking at Geology and schism;
 Until I woke, and found him settled down
 Upon the general decay of faith
 Right thro' the world, "at home was little left,
 And none abroad: there was no anchor, none, 20
 To hold by." Francis, laughing, clapt his hand
 On Everard's shoulder, with "I hold by him."
 "And I," quoth Everard, "by the wassailbowl."

"Why yes," I said, "we knew your gift that way
 At college: but another which you had, 25
 I mean of verse (for so we held it then),
 What came of that?" "You know," said Frank,
 "he burnt

His epic, his King Arthur, some twelve
 books"—
 And then to me demanding why? "Oh, sir,
 He thought that nothing new was said, or else 30
 Something so said 'twas nothing—that a truth
 Looks freshest in the fashion of the day:
 God knows: he has a mint of reasons: ask.
 It pleased me well enough." "Nay, nay," said
 Hall,

"Why take the style of those heroic times? 35
 For nature brings not back the Mastodon,
 Nor we those times; and why should any man
 Remodel models? these twelve books of mine
 Were faint Homeric echoes, nothing-worth" . . .

70

MORTE D'ARTHUR

So all day long the noise of battle roll'd
 Among the mountains by the winter sea;
 Until King Arthur's table, man by man,
 Had fallen in Lyonesse about their Lord,
 King Arthur: then, because his wound was deep, 75
 The bold Sir Bedivere uplifted him,
 Sir Bedivere, the last of all his knights,
 And bore him to a chapel nigh the field,
 A broken chancel with a broken cross,
 That stood on a dark strait of barren land. 10
 On one side lay the Ocean, and on one
 Lay a great water, and the moon was full.
 Then spake King Arthur to Sir Bedivere:
 "The sequel of to-day unsolders all

The goodliest fellowship of famous knights 15
Whereof this world holds record. Such a sleep
They sleep—the men I loved. I think that we Shall never more, at any future time,
Delight our souls with talk of knightly deeds,
Walking about the gardens and the halls 20
Of Camelot, as in the days that were.

I perish by this people which I made,—
Tho' Merlin sware that I should come again
To rule once more—but let what will be, be,
I am so deeply smitten thro' the helm 25
That without help I cannot last till morn.
Thou therefore take my brand Excalibur,<sup>1</sup>
Which was my pride: for thou rememberest how
In those old days, one summer noon, an arm
Rose up from out the bosom of the lake, 30
Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,
Holding the sword—and how I row'd across
And took it, and have worn it, like a king:

And, wheresoever I am sung or told
In after time, this also shall be known: 35
But now delay not: take Excalibur,
And fling him far into the middle mere:
Watch what thou seest, and lightly bring me
word."

To him replied the bold Sir Bedivere:
"It is not meet, Sir King, to leave thee thus, 40
Aidless, alone, and smitten thro' the helm.
A little thing may harm a wounded man.
Yet I thy hest will all perform at full,
Watch what I see, and lightly bring thee word."

So saying, from the ruin'd shrine he stept 45
And in the moon athwart the place of tombs,
Where lay the mighty bones of ancient men,
Old knights, and over them the sea-wind sang Shrill, chill, with flakes of foam. He, stepping down

By zigzag paths, and juts of pointed rock, 50
Came on the shining levels of the lake.

There drew he forth the brand Excalibur,
And o'er him, drawing it, the winter moon,
Brightening the skirts of a long cloud, ran forth
And sparkled keen with frost against the hilt: 55
For all the haft twinkled with diamond sparks,
Myriads of topaz-lights, and jacinth-work
Of sublest jewellery. He gazed so long
That both his eyes were dazzled, as he stood,
This way and that dividing the swift mind, 60
In act to throw: but at the last it seem'd
Better to leave Excalibur conceal'd

There in the many-knotted waterflags,
That whistled stiff and dry about the marge.
So strode he back slow to the wounded King. 65
Then spake King Arthur to Sir Bedivere:
"Hast thou perform'd my mission which I gave?
What is it thou hast seen? or what hast heard?"

And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere:
"I heard the ripple washing in the reeds, 70
And the wild water lapping on the crags."

To whom replied King Arthur, faint and pale:
"Thou hast betray'd thy nature and thy name,
Not rendering true answer, as be seem'd

Thy fealty, nor like a noble knight: 75
For surer sign had follow'd, either hand,
Or voice, or else a motion of the mere.
This is a shameful thing for men to lie.
Yet now, I charge thee, quickly go again
As thou art lief and dear, and do the thing 80
I bade thee, watch, and lightly bring me word."

Then went Sir Bedivere the second time
Across the ridge, and paced beside the mere,
Counting the dewy pebbles, fixed in thought;
But when he saw the wonder of the hilt, 85
How curiously and strangely chased, he smote
His palms together, and he cried aloud,
"And if indeed I cast the brand away,
Surely a precious thing, one worthy note
Should thus be lost forever from the earth, 90
Which might have pleased the eyes of many men."

What good should follow this, if this were done?
What harm, undone? deep harm to disobey,
Seeing obedience is the bond of rule.
Were it well to obey then, if a king demand 95
An act unprofitable, against himself?
The King is sick, and knows not what he does.
What record, or what relic of my lord
Should be to aftertime, but empty breath
And rumours of a doubt? but were this kept, 100
Stored in some treasure-house of mighty kings,
Some one might show it at a joust of arms,
Saying, 'King Arthur's sword, Excalibur,
Wrought by the lonely maiden of the Lake. 104
Nine years she wrought it, sitting in the deeps
Upon the hidden bases of the hills.'
So might some old man speak in the aftertime
To all the people, winning reverence.
But now much honour and much fame were lost."

So spake he, clouded with his own conceit, 110
And hid Excalibur the second time,
And so strode back slow to the wounded king.

Then spoke King Arthur, breathing heavily:
"What is it thou hast seen? or what hast heard?"
And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere: 115
"I heard the water lapping on the crag
And the long ripple washing in the reeds."

To whom replied King Arthur, much in wrath:

"Ah, miserable and unkind, untrue,
Unknightly, traitor-hearted! Woe is me! 120
Authority forgets a dying king,
Laid widow'd of the power in his eye
That bow'd the will. I see thee what thou art,
For thou, the latest-left of all my knights,
In whom should meet the offices of all, 125
Thou would'st betray me for the precious hilt;
Either from lust of gold, or like a girl
Valuing the giddy pleasure of the eyes.
Yet, for a man may fail in duty twice,
And the third time may prosper, get thee
hence: 130

But, if thou spare to fling Excalibur,
I will arise and slay thee with my hands."

Then quickly rose Sir Bedivere, and ran,
And, leaping down the ridges lightly, plunged Among the bulrush-beds, and clutch'd the sword, 135

<sup>1</sup> King Arthur's magic sword, given to him by the Lady of the Lake. For the passage in Malory which was Tennyson's original for the greater part of this Idyll, s. supra, p. 108, l. 25, etc.

And strongly wheel'd and threw it. The great brand

Made lightnings in the splendour of the moon,
And flashing round and round, and whirl'd in an arch,

Shot like a streamer of the northern morn,
Seen where the moving isles of winter shock 140
By night, with noises of the northern sea.

So flash'd and fell the brand Excalibur:
But ere he dipt the surface, rose an arm
Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,
And caught him by the hilt, and brandish'd him 145

Three times, and drew him under in the mere.
And lightly went the other to the King.

Then spoke King Arthur, drawing thicker breath:

"Now see I by thine eyes that this is done.
Speak out: what is it thou hast heard, or seen?" 150

And answer made the bold Sir Bedivere:
"Sir king, I closed mine eyelids, lest the gems Should blind my purpose, for I never saw,
Nor shall see, here or elsewhere, till I die,
Not tho' I live three lives of mortal men, 155
So great a miracle as yonder hilt.
Then with both hands I flung him, wheeling him;

But when I look'd again, behold an arm,
Clothed in white samite, mystic, wonderful,
That caught him by the hilt, and brandish'd him 160

Three times, and drew him under in the mere."
And answer made King Arthur, breathing hard:

"My end draws nigh; 'tis time that I were gone.
Make broad thy shoulders to receive my weight,
And bear me to the margin; yet I fear 165
My wound hath taken cold, and I shall die."

So saying, from the pavement he half rose,
Slowly, with pain, reclining on his arm,
And looking wistfully with wide blue eyes
As in a picture. Him Sir Bedivere 170

Remorsefully regarded thro' his tears,
And would have spoken, but he found not words,
Then took with care, and kneeling on one knee,
O'er both his shoulders drew the languid hands,
And rising bore him thro' the place of tombs.

But, as he walk'd, King Arthur panted hard,
Like one that feels a nightmare on his bed 177
When all the house is mute. So sigh'd the king,

Muttering and murmuring at his ear, "Quick, quick:

I fear it is too late, and I shall die." 180
But the other swiftly strode from ridge to ridge,
Clothed with his breath, and looking, as he walk'd,

Larger than human on the frozen hills.

He heard the deep behind him, and a cry
Before. His own thought drove him, like a goad. 185

Dry clasp'd his harness in the icy caves
And barren chasms, and all to left and right
The bare black cliff clang'd round him, as he based

His feet on juts of slippery crag that rang
Sharp-smitten with the dint of armed heels— 190
And on a sudden, lo! the level lake,
And the long glories of the winter-moon.

Then saw they how there hove a dusky barge,
Dark as a funeral scarf from stem to stern,
Beneath them; and descending they were ware 195

That all the decks were dense with stately forms
Black-stoled, black-hooded, like a dream—by these

Three Queens with crowns of gold—and from them rose

A cry that shiver'd to the tingling stars,
And, as it were one voice an agony 200

Of lamentation, like a wind, that shrills
All night in a waste land, where no one comes,
Or hath come, since the making of the world.

Then murmur'd Arthur, "Place me in the barge,"

And to the barge they came. There those three Queens 205

Put forth their hands, and took the king, and wept.

But she, that rose the tallest of them all
And fairest, laid his head upon her lap,
And loosed the shatter'd casque, and chafed his hands,

And call'd him by his name, complaining loud,
And dropping bitter tears against his brow 211
Striped with dark blood: for all his face was white

And colourless, and like the wither'd moon
Smote by the fresh beam of the springing east;
And all his greaves and cuisses dash'd with drops 215

Of onset; and the light and lustrous curls—
That made his forehead like a rising sun
High from the dais-throne—were parch'd with dust;

Or, clotted into points and hanging loose,
Mix'd with the knightly growth that fringed his lips. 220

So like a shatter'd column lay the king;
Not like that Arthur who, with lance in rest,
From spur to plume a star of tournament,
Shot thro' the lists at Camelot, and charged
Before the eyes of ladies and of kings. 225

Then loudly cried the bold Sir Bedivere,
"Ah! my Lord Arthur, whither shall I go?
Where shall I hide my forehead and my eyes?
For now I see the true old times are dead, 229
When every morning brought a noble chance,
And every chance brought out a noble knight.
Such times have been not since the light that led

The holy Elders with the gift of myrrh.
But now the whole ROUND TABLE is dissolved
Which was an image of the mighty world; 235
And I, the last, go forth companionless,
And the days darken round me, and the years,
Among new men, strange faces, other minds."

And slowly answered Arthur from the barge:
"The old order changeth, yielding place to new, 240

And God fulfils Himself in many ways,

Lest one good custom should corrupt the world.
Comfort thyself: what comfort is in me?
I have lived my life, and that which I have done

May He within Himself make pure! but thou,
If thou shouldst never see my face again, 246
Pray for my soul. More things are wrought by prayer

Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice

Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats 250
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them
friend?

For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God. 255
But now farewell. I am going a long way
With these thou seest—if indeed I go—
(For all my mind is clouded with a doubt)
To the island valley of Avilion;<sup>2</sup>

Where falls not hail, or rain, or any snow, 260
Nor ever wind blows loudly; but it lies Deep-meadow'd, happy, fair with orchard-lawns

And bowery hollows crown'd with summer sea,
Where I will heal me of my grievous wound."

So said he, and the barge with oar and sail 265
Moved from the brink, like some full-breasted swan

That, fluting a wild carol ere her death,
Ruffles her pure cold plume, and takes the flood
With swarthy webs. Long stood Sir Bedivere
Revolving many memories, till the hull 270
Look'd one black dot against the verge of dawn,
And on the mere the wailing died away.

Here ended Hall, and our last light, that long Had wink'd and threaten'd darkness, flared and fell: 274

At which the Parson, sent to sleep with sound,
And waked with silence, grunted "Good!" but
we

Sat rapt: it was the tone with which he read—
Perhaps some modern touches here and there
Redeem'd it from the charge of nothingness—
Or else we loved the man, and prized his work;
I know not: but we sitting, as I said, 281
The cock crew loud; as at that time of year
The lusty bird takes every hour for dawn:
Then Francis, muttering, like a man ill-used,
"There now—that's nothing!" drew a little back, 285

And drove his heel into the smoulder'd log,
That sent a blast of sparkles up the flue:
And so to bed; where yet in sleep I seem'd
To sail with Arthur under looming shores,
Point after point; till on to dawn, when dreams,
Begin to feel the truth and stir of day, 291
To me, methought, who waited with a crowd,
There came a bark that, blowing forward, bore

<sup>2</sup> In Celtic legend the Island of Avilion, or Avalon, was thought to be an earthly paradise for great heroes, in the western seas. Glastonbury was at one time called Avalon, and in Henry II's reign a tomb, which was supposed to be Arthur's, was discovered there.

King Arthur, like a modern gentleman
Of stateliest port; and all the people cried, 295
"Arthur is come again; he cannot die."
Then those that stood upon the hills behind
Repeated—"Come again, and thrice as fair;"
And, further inland, voices echoed—"Come
With all good things, and war shall be no
more." 300

At this a hundred bells began to peal,
That with the sound I woke, and heard indeed
The clear church-bells ring in the Christmasmorn.

BREAK, BREAK, BREAK<sup>1</sup>

(From Poems, 1842)

Break, break, break,
On thy cold gray stones, O Sea!
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me.

O well for the fisherman's boy, 5
That he shouts with his sister at play!
O well for the sailor lad,
That he sings in his boat on the bay!

And the stately ships go on
To their haven under the hill; 10
But O for the touch of a vanish'd hand
And the sound of a voice that is still!

Break, break, break,
At the foot of thy crags, O Sea!
But the tender grace of a day that is dead 15
Will never come back to me.

A FAREWELL

(From Poems, 1842)

Flow down, cold rivulet, to the sea,
Thy tribute wave deliver;
No more by thee my steps shall be,
For ever and for ever.

Flow, softly flow, by lawn and lea, 5
A rivulet, then a river;
Nowhere by thee my steps shall be,
For ever and for ever.

But here will sigh thine alder-tree,
And here thine aspen shiver; 10
And here by thee will hum the bee,
For ever and for ever.

A thousand suns will stream on thee,
A thousand moons will quiver;
But not by thee my steps shall be, 15
For ever and for ever.

<sup>1</sup> Tennyson says that this poem was "made in a Lincolnshire lane at 5 o'clock in the morning between blossoming hedges."

TEARS, IDLE TEARS

(Song from The Princess, ed. 1850)

"Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,

Tears from the depth of some divine despair
Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy Autumn-fields,
And thinking of the days that are no more. 5

"Fresh as the first beam glittering on a sail,
That brings our friends up from the under-
world,
Sad as the last which reddens over one
That sinks with all we love below the verge;
So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more. 10

"Ah, sad and strange as in dark summer
dawns
The earliest pipe of half-awaken'd birds
To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
The casement slowly grows a glimmering square;
So sad, so strange, the days that are no more. 15

"Dear as remembered kisses after death,
And sweet as those by hopeless fancy feign'd
On lips that are for others; deep as love,
Deep as first love, and wild with all regret;
O Death in Life, the days that are no more." 20

IN MEMORIAM<sup>1</sup>

(1850)

v

I sometimes hold it half a sin
To put in words the grief I feel;
For words, like Nature, half reveal
And half conceal the Soul within.

But, for the unquiet heart and brain, 5
A use in measured language lies;
The sad mechanic exercise,
Like dull narcotics, numbing pain.

In words, like weeds, I'll wrap me o'er,
Like coarsest clothes against the cold; 10
But that large grief which these enfold
Is given in outline and no more.

ix

Fair ship, that from the Italian shore
Sailed the placid ocean-plains
With my lost Arthur's loved remains, 15
Spread thy full wings, and waft him o'er.

<sup>1</sup> This poem was written in memory of the poet's dearest friend, Arthur Henry Hallam, who died suddenly at Vienna, in 1833, in his twenty-third year. Hallam, the son of Henry Hallam, the historian, became intimate with Tennyson at Cambridge. He was a brilliant debater, and (as Tennyson thought) a promising poet. In Memoriam records the effect of this crushing sorrow on the poet during a number of critical years. The first "jottings" for the poem were written as early as 1833.

So draw him home to those that mourn
In vain; a favorable speed
Ruffle thy mirror'd mast, and lead
Thro' prosperous floods his holy urn. 20

All night no ruder air perplex
Thy sliding keel, till Phosphor, bright
As our pure love, thro' early light
Shall glimmer on the dewy decks.

Sphere all your lights around, above; 25
Sleep, gentle heavens, before the prow;
Sleep, gentle winds, as he sleeps now,
My friend, the brother of my love;

My Arthur, whom I shall not see
Till all my widow'd race be run; 30
Dear as the mother to the son,
More than my brothers are to me.

x

I hear the noise about thy keel;
I hear the bell struck in the night;
I see the cabin-window bright; 35
I see the sailor at the wheel.

Thou brings't the sailor to his wife,
And travell'd men from foreign lands;
And letters unto trembling hands;
And, thy dark freight, a vanish'd life. 40

So bring him; we have idle dreams;
This look of quiet flatters thus
Our home-bred fancies. O, to us,
The fools of habit, sweeter seems

To rest beneath the clover sod, 45
That takes the sunshine and the rains,
Or where the kneeling hamlet drains
The chalice of the grapes of God;

Than if with thee the roaring wells
Should gulf him fathom-deep in brine, 50
And hands so often clasp'd in mine,
Should toss with tangle and with shells.

xviii

'Tis well; 'tis something we may stand
Where he in English earth is laid, 55
And from his ashes may be made
The violet of his native land.

'Tis little; but it looks in truth
As if the quiet bones were blest
Among familiar names to rest
And in the places of his youth. 60

Come then, pure hands, and bear the head
That sleeps or wears the mask of sleep,
And come, whatever loves to weep,
And hear the ritual of the dead.

Ah yet, even yet, if this might be, 65
I, falling on his faithful heart,
Would breathing thro' his lips impart
The life that almost dies in me;

That dies not, but endures with pain,
And slowly forms the firmer mind,
70     Treasuring the look it cannot find,
The words that are not heard again.

LIV

O, yet we trust that somehow good
Will be the final goal of ill,
75     To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt, and taints of blood;

That nothing walks with aimless feet;
That not one life shall be destroy'd,
Or cast as rubbish to the void,
80     When God hath made the pile complete;

That not a worm is cloven in vain;
That not a moth with vain desire
Is shrivell'd in a fruitless fire,
Or but subserves another's gain.

Behold, we know not anything;     85
I can but trust that good shall fall
At last—far off—at last, to all,
And every winter change to spring.

So runs my dream; but what am I?
90     An infant crying in the night;
An infant crying for the light,
And with no language but a cry.

LXXXIII

Dip down upon the northern shore,
O sweet new-year, delaying long;
95     Thou doest expectant Nature wrong;
Delaying long, delay no more.

What stays thee from the clouded noons,
Thy sweetness from its proper place?
Can trouble live with April days,
100     Or sadness in the summer moons?

Bring orchis, bring the foxglove spires
The little speedwell's darling blue,
Deep tulips dash'd with fiery dew,
Laburnums, dropping-wells of fire.

O thou, new-year, delaying long,     105
Delayest the sorrow in my blood,
That longs to burst a frozen bud
And flood a fresher throat with song.

LXXXVII

I past beside the reverend walls
In which of old I wore the gown;     110
I roved at random thro' the town,
And saw the tumult of the halls;

And heard once more in college fanes
The storm their high-built organs make,
And thunder-music, rolling, shake
115     The prophet blazon'd on the panes;

And caught once more the distant shout,
The measured pulse of racing oars
Among the willows; paced the shores
120     And many a bridge, and all about

The same gray flats again, and felt
The same, but not the same; and last
Up that long walk of limes I past
To see the rooms in which he dwelt.

Another name was on the door.     125
I linger'd; all within was noise
Of songs, and clapping hands, and boys
That crash'd the glass and beat the floor;

Where once we held debate, a band
Of youthful friends, on mind and art,     130
And labor, and the changing mart,
And all the framework of the land;

When one would aim an arrow fair,
But send it slackly from the string;
135     And one would pierce an outer ring,
And one an inner, here and there;

And last the master-bowman, he,
Would cleave the mark. A willing ear
We lent him. Who but hung to hear
140     The rapt oration flowing free

From point to point, with power and grace
And music in the bounds of law,
To those conclusions when we saw
The God within him light his face,

And seem to lift the form, and glow     145
In azure orbits heavenly-wise;
And over those ethereal eyes
The bar of Michael Angelo?<sup>2</sup>

CVI

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light;     150
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go;     155
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
160     Ring in redress to all mankind.

Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,     165
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out my mournful rhymes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;     170
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

<sup>2</sup> "Michael Angelo had a strong bar of bone over his eyes." (Tennyson to Gatty).

Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
 Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
 Ring out the thousand wars of old, 175
 Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
 The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
 Ring out the darkness of the land,
 Ring in the Christ that is to be. 180

CXIV

Who loves not Knowledge? Who shall rail
 Against her beauty? May she mix
 With men and prosper: Who shall fix
 Her pillars? Let her work prevail.

But on her forehead sits a fire; 185
 She sets her forward countenance
 And leaps into the future chance,
 Submitting all things to desire.

Half-grown as yet, a child, and vain— 190
 She cannot fight the fear of death.
 What is she, cut from love and faith,
 But some wild Pallas from the brain

Of demons? fiery-hot to burst
 All barriers in her onward race
 For power. Let her know her place; 195
 She is the second, not the first.

A higher hand must make her mild,
 If all be not in vain, and guide
 Her footsteps, moving side by side
 With Wisdom, like the younger child; 200

For she is earthly of the mind,
 But Wisdom heavenly of the soul,
 O friend, who earnest to thy goal
 So early, leaving me behind.

I would the great world grew like thee, 205
 Who grewest not alone in power
 And knowledge, but by year and hour
 In reverence and in charity.

CXV

Now fades the last long streak of snow,
 Now burgeons every maze of quick<sup>1</sup> 210
 About the flowering squares, and thick
 By ashen roots the violets blow.

Now rings the woodland loud and long,
 The distance takes a lovelier hue,
 And drown'd in yonder living blue 215
 The lark becomes a sightless song.

Now dance the lights on lawn and lea,
 The flocks are whiter down the vale,
 And milkier every milky sail
 On winding stream or distant sea; 220

Where now the seaweew pipes, or dives
 In yonder greening gleam, and fly
 The happy birds, that change their sky
 To build and brood, that live their lives

<sup>1</sup> A growing hedge, usually of hawthorn.

From land to land; and in my breast 225
 Spring wakens too, and my regret
 Becomes an April violet,
 And buds and blossoms like the rest.

CXVIII

Contemplate all this work of Time,
 The giant laboring in his youth; 230
 Nor dream of human love and truth,
 As dying Nature's earth and lime;

But trust that those we call the dead
 Are breathers of an ampler day
 For ever nobler ends. They say, 235
 The solid earth whereon we tread

In tracts of fluent heat began,
 And grew to seeming-random forms,
 The seeming prey of cyclic storms,
 Till at the last arose the man; 240

Who throve and branch'd from clime to clime,
 The herald of a higher race,
 And of himself in higher place,
 If so he type this work of time

Within himself, from more to more; 245
 Or, crown'd with attributes of woe
 Like glories, move his course, and show
 That life is not as idle ore,

But iron dug from central gloom,
 And heated hot with burning fears, 250
 And dipt in baths of hissing tears,
 And batter'd with the shocks of doom

To shape and use. Arise and fly
 The reeling Faun, the sensual feast;
 Move upward, working out the beast, 255
 And let the ape and tiger die.

CXXI

Sad Hesper o'er the buried sun
 And ready, thou, to die with him,
 Thou watchest all things ever dim
 And dimmer, and a glory done. 260

The team is loosen'd from the wain,
 The boat is drawn upon the shore;
 Thou listenest to the closing door,
 And life is darken'd in the brain.

Bright Phosphor, fresher for the night, 265
 By thee the world's great work is heard
 Beginning, and the wakeful bird;
 Behind thee comes the greater light.

The market boat is on the stream,
 And voices hail it from the brink; 270
 Thou hear'st the village hammer clink,
 And see'st the moving of the team.

Sweet Hesper-Phosphor, double name
 For what is one, the first, the last,
 Thou, like my present and my past 275
 Thy place is changed; thou art the same.

CXXXI

O living will that shalt endure
 When all that seems shall suffer shock,
 Rise in the spiritual rock,
 Flow thro' our deeds and make them pure,

That we may lift from out of dust 281
 A voice as unto him that hears,
 A cry above the conquer'd years
 To one that with us works, and trust,

With faith that comes of self-control, 285
 The truths that never can be proved
 Until we close with all we loved,
 And all we flow from, soul in soul.

THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT
BRIGADE<sup>1</sup>

I

Half a league, half a league,
 Half a league onward,
 All in the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred.
 "Forward the Light Brigade!
 Charge for the guns!" he said. 5
 Into the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred.

II

"Forward, the Light Brigade!"
 Was there a man dismay'd?
 Not tho' the soldier knew
 Some one had blunder'd.
 Theirs not to make reply,
 Theirs not to reason why,
 Theirs but to do and die.
 Into the valley of Death
 Rode the six hundred.

III

Cannon to right of them,
 Cannon to left of them,
 Cannon in front of them
 Volley'd and thunder'd;
 Storm'd at with shot and shell,
 Boldly they rode and well,
 Into the jaws of Death,
 Into the mouth of hell 25
 Rode the six hundred.

IV

Flash'd all their sabres bare,
 Flash'd as they turn'd in air,
 Sabring the gunners there,
 Charging an army, while 30
 All the world wonder'd.

Plunged in the battery-smoke
 Right thro' the line they broke;
 Cossack and Russian
 Reel'd from the sabre-stroke 35
 Shatter'd and sunder'd.
 Then they rode back, but not,
 Not the six hundred.

V

Cannon to right of them,
 Cannon to left of them, 40
 Cannon behind them
 Volley'd and thunder'd;
 Storm'd at with shot and shell,
 While horse and hero fell,
 They that had fought so well 45
 Came thro' the jaws of Death,
 Back from the mouth of hell,
 All that was left of them,
 Left of six hundred.

VI

When can their glory fade? 50
 O the wild charge they made!
 All the world wonder'd.
 Honor the charge they made!
 Honor the Light Brigade,
 Noble six hundred! 55

MAUD

(From Maud, 1855)

XVIII

I

I have led her home, my love, my only friend.
 There is none like her, none. 600
 And never yet so warmly ran my blood
 And sweetly, on and on
 Calming itself to the long-wish'd-for end,
 Full to the banks, close on the promised good.

II

None like her, none. 605
 Just now the dry-tongued laurels' pattering talk
 Seem'd her light foot along the garden walk,
 And shook my heart to think she comes once
 more;
 But even then I heard her close the door,
 The gates of Heaven are closed, and she is gone. 610

III

There is none like her, none.
 Nor will be when our summers have deceased.
 O, art thou sighing for Lebanon
 In the long breeze that streams to thy delicious
 East,
 Sighing for Lebanon, 615
 Dark cedar, tho' thy limbs have here increased,
 Upon a pastoral slope as fair,
 And looking to the South, and fed
 With honey'd rain and delicate air,
 And haunted by the starry head 620

<sup>1</sup> The original version of this poem appeared in the London "Examiner," Dec. 9, 1854. Tennyson "wrote the poem in a few minutes" after reading an account in the "Times" of the gallant charge at Balaclava of the English cavalry under Lord Cardigan against the Russian artillery. The poet was struck by the phrase "some one had blundered" in the newspaper account, "and this was the origin of the metre of his poem." H. Tennyson's Memoirs.

Of her whose gentle will has changed my fate,
And made my life a perfumed altar-flame;
And over whom thy darkness must have spread
With such delight as theirs of old, thy great Forefathers of the thornless garden, there 625 Shadowing the snow-limb'd Eve from whom she came.

IV

Here will I lie, while these long branches sway,
And yon fair stars that crown a happy day
Go in and out as if at merry play,
Who am no more so all forlorn, 630
As when it seem'd far better to be born
To labour and the mattock-harden'd hand,
Than nursed at ease and brought to understand
A sad astrology, the boundless plan
That makes you tyrants in your iron skies, 635
Innumerable, pitiless, passionless eyes,
Cold fires, yet with power to burn and brand
His nothingness into man.

V

But now shine on, and what care I,
Who in this stormy gulf have found a pearl 640
The countercharm of space and hollow sky,
And do accept my madness, and would die
To save from some slight shame one simple girl.

VI

Would die; for sullen-seeming Death may give
More life to Love than is or ever was 645
In our low world, where yet 'tis sweet to live.
Let no one ask me how it came to pass;
It seems that I am happy, that to me
A livelier emerald twinkles in the grass,
A purer sapphire melts into the sea. 650

VII

Not die; but live a life of truest breath,
And teach true life to fight with mortal wrongs.
O why should Love, like men in drinking-songs,
Spice his fair banquet with the dust of death?
Make answer, Maud my bliss, 655
Maud made my Maud by that long loving kiss,
Life of my life, wilt thou not answer this?
"The dusky strand of Death inwoven here
With dear Love's tie, makes Love himself more
dear."

VIII

Is that enchanted moan only the swell 660
Of the long waves that roll in yonder bay?
And hark the clock within, the silver knell
Of twelve sweet hours that past in bridal white,
And died to live, long as my pulses play;
But now by this my love has closed her sight 665
And given false death her hand, and stol'n away
To dreamful wastes where footless fancies dwell
Among the fragments of the golden day.
May nothing there her maiden grace affright!
Dear heart, I feel with thee the drowsy spell. 670
My bride to be, my evermore delight,
My own heart's heart, my ownest own, farewell;
It is but for a little space I go:
And ye meanwhile far over moor and fell

Beat to the noiseless music of the night! 675
Has our whole earth gone nearer to the glow
Of your soft splendours that you look so bright?
I have climbed nearer out of lonely Hell.
Beat, happy stars, timing with things below,
Beat with my heart more blest than heart can tell, 680

Blest, but for some dark undercurrent woe
That seems to draw—but it shall not be so:
Let all be well, be well.

SONG—LATE, LATE, SO LATE

(From Guinevere, 1859)

"Late, late, so late! and dark the night and chill!

Late, late, so late! but we can enter still.
Too late, too late! ye cannot enter now.

"No light had we; for that we do repent,
And learning this, the bridegroom will relent. 5
Too late, too late! ye cannot enter now.

"No light! so late! and dark and chill the night!
O, let us in, that we may find the light!
Too late, too late! ye cannot enter now.

"Have we not heard the bridegroom is so sweet? 10

O, let us in, tho' late, to kiss his feet!
No, no, too late! ye cannot enter now."

THE HIGHER PANTHEISM

(From The Holy Grail and Other Poems, 1869)

The sun, the moon, the stars, the seas, the hills and the plains,—
Are not these, O Soul, the Vision of Him who reigns?

Is not the Vision He, tho' He be not that which he seems?
Dreams are true while they last, and do we not live in dreams?

Earth, these solid stars, this weight of body and limb, 5
Are they not sign and symbol of thy division from Him?

Dark is the world to thee; thyself art the reason
why,
For is He not all but thou, that hast power to feel "I am I"?

Glory about thee, without thee; and thou fulfillest thy doom,
Making Him broken gleams and a stifled splendor and gloom. 10

Speak to Him, thou, for He hears, and Spirit with Spirit can meet—Closer is He than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet.

God is law, say the wise; O Soul, and let us rejoice,
For if He thunder by law the thunder is yet His voice.

Law is God, say some; no God at all, says the fool,
For all we have power to see is a straight staff
bent in a pool;

And the ear of man cannot hear, and the eye of man cannot see;
But if we could see and hear, this Vision—were it not He?

"FRATER AVE ATQUE VALE!"

(Included in Teresias and Other Poems, 1885)

Row us out from Desenzano, to your Sirmione
row!
So they row'd, and there we landed—"O venusta Sirmio!"<sup>1</sup>
There to me thro' all the groves of olive in the summer glow,
There beneath the Roman ruin where the purple
flowers grow,
Came that "Ave atque Vale"<sup>2</sup> of the Poet's hopeless woe,
Tenderest of Roman poets nineteen hundred
years ago,
"Frater Ave atque Vale"—as we wander'd to and fro
Gazing at the Lydian laughter of the Garda
Lake below
Sweet Catullus's all-but-island,<sup>4</sup> olive-silvery Sirmio!

LOCKSLEY HALL SIXTY YEARS AFTER!<sup>1</sup> (1887)

Late, my grandson! half the morning have I paced these sandy tracts, Watch'd again the hollow ridges roaring into
cataracts,

Wander'd back to living boyhood while I heard the curlews call,
I myself so close on death, and death itself in Locksley Hall.

<sup>1</sup> This poem was composed in 1880, after a day's ramble over the peninsula of Sirmio, which stretches, almost cut off from the mainland, into the Lake of Garda, Italy. Catullus, the Latin lyric poet, had a villa on Sirmio, and the region is full of memories of him and his poems. Tennyson was rowed out to Sirmio from Desenzano, a town at the southern end of the lake.

<sup>2</sup> "O delightful Sirmio," from Cat. Carm. vii. 31.

<sup>3</sup> "Brother, hail and then farewell!" the solemn words of farewell to the dead. The reference is to Catullus's tribute to his dead brother, Carm. 101.

<sup>4</sup> An echo of Catullus's, Carm. vii. 31.
"Paene insularum, Sirmio, insularumque Ocellae;"
(Sirmio, scarcely an island, a little darling of an island.)

<sup>5</sup> Tennyson believed that the "two Locksley Halls were likely to be in the future two of the most historically interesting of his poems, as descriptive of the tone of the age at two distant periods of his life." H. Tennyson's Memoir, ii. 329.

So—your happy suit was blasted—she the faultless, the divine;
And you liken—boyish babble—this boy-love
of yours with mine.

I myself have often babbled doubtless of a foolish past;
Babble, babble; our old England may go down in babble at last.

"Curse him!" curse your fellow-victim? call him dotard in your rage?
Eyes that lured a doting boyhood well might fool a dotard's age.

Jilted for a wealthier! wealthier? yet perhaps she was not wise;
I remember how you kiss'd the miniature with those sweet eyes.

In the hall there hangs a painting—Amy's arms about my neck—
Happy children in a sunbeam sitting on the ribs of wreck.

In my life there was a picture, she that clasp'd
my neck had flown;
I was left within the shadow sitting on the wreck alone.

Yours has been a slighter ailment, will you sicken for her sake?
You, not you! your modern amorist is of easier, earthlier make.

Amy loved me, Amy fail'd me, Amy was a timid child;
But your Judith—but your worldling—she had never driven me wild.

She that holds the diamond necklace dearer
than the golden ring,
She that finds a winter sunset fairer than a morn
of spring.

She that in her heart is brooding on his briefer
lease of life,
While she vows "till death shall part us," she
the would-be-widow wife.

She the worldling born of worldlings—father,
mother—be content,
Even the homely farm can teach us there is something in descent.

Yonder in that chapel, slowly sinking now into the ground,
Lies the warrior, my forefather, with his feet
upon the hound.

Cross'd! for once he sail'd the sea to crush the Moslem in his pride;
Dead the warrior, dead his glory, dead the cause in which he died.

<sup>2</sup> A sign that he had fought against the heathen in the Holy Land.

Yet how often I and Amy in the mouldering aisle have stood,
Gazing for one pensive moment on that founder of our blood.

There again I stood to-day, and where of old
we knelt in prayer,
Close beneath the casement crimson with the shield of Locksley—there,

All in white Italian marble, looking still as if she smiled, 35
Lies my Amy dead in childbirth, dead the mother, dead the child.

Dead—and sixty years ago, and dead her aged husband now—
I, this old white-headed dreamer, stooped and kiss'd her marble brow.

Gone the fires of youth, the follies, furies,
curses, passionate tears,
Gone like fires and floods and earthquakes of the planet's dawning years. 40

Fires that shook me once, but now to silent ashes fallen away.
Cold upon the dead volcano sleeps the gleam of dying day.

Gone the tyrant of my youth, and mute below
the chancel stones,
All his virtues—I forgive them—black in white above his bones.

Gone the comrades of my bivouac, some in fight against the foe, 45
Some thro' age and slow diseases, gone as all on earth will go.

Gone with whom for forty years my life in golden sequence ran,
She with all the charm of woman, she with all the breadth of man,

Strong in will and rich in wisdom, Edith, yet so lowly-sweet,
Woman to her inmost heart, and woman to her tender feet, 50

Very woman of very woman, nurse of ailing body and mind,
She that link'd again the broken chain that bound me to my kind.

Here to-day was Amy with me, while I wan-
der'd down the coast,
Near us Edith's holy shadow, smiling at the slightest ghost.

Gone our sailor son thy father, Leonard early lost at sea; 55
Thou alone, my boy, of Amy's kin and mine are left to me.

Gone thy tender-natured mother, wearying to be left alone,
Pining for the stronger heart that once had beat beside her own.

Truth, for truth is truth, he worshipt, being true as he was brave;
Good, for good is good, he follow'd, yet he look'd beyond the grave, 60

Wiser there than you, that crowning barren
Death as lord of all,
Deem this over-tragic drama's closing curtain is the pall!

Beautiful was death in him, who saw the death,
but kept the deck,
Saving women and their babes, and sinking with the sinking wreck,

Gone for ever! Ever? no—for since our dying race began 65
Ever, ever, and for ever was the leading light of man.

Those that in barbarian burials kill'd the slave,
and slew the wife
Felt within themselves the sacred passion of the second life.

Indian warriors dream of ampler hunting grounds beyond the night;
Even the black Australian dying hopes he shall return, a white. 70

Truth for truth, and good for good! The good, the true, the pure, the just—Take the charm "For ever" from them, and they crumble into dust.

Gone the cry of "Forward, Forward," lost within a growing gloom;
Lost, or only heard in silence from the silence of a tomb.

Half the marvels of my morning, triumphs over time and space, 75
Staled by frequency, shrunk by usage into commonest commonplace!

"Forward" rang the voices then, and of the many mine was one.
Let us hush this cry of "Forward" till ten thousand years have gone.

Far among the vanish'd races, old Assyrian kings would flay
Captives whom they caught in battle—iron-hearted victors they. 80

Ages after, while in Asia, he that led the wild Moguls,
Timur<sup>3</sup> built his ghastly tower of eighty thousand human skulls;

<sup>3</sup> i. e. Tamerlane, v. p. 159, n. 1. Some accounts represent Timur as an oriental conqueror of the most cruel type.

Then, and here in Edward's<sup>4</sup> time, an age of noblest English names;<sup>5</sup>
Christian conquerors took and flung the con-quer'd Christian into flames.<sup>6</sup>

Love your enemy, bless your haters, said the Greatest of the great;<sup>85</sup> Christian love among the Churches look'd the twin of heathen hate.

From the golden alms of Blessing man had coin'd himself a curse:
Rome of Cæsar, Rome of Peter, which was crueller? which was worse?

France had shown a light to all men, preach'd a Gospel, all men's good;
Celtic Demos<sup>7</sup> rose a Demon, shriek'd and slaked the light with blood.<sup>90</sup>

Hope was ever on her mountain, watching till the day begun—
Crown'd with sunlight—over darkness—from the still unrisen sun.

Have we grown at last beyond the passions of the primal clan?
"Kill your enemy, for you hate him," still,
"your enemy" was a man.

Have we sunk below them? peasants maim the helpless horse, and drive<sup>95</sup> Innocent cattle under thatch, and burn the kindlier brutes alive.<sup>9</sup>

Brutes, the brutes are not your wrongers—
burnt at midnight, found at morn, Twisted hard in mortal agony with their offspring, born-unborn,

Clinging to the silent mother! Are we devils?
are we men?

Sweet Saint Francis of Assisi, would that he were here again,<sup>100</sup>

He that in his Catholic wholeness used to call the very flowers

Sisters, brothers—and the beasts—whose pains are hardly less than ours!

Chaos, Cosmos! Cosmos, Chaos! who can tell how all will end?

Read the wide world's annals, you, and take their wisdom for your friend.

Hope the best, but hold the Present fatal daughter of the Past,<sup>105</sup>

Shape your heart to front the hour, but dream not that the hour will last.

<sup>4</sup> Edward III (1312-1377), a contemporary of Timur.
"Here" = Europe, as distinguished from Asia.

<sup>5</sup> Chaucer, Wyclif, Langland, etc.

<sup>6</sup> Probably the cruelties committed in the Peasant
Revolt in France, as Tennyson refers to this later
(p. 606, l. 157, and n.), or possibly those practised by the Black Prince in the French War. Horrible deeds are recorded by Froissart in his account of the Jaquerie, e. g.
Chron., Chap. CLXXXII and CLXXXIV.

<sup>7</sup> i. e. the French populace. Demos is the Greek word for the masses, the common people. The reference is to the French Revolution and the "Gospel," then preached, of "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity."

<sup>8</sup> An allusion to recent disturbances in Ireland.

Ay, if dynamite and revolver leave you courage to be wise—

When was age so cramm'd with menace? madness? written, spoken lies?

Envy wears the mask of Love, and, laughing
sober fact to scorn, Cries to weakest as to strongest, "Ye are equals, equal-born."<sup>110</sup>

Equal-born? O, yes, if yonder hill be level with the flat.

Charm us, orator, till the lion look no larger than the cat,

Till the cat thro' that mirage of overheated
language loom
Larger than the lion—Demos end in working its own doom.

Russia bursts our Indian barrier, shall we fight her? shall we yield?<sup>115</sup> Pause! before you sound the trumpet, hear the voices from the field.<sup>9</sup>

Those three hundred millions under one Imperial sceptre now,
Shall we hold them? shall we loose them? take the suffrage of the plow.

Nay, but these would feel and follow Truth if only you and you,
Rivals of realm-ruining party, when you speak were wholly true.<sup>120</sup>

Plowmen, shepherds, have I found, and more than once, and still could find,
Sons of God, and kings of men in utter noble-
ness of mind,

Truthful, trustful, looking upward to the practised hustings-liar;<sup>10</sup>
So the higher yields the lower, while the lower is the higher.

Here and there a cotter's babe is royal-born by right divine;<sup>125</sup>
Here and there my lord is lower than his oxen or his swine.

Chaos, Cosmos! Cosmos, Chaos! once again
the sickening game;
Freedom, free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name.

Step by step we gain'd a freedom known to Europe, known to all;
Step by step we rose to greatness,—thro' the tonguesters we may fall.<sup>130</sup>

You that woo the Voices—tell them "old experience is a fool," Teach your flatter'd kings that only those who cannot read can rule.

<sup>9</sup> i. e. of those who work in the fields, or the laboring classes.

<sup>10</sup> Hustings, the platform from which a political orator addresses the people at a Parliamentary election.

Pluck the mighty from their seat, but set no meek ones in their place;<sup>11</sup>
Pillory Wisdom in your markets, pelt your offal at her face.

Tumble Nature heel o'er head, and, yelling with the yelling street,<sup>135</sup>
Set the feet above the brain and swear the brain is in the feet.

Bring the old dark ages back without the faith,
without the hope,
Break the State, the Church, the Throne, and roll their ruins down the slope.

Authors—essayist, atheist, novelist, realist, rhymester, play your part,
Paint the mortal shame of nature with the living hues of art.<sup>140</sup>

Rip your brothers' vices open, strip your own foul passions bare;
Down with Reticence, down with Reverence—forward—naked—let them stare.

Feed the budding rose of boyhood with the drainage of your sewer;
Send the drain into the fountain, lest the stream should issue pure.

Set the maiden fancies wallowing in the troughs of Zolaism,—<sup>12</sup><sup>145</sup> Forward, forward, ay, and backward, downward too into the abyss!

Do your best to charm the worst, to lower the rising race of men;
Have we risen from out the beast, then back into the beast again?

Only "dust to dust" for me that sicken at your lawless din,
Dust in wholesome old-world dust before the newer world begin.<sup>150</sup>

Heated am I? you—you wonder—well, it scarce becomes mine age—
Patience! let the dying actor mouth his last upon the stage.

Cries of unprogressive dotage ere the dotard
fall asleep?
Noises of a current narrowing, not the music of a deep?

Ay, for doubtless I am old, and think gray thoughts, for I am gray;<sup>155</sup>
After all the stormy changes shall we find a changeless May?

After madness, after massacre, Jacobinism and Jacquerie,<sup>13</sup>
Some diviner force to guide us thro' the days
I shall not see?

When the schemes and all the systems, kingdoms and republics fall,
Something kindlier, higher, holier—all for each and each for all?<sup>160</sup>

All the full-brain, half-brain races, led by Justice, Love and Truth;
All the millions one at length with all the visions of my youth?

All diseases quench'd by Science, no man halt,
or deaf, or blind;
Stronger ever born of weaker, lustier body,
larger mind?

Earth at last a warless world, a single race, a single tongue—<sup>165</sup>
I have seen her far away—for is not Earth as yet so young?

Every tiger madness muzzled, every serpent passion kill'd,
Every grim ravine a garden, every blazing desert till'd,

Robed in universal harvest up to either pole
she smiles,
Universal ocean softly washing all her warless
isles.<sup>170</sup>

Warless? when her tens are thousands, and her thousands millions, then—
All her harvest all too narrow—who can fancy warless men?

Warless? war will die out late then. Will it ever? late or soon?
Can it, till this outworn earth be dead as yon dead world the moon?

Dead the new astronomy calls her.—On this day and at this hour,<sup>175</sup>
In this gap between the sandhills, whence you see the Locksley tower,

Here we met, our latest meeting—Amy—sixty
years ago—
She and I—the moon was falling greenish thro'
a rosy glow,

Just above the gateway tower, and even where you see her now—
Here we stood and claspt each other, swore the seeming-deathless vow.—<sup>180</sup>

Dead, but how her living glory lights the hall,
the dune, the grass!
Yet the moonlight is the sunlight, and the sun himself will pass.

Venus near her! smiling downward at this earthlier earth of ours,
Closer on the sun, perhaps a world of never fading flowers.

<sup>11</sup> V. St. Luke, i. 52.

<sup>12</sup> i. e. the works (or certain notorious works) of Emile Zola, 1840–1902, the French novelist.

<sup>13</sup> i. e. after terrible uprisings of the masses against organized authority; uprisings as violent, or as lawless, as that of the Jacobins in the French Revolution of 1789 or of the Jacquerie, the revolt of the peasants against the French nobles in 1358.

Hesper, whom the poet call'd<sup>14</sup> the Bringer home of all good things— 185
All good things may move in Hesper, perfect peoples, perfect kings.

Hesper—Venus—were we native to that splendor or in Mars,
We should see the globe we groan in, fairest of their evening stars.

Could we dream of wars and carnage, craft and madness, lust and spite,
Roaring London, raving Paris, in that point of peaceful light? 190

Might we not in glancing heavenward on a star
so silver-fair,
Yearn, and clasp the hands and murmur,
"Would to God that we were there?"

Forward, backward, backward, forward, in the immeasurable sea,
Sway'd by vaster ebbs and flows than can be known to you or me.

All the suns—are these but symbols of innumerable man, 195
Man or Mind that sees a shadow of the planner or the plan?

Is there evil but on earth? or pain in every peopled sphere?
Well, be grateful for the sounding watchword
"Evolution" here,

Evolution ever climbing after some ideal good,
And Reversion ever dragging Evolution in the mud. 200

What are men that He should heed us? cried the king of sacred song;<sup>15</sup> Insects of an hour, that hourly work their brother insect wrong.

While the silent heavens roll, and suns along their fiery way,
All their planets whirling round them, flash a million miles a day.

Many an aeon moulded earth before her highest,
man, was born, 205
Many an aeon too may pass when earth is man-less and forlorn.

Earth so huge, and yet so bounded—pools of salt, and plots of land—
Shallow skin of green and azure—chains of mountain, grains of sand!

Only That which made us meant us to be might-ier by and by,
Set the sphere of all the boundless heavens
within the human eye, 210

<sup>14</sup> The Greek poetess Sappho. Cf. Song to the Evening Star, p. 505, and Don Juan, p. 518, Stan. CVII.

<sup>15</sup> David; v. Psalms, viii. 4.

Sent the shadow of Himself, the boundless,
thro' the human soul;
Boundless inward in the atom, boundless outward in the Whole.

Here is Locksley Hall, my grandson, here the lion-guarded gate.
Not to-night in Locksley Hall—to-morrow—
you, you come so late.

Wreck'd—your train—or all but wreck'd? a shatter'd wheel? a vicious boy! 215
Good, this forward, you that preach it, is it well to wish you joy?

Is it well that while we range with Science,
glorying in the Time,
City children soak and blacken soul and sense
in city slime?

There among the glooming alleys Progress halts
on palsied feet,
Crime and hunger cast our maidens by the thousand on the street. 220

There the master scrimps his haggard semp-tress of her daily bread,
There a single sordid attic holds the living and the dead.

There the smouldering fire of fever creeps
across the rotted floor,
And the crowded couch of incest in the warrens
of the poor.

Nay, your pardon, cry your "Forward," yours are hope and youth, but I— 225
Eighty winters leave the dog too lame to follow with the cry,

Lame and old, and past his time, and passing
now into the night;
Yet I would the rising race were half as eager for the light.

Light the fading gleam of even? light the glimmer of the dawn?
Aged eyes may take the growing glimmer for the gleam withdrawn. 230

Far away beyond her myriad coming changes earth will be Something other than the wildest modern guess of you and me.

Earth may reach her earthly-worst, or if she gain her earthly-best,
Would she find her human offspring this ideal man at rest?

Forward then, but still remember, how the course of Time will swerve, 235
Crook and turn upon itself in many a backward streaming curve.

Not the Hall to-night, my grandson! Death and Silence hold their own.
Leave the master in the first dark hour of his last sleep alone.

Worthier soul was he than I am, sound and honest, rustic Squire, Kindly landlord, boon companion—youthful jealousy is a liar. 240

Cast the poison from your bosom, oust the madness from your brain.
Let the trampled serpent show you that you have not lived in vain.

Youthful! youth and age are scholars yet but in the lower school,
Nor is he the wisest man who never proved himself a fool.

Yonder lies our young sea-village—Art and Grace are less and less; 245
Science grows and Beauty dwindles—roofs of slated hideousness!

There is one old hostel left us where they swing
the Locksley shield,
Till the peasant cow shall butt the "lion passant" from his field.

Poor old Heraldry, poor old History, poor old
Poetry, passing hence, 245
In the common deluge drowning old political common-sense! 250

Poor old voice of eighty crying after voices that have fled!
All I loved are vanish'd voices, all my steps are on the dead.

All the world is ghost to me, and as the phantom disappears,
Forward far and far from here is all the hope of eighty years.

In this hostel—I remember—I repent it o'er his grave, 255
Like a clown—by chance he met me—I refused the hand he gave.

From that casement where the trailer mantles
all the mouldering bricks—
I was then in early boyhood, Edith but a child of six—

While I shelter'd in this archway from a day of driving showers—
Peep the winsome face of Edith like a flower
among the flowers. 260

Here to-night! the Hall to-morrow, when they toll the chapel bell!
Shall I hear in one dark room a wailing, "I have loved thee well?"

Then a peal that shakes the portal—one has come to claim his bride,
Her that shrank, and put me from her, shriek'd,
and started from my side—

Silent echoes! You, my Leonard, use and not abuse your day, 265
Move among your people, know them, follow him who led the way,

Strove for sixty widow'd years to help his
homelier brother men,
Served the poor, and built the cottage, raised the school, and drain'd the fen.

Hears he now the voice that wrong'd him? who shall swear it cannot be?
Earth would never touch her worst, were one in fifty such as he 270

Ere she gain her heavenly-best, a God must mingle with the game,
Nay, there may be those about us whom we neither see nor name,

Felt within us as ourselves, the Powers of Good,
the Powers of Ill,
Strowing balm or shedding poison in the fountains of the will.

Follow you the star that lights a desert pathway, yours or mine, 275
Forward, till you see the Highest Human Nature is divine.

Follow Light, and do the Right—for man can half-control his doom—
Till you find the deathless Angel seated in the vacant tomb.

Forward, let the stormy moment fly and mingle with the past.
I that loathed have come to love him. Love will conquer at the last. 280

Gone at eighty, mine own age, and I and you will bear the pall;
Then I leave thee lord and master, latest lord of Locksley Hall.

THE THROSTLE

(Included in Demeter and Other Poems, 1889)

"Summer is coming, summer is coming.
I know it, I know it, I know it.
Light again, leaf again, life again, love again!"
Yes, my wild little Poet.

Sing the new year in under the blue. 5
Last year you sang it as gladly.
"New, new, new, new!" Is it then so new
That you should carol so madly?

"Love again, song again, nest again, young
again,"
Never a prophet so crazy! 10
And hardly a daisy as yet, little friend,
See, there is hardly a daisy.

"Here again, here, here, here, happy year!"

O warble unchidden, unbidden!
Summer is coming, is coming, my dear, 15
And all the winters are hidden.

CROSSING THE BAR

(Demeter, 1889)

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea,

But such a tide as moving seems asleep, 5
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless
deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark! 10
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark;

For tho' from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face 15
When I have crost the bar.

Robert Browning

(1812-1889)

SONG

(From Pippa Passes, 1841)

The year's at the spring
The day's at the morn;
Morning's at seven;
The hillside's dew-pearled;
The lark's on the wing; 5
The snail's on the thorn:
God's in his heaven—
All's right with the world!

CAVALIER TUNES

(From Dramatic Lyrics, 1842)

II

GIVE A ROUSE

I

King Charles, and who'll do him right now?
King Charles, and who's ripe for fight now?
Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,
King Charles!

II

Who gave me the goods that went since? 5
Who raised me the house that sank once?
Who helped me to gold I spent since?
Who found me in wine you drank once?

Chorus

King Charles, and who'll do him right now?
King Charles, and who's ripe for fight now? 10
Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,
King Charles!

III

To whom used my boy George quaff else,
By the old fool's side that begot him?
For whom did he cheer and laugh else, 15
While Noll's damned troopers shot him?

Chorus

King Charles, and who'll do him right now?
King Charles, and who's ripe for fight now?
Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,
King Charles! 20

III

BOOT AND SADDLE

(From the same)

I

Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!
Rescue my castle before the hot day
Brightens to blue from its silvery gray,

Chorus

Boot, saddle to horse, and away!

II

Ride past the suburbs, asleep as you'd say; 5
Many's the friend there, will listen and pray
"God's luck to gallants that strike up the lay—

Chorus

"Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!"

III

Forty miles off, like a roebuck at bay,
Flouts Castle Brancepeth the Roundheads'
array: 10
Who laughs, "Good fellows ere this, by my fay,

Chorus

"Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!"

IV

Who? My wife Gertrude; that, honest and
gay,
Laughs when you talk of surrendering, "Nay!
I've better counsellors; what counsel they? 16

Chorus

"Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!"

MY LAST DUCHESS<sup>1</sup>

FERRARA

(From Dramatic Lyrics, 1842)

That's my last Duchess painted on the wall,
Looking as if she were alive. I call
That piece a wonder, now; Frà Pandolf's<sup>2</sup> hand
Worked busily a day, and there she stands.

<sup>1</sup> The Duke in this poem, like Browning's Bishop who ordered "his tomb at St. Praxed's Church," is a characteristic product of the Italy of the Renaissance. He exemplifies Browning's favorite doctrine that we are not saved by taste, and that a fine appreciation of art and letters is by no means incompatible with a small, ignoble, and worldly nature.

<sup>2</sup> An imaginary artist, as is Claus of Innsbruck.

Will 't please you sit and look at her? I said 5
 "Frà Pandolf" by design, for never read
 Strangers like you that pictured countenance,
 The depth and passion of its earnest glance,
 But to myself they turned (since none puts by
 The curtain I have drawn for you, but I) 10
 And seemed as they would ask me, if they durst, How such a glance came there; so, not the first

Are you to turn and ask thus. Sir, 'twas not
 Her husband's presence only, called that spot
 Of joy into the Duchess' cheek: perhaps 15
 Frà Pandolf chanced to say "Her mantle laps
 Over my lady's wrist too much," or "Paint
 Must never hope to reproduce the faint Half-flush that dies along her throat:" such stuff

Was courtesy, she thought, and cause enough 20
 For calling up that spot of joy. She had A heart—how shall I say?—too soon made glad,

Too easily impressed; she liked whate'er
 She looked on, and her looks went everywhere.
 Sir, 'twas all one! My favor at her breast, 25
 The dropping of the daylight in the West,
 The bough of cherries some officious fool
 Broke in the orchard for her, the white mule
 She rode with round the terrace—all and each
 Would draw from her alike the approving speech, 30

Or blush, at least. She thanked men,—good!
 but thanked

Somehow—I know not how—as if she ranked
 My gift of a nine-hundred-years-old name
 With anybody's gift. Who'd stoop to blame
 This sort of trifling? Even had you skill 35
 In speech—(which I have not)—to make your will

Quite clear to such an one, and say, "Just this
 Or that in you disgusts me; here you miss,
 Or there exceed the mark"—and if she let
 Herself be lessened so, nor plainly set 40
 Her wits to yours, forsooth, and made excuse, —E'en then would be some stooping; and I choose

Never to stoop. Oh, sir, she smiled, no doubt, Whene'er I passed her; but who passed without

Much the same smile? This grew; I gave commands;<sup>3</sup> 45

Then all smiles stopped together. There she stands

As if alive. Will 't please you rise? We'll meet
 The company below, then. I repeat
 The Count your master's known munificence
 Is ample warrant that no just pretense 50
 Of mine for dowry will be disallowed;
 Though his fair daughter's self, as I avowed
 At starting, is my object. Nay, we'll go Together down, sir. Notice Neptune, though,
 Taming a sea-horse, thought a rarity, 55
 Which Claus of Innsbruck cast in bronze for me!

<sup>3</sup> Many have supposed this to mean commands for the death of the Duchess, but Browning leaves the exact nature of these commands to our imagination.

"HOW THEY BROUGHT THE GOOD NEWS FROM GHENT TO AIX"<sup>1</sup>

(From Dramatic Romances and Lyrics, 1845)

I sprang to the stirrup, and Joris, and he;
 I galloped, Dirck galloped, we galloped all
 three;

"Good speed!" cried the watch, as the gate-
 bolts undrew;

"Speed!" echoed the wall to us galloping
 through;

Behind shut the postern, the lights sank to
 rest, 5

And into the midnight we galloped abreast.

II

Not a word to each other: we kept the great pace

Neck by neck, stride by stride, never changing our place;

I turned in my saddle and made its girths tight,
 Then shortened each stirrup, and set the pique
 right, 10

Rebuckled the cheek-strap, chained slacker the bit,

Nor galloped less steadily Roland a whit.

III

'Twas moonset at starting; but while we drew near

Lokeren, the cocks crew and twilight dawned
 clear;

At Boom, a great yellow star came out to
 see; 15

At Düffeld, 'twas morning as plain as could
 be;

And from Mecheln church-steeple we heard the half-chime,

So, Joris broke silence with, "Yet there is time!"

IV

At Aershot, up leaped of a sudden the sun,
 And against him the cattle stood black every one, 20

To stare thro' the mist at us galloping past,
 And I saw my stout galloper Roland at last,
 With resolute shoulders, each butting away

The haze, as some bluff river headland its spray:

V

And his low head and crest, just one sharp ear
 bent back 25

For my voice, and the other pricked out on his track;

And one eye's black intelligence,—ever that glance

O'er its white edge at me, his own master, askance!

And the thick heavy spume-flakes which aye
 and anon

His fierce lips shook upwards in galloping on. 30

<sup>1</sup> This poem has no historical foundation. Browning wrote it after a long sea voyage, when it appealed to him to describe a gallop on horseback.

VI

By Hasselt, Dirck groaned; and cried Joris,
 "Stay spur!
 Your Roos galloped bravely, the fault's not in her,
 We'll remember at Aix"—for one heard the quick wheeze
 Of her chest, saw the stretched neck and staggering knees,
 And sunk tail, and horrible heave of the flank,<sup>35</sup>
 As down on her haunches she shuddered and sank.

VII

So, we were left galloping, Joris and I,
 Past Looz and past Tongres, no cloud in the sky;
 The broad sun above laughed a pitiless laugh,
 'Neath our feet broke the brittle bright stubble like chaff;<sup>40</sup>
 Till over by Dalhem a dome-spire sprang white,
 And "Gallop," gasped Joris, "for Aix is in sight!"

VIII

"How they'll greet us!"—and all in a moment his roan
 Rolled neck and croup over, lay dead as a stone;
 And there was my Roland to bear the whole weight<sup>45</sup>
 Of the news which alone could save Aix from her fate,
 With his nostrils like pits full of blood to the brim,
 And with circles of red for his eye-sockets' rim.

IX

Then I cast loose my buffcoat, each holster let
 fall,
 Shook off both my jack-boots, let go belt and all,<sup>50</sup>
 Stood up in the stirrup, leaned, patted his ear, Called my Roland his pet-name, my horse
 without peer;
 Clapped my hands, laughed and sang, any noise, bad or good,
 Till at length into Aix Roland galloped and stood.

X

And all I remember is—friends flocking round<sup>55</sup>
 As I sat with his head 'twixt my knees on the
 ground;
 And no voice but was praising this Roland of
 mine,
 As I poured down his throat our last measure of wine,
 Which (the burgesses voted by common consent)
 Was no more than his due who brought good news from Ghent.<sup>60</sup>

HOME THOUGHTS, FROM ABROAD

(From Bells and Pomegranates, No. VII., 1845)

I

Oh, to be in England now that April's there,
 And whoever wakes in England sees, some morning, unaware,
 That the lowest boughs and the brush-wood sheaf
 Round the elm-tree bole are in tiny leaf,
 While the chaffinch sings on the orchard bough<sup>5</sup>
 In England—now!

II

And after April, when May follows,
 And the whitethroat builds, and all the swallows!
 Hark, where my blossomed pear-tree in the hedge
 Leans to the field and scatters on the clover<sup>10</sup>
 Blossoms and dewdrops—at the bent spray's
 edge—
 That's the wise thrush; he sings each song twice over
 Lest you should think he never could recapture
 The first fine careless rapture!
 And though the fields look rough with hoary dew,<sup>15</sup>
 All will be gay when noontide wakes anew
 The buttercups, the little children's dower
 —Far brighter than this gaudy melon-flower!

HOME THOUGHTS FROM THE SEA<sup>1</sup>

(From the same)

Nobly, nobly Cape Saint Vincent to the northwest died away;
 Sunset ran, one glorious blood-red, reeking into Cadiz Bay;
 Bluish 'mid the burning water, full in face
 Trafalgar lay;
 In the dimmest northeast distance dawned
 Gibraltar grand and gray;
 "Here and here did England help me; how can I help England?"—say,<sup>5</sup> Whoso turns as I, this evening, turn to God to praise and pray,
 While Jove's planet rises yonder, silent over Africa.

THE GUARDIAN-ANGEL:<sup>1</sup>

A PICTURE AT FANO

(From Men and Women, 1855)

I

Dear and great Angel, wouldst thou only leave
 That child, when thou hast done with him,
 for me!

<sup>1</sup> The poet, near the scene of some of England's greatest naval victories, is stirred to even more than patriotic gratitude. Off Cape St. Vincent, at the southern extremity of Portugal, an English fleet of 15 ships defeated a Spanish fleet of 27 ships, in 1797; off Cape Trafalgar, on the Spanish coast, and south-east of the Gulf of Cadiz and of Cape St. Vincent, Nelson won death and victory in 1805; while distant Gibraltar, triumphantly held for three years (1797–82) against the combined powers of France and Spain, stands as a monument to England's naval supremacy.

<sup>1</sup> L'Angelo Custode, the picture which inspired this

Let me sit all the day here, that when eve
 Shall find performed thy special ministry,
 And time come for departure, thou, suspending Thy flight, may'st see another child for tending, 6
 Another still, to quiet and retrieve.

II

Then I shall feel thee step one step, no more,
 From where thou stand'st now, to where I gaze,
 And suddenly my head be covered o'er 10
 With those wings, white above the child who prays
 Now on that tomb—and I shall feel thee
 guarding
 Me, out of all the world; for me, discarding Yon heaven thy home, that waits and opes its door!

III

I would not look up thither past thy head 15
 Because the door opes, like that child, I
 know,
 For I should have thy gracious face instead,
 Thou bird of God! And wilt thou bend me
 low
 Like him, and lay, like his, my hands together,
 And lift them up to pray, and gently tether 20
 Me as thy lamb there, with thy garment's spread?

IV

If this was ever granted, I would rest
 My head beneath thine, while thy healing hands
 Close-covered both my eyes beside thy breast, Pressing the brain which too much thought expands 25
 Back to its proper size again, and smoothing
 Distortion down till every nerve had soothing,
 And all lay quiet, happy and suppest.

V

How soon all worldly wrong would be repaired!

I think how I should view the earth and skies
 And sea, when once again my brow was bared 31
 After thy healing, with such different eyes.
 O world, as God has made it! all is beauty;
 And knowing this, is love, and love is duty.
 What further may be sought for or declared?

EVELYN HOPE

(From the same)

I

Beautiful Evelyn Hope is dead!
 Sit and watch by her side an hour.

poem, is in the Church of St. Augustine at Fano, a town on the Adriatic. It was painted by Guercino and "represented an angel standing with outstretched wings by a little child. The child is half kneeling on a kind of pedestal, while the angel joins its hands in prayer; its gaze is directed upwards towards the sky, from which cherubs are looking down." I have omitted the last three verses, which are on a less exalted level and seem to add little to the poem.

That is her book-shelf, this her bed;
 She plucked that piece of geranium-flower,
 Beginning to die too, in the glass; 5
 Little has yet been changed, I think:
 The shutters are shut, no light may pass
 Save two long rays thro' the hinge's chink.

II

Sixteen years old when she died!
 Perhaps she had scarcely heard my name; 10
 It was not her time to love; beside,
 Her life had many a hope and aim,
 Duties enough and little cares,
 And now was quiet, now astir,
 Till God's hand beckoned unawares,— 15
 And the sweet white brow is all of her.

III

Is it too late then, Evelyn Hope?
 What, your soul was pure and true,
 The good stars met in your horoscope,
 Made you of spirit, fire and dew— 20
 And, just because I was thrice as old
 And our paths in the world diverged so wide,
 Each was naught to each, must I be told?
 We were fellow mortals, naught beside?

IV

No, indeed! for God above 25
 Is great to grant, as mighty to make,
 And creates the love to reward the love:
 I claim you still, for my own love's sake!
 Delayed it may be for more lives yet,
 Through worlds I shall traverse, not a few: 30
 Much is to learn, much to forget
 Ere the time be come for taking you.

V

But the time will come,—at last it will,
 When, Evelyn Hope, what meant (I shall say)
 In the lower earth, in the years long still, 35
 That body and soul so pure and gay?
 Why your hair was amber, I shall divine,
 And your mouth of your own geranium's red—
 And what you would do with me, in fine,
 In the new life come in the old one's stead. 40

VI

I have lived (I shall say) so much since then,
 Given up myself so many times,
 Gained me the gains of various men,
 Ransacked the ages, spoiled the climes;
 Yet one thing, one, in my soul's full scope, 45
 Either I missed or itself missed me:
 And I want and find you, Evelyn Hope!
 What is the issue? let us see!

VII

I loved you, Evelyn, all the while;
 My heart seemed full as it could hold— 50
 There was place and to spare for the frank young smile,
 And the red young mouth, and the hair's
 young gold.

So, hush,—I will give you this leaf to keep:
 See, I shut it inside the sweet cold hand!
 There, that is our secret: go to sleep! 55
 You will wake, and remember, and understand.

BY THE FIRESIDE

(From the same)

I

How well I know what I mean to do
 When the long dark autumn evenings come:
 And where, my soul, is thy pleasant hue?
 With the music of all thy voices, dumb
 In life's November too! 5

II

I shall be found by the fire, suppose,
 O'er a great wise book, as beseemeth age,
 While the shutters flap as the crosswind blows
 And I turn the page, and I turn the page,
 Not verse now, only prose! 10

III

Till the young ones whisper, finger on lip,
 "There he is at it, deep in Greek:
 Now then, or never, out we slip
 To cut from the hazels by the creek
 A mainmast for our ship!" 15

IV

I shall be at it indeed, my friends:
 Greek puts already on either side
 Such a branch-work forth as soon extends
 To a vista opening far and wide,
 And I pass out where it ends. 20

V

The outside-frame, like your hazel-trees;
 But the inside-archway widens fast,
 And a rarer sort succeeds to these,
 And we slope to Italy at last
 And youth, by green degrees. 25

VI

I follow wherever I am led,
 Knowing so well the leader's hand:
 O woman-country, wooed not wed,
 Loved all the more by earth's male-lands,
 Laid to their hearts instead! 30

VII

Look at the ruined chapel again
 Half-way up in the Alpine gorge!<sup>1</sup>
 Is that a tower, I point you plain,
 Or is it a mill, or an iron forge
 Breaks solitude in vain? 35

<sup>1</sup> Browning evidently has in mind a mountain gorge near the Baths of Lucca. The Brownings passed the summers of 1849 and 1853 at Bagni di Lucca, three mountain villages, some forty miles from Florence. Mrs. Browning writes: "I find myself able to climb the hills with Robert, and help him to lose himself in the forests."

VIII

A turn, and we stand in the heart of things;
 The woods are round us, heaped and dim:
 From slab to slab how it slips and springs,
 The thread of water single and slim,
 Through the ravage some torrent brings! 40

IX

Does it feed the little lake below?
 That speck of white just on its marge
 Is Pella; see, in the evening glow,
 How sharp the silver spear-heads charge
 When Alp meets heaven in snow! 45

X

On our other side is the straight-up rock;
 And a path is kept 'twixt the gorge and it
 By boulder-stones where lichens mock
 The marks on a moth, and small ferns fit
 Their teeth to the polished block. 50

XI

Oh the sense of the yellow mountain flowers,
 And thorny balls, each three in one,
 The chestnuts throw on our path in showers!
 For the drop of the woodland fruit's begun,
 These early November hours, 55

XII

That crimson the creeper's leaf across
 Like a splash of blood, intense, abrupt,
 O'er a shield else gold from rim to boss,
 And lay it for show on the fairy-cupped
 Elf-needed mat of moss, 60

XIII

By the rose-flesh mushrooms, undivulged
 Last evening—nay, in to-day's first dew
 Yon sudden coral nipple bulged,
 Where a freaked fawn-colored flaky crew
 Of toad-stools peep indulged. 65

XIV

And yonder, at foot of the fronting ridge
 That takes the turn to a range beyond,
 Is the chapel reached by the one-arched bridge,
 Where the water is stopped in a stagnant pond
 Danced over by the midge. 70

XV

The chapel and bridge are of stone alike,
 Blackish-gray and mostly wet;
 Cut hemp-stalks steep in the narrow dike.
 See here again, how the lichens fret
 And the roots of the ivy strike! 75

XVI

Poor little place, where its one priest comes
 On a festa-day, if he comes at all,
 To the dozen folk from their scattered homes,
 Gathered within that precinct small
 By the dozen ways one roams— 80

XVII

To drop from the charcoal-burners' huts,
 Or climb from the hemp-dresser's low shed,
 Leave the grange where the woodman stores
 his nuts,
 Or the wattled cote where the fowlers spread
 Their gear on the rock's bare juts. 85

XVIII

It has some pretension too, this front,
 With its bit of fresco half-moonwise
 Set over the porch, Art's early wont:
 'Tis John in the Desert, I surmise,
 But has borne the weather's brunt— 90

XIX

Not from the fault of the builder though,
 For a pent-house properly projects
 Where three carved beams make a certain show,
 Dating—good thought of our architect's—
 'Five, six, nine, he lets you know. 95

XX

And all day long a bird sings there,
 And a stray sheep drinks at the pond at times;
 The place is silent and aware;
 It has had its scenes, its joys and crimes,
 But that is its own affair. 100

XXI

My perfect wife, my Leonor,
 O heart, my own! O eyes, mine too!
 Whom else could I dare look backward for,
 With whom beside should I dare pursue
 The path gray heads abhor? 105

XXII

For it leads to a crag's sheer edge with them;
 Youth, flowery all the way, there stops—
 Not they; age threatens and they contemn,
 Till they reach the gulf wherein youth drops,
 One inch from life's safe hem! 110

XXIII

With me, youth led . . . I will speak now,
 No longer watch you as you sit
 Reading by firelight, that great brow
 And the spirit-small hand propping it,
 Mutely my heart knows how— 115

XXIV

When, if I think but deep enough,
 You are wont to answer, prompt as rhyme;
 And you, too, find without rebuff
 Response your soul seeks many a time
 Piercing its fine flesh-stuff. 120

XXV

My own, confirm me! If I tread
 This path back, is it not in pride
 To think how little I dreamed it led
 To an age so blest that, by its side,
 Youth seems the waste instead? 125

XXVI

My own, see where the years conduct!
 At first, 'twas something out two souls
 Should mix as mists do; each is sucked
 In each now: on, the new stream rolls,
 Whatever rocks obstruct. 130

XXVII

Think, when our one soul understands
 The great Word which makes all things new,
 When earth breaks up and heaven expands,
 How will the change strike me and you
 In the house not made with hands? 135

XXVIII

Oh, I must feel your brain prompt mine,
 Your heart anticipate my heart,
 You must be just before, in fine,
 See and make me see, for your part,
 New depths of the divine! 140

XXIX

But who could have expected this
 When we two drew together first
 Just for the obvious human bliss,
 To satisfy life's daily thirst
 With a thing men seldom miss? 145

XXX

Come back with me to the first of all,
 Let us lean and love it over again,
 Let us now forget and now recall,
 Break the rosary in a pearly rain,
 And gather what we let fall! 150

XXXI

What did I say?—that a small bird sings
 All day long, save when a brown pair
 Of hawks from the wood float with wide wings
 Strained to a bell: 'gainst noonday glare
 You count the streaks and rings. 155

XXXII

But at afternoon or almost eve
 'Tis better; then the silence grows
 To that degree, you half believe
 It must get rid of what it knows,
 Its bosom does so heave. 160

XXXIII

Hither we walked then, side by side,
 Arm in arm and cheek to cheek,
 And still I questioned or replied,
 While my heart, convulsed to really speak,
 Lay choking in its pride. 165

XXXIV

Silent the crumbling bridge we cross,
 And pity and praise the chapel sweet,
 And care about the fresco's loss,
 And wish for our souls a like retreat,
 And wonder at the moss. 170

XXXV

Stoop and kneel on the settle under,
 Look through the window's grated square:
 Nothing to see! For fear of plunder,
 The cross is down and the altar bare,
 As if thieves don't fear thunder. 175

XXXVI

We stoop and look in through the grate,
 See the little porch and rustic door,
 Read duly the dead builder's date;
 Then cross the bridge that we crossed before,
 Take the path again—but wait! 180

XXXVII

Oh moment one and infinite!
 The water slips o'er stock and stone;
 The West is tender, hardly bright:
 How gray at once is the evening grown—
 One star, its chrysolite! 185

XXXVIII

We two stood there with never a third,
 But each by each, as each knew well:
 The sights we saw and the sounds we heard,
 The lights and the shades made up a spell
 Till the trouble grew and stirred. 190

XXXIX

Oh, the little more, and how much it is!
 And the little less, and what worlds away!
 How a sound shall quicken content to bliss,
 Or a breath suspend the blood's best play,
 And life be a proof of this! 195

XL

Had she willed it, still had stood the screen
 So slight, so sure, 'twixt my love and her:
 I could fix her face with a guard between,
 And find her soul as when friends confer,
 Friends—lovers that might have been. 200

XLI

For my heart had a touch of the woodland
 time,
 Wanting to sleep now over its best.
 Shake the whole tree in the summer-prime,
 But bring to the last leaf no such test!
 "Hold the last fast!" runs the rhyme. 205

XLII

For a chance to make your little much,
 To gain a lover and lose a friend,
 Venture the tree and a myriad such,
 When nothing you mar but the year can mend:
 But a last leaf—fear to touch! 210

XLIII

Yet should it unfasten itself and fall
 Eddying down till it find your face
 At some slight wind—best chance of all!
 Be your heart henceforth its dwelling-place
 You trembled to forestall! 215

XLIV

Worth how well, those dark gray eyes,
 That hair so dark and dear, how worth,
 That a man should strive and agonize,
 And taste a veriest hell on earth
 For the hope of such a prize! 220

XLV

You might have turned and tried a man,
 Set him a space to weary and wear,
 And prove which suited more your plan,
 His best of hope or his worst despair,
 Yet end as he began. 225

XLVI

But you spared me this, like the heart you are,
 And filled my empty heart at a word.
 If two lives join, there is oft a scar,
 They are one and one, with a shadowy third;
 One near one is too far. 230

XLVII

A moment after, and hands unseen
 Were hanging the night around us fast;
 But we knew that a bar was broken between Life and life: we were mixed at last
 In spite of the mortal screen. 235

XLVIII

The forests had done it; there they stood;
 We caught for a moment the powers at play:
 They had mingled us so, for once and good,
 Their work was done—we might go or stay,
 They relapsed to their ancient mood. 240

XLIX

How the world is made for each of us!
 How all we perceive and know in it
 Tends to some moment's product thus,
 When a soul declares itself—to wit,
 By its fruit, the thing it does! 245

L

Be hate that fruit or love that fruit,
 It forwards the general deed of man,
 And each of the Many helps to recruit
 The life of the race by a general plan;
 Each living his own, to boot. 250

LI

I am named and known by that moment's feat;
 There took my station and degree;
 So grew my own small life complete,
 As nature obtained her best of me—
 One born to love you, sweet! 255

LII

And to watch you sink by the fireside now
 Back again, as you mutely sit
 Musing by fire-light, that great brow
 And the spirit-small hand propping it,
 Yonder, my heart knows how! 260

LIII

So, earth has gained by one man the more,
And the gain of earth must be heaven's gain
too;
And the whole is well worth thinking o'er
When autumn comes: which I mean to do
One day, as I said before. 265

"DE GUSTIBUS—"¹

(From the same)

I

Your ghost will walk, you lover of trees,
(If our loves remain)
In an English lane,
By a cornfield-side a-flutter with poppies.
Hark, those two in the hazel coppice—
A boy and a girl, if the good fates please, 6
Making love, say,—
The happier they!
Draw yourself up from the light of the moon,
And let them pass, as they will too soon, 10
With the beanflower's boon,
And the blackbird's tune,
And May, and June!

II

What I love best in all the world
Is a castle, precipice-encurled, 15
In a gash of the wind-grieved Apennine.
Or look for me, old fellow of mine
(If I get my head from out the mouth
O' the grave, and loose my spirit's bands,
And come again to the land of lands)—
In a seaside house to the farther South, 20
Where the baked cicada dies of drouth,
And one sharp tree—'tis a cypress—stands,
By the many hundred years red-rusted,
Rough, iron-spiked, ripe fruit-o'er-crusted, 25
My sentinel to guard the sands
To the water's edge. For, what expands
Before the house, but the great opaque
Blue breadth of sea without a break?
While, in the house, forever crumbles 30
Some fragment of the frescoes' walls,
From blisters where a scorpion sprawls.
A girl bare-footed brings, and tumbles
Down on the pavement, green-flesh melons,
And says there's news to-day—the king 35
Was shot at, touched in the liver-wing,
Goes with his Bourbon arm in a sling;
—She hopes they have not caught the felons.
Italy, my Italy!
Queen Mary's saying serves for me— 40
(When fortune's malice Lost her Calais)—
Open my heart and you will see
Graved inside of it, "Italy."
Such lovers old are I and she: 45
So it always was, so shall ever be!

¹ De gustibus non disputandum, there is no disputing about tastes.

ANDREA DEL SARTO¹

CALLED "THE FAULTLESS PAINTER"

(From the same)

But do not let us quarrel any more,
No, my Lucrezia; bear with me for once:
Sit down and all shall happen as you wish.
You turn your face, but does it bring your
heart?
I'll work then for your friend's friend, never fear, 5
Treat his own subject after his own way,
Fix his own time, accept too his own price,
And shut the money into this small hand
When next it takes mine. Will it? tenderly?
Oh, I'll content him,—but to-morrow, Love! 10
I often am much wearier than you think,
This evening more than usual, and it seems
As if—forgive now—should you let me sit
Here by the window with your hand in mine
And look a half hour forth on Fiesole,² 15
Both of one mind, as married people use,
Quietly, quietly the evening through,
I might get up to-morrow to my work
Cheerful and fresh as ever. Let us try.
To-morrow, how you shall be glad for this! 20
Your soft hand is a woman of itself,
And mine the man's bared breast she curls
inside.

Don't count the time lost, neither; you must serve

For each of the five pictures we require:
It saves a model. So! keep looking so— 25
My serpentine beauty, rounds on rounds!
—How could you ever prick those perfect ears,
Even to put the pearl there! oh, so sweet—
My face, my moon, my everybody's moon, 30
Which everybody looks on and calls his,
And, I suppose, is looked on by in turn,
While she looks—no one's: very dear, no less.
You smile? why, there's my picture ready made
There's what we painters call our harmony!
A common grayness silvers every thing,— 35

¹ Andrea, called "del sarto,"—or, as we would say, the tailor's son,—was born at Florence in 1487. After working at goldsmithing, wood-carving, and drawing, and studying under several painters, he executed some frescoes for the Church of the Annunciation at Florence, with such accuracy and skill that he gained the name of "the faultless painter." At twenty-three he is said to have had no superior in Central Italy in technique. In 1512 he married Lucrezia, "a beautiful widow." "But," says Vasari, "he destroyed his own peace, as well as estranged his friends, by this act, seeing that he soon became jealous, and found that he had fallen into the hands of an artful woman, who made him do as she pleased in all things." In 1518 he went to Paris without Lucrezia, at the invitation of Francis I. This is the period of adulation and substantial rewards that he looks back upon in the poem as his long festal year, when he could "sometimes leave the ground." But Lucrezia wrote urging his return. The king granted him a brief leave of absence, and commissioned him to buy certain works of art in Italy. Andrea, beguiled by his wife, used the money which Francis had entrusted to him, to build a house for himself at Florence. His career in France being thus miserably interrupted, he remained in Florence, where he died of the plague in 1531.

² A small town on a hill-top about three miles to the west of Florence. Browning apparently makes Andrea build his house on the outskirts of Florence immediately facing the Convent of San Domenico, with Fiesole in the distant background.

All in a twilight, you and I alike
—You, at the point of your first pride in me (That's gone, you know,)—but I, at every point;

My youth, my hope, my art, being all toned
down

To yonder sober pleasant Fiesole. 40

There's the bell clinking from the chapel-top;

That length of convent-wall across the way

Holds the trees safer, huddled more inside;

The last monk leaves the garden; days decrease,

And autumn grows, autumn in every thing. 45

Eh? the whole seems to fall into a shape

As if I saw alike my work and self

And all that I was born to be and do,

A twilight-piece. Love, we are in God's hand.<sup>3</sup>

How strange now looks the life he makes us lead; 50

So free we seem, so fettered fast we are!

I feel he laid the fetter: let it lie!

This chamber for example—turn your head—

All that's behind us! You don't understand

Nor care to understand about my art, 55

But you can hear at least when people speak:

And that cartoon, the second from the door

—It is the thing, Love! so such things should be—

Behold Madonna!—I am bold to say.

I can do with my pencil what I know, 60

What I see, what at bottom of my heart

I wish for, if I ever wish so deep—

Do easily, too—when I say, perfectly,

I do not boast, perhaps: yourself are judge

Who listened to the Legate's talk last week, 65

And just as much they used to say in France.

At any rate 'tis easy, all of it!

No sketches first, no studies, that's long past:

I do what many dream of all their lives,

—Dream? strive to do, and agonize to do, 70

And fail in doing. I could count twenty such

On twice your fingers, and not leave this town,

Who strive—you don't know how the others
strive

To paint a little thing like that you smeared

Carelessly passing with your robes afloat, — 75

Yet do much less, so much less, Someone says,

(I know his name, no matter)—so much less!

Well, less is more,<sup>4</sup> Lucrezia: I am judged.

There burns a truer light of God in them,

In their vexed beating stuffed and stopped-up
brain, 80

Heart, or whate'er else, than goes on to prompt

This low-pulsed forthright craftsman's hand of mine.

Their works drop groundward, but themselves,
I know,

Reach many a time a heaven that's shut to me,

Enter and take their place there sure enough, 85

<sup>3</sup> This is not piety, but Andrea's characteristic way of evading responsibility. Later he attributes his comparative failure to his wife (125), and then, suddenly shifting to the other view, declares that after all "incentives come from the soul's self."

<sup>4</sup> Vasari says of Andrea: "Had this master possessed a somewhat bolder and more elevated mind, had he been as much distinguished for higher qualifications as he was for genius and depth of judgment in the art he practised, he would beyond all doubt have been without an equal."

Though they come back and cannot tell the
world.

My works are nearer heaven, but I sit here.

The sudden blood of these men! at a word—

Praise them, it boils, or blame them, it boils too.

I, painting from myself and to myself, 90

Know what I do, am unmoved by men's blame

Or their praise either. Somebody remarks

Morello's<sup>5</sup> outline there is wrongly traced,

His hue mistaken; what of that? or else,

Rightly traced and well ordered; what of that?

Speak as they please, what does the mountain
care? 96

Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp,

Or what's a heaven for? All is silver-gray,

Placid and perfect with my art: the worse!

I know both what I want and what might gain; 100

And yet how profitless to know, to sigh

"Had I been two, another and myself,

Our head would have o'erlooked the world—"

No doubt.

Yonder's a work now, of that famous youth

The Urbinate<sup>6</sup> who died five years ago. 105

('Tis copied, George Vasari sent it me.)

Well, I can fancy how he did it all,

Pouring his soul, with kings and popes to see,

Reaching, that heaven might so replenish him,

Above and through his art—for it gives way; 110

That arm is wrongly put—and there again—

A fault to pardon in the drawing's lines,

Its body, so to speak: its soul is right,

He means right—that, a child may understand.

Still, what an arm! and I could alter it: 115

But all the play, the insight and the stretch—

Out of me, out of me! And wherefore out?

Had you enjoined them on me, given me soul,

We might have risen to Rafael, I and you!

Nay, Love, you did give all I asked, I think—

More than I merit, yes, by many times. 121

But had you—oh, with the same perfect brow,

And perfect eyes, and more than perfect mouth,

And the low voice my soul hears, as a bird

The fowler's pipe, and follows to the snare— 125

Had you, with these the same, but brought a mind!

Some women do so. Had the mouth there urged,

"God and the glory! never care for gain."

The present by the future, what is that?

Live for fame, side by side with Agnolo! 130

Rafael is waiting: up to God, all three!"

I might have done it for you. So it seems:

Perhaps not. All is as God overrules.

Beside, incentives come from the soul's self:

The rest avail not. Why do I need you? 135

What wife had Rafael, or has Agnolo?

In this world, who can do a thing, will not;

And who would do it, cannot, I perceive:

Yet the will's somewhat—somewhat, too, the
power—

And thus we half-men struggle. At the end, 140
God, I conclude, compensates, punishes.

<sup>5</sup> A mountain to the north of Florence.

<sup>6</sup> Raphael was so called from his birthplace, Urbino.

<sup>7</sup> Michael Angelo.

'Tis safer for me, if the award be strict,
That I am something underrated here,
Poor this long while, despised, to speak the truth.

I dared not, do you know, leave home all day,
For fear of chancing on the Paris lords. 146
The best is when they pass and look aside;
But they speak sometimes; I must bear it all.
Well may they speak! That Francis, that first
time,

And that long festal year at Fontainebleau! 150
I surely then could sometimes leave the ground,
Put on the glory, Rafael's daily wear,
In that humane great monarch's golden look,—
One finger in his beard or twisted curl
Over his mouth's good mark that made the smile, 155

One arm about my shoulder, round my neck,
The jingle of his gold chain in my ear,
I painting proudly with his breath on me,
All his court round him, seeing with his eyes,
Such frank French eyes, and such a fire of souls 160

Profuse, my hand kept plying by those hearts,—
And, best of all, this, this, this face beyond,
This in the background, waiting on my work,
To crown the issue with a last reward!
A good time, was it not, my kingly days? 165
And had you not grown restless<sup>8</sup> . . . but I know—

'Tis done and past; 'twas right, my instinct
said;

Too live the life grew, golden and not gray,
And I'm the weak-eyed bat no sun should tempt
Out of the grange whose four walls make his
world. 170

How could it end in any other way?
You called me, and I came home to your heart.
The triumph was, to have ended there; then, if I reached it ere the triumph, what is lost?
Let my hands frame your face in your hair's
gold, 175

You beautiful Lucrezia that are mine!
"Rafael did this, Andrea painted that;
The Roman's<sup>9</sup> is the better when you pray,
But still the other's Virgin was his wife"—
Men will excuse me. I am glad to judge 180
Both pictures in your presence; clearer grows
My better fortune, I resolve to think.
For, do you know, Lucrezia, as God lives,
Said one day Agnolo, his very self,
To Rafael . . . I have known it all these years . . . 185

(When the young man was flaming out his thoughts

Upon a palace-wall for Rome to see,
Too lifted up in heart because of it)
"Friend,<sup>10</sup> there's a certain sorry little scrub

<sup>8</sup> In the first edition of his Lives of the Painters, Vasari dwells at some length upon the complaining letter which Andrea's wife wrote to him from Florence. Her "bitter complaints" dressed up "with sweet words" ordered Andrea (as Vasari says) "to resume his chain."

<sup>9</sup> Raphael, who left Florence to settle in Rome about 1508.

<sup>10</sup> In Bocchi's Bellezze di Firenze, Michael Angelo is reported to have spoken thus of Andrea to Raphael. "There is a bit of a manikin in Florence, who, if he Goes up and down our Florence, none cares

how, 190

Who, were he set to plan and execute
As you are, pricked on by your popes and kings,
Would bring the sweat into that brow of yours!"

To Rafael's!—And indeed the arm is wrong.
I hardly dare . . . yet, only you to see, 195
Give the chalk here—quick, thus the line should go!

Ay, but the soul! he's Rafael! rub it out!
Still, all I care for, if he spoke the truth,
(What he? why, who but Michel Agnolo?
Do you forget already words like those?) 200
If really there was such a chance, so lost,—
Is, whether you're—not grateful—but more pleased.

Well, let me think so. And you smile indeed!
This hour has been an hour! Another smile?
If you would sit thus by me every night 205
I should work better, do you comprehend?

I mean that I should earn more, give you more.
See, it is settled dusk now; there's a star;
Morello's gone, the watch-lights show the wall,
The cuc-owls<sup>11</sup> speak the name we call them by.
Come from the window, Love,—come in, at last,
Inside the melancholy little house 212
We built to be so gay with. God is just.

King Francis may forgive me: oft at nights
When I look up from painting, eyes tired out,
The walls become illumined, brick from brick 216
Distinct, instead of mortar, fierce bright gold,
That gold of his I did cement them with!
Let us but love each other. Must you go?
That Cousin here again? he waits outside? 220 Must see you—you, and not with me? Those loans?

More gaming debts to pay? you smiled for that?

Well, let smiles buy me! have you more to spend?

While hand and eye and something of a heart
Are left me, work's my ware, and what's it worth? 225

I'll pay my fancy. Only let me sit
The gray remainder of the evening out,
Idle, you call it, and muse perfectly
How I could paint, were I but back in France,
One picture, just one more—the Virgin's face,
Not yours this time! I want you at my side 231
To hear them—that is, Michel Agnolo—
Judge all I do and tell you of its worth.

Will you? To-morrow, satisfy your friend.
I take the subjects for his corridor, 235
Finish the portrait out of hand—there, there,
And throw him in another thing or two
If he demurs; the whole should prove enough
To pay for this same Cousin's freak. Beside,
What's better and what's all I care about, 240
Get you the thirteen scudi<sup>12</sup> for the ruff!

chanced to be employed in great undertakings as you have happened to be, would compel you to look well about you."

<sup>11</sup> A name applied to the Scops-owl (Scops Giu). Its cry is a clear, metallic, ringing ki-ou.

<sup>12</sup> Scudi, pl. of scudo, a silver coin of the Italian States, about the value of the American dollar.

Love, does that please you? Ah, but what does
he,
The Cousin! what does he to please you more!

I am grown peaceful as old age to-night.
I regret little, I would change still less. 245
Since there my past life lies, why alter it?
The very wrong to Francis!—it is true
I took his coin, was tempted and complied,
And built this house and sinned, and all is said.
My father and my mother died of want.<sup>13</sup> 250
Well, had I riches of my own? you see
How one gets rich! Let each one bear his lot.
They were born poor, lived poor, and poor they
died:

And I have labored somewhat in my time
And not been paid profusely. Some good son
Paint my two hundred pictures—let him try!
No doubt, there's something strikes a balance.

Yes, 257
You loved me quite enough, it seems to-night.
This must suffice me here. What would one have?

In heaven, perhaps, new chances, one more
chance— 260

Four great walls in the New Jerusalem
Meted on each side by the angel's reed,
For Leonard,<sup>14</sup> Rafael, Agnolo and me
To cover—the three first without a wife,
While I have mine! So—still they overcome
Because there's still Lucrezia,—as I choose. 266

Again the Cousin's whistle! Go, my Love.

AN EPISTLE

CONTAINING THE STRANGE MEDICAL EXPERIENCE OF KARSHISH, THE ARAB PHYSICIAN

(From the same)

Karshish, the picker-up of learning's crumbs,
The not-incurious in God's handiwork
(This man's-flesh he hath admirably made,
Blown like a bubble, kneaded like a paste,
To coop up and keep down on earth a space 5
That puff of vapor from his mouth, man's soul)
—To Abib, all-gacious in our art,
Breeder in me of what poor skill I boast,
Like me inquisitive how pricks and cracks Befall the flesh through too much stress and strain, 10

Whereby the wily vapor fain would slip
Back and rejoin its source before the term,—
And aptest in contrivance (under God)
To baffle it by deftly stopping such:—
The vagrant Scholar to his Sage at home 15

<sup>13</sup> Vasari says on this point: "He (Andrea) abandoned his own poor father and mother, . . . and adopted the father and sisters of his wife in their stead; inasmuch that all who knew the facts mourned over him, and he soon began to be as much avoided as he had previously been sought after."

<sup>14</sup> Leonardo da Vinci (1452-1519). While on earth, this great painter, sculptor, architect, and engineer came more than once into direct competition with Michael Angelo, who is said to have regarded his older rival with jealous dislike.

Sends greeting (health and knowledge, fame with peace)

Three samples of true snake-stone—rarer still,
One of the other sort, the melon-shaped,
(But fitter, pounded fine, for charms than drugs)

And writeth now the twenty-second time. 20

My journeyings were brought to Jericho:
Thus I resume. Who studious in our art
Shall count a little labor unrepaid?

I have shed sweat enough, left flesh and bone
On many a flinty furlong of this land. 25

Also, the country-side is all on fire
With rumors of a marching hitherward:

Some say Vespasian<sup>1</sup> cometh, some, his son.

A black lynx snarled and pricked a tufted ear;
Lust of my blood inflamed his yellow balls: 30

I cried and threw my staff and he was gone.

Twice have the robbers stripped and beaten me,

And once a town declared me for a spy;

But at the end, I reach Jerusalem,

Since this poor covert where I pass the night, 35

This Bethany, lies scarce the distance thence

A man with plague-sores at the third degree

Runs till he drops down dead. Thou laughest
here!

'Sooth, it elates me, thus reposed and safe,

To void the stuffing of my travel-scrip 40

And share with thee whatever Jewry yields.

A viscid choler is observable

In tertians,<sup>2</sup> I was nearly bold to say;

And falling-sickness<sup>3</sup> hath a happier cure

Than our school wots of: there's a spider here 45

Weaves no web, watches on the ledge of tombs,

Sprinkled with mottles on an ash-gray back;

Take five and drop them . . . but who knows his mind,

The Syrian runagate I trust this to?

His service payeth me a sublimate 50

Blown up his nose to help the ailing eye.

Best wait: I reach Jerusalem at morn,

There set in order my experiences,

Gather what most deserves, and give thee all—

Or I might add, Judea's gum-tragacanth 55

Scales off in purer flakes, shines clearer-grained,

Cracks 'twixt the pestle and the porphyry,

In fine exceeds our produce. Scalp-disease

Confounds me, crossing so with leprosy—

Thou hadst admired one sort I gained at Zoar—

But zeal outruns discretion. Here I end. 61

Yet stay: my Syrian blinketh gratefully,

Protesteth his devotion is my price—

Suppose I write what harms not, though he steal?

I half resolve to tell thee, yet I blush, 65

What set me off a-writing first of all.

An itch I had, a sting to write, a tang!

For, be it this town's barrenness,—or else

The Man had something in the look of him—

<sup>1</sup> Vespasian, was Emperor of Rome 70-79 A. D. By the allusion to him, and to the rumored advance of the Roman army against Jerusalem, Browning indicates the date of Karshish' letter. The destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, then imminent, took place in 70 A. D.

<sup>2</sup> A fever recurring every third day.

<sup>3</sup> Epilepsy.

His case has struck me far more than 'tis worth.
 So, pardon if—(lest presently I lose, 71
 In the great press of novelty at hand,
 The care and pains this somehow stole from me)
 I bid thee take the thing while fresh in mind,
 Almost in sight—for, wilt thou have the truth?
 The very man is gone from me but now, 76
 Whose ailment is the subject of discourse.
 Thus then, and let thy better wit help all!

'Tis but a case of mania—sub-induced
 By epilepsy, at the turning-point 80
 Of trance prolonged unduly some three days:
 When, by the exhibition of some drug
 Or spell, exorcisation, stroke of art
 Unknown to me and which 'twere well to know,
 The evil thing, out-breaking, all at once 85
 Left the man whole and sound of body indeed,—
 But, flinging (so to speak) life's gates too wide,
 Making a clear house of it too suddenly,
 The first conceit that entered might inscribe
 Whatever it was minded on the wall 90
 So plainly at that vantage, as it were,
 (First come, first served) that nothing subsequent

Attaineth to erase those fancy-scrawls
 The just—returned and new-established soul
 Hath gotten now so thoroughly by heart 95
 That henceforth she will read or these or none.
 And first—the man's own firm conviction rests
 That he was dead (in fact they buried him)
 —That he was dead and then restored to life
 By a Nazarene physician of his tribe: 100
 —'Sayeth, the same bade "Rise," and he did rise.

"Such cases are diurnal,"<sup>4</sup> thou wilt cry.
 Not so this figment!—not, that such a fume,
 Instead of giving way to time and health,
 Should eat itself into the life of life, 105
 As saffron tingeth flesh, blood, bones and all!
 For see, how he takes up the after-life.
 The man—it is one Lazarus a Jew,
 Sanguine, proportioned, fifty years of age,
 The body's habit wholly laudable, 110
 As much, indeed, beyond the common health
 As he were made and put aside to show.
 Think, could we penetrate by any drug
 And bathe the wearied soul and worried flesh,
 And bring it clear and fair, by three days' 115
 sleep!
 Whence has the man the balm that brightens
 all?

This grown man eyes the world now like a child.
 Some elders of his tribe, I should premise,
 Led in their friend, obedient as a sheep,
 To bear my inquisition. While they spoke, 120
 Now sharply, now with sorrow,—told the case,—
 He listened not except I spoke to him,
 But folded his two hands and let them talk,
 Watching the flies that buzzed: and yet no fool.
 And that's a sample how his years must go. 125
 Look, if a beggar, in fixed middle-life,
 Should find a treasure,—can he use the same
 With straitened habits and with tastes starved small,

<sup>4</sup>i. e. of daily occurrence.

And take at once to his impoverished brain
 The sudden element that changes things, 130
 That sets the undreamed-of rapture at his hand
 And puts the cheap old joy in the scorned dust?
 Is he not such an one as moves to mirth—
 Warily parsimonious, when no need,
 Wasteful as drunkenness at undue times? 135
 All prudent counsel as to what befits
 The golden mean, is lost on such an one:
 The man's fantastic will is the man's law.
 So here—we call the treasure knowledge, say,
 Increased beyond the fleshy faculty— 140
 Heaven opened to a soul while yet on earth,
 Earth forced on a soul's use while seeing heaven:
 The man is witless of the size, the sum,
 The value in proportion of all things,
 Or whether it be little or be much. 145
 Discourse to him of prodigious armaments
 Assembled to besiege his city now,
 And of the passing of a mule with gourds—
 'Tis one! Then take it on the other side, 149
 Speak of some trifling fact,—he will gaze rapt
 With stupor at its very littleness
 (Far as I see) as if in that indeed
 He caught prodigious import, whole results;
 And so will turn to us the by-standers
 In ever the same stupor (note this point) 155
 That we too see not with his opened eyes.
 Wonder and doubt come wrongly into play,
 Preposterously, at cross purposes.
 Should his child sicken unto death,—why, look
 For scarce abatement of his cheerfulness, 160
 Or pretermission of the daily craft!
 While a word, gesture, glance from that same
 child

At play or in the school or laid asleep,
 Will startle him to an agony of fear,
 Exasperation, just as like. Demand 165
 The reason why—" 'tis but a word," object—
 "A gesture"—he regards thee as our lord
 Who lived there in the pyramid alone,
 Looked at us (dost thou mind?) when, being young,
 We both would unadvisedly recite 170
 Some charm's beginning, from that book of his,
 Able to bid the sun throb wide and burst
 All into stars, as suns grown old are wont.
 Thou and the child have each a veil alike
 Thrown o'er your heads, from under which ye both 175
 Stretch your blind hands and trifle with a match

Over a mine of Greek fire, did ye know!
 He holds on firmly to some thread of life—
 (It is the life to lead perforce)
 Which runs across some vast distracting orb 180
 Of glory on either side that meagre thread,
 Which, conscious of, he must not enter yet—
 The spiritual life around the earthly life:
 The law of that is known to him as this,
 His heart and brain move there, his feet stay
 here. 185

So is the man perplex with impulses
 Sudden to start off crosswise, not straight on,
 Proclaiming what is right and wrong across,

And not along, this black thread through the blaze—
 "It should be" balked by "here it cannot be." 190
 And oft the man's soul springs into his face
 As if he saw again and heard again
 His sage that bade him "Rise," and he did rise.
 Something, a word, a tick o' the blood within Admonishes: then back he sinks at once 195
 To ashes, who was very fire before,
 In sedulous recurrence to his trade
 Whereby he earneth him the daily bread;
 And studiously the humbler for that pride,
 Professedly the faultier that he knows 200
 God's secret, while he holds the thread of life.
 Indeed the especial marking of the man
 Is prone submission to the heavenly will—Seeing it, what it is, and why it is.
 'Sayeth, he will wait patient to the last 205
 For that same death which must restore his being
 To equilibrium, body loosening soul
 Divorced even now by premature full growth:
 He will live, nay, it pleaseth him to live
 So long as God please, and just how God please. 210
 He even seeketh not to please God more
 (Which meaneth, otherwise) than as God please.
 Hence, I perceive not he affects to preach
 The doctrine of his sect whate'er it be.
 Make proselytes as madmen thirst to do: 215
 How can he give his neighbor the real ground,
 His own conviction? Ardent as he is—
 Call his great truth a lie, why, still the old
 "Be it as God please" reassureth him.
 I probed the sore as thy disciple should: 220
 "How, beast," said I, "this stolid carelessness
 Sufficeeth thee, when Rome is on her march
 To stamp out like a little spark thy town,
 Thy tribe, thy crazy tale and thee at once?"
 He merely looked with his large eyes on me. 225
 The man is apathetic, you deduce?
 Contrariwise, he loves both old and young,
 Able and weak, affects the very brutes
 And birds—how say I? flowers of the field—
 As a wise workman recognizes tools 230
 In a master's workshop, loving what they make.
 Thus is the man as harmless as a lamb:
 Only impatient, let him do his best,
 At ignorance and carelessness and sin—
 An indignation which is promptly curbed: 235
 As when in certain travel I have feigned
 To be an ignoramus in our art
 According to some preconceived design,
 And happed to hear the land's practitioners
 Steeped in conceit sublimed by ignorance, 240
 Prattle fantastically on disease,
 Its cause and cure—and I must hold my peace!

Thou wilt object— Why have I not ere this Sought out the sage himself, the Nazarene
 Who wrought this cure, inquiring at the source, 245
 Conferring with the frankness that befits?

Alas! it grieveth me, the learned leech
 Perished in a tumult many years ago,
 Accused,—our learning's fate,—of wizardry,
 Rebellion, to the setting up a rule 250
 And creed prodigious as described to me.
 His death, which happened when the earth-quake fell (Pregifuring, as soon appeared the loss
 To occult learning in our lord the sage
 Who lived there in the pyramid alone) 255
 Was wrought by the mad people—that's their wont!
 On vain recourse, as I conjecture it,
 To his tried virtue, for miraculous help—
 How could he stop the earthquake? That's their way!
 The other imputations must be lies; 260
 But take one, though I loath to give it thee,
 In mere respect for any good man's fame.
 (And after all, our patient Lazarus
 Is stark mad; should we count on what he says?
 Perhaps not: though in writing to a leech 265
 'Tis well to keep back nothing of a case.)
 This man so cured regards the curer, then,
 As—God forgive me! who but God himself,
 Creator and sustainer of the world,
 That came and dwelt in flesh on it a while! 270
 —'Sayeth that such an one was born and lived,
 Taught, healed the sick, broke bread at his own house,
 Then died, with Lazarus by, for aught I know,
 And yet was . . . what I said nor choose repeat,
 And must have so avouched himself, in fact, 275
 In hearing of this very Lazarus
 Who saith—but why all this of what he saith?
 Why write of trivial matters, things of price
 Calling at every moment for remark?
 I noticed on the margin of a pool 280
 Blue-flowering borage, the Aleppo sort,
 Aboundeth, very nitrous. It is strange!
 Thy pardon for this long and tedious case,
 Which, now that I review it, needs must seem Unduly dwelt on, prolixly set forth! 285
 Nor I myself discern in what is writ
 Good cause for the peculiar interest
 And awe indeed this man has touched me with.
 Perhaps the journey's end, the weariness
 Had wrought upon me first. I met him thus: 290
 I crossed a ridge of short sharp broken hills
 Like an old lion's cheek teeth. Out there came
 A moon made like a face with certain spots
 Multiform, manifold, and menacing:
 Then a wind rose behind me. So we met 295
 In this old sleepy town at unaware,
 The man and I. I send thee what is writ.
 Regard it as a chance, a matter risked
 To this ambiguous Syrian—he may lose,
 Or steal, or give it thee with equal good. 300
 Jerusalem's repose shall make amends
 For time this letter wastes, thy time and mine;
 Till when, once more thy pardon and farewell!

The very God! think, Abib; dost thou think?
 So, the All-Great, were the All-Loving too—305
 So, through the thunder comes a human voice

Saying, "O heart I made, a heart beats here!
Face, my hands fashioned, see it in myself!
Thou hast no power nor mayst conceive of mine:
But love I gave thee, with myself to love, 310
And thou must love me who have died for thee!"
The madman saith He said so: it is strange.

A TOCCATA<sup>1</sup> OF GALUPPI'S

(From the same)

I

O Galuppi, Baldassaro,<sup>2</sup> this is very sad to find!
I can hardly misconceive you; it would prove me deaf and blind;
But, although I take your meaning, 'tis with such a heavy mind!

II

Here you come with your old music, and here's all the good it brings.
What, they lived once thus at Venice where the merchants were the kings, 5
Where Saint Mark's is, where the Doges used to wed the sea with rings?

III

Ay, because the sea's the street there; and 'tis arched by . . . what you call . . . Shylock's bridge with houses on it, where they kept the carnival:
I was never out of England—it's as if I saw it
all.

IV

Did young people take their pleasure when the sea was warm in May? 10
Balls and masks begun at midnight, burning ever to mid-day,
When they made up fresh adventures for the morrow, do you say?

V

Was a lady such a lady, cheeks so round and lips so red,—
On her neck the small face buoyant, like a bellflower on its bed,
O'er the breast's superb abundance where a man might base his head? 15

VI

Well, and it was graceful of them—they'd break talk off and afford —She, to bite her mask's black velvet—he, to finger on his sword,
While you sat and played Toccatas, stately at the clavichord?<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Toccata, from Ital. toccare (to touch), is the name of a kind of instrumental composition originating in the 17th century; as its name implies it is intended to exhibit the touch and skilful execution of the performer.

<sup>2</sup> A Venetian composer (1706-1784); he was particularly noted for his comic operas, and was organist of St. Mark's Cathedral in Venice.

<sup>3</sup> An early and simpler form of the piano.

VII

What? Those lesser thirds so plaintive,<sup>4</sup> sixths diminished, sigh on sigh,
Told them something? Those suspensions, those solutions—"Must we die?" 20
Those commiserating sevenths—"Life might last! we can but try!"

VIII

"Were you happy?"—"Yes."—"And are you still as happy?"—"Yes. And you?"
—"Then, more kisses!"—"Did I stop them, when a million seemed so few?"
Hark, the dominant's persistence till it must be answered to!

IX

So, an octave struck the answer. Oh, they praised you, I dare say! 25
"Brave Galuppi! that was music! good alike at grave and gay!
I can always leave off talking when I hear a master play!"

X

Then they left you for their pleasure: till in due time, one by one,
Some with lives that came to nothing, some
with deeds as well undone,
Death stepped tacitly, and took them where they never see the sun. 30

XI

But when I sit down to reason, think to take my stand nor swerve,
While I triumph o'er a secret wrung from nature's close reserve,
In you come with your cold music till I creep through every nerve.

XII

Yes, you, like a ghostly cricket, creaking where a house was burned:
"Dust and ashes, dead and done with, Venice spent what Venice earned. 35
The soul, doubtless, is immortal—where a soul can be discerned.

XIII

"Yours for instance: you know physics, something of geology,
Mathematics are your pastime; souls shall rise
in their degree;
Butterflies may dread extinction,—you'll not die, it cannot be!

XIV

"As for Venice and her people, merely born to bloom and drop, 40
Here on earth they bore their fruitage, mirth
and folly were the crop:
What of soul was left, I wonder, when the kissing had to stop?

<sup>4</sup> For a discussion of the character of Galuppi's music, and an explanation of the technical musical terms, see Porter and Clarke's ed. of Browning (Crowell) Vol. IV. 369. English Browning Society Papers, Part IX, and Part XI; Poet Lore, V. p. 260, and II., p. 546; the various handbooks on Browning may also be consulted.

XV

"Dust and ashes!" So you creak it, and I want the heart to scold.
Dear dead women, with such hair, too—what's become of all the gold Used to hang and brush their bosoms? I feel chilly and grown old. 45

SAUL<sup>1</sup>

(From the same)

I

Said Abner,<sup>2</sup> "At last thou art come! Ere I tell, ere thou speak, Kiss my cheek, wish me well!" Then I<sup>3</sup> wished it, and did kiss his cheek.
And he, "Since the King, O my friend! for thy countenance sent,
Neither drunken nor eaten have we; nor until
from his tent
Thou return with the joyful assurance the King liveth yet, 5
Shall our lip with the honey be bright, with the water be wet.
For out of the black mid-tent's silence, a space of three days,
Not a sound hath escaped to thy servants, of prayer nor of praise,
To betoken that Saul and the Spirit have ended their strife,
And that, faint in his triumph, the monarch
sinks back upon life. 10

II

"Yet now my heart leaps, O beloved! God's child with his dew
On thy gracious gold hair, and those lilies still living and blue
Just broken to twine round thy harp-strings, as if no wild heat
Were now raging to torture the desert!"

III

Then I, as was meet, 15
Knelt down to the God of my fathers, and rose on my feet,
And ran o'er the sand burnt to powder. The tent was unlooped;
I pulled up the spear that obstructed, and under
I stooped;
Hands and knees on the slippery grass-patch,
all withered and gone,
That extends to the second enclosure, I groped
my way on 20
Till I felt where the foldskirts fly open. Then once more I prayed,
And opened the foldskirts and entered, and was not afraid
But spoke, "Here is David, thy servant!"
And no voice replied.

<sup>1</sup> This poem is founded on I Samuel, xvi. 14–23. The first nine sections of Saul appeared in 1845.

<sup>2</sup> First cousin of Saul, and commander-in-chief of the army.

<sup>3</sup> I. e. David, who has been brought from tending the sheep to cast out the evil spirit which troubles Saul by playing to him on the harp.

At the first I saw naught but the blackness; but soon I descried
A something more black than the blackness—
the vast, the upright 25
Main prop which sustains the pavilion: and slow into sight
Grew a figure against it, gigantic and blackest of all.
Then a sunbeam, that burst through the tent-roof, showed Saul.

IV

He stood as erect as that tent-prop, both arms stretched out wide
On the great cross-support in the centre, that goes to each side; 30
He relaxed not a muscle, but hung there as,
caught in his pangs
And waiting his change, the king serpent all heavily hangs,
Far away from his kind, in the pine, till deliverance come
With the spring-time,—so agonized Saul, drear and stark, blind and dumb.

V

Then I tuned my harp,—took off the lilies we twine round its chords 35
Lest they snap 'neath the stress of the noon-tide—those sunbeams like swords!
And I first played the tune all our sheep know,
as, one after one,
So docile they come to the pen-door till folding be done.
They are white, and untorn by the bushes, for lo, they have fed
Where the long grasses stifle the water within the stream's bed; 40
And now one after one seeks its lodging, as star follows star
Into eve and the blue far above us,—so blue and so far!

VI

—Then the tune, for which quails on the corn-land will each leave his mate
To fly after the player; then, what makes the crickets elate
Till for boldness they fight one another; and then, what has weight 45
To set the quick jerboa<sup>4</sup> a-musing outside his sand house—
There are none such as he for a wonder, half bird and half mouse!
God made all the creatures and gave them our love and our fear,
To give sign, we and they are his children, one family here.

VII

Then I played the help-tune of our reapers, their wine-song, when hand 50
Grasps at hand, eye lights eye in good friendship, and great hearts expand

<sup>4</sup> A rodent somewhat resembling a rat, or mouse, but fitted for jumping—like the kangaroo—by the disproportionate length of its hind legs.

And grow one in the sense of this world's life.—
 And then, the last song
 When the dead man is praised on his journey—
 "Bear, bear him along
 With his few faults shut up like dead flowerets!
 Are balm seeds not here
 To console us? The land has none left such as he on the bier. 55
 Oh, would we might keep thee, my brother!"—
 And then, the glad chaunt
 Of the marriage,—first go the young maidens,
 next, she whom we vaunt
 As the beauty, the pride of our dwelling.—And then, the great march Wherein man runs to man to assist him and buttress an arch
 Naught can break; who shall harm them, our friends?—Then, the chorus intoned 60
 As the Levites go up to the altar in glory enthroned.
 But I stopped here: for here in the darkness
 Saul groaned.

VIII

And I paused, held my breath in such silence,
 and listened apart;
 And the tent shook, for mighty Saul shuddered:
 and sparkles 'gan dart
 From the jewels that woke in his turban at once with a start 65
 All its lordly male-sapphires, and rubies courageous at heart.
 So the head: but the body still moved not, still hung there erect.
 And I bent once again to my playing, pursued it unchecked,
 As I sang,—

IX

"Oh, our manhood's prime vigor! No spirit feels waste, 70
 Not a muscle is stopped in its playing nor sinew unbraced.
 Oh, the wild joys of living! the leaping from rock up to rock,
 The strong rending of boughs from the fir-tree,
 the cool silver shock
 Of the plunge in a pool's living water, the hunt
 of the bear,
 And the sultriness showing the lion is couched in his lair. 75
 And the meal, the rich dates yellowed over with gold dust divine,
 And the locust-flesh steeped in the pitcher, the full draught of wine,
 And the sleep in the dried river-channel where bulrushes tell
 That the water was wont to go warbling so softly and well.
 How good is man's life, the mere living! how fit to employ 80
 All the heart and the soul and the senses forever
 in joy!
 Hast thou loved the white locks of thy father, whose sword thou didst guard
 When he trusted thee forth with the armies, for glorious reward?

Didst thou see the thin hands of thy mother,
 held up as men sung
 The low song of the nearly departed, and hear her faint tongue 85
 Joining in while it could to the witness, "Let one more attest,
 I have lived, seen God's hand through a lifetime, and all was for best!"
 Then they sung through their tears in strong triumph, not much, but the rest.
 And thy brothers, the help and the contest, the working whence grew Such result as, from seething grape-bundles, the spirit strained true: 90
 And the friends of thy boyhood—that boyhood of wonder and hope,
 Present promise and wealth of the future beyond the eye's scope,—
 Till lo, thou art grown to a monarch; a people is thine;
 And all gifts, which the world offers singly, on one head combine!
 On one head, all the beauty and strength, love and rage (like the throe 95
 That, a-work in the rock, helps its labor and lets the gold go)
 High ambition and deeds which surpass it, fame crowning them,—all
 Brought to blaze on the head of one creature—
 King Saul!"

X

And lo, with that leap of my spirit,—heart,
 hand, harp, and voice,
 Each lifting Saul's name out of sorrow, each bidding rejoice 100
 Saul's fame in the light it was made for—as when, dare I say,
 The Lord's army, in rapture of service, strains
 through its array,
 And upsoareth the cherubim-chariot—"Saul!"
 cried I, and stopped,
 And waited the thing that should follow. Then Saul, who hung propped
 By the tent's cross-support in the centre, was struck by his name. 105
 Have ye seen when Spring's arrowy summons goes right to the aim,
 And some mountain, the last to withstand her,
 that held (he alone,
 While the vale laughed in freedom and flowers)
 on a broad bust of stone
 A year's snow bound about for a breastplate,— leaves grasp of the sheet?
 Fold on fold all at once it crowds thunderously down to his feet, 110
 And there fronts you, stark, black, but alive
 yet, your mountain of old,
 With his rents, the successive bequeathings of ages untold—
 Yea, each harm got in fighting your battles, each furrow and scar
 Of his head thrust 'twixt you and the tempest—
 all hail, there they are!
 —Now again to be softened with verdure, again hold the nest 115

Of the dove, tempt the goat and its young to the green on his crest
 For their food in the ardors of summer. One long shudder thrilled
 All the tent till the very air tingled, then sank and was stilled
 At the King's self left standing before me, released and aware.
 What was gone, what remained? All to traverse 'twixt hope and despair. 120
 Death was past, life not come: so he waited. A while his right hand
 Held the brow, helped the eyes, left too vacant, forthwith to remand
 To their place what new objects should enter:
 'twas Saul as before.
 I looked up and dared gaze at those eyes, nor was hurt any more Than by slow pallid sunsets in autumn, ye watch from the shore. 125
 At their sad level gaze o'er the ocean—a sun's slow decline
 Over hills which, resolved in stern silence, o'er-lap and intwine
 Base with base to knit strength more intensely:
 so, arm folded arm
 O'er the chest whose slow heavings subsided.

XI

What spell or what charm 130
 (For, a while there was trouble within me), what next should I urge
 To sustain him where song had restored him?—
 Song filled to the verge
 His cup with the wine of this life, pressing all that it yields
 Of mere fruitage, the strength and the beauty:
 beyond, on what fields,
 Glean a vintage more potent and perfect to brighten the eye 135
 And bring blood to the lip, and commend them
 the cup they put by?
 He saith, "It is good;" still he drinks not: he lets me praise life,
 Gives assent, yet would die for his own part.

XII

Then fancies grew rife
 Which had come long ago on the pasture, when round me the sheep 140
 Fed in silence—above, the one eagle wheeled slow as in sleep;
 And I lay in my hollow and mused on the world that might lie
 'Neath his ken, though I saw but the strip
 'twixt the hill and the sky.
 And I laughed—"Since my days are ordained to be passed with my flocks, Let me people at least, with my fancies, the plains and the rocks, 145
 Dream the life I am never to mix with, and image the show
 Of mankind as they live in those fashions I hardly shall know!
 Schemes of life, its best rules and right uses, the courage that gains,

And the prudence that keeps what men strive for." And now these old trains
 Of vague thought came again; I grew surer; so, once more the string 150
 Of my harp made response to my spirit, as thus—

XIII

"Yea, my King,"
 I began—"thou dost well in rejecting mere comforts that spring
 From the mere mortal life held in common by man and by brute:
 In our flesh grows the branch of this life, in our soul it bears fruit. 155
 Thou hast marked the slow rise of the tree,—
 how its stem trembled first Till it passed the kid's lip, the stag's antler;
 then safely outburst
 The fan-branches all round; and thou mindest when these too, in turn Broke a-bloom and the palm-tree seemed perfect: yet more was to learn,
 E'en the good that comes in with the palm-fruit. Our dates shall we slight, 160
 When their juice brings a cure for all sorrow?
 or care for the plight
 Of the palm's self whose slow growth produced them? Not so! stem and branch Shall decay, nor be known in their place, while the palm-wine shall stanch
 Every wound of man's spirit in winter. I pour thee such wine.
 Leave the flesh to the fate it was fit for! the spirit be thine! 165
 By the spirit, when age shall o'ercome thee, thou still shalt enjoy
 More indeed, than at first when, unconscious,
 the life of a boy.
 Crush that life, and behold its wine running!
 Each deed thou hast done
 Dies, revives, goes to work in the world: until e'en as the sun
 Looking down on the earth, though clouds spoil him, though tempests efface, 170
 Can find nothing his own deed produced not,
 must everywhere trace
 The results of his past summer-prime,—so, each ray of thy will,
 Every flash of thy passion and prowess, long over, shall thrill
 Thy whole people, the countless, with ardor, till they too give forth
 A like cheer to their sons: who in turn, fill the South and the North 175
 With the radiance thy deed was the germ of.
 Carouse in the past!
 But the license of age has its limit: thou diest at
 last.
 As the lion when age dims his eyeball, the rose at her height,
 So with man—so his power and his beauty forever take flight.
 No! Again a long draught of my soul-wine!
 Look forth o'er the years! 180
 Thou hast done now with eyes for the actual;
 begin with the seer's!

Is Saul dead? In the depth of the vale make his tomb—bid arise
 A gray mountain of marble heaped four-square,
 till, built to the skies,
 Let it mark where the great First King slumbers: whose fame would ye know?
 Up above see the rock's naked face, where the record shall go 185
 In great characters cut by the scribe,—Such was Saul, so he did;
 With the sages directing the work, by the populace chid,—
 For not half, they'll affirm, is comprised there!
 Which fault to amend,
 In the grove with his kind grows the cedar,
 whereon they shall spend (See, in tablets 'tis level before them) their praise, and record 190
 With the gold of the graver, Saul's story,— the statesman's great word
 Side by side with the poet's sweet comment.
 The river's a-wave
 With smooth paper-reeds grazing each other when prophet-winds rave:
 So the pen gives unborn generations their due and their part
 In thy being! Then, first of the mighty, thank God that thou art!" 195

XIV

And behold while I sang . . . but O Thou who didst grant me, that day,
 And, before it, not seldom hast granted thy help to essay,
 Carry on and complete an adventure,—my shield and my sword
 In that act where my soul was thy servant, thy word was my word,—
 Still be with me, who then at the summit of human endeavor 200
 And scaling the highest, man's thought could, gazed hopeless as ever
 On the new stretch of heaven above me—till,
 mighty to save,
 Just one lift of thy hand cleared that distance—
 God's throne from man's grave!
 Let me tell out my tale to its ending—my voice to my heart
 Which can scarce dare believe in what marvels last night I took part, 205
 As this morning I gather the fragments, alone with my sheep!
 And still fear lest the terrible glory vanish like
 sleep,
 For I wake in the gray dewy covert, while
 Hebron<sup>5</sup> upheaves
 The dawn struggling with night on his shoulder, and Kidron<sup>6</sup> retrieves
 Slow the damage of yesterday's sunshine. 210

<sup>5</sup> The ancient city of Hebron was situated on a hill among the mountains of Judah, some seven miles south of Jerusalem. Browning refers here to the hill on which the city stands.

<sup>6</sup> A dry ravine near Jerusalem, it was often the channel of winter torrents, and is usually called the Brook of Kedron.

XV

I say then,—my song
 While I sang thus, assuring the monarch, and,
 ever more strong
 Made a proffer of good to console him—he slowly resumed
 His old motions and habitudes kingly. The right hand replumed?
 His black locks to their wonted composure,
 adjusted the swathes 215
 Of his turban, and see—the huge sweat that his countenance bathes,
 He wipes off with the robe; and he girds now
 his loins as of yore,
 And feels slow for the armlets of price, with the clasp set before.
 He is Saul, ye remember in glory,—ere error had bent
 The broad brow from the daily communion;
 and still, though much spent 220
 Be the life and the bearing that front you, the same, God did choose,
 To receive what a man may waste, desecrate,
 never quite lose.
 So sank he along by the tent-prop, till, stayed by the pile
 Of his armor and war-cloak and garments, he leaned there a while,
 And sat out my singing—one arm round the tent-prop, to raise 225
 His bent head, and the other hung slack—till
 I touched on the praise
 I foresaw from all men in all time, to the man patient there;
 And thus ended, the harp falling forward.
 Then first I was 'ware
 That he sat, as I say, with my head just above his vast knees
 Which were thrust out on each side around me, like oak-roots which please 230
 To encircle a lamb when it slumbers. I looked up to know
 If the best I could do had brought solace: he spoke not, but slow Lifted up the hand slack at his side, till he laid it with care
 Soft and grave, but in mild settled will, on my brow: through my hair
 The large fingers were pushed, and he bent back my head, with kind power— 235
 All my face back, intent to peruse it, as men do a flower.
 Thus held he me there with his great eyes that scrutinized mine—
 And oh, all my heart how it loved him! but where was the sign?
 I yearned—"Could I help thee, my father,
 inventing a bliss,
 I would add, to that life of the past, both the future and this; 240
 I would give thee new life altogether, as good,
 ages hence,
 As this moment,—had love but the warrant,
 love's heart to dispense!"

<sup>7</sup> Rearranged, as a bird preens its feathers.

XVI

Then the truth came upon me. No harp more—no song more! outbroke—

XVII

"I have gone the whole round of creation: I saw and I spoke:
I, a work of God's hand for that purpose, received in my brain 245
And pronounced on the rest of his handwork—returned him again
His creation's approval or censure: I spoke as I saw:

I report, as a man may of God's work—all's
love, yet all's law.

Now I lay down the judgeship he lent me.
Each faculty tasked

To perceive him, has gained an abyss, where a dewdrop was asked. 250

Have I knowledge? confounded it shrivels at Wisdom laid bare.

Have I forethought? how purblind, how blank,
to the Infinite Care!

Do I task any faculty highest, to image success?
I but open my eyes,—and perfection, no more
and no less,

In the kind I imagined, full-fronts me, and God is seen God 255

In the star, in the stone, in the flesh, in the soul and the clod.

And thus looking within and around me, I ever renew

(With that stoop of the soul which in bending upraises it too)

The submission of man's nothing-perfect to God's all-complete,

As by each new obeisance in spirit, I climb to his feet. 260

Yet with all this abounding experience, this deity known,

I shall dare to discover some province, some gift of my own.

There's a faculty pleasant to exercise, hard to hoodwink,

I am fain to keep still in abeyance (I laugh as I think)

Lest, insisting to claim and parade in it, wot
ye, I worst 265

E'en the Giver in one gift.—Behold, I could love if I durst!

But I sink the pretension as fearing a man may o'ertake

God's own speed in the one way of love: I abstain from love's sake.

—What, my soul? see thus far and no farther?
when doors great and small,

Nine and ninety flew ope at our touch, should the hundredth appal? 270

In the least things have faith, yet distrust in the greatest of all?

Do I find love so full in my nature, God's ultimate gift,

That I doubt his own love can compete with it?
Here the parts shift?

Here, the creature surpass the Creator,—the end, what Began?

Would I fain in my impotent yearning do all for this man, 275

And dare doubt he alone shall not help him, who yet alone can?

Would it ever have entered my mind, the bare will, much less power,

To bestow on this Saul what I sang of, the marvellous dower

Of the life he was gifted and filled with? to make such a soul,

Such a body, and then such an earth for insphering the whole? 280

And doth it not enter my mind (as my warm tears attest)

These good things being given, to go on, and give one more, the best?

Ay, to save and redeem and restore him, maintain at the height

This perfection,—succeed with life's dayspring, death's minute of night?

Interpose at the difficult minute, snatch Saul
the mistake, 285

Saul the failure, the ruin he seems now,—and bid him awake

From the dream, the probation, the prelude, to find himself set

Clear and safe in new light and new life,—a new harmony yet

To be run and continued, and ended—who knows?—or endure!

The man taught enough, by life's dream, of the rest to make sure; 290

By the pain-throb, triumphantly winning intensified bliss,

And the next world's reward and repose, by the struggles in this.

XVIII

"I believe it! 'Tis thou, God, that givest, 'tis I who receive:

In the first is the last, in thy will is my power to believe.

All's one gift: thou canst grant it moreover, as prompt to my prayer 295

As I breathe out this breath, as I open these arms to the air.

From thy will, stream the worlds, life and nature, thy dread Sabaoth:<sup>3</sup>

I will?—the mere atoms despise me! Why am
I not loth

To look that, even that in the face too? Why is it I dare

Think but lightly of such impuissance? What stops my despair? 300

This;—'tis not what man Does which exalts him, but what man Would do!

See the King—I would help him but cannot,
the wishes fall through.

Could I wrestle to raise him from sorrow, grow poor to enrich,

To fill up his life, starve my own out, I would—knowing which,

I know that my service is perfect. Oh, speak through me now! 305

<sup>3</sup> Sabaoth, from the Hebrew word for armies or hosts.
Life and nature are here called the hosts of God.

Would I suffer for him that I love? So wouldst thou—so wilt thou!
 So shall crown thee the topmost, ineffablest, uttermost crown—
 And thy love fill infinitude wholly, nor leave up nor down
 One spot for the creature to stand in! It is by no breath,
 Turn of eye, wave of hand, that salvation joins issue with death! 310
 As thy Love is discovered almighty, almighty be proved Thy power, that exists with and for it, of being Beloved!
 He who did most, shall bear most; the strongest shall stand the most weak.
 'Tis the weakness in strength, that I cry for! my flesh, that I seek
 In the Godhead! I seek and I find it. O Saul, it shall be 315
 A Face like my face that receives thee; a Man like to me,
 Thou shalt love and be loved by, forever: a Hand like this hand Shall throw open the gates of new life to thee! See the Christ stand!"

XIX

I know not too well how I found my way home in the night.
 There were witnesses, cohorts about me, to left and to right, 320
 Angels, powers, the unuttered, unseen, the alive, the aware:
 I repressed, I got through them as hardly, as strugglingly there,
 As a runner beset by the populace famished for news—
 Life or death. The whole earth was awakened, hell loosed with her crews;
 And the stars of night beat with emotion, and tingled and shot 325
 Out in fire the strong pain of pent knowledge: but I fainted not,
 For the Hand still impelled me at once and supported, suppressed
 All the tumult, and quenched it with quiet, and holy behest,
 Till the rapture was shut in itself, and the earth sank to rest.
 Anon at the dawn, all that trouble had withered from earth— 330
 Not so much, but I saw it die out in the day's tender birth;
 In the gathered intensity brought to the gray of the hills;
 In the shuddering forests' held breath; in the sudden wind-thrills;
 In the startled wild beasts that bore off, each with eye sidling still Though averted with wonder and dread; in the birds stiff and chill 335
 That rose heavily as I approached them, made stupid with awe:
 E'en the serpent that slid away silent,—he felt the new law.

The same stared in the white humid faces upturned by the flowers;
 The same worked in the heart of the cedar and moved the vine-bowers:
 And the little brooks witnessing murmured, persistent and low, 340
 With their obstinate, all but hushed voices—"E'en so, it is so!"

PROSPICE<sup>1</sup>(From Dramatis Personæ, 1864)

Fear death?—to feel the fog in my throat,
 The mist in my face,
 When the snows begin, and the blasts denote
 I am nearing the place,
 The power of the night, the press of the storm, 5
 The post of the foe;
 Where he stands, the Arch Fear in a visible form,
 Yet the strong man must go;
 For the journey is done and the summit attained,
 And the barriers fall, 10
 Though a battle's to fight ere the guerdon be gained,
 The reward of it all.
 I was ever a fighter, so—one fight more,
 The best and the last!
 I would hate that death bandaged my eyes, and forebore, 15
 And bade me creep past.

No! let me taste the whole of it, fare like my peers,
 The heroes of old,
 Bear the brunt, in a minute pay glad life's arrears
 Of pain, darkness and cold. 20
 For sudden the worst turns the best to the brave,
 The black minute's at end,
 And the elements' rage, the fiend-voices that rave,
 Shall dwindle, shall blend,
 Shall change, shall become first a peace out of pain, 25
 Then a light, then thy breast,
 O thou soul of my soul! I shall clasp thee again,
 And with God be the rest!

RABBI BEN EZRA<sup>1</sup>

(From the same)

I

Grow old along with me!
 The best is yet to be,
 The last of life, for which the first was made:

<sup>1</sup> Prospice (Look forward) was written in the autumn of 1861, shortly after the death of Mrs. Browning. The passage from Dante that Browning wrote in his wife's Testament might be taken as an expression of the essence of this poem: "Thus I believe, thus I affirm, thus I am certain it is, that from this life I shall pass to another better, there, where the lady lives of whom my soul was enamoured."

<sup>1</sup> Rabbi Ben Ezra is but a mouthpiece for Browning.

Our times are in His hand
Who saith, "A whole I planned, 5
Youth shows but half; trust God: see all, nor be afraid!"

II

Not that, amassing flowers,
Youth sighed, "Which rose make ours,
Which lily leave and then as best recall?"
Not that, admiring stars, 10
It yearned, "Nor Jove, nor Mars;
Mine be some figured flame which blends, transcends them all!"

III

Not for such hopes and fears
Annulling youth's brief years,
Do I remonstrate; folly wide the mark! 15
Rather I prize the doubt
Low kinds exist without,
Finished and finite clods, untroubled by a spark.

IV

Poor vaunt of life indeed,
Were man but formed to feed 20
On joy, to solely seek and find and feast;
Such feasting ended, then
As sure an end to men;
Irks care the crop-full bird? Frets doubt the maw-crammed beast?

V

Rejoice we are allied 25
To That which doth provide
And not partake, effect and not receive!
A spark disturbs our clod;
Nearer we hold of God
Who gives, than of His tribes that take, I must believe. 30

VI

Then, welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids nor sit nor stand but go!
Be our joys three-parts pain!
Strive, and hold cheap the strain; 35
Learn, nor account the pang; dare, never grudge
the throe!

VII

For thence,—a paradox
Which comforts while it mocks,—
Shall life succeed in that it seems to fail:
What I aspired to be, 40
And was not, comforts me:
A brute I have been, but would not sink
i' the scale.

himself. Nevertheless the Jewish teacher who is supposed to be imparting to youth the ultimate wisdom of age is not an imaginary person, but a man whose views, so far as we can judge, were really similar to those the poet has put into his mouth. Rabbi Ben Ezra, whose real name is said to have been Abraham ben Meir ben Ezra, was one of the most distinguished Jewish scholars and Old Testament commentators of the Middle Ages. His view of life was lofty; to him the only reality was spirit, and he regarded material things as of very minor importance.

VIII

What is he but a brute
Whose flesh hath soul to suit,
Whose spirit works lest arms and legs want
play? 45
To man, propose this test—
Thy body at its best,
How far can that project thy soul on its lone
way?

IX

Yet gifts should prove their use:
I own the Past profuse 50
Of power each side, perfection every turn:
Eyes, ears took in their dole,
Brain treasured up the whole;
Should not the heart beat once "How good to live and learn?"

X

Not once beat "Praise be Thine! 55
I see the whole design,
I, who saw Power, see now Love perfect too:<sup>2</sup>
Perfect I call Thy plan:
Thanks that I was a man!
Maker, remake complete,—I trust what Thou shalt do!" 60

XI

For pleasant is this flesh;
Our soul, in its rose-mesh
Pulled ever to the earth, still yearns for rest:
Would we some prize might hold
To match those manifold 65
Possessions of the brute,—gain most, as we did best!

XII

Let us not always say,
"Spite of this flesh to-day
I strove, made head, gained ground upon the whole!"
As the bird wings and sings, 70
Let us cry "All good things
Are ours, nor soul helps flesh more, now, than flesh helps soul!"

XIII

Therefore I summon age
To grant youth's heritage,
Life's struggle having so far reached its term: 75
Thence shall I pass, approved
A man, for aye removed
From the developed brute; a God though in the germ.

XIV

And I shall thereupon
Take rest, ere I be gone 80
Once more on my adventure brave and new:
Fearless and unperplexed,
When I wage battle next,
What weapons to select, what armor to indue.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> This idea that Love as well as Power is to be discerned as a motive force in the universe, more than once alluded to by Browning, is made the main theme of "Reverie" in Asolando.

<sup>3</sup> In the original sense of to put on.

XV

Youth ended, I shall try 85
 My gain or loss thereby;
 Leave the fire-ashes, what survives is gold:
 And I shall weigh the same,
 Give life its praise or blame:
 Young, all lay in dispute; I shall know, being
 old. 90

XVI

For note, when evening shuts,
 A certain moment cuts
 The deed off, calls the glory from the gray:
 A whisper from the west
 Shoots—"Add this to the rest, 95
 Take it and try its worth: here dies another day."

XVII

So, still within this life,
 Though lifted o'er its strife,
 Let me discern, compare, pronounce at last,
 "This rage was right i' the main, 100
 That acquiescence vain:
 The Future I may face now I have proved the Past."

XVIII

For more is not reserved
 To man, with soul just nerved
 To act to-morrow what he learns to-day: 105
 Here, work enough to watch
 The Master work, and catch Hints of the proper craft, tricks of the tool's true play.

XIX

As it was better, youth
 Should strive, through acts uncouth, 110
 Toward making, than repose on aught found made!
 So, better, age, exempt
 From strife, should know, than tempt Further. Thou waitedst age: wait death, nor be afraid!

XX

Enough now, if the Right 115
 And Good and Infinite
 Be named here, as thou callest thy hand thine own,
 With knowledge absolute,
 Subject to no dispute
 From fools that crowded youth, nor let thee feel alone. 120

XXI

Be there, for once and all,
 Severed great minds from small,
 Announced to each his station in the Past!
 Was I, the world arraigned,
 Were they, my soul disdained, 125
 Right? Let age speak the truth and give us peace at last!

XXII

Now, who shall arbitrate?
 Ten men love what I hate,
 Shun what I follow, slight what I receive;

Ten, who in ears and eyes 130
 Match me: we all surmise,
 They, this thing, and I, that: whom shall my soul believe?

XXIII

Not on the vulgar mass
 Called "work," must sentence pass,
 Things done, that took the eye and had the price; 135
 O'er which, from level stand,
 The low world laid its hand,
 Found straightway to its mind, could value in a trice:

XXIV

But all, the world's coarse thumb
 And finger failed to plumb, 140
 So passed in making up the main account;
 All instincts immature,
 All purposes unsure,
 That weighed not as his work, yet swelled the man's amount:

XXV

Thoughts hardly to be packed 145
 Into a narrow act,
 Fancies that broke through language and escaped;
 All I could never be,
 All, men ignored in me,
 This, I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped. 150

XXVI

Ay, note that Potter's wheel,<sup>4</sup>
 That metaphor! and feel
 Why time spins fast, why passive lies our clay,—
 Thou, to whom fools propound,
 When the wine makes its round, 155
 "Since life fleets, all is change; the Past gone, seize to-day!"

XXVII

Fool! All that is, at all,
 Lasts ever, past recall;
 Earth changes, but thy soul and God stand sure:
 What entered into thee, 160
 That was, is, and shall be:
 Time's wheel runs back or stops: Potter and clay endure.

XXVIII

He fixed thee mid this dance
 Of plastic circumstance,
 This Present, thou, forsooth, wouldst fain arrest: 165
 Machinery just meant
 To give thy soul its bent,
 Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.

XXIX

What though the earlier grooves,
 Which ran the laughing loves 170
 Around thy base, no longer pause and press?
 What though, about thy rim,
 Skull-things in order grim
 Grow out, in graver mood, obey the sterner stress?

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Is. lxi. 8, and Jer. xviii. 2-6.

XXX

Look not thou down but up! 175
 To uses of a cup,
 The festal board, lamp's flash and trumpet's
 peal,
 The new wine's foaming flow,
 The Master's lips aglow!
 Thou, heaven's consummate cup, what needst thou with earth's wheel? 180

XXXI

But I need, now as then,
 Thee, God, who moldest men;
 And since, not even while the whirl was worst,
 Did I—to the wheel of life
 With shapes and colors rife, 185
 Bound dizzily—mistake my end, to slake Thy thirst:

XXXII

So, take and use Thy work:
 Amend what flaws may lurk,
 What strain o' the stuff, what warpings past
 the aim!
 My times be in Thy hand!<sup>5</sup> 190
 Perfect the cup as planned!
 Let age approve of youth, and death complete the same!

MARTIN RELPH

(From Dramatic Idylls, First Series, 1879)

*My grandfather says he remembers he saw, when a youngster long ago,
 On a bright May day, a strange old man, with a beard as white as snow,
 Stand on the hill outside our town like a monument
 of woe,
 And, striking his bare bald head the while, sob
 out the reason—so!*

If I last as long as Methuselah I shall never forgive myself: 5
 But—God forgive me, that I pray, unhappy
 Martin Relph,
 As coward, coward I call him—him, yes, him!
 Away from me!
 Get you behind the man I am now, you man that I used to be!

What can have sewed my mouth up, set me
 a-stare, all eyes, no tongue?
 People have urged "You visit a scare too hard on a lad so young!" 10
 You were taken aback, poor boy," they urge,
 "no time to regain your wits:"
 Besides it had maybe cost you life." Ay, there is the cap which fits!

So, cap me, the coward,—thus! No fear! A cuff on the brow does good:
 The feel of it hinders a worm inside which bores
 at the brain for food.

<sup>5</sup> See Psalms, xxiv. 15, "My times are in thy hand."

See now, there certainly seems excuse: for a moment, I trust, dear friends, 15
 The fault was but folly, no fault of mine, or if mine, I have made amends!

For, every day that is first of May, on the hilltop here stand I,
 Martin Relph, and I strike my brow, and publish the reason why,
 When there gathers a crowd to mock the fool.
 No fool, friends, since the bite
 Of a worm inside is worse to bear: pray God I have balked him quite! 20

I'll tell you. Certainly much excuse! It came of the way they cooped
 Us peasantry up in a ring just here, close huddling because tight-hooped
 By the red-coats round us villagers all: they meant we should see the sight
 And take the example,—see, not speak, for speech was the Captain's right.

"You clowns on the slope, beware!" cried he:
 "This woman about to die 25
 Gives by her fate fair warning to such acquaintance as play the spy.
 Henceforth who meddle with matters of state above them perhaps will learn
 That peasants should stick to their plough-tail, leave to King the King's concern.

"Here's a quarrel that sets the land on fire, between King George and his foes:<sup>1</sup>
 What call has a man of your kind—much less, a woman—to interpose? 30
 Yet you needs must be meddling, folk like you,
 not foes—so much the worse!
 The many and loyal should keep themselves unmixed with the few perverse.

"Is the counsel hard to follow? I gave it you plainly a month ago,
 And where was the good? The rebels have learned just all that they need to know.
 Not a month since in we quietly marched: a week and they had the news, 35
 From a list complete of our rank and file to a note of our caps and shoes.

"All about all we did and all we were doing and like to do!
 Only, I catch a letter by luck, and capture who wrote it, too.
 Some of you men look black enough, but the milk-white face demure
 Betokens the finger foul with ink: 'tis a woman who writes, be sure! 40

"Is it 'Dearie, how much I miss your mouth!'— good natural stuff, she pens?
 Some sprinkle of that, for a blind, of course:
 with talk about cocks and hens,

<sup>1</sup> This may mean either George I (1714-1727), or George II (1727-1760), since there were Jacobite uprisings in both of those reigns, the first in 1715, the second in 1745.

How 'robin has built on the apple-tree, and our creeper which came to grief
Through the frost, we feared, is twining afresh round casement in famous leaf.'

"But all for a blind! She soon glides frank into 'Horrid the place is grown 45
With Officers here and Privates there, no nook
we may call our own:
And Farmer Giles has a tribe to house, and lodging will be to seek
For the second Company sure to come ('tis whispered) on Monday week.'

"And so to the end of the chapter! There!
The murder, you see, was out:
Easy to guess how the change of mind in the rebels was brought about! 50 Safe in the trap would they now lie snug, had treachery made no sign:
But treachery meets a just reward, no matter if fools malign!

"That traitors had played us false, was proved
—sent news which fell so pat:
And the murder was out—this letter of love,
the sender of this sent that!
'Tis an ugly job, though, all the same—a hateful, to have to deal 55
With a case of the kind, when a woman's in fault: we soldiers need nerves of steel!

"So I gave her a chance, despatched post-haste
a message to Vincent Parkes Whom she wrote to; easy to find he was, since one of the King's own clerks,
Ay, kept by the King's own gold in the town
close by where the rebels camp:
A sort of lawyer, just the man to betray our sort—the scamp! 60

"If her writing is simple, and honest and only the lover-like stuff it looks,
And if you yourself are a loyalist, nor down in the rebels' books,
Come quick,' said I, 'and in person prove you are each of you clear of crime,
Or martial law must take its course: this day
next week's the time!

"Next week is now: does he come? Not he!
Clean gone, our clerk, in a trice! 65
He has left his sweetheart here in the lurch: no need of a warning twice!
His own neck free, but his partner's fast in the noose still, here she stands
To pay for her fault. 'Tis an ugly job: but soldiers obey commands.

"And hearken wherefore I make a speech!
Should any acquaintance share
The folly that led to the fault that is now to be punished, let fools beware! 70
Look black, if you please, but keep hands white:
and above all else, keep wives
Or sweethearts or what they may be—from ink!
Not a word now, on your lives!"

Black? but the Pit's own pitch was white to the Captain's face—the brute
With the bloated cheeks and the bulgy nose and the bloodshot eyes to suit!
He was muddled with wine, they say: more like, he was out of his wits with fear; 75
He had but a handful of men, that's true,—a riot might cost him dear.

And all that time stood Rosamund Page, with pinioned arms and face
Bandaged about, on the turf marked out for the party's firing-place.
I hope she was wholly with God: I hope 'twas
His angel stretched a hand
To steady her so, like the shape of stone you see in our church-aisle stand. 80

I hope there was no vain fancy pierced the bandage to vex her eyes,
No face within which she missed without, no questions and no replies—
"Why did you leave me to die?"—"Because . . ." Oh, fiends, too soon you grin At merely a moment of hell, like that—such heaven as hell ended in!

Let mine end too! He gave the word, up went the guns in a line. 85
Those heaped on the hill were blind as dumb,— for, of all eyes, only mine
Looked over the heads of the foremost rank.
Some fell on their knees in prayer,
Some sank to the earth, but all shut eyes, with a sole exception there.

That was myself, who had stolen up last, had sidled behind the group:
I am highest of all on the hill-top, there stand fixed while the others stoop! 90
From head to foot in a serpent's twine am I tightened: I touch ground?
No more than a gibbet's rigid corpse which the fettters rust around!

Can I speak, can I breathe, can I burst—aught else but see, see, only see?
And see I do—for there comes in sight—a man,
it sure must be!—
Who staggeringly, stumbingly, rises, falls, rises, at random flings his weight 95
On and on, anyhow onward—a man that's mad
he arrives too late!

Else why does he wave a something white high-flourished above his head?
Why does not he call, cry,—curse the fool!—
why throw up his arms instead?
O take this fist in your own face, fool! Why does not yourself shout "Stay!
Here's a man comes rushing, might and main,
with something he's mad to say?" 100

And a minute, only a moment, to have hellfire boil up in your brain,
And ere you can judge things right, choose heaven,—time's over, repentance vain!

They level: a volley, a smoke and the clearing of smoke: I see no more Of the man smoke hid, nor his frantic arms, nor the something white he bore.

But stretched on the field, some half-mile off, is an object. Surely dumb, 105
Deaf, blind were we struck, that nobody heard, not one of us saw him come!
Has he fainted through fright? One may well believe! What is it he holds so fast?
Turn him over, examine the face! Heyday!
What, Vincent Parkes at last?

Dead! dead as she, by the self-same shot: one bullet has ended both,
Her in the body and him in the soul. They laugh at our plighted troth. 110
"Till death us do part?" Till death us do join past parting—that sounds like:
Betrothal indeed! O Vincent Parkes, what need has my fist to strike?

I helped you: thus were you dead and wed: one bound and your soul reached hers!
There is clenched in your hand the thing,
signed, sealed, the paper which plain avers
She is innocent, innocent, plain as print, with the King's Arms broad engraved: 115
No one can hear, but if any one high on the hill can see, she's saved!

And torn his garb and bloody his lips with heart-break—plain it grew
How the week's delay had been brought about:
each guess at the end proved true.
It was hard to get at the folks in power: such waste of time! and then Such pleading and praying, with, all the while, his lamb in the lion's den! 120

And at length when he wrung their pardon out, no end to the stupid forms—
The license and leave: I make no doubt—what wonder if passion warms
The pulse in a man if you play with his heart?—
he was something hasty in speech;
Anyhow, none would quicken the work; he had to beseech, beseech!

And the thing once signed, sealed, safe in his grasp,—what followed but fresh delays?
For the floods were out, he was forced to take such a roundabout of ways! 126
And 'twas "Halt there!" at every turn of the road, since he had to cross the thick
Of the red-coats: what did they care for him and his "Quick, for God's sake, quick!"

Horse? but he had one: had it how long? till the first knave smirked "You brag
Yourself a friend of the King's? then lend to a King's friend here your nag!" 130
Money to buy another? Why, piece by piece they plundered him still,
With their "Wait you must—no help: if aught can help you, a guinea will!"

And a borough there was—I forget the name—whose Mayor must have the bench
Of Justices ranged to clear a doubt: for "Vincent," thinks he, sounds French!
It well may have driven him daft, God knows!
all man can certainly know 135
Is—rushing and falling and rising, at last he arrived in a horror—so!

When a word, cry, gasp, would have rescued both! Ay, bite me! The worm begins
At his work once more. Had cowardice proved—that only—my sin of sins!
Friends, look you here! Suppose . . . suppose . . . But mad I am, needs must be!
Judas the Damned would never have dared such a sin as I dream! For, see! 140

Suppose I had sneakingly loved her myself, my wretched self, and dreamed
In the heart of me "She were better dead than happy and his!"—while gleamed
A light from hell as I spied the pair in a perfect-est embrace,
He the saviour and she the saved,—bliss born of the very murder-place!

No! Say I was scared, friends! Call me fool and coward, but nothing worse! 145
Jeer at the fool and jibe at the coward! 'Twas ever the coward's curse:
That fear breeds fancies in such: such take their shadow for substance still,
—A fiend at their back. I liked poor Parkes,— loved Vincent, if you will!

And her—why, I said "Good morrow" to her,
"Good even," and nothing more:
The neighborly way! She was just to me as fifty had been before. 150
So, coward it is and coward shall be! There's a friend, now! Thanks! A drink Of water I wanted: and now I can walk, get home by myself, I think.

O LYRIC LOVE

(From The Ring and the Book, Bk. I, 1868)

O lyric Love, half angel and half bird
And all a wonder and a wild desire,— Boldest of hearts that ever braved the sun,
Took sanctuary within the holier blue,
And sang a kindred soul out to his face,— 5
Yet human at the red-ripe of the heart—
When the first summons from the darkling
earth
Reached thee amid thy chambers, blanched their blue,
And bared them of the glory—to drop down,
To toil for man, to suffer or to die,— 10
This is the same voice: can thy soul know
change?
Hail then, and harken from the realms of help!
Never may I commence my song, my due
To God who best taught song by gift of thee,

Except with bent head and beseeching hand—
That still, despite the distance and the dark, 16
What was, again may be; some interchange
Of grace, some splendor once thy very thought,
Some benediction anciently thy smile:

—Never conclude, but raising hand and head 20
Thither where eyes that cannot reach, yet yearn

For all hope, all sustainment, all reward,
Their utmost, up and on,—so blessing back
In those thy realms of help, that heaven thy
home,
Some whiteness which, I judge, thy face makes
proud, 25
Some wanness where, I think, thy foot may fall!

EPILOGUE

(From Asolando, 1890)

At the midnight in the silence of the sleep-time,
When you set your fancies free,
Will they pass to where—by death, fools think,
imprisoned—
Low he lies who once so loved you, whom you loved so, 5
—Pity me?

Oh to love so, be so loved, yet so mistaken!
What had I on earth to do
With the slothful, with the mawkish, the unmanly?
Like the aimless, helpless, hopeless did I drivel
—Being—who? 10

One who never turned his back but marched breast forward,
Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, though right were worsted,
wrong would triumph,
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,
Sleep to wake. 15

No, at noonday in the bustle of man's work-
time
Greet the unseen with a cheer!
Bid him forward, breast and back as either should be,
"Strive and thrive!" cry "Speed,—fight on,
fare ever
There as here!" 20

Elizabeth Barrett Browning

1809–1861

A MUSICAL INSTRUMENT

(From Poems, 1844)

I

What was he doing, the great god Pan,
Down in the reeds by the river?
Spreading ruin and scattering ban,
Splashing and paddling with hoofs of a goat,
And breaking the golden lilies afloat 5
With the dragon-fly on the river.

II

He tore out a reed, the great god Pan,
From the deep cool bed of the river:
The limpid water turbidly ran,
And the broken lilies a-dying lay. 10
And the dragon-fly had fled away,
Ere he brought it out of the river.

III

High on the shore sat the great god Pan,
While turbidly flowed the river;
And hacked and hewed as a great god can, 15
With his hard bleak steel at the patient reed,
Till there was not a sign of the leaf indeed
To prove it fresh from the river.

IV

He cut it short, did the great god Pan
(How tall it stood in the river!), 20
Then drew the pith, like the heart of a man,
Steadily from the outside ring,
And notched the poor dry empty thing
In holes, as he sat by the river.

V

"This is the way," laughed the great god Pan 25
(Laughed while he sat by the river),
"The only way, since gods began
To make sweet music, they could succeed."
Then, dropping his mouth to a hole in the reed,
He blew in power by the river. 30

VI

Sweet, sweet, sweet, O Pan!
Piercing sweet by the river!
Blinding sweet, O great god Pan!
The sun on the hill forgot to die,
And the lilies revived, and the dragon-fly 35
Came back to dream on the river.

VII

Yet half a beast is the great god Pan,
To laugh as he sits by the river,
Making a poet out of a man:
The true gods sigh for the cost and pain,— 40
For the reed which grows nevermore again
As a reed with the reeds in the river.

SONNETS

CHEERFULNESS TAUGHT BY REASON

I think we are too ready with complaint
In this fair world of God's. Had we no hope
Indeed beyond the zenith and the slope
Of yon grey blank of sky, we might grow faint 5
To muse upon eternity's constraint
Round our aspirant souls; but since the scope
Must widen early, is it well to droop,
For a few days consumed in loss and taint?
O pusillanimous Heart, be comforted
And, like a cheerful traveller, take the road, 10
Singing beside the hedge. What if the bread
Be bitter in thine inn, and thou unshod
To meet the flints? At least it may be said,
"Because the way is short, I thank thee, God."

THE PROSPECT

Methinks we do as fretful children do,
 Leaning their faces on the window-pane
 To sigh the glass dim with their own breath's
 stain,
 And shut the sky and landscape from their view:
 And thus, alas, since God the maker drew 5
 A mystic separation 'twixt those twain,
 The life beyond us, and our souls in pain.
 We miss the prospect which we are called unto
 By grief we are fools to use. Be still and strong,
 O man, my brother! hold thy sobbing breath, 10
 And keep thy soul's large window pure from wrong
 That so, as life's appointment issueth,
 Thy vision may be clear to watch along
 The sunset consummation-lights of death.

WORK

What are we set on earth for? Say, to toil;
 Nor seek to leave thy tending of the vines
 For all the heat o' the day, till it declines,
 And Death's mild curfew shall from work assoil.
 God did anoint thee with His odorous oil, 5
 To wrestle, not to reign; and He assigns
 All thy tears over, like pure crystallines,
 For younger fellow-workers of the soil
 To wear for amulets. So others shall Take patience, labour, to their heart and
 hand,
 From thy hand and thy heart and thy brave cheer, 11
 And God's grace fructify through thee to
 all.
 The least flower, with a brimming cup may
 stand,
 And share its dew-drop with another near.

(From Sonnets from the Portuguese, 1850)

I

I thought once how Theocritus had sung
 Of the sweet years, the dear and wished-for
 years,
 Who each one in a gracious hand appears
 To bear a gift for mortals, old or young:
 And, as I mused it in his antique tongue, 5
 I saw, in gradual vision through my tears,
 The sweet, sad years, the melancholy years,
 Those of my own life, who by turns had flung
 A shadow across me. Straightway I was
 'ware,
 So weeping, how a mystic Shape did move 10 Behind me, and drew me backward by the hair;
 And a voice said in mastery, while I strove,—

"Guess now who holds thee?"—"Death," I said. But, there,
 The silver answer rang,—“Not Death, but Love.”

VI

Go from me. Yet I feel that I shall stand 15
 Henceforward in thy shadow. Nevermore
 Alone upon the threshold of my door
 Of individual life, I shall command
 The uses of my soul, nor lift my hand
 Serenely in the sunshine as before, 20
 Without the sense of that which I forbare—
 Thy touch upon the palm. The widest land Doom takes to part us, leaves thy heart in mine
 With pulses that beat double. What I do
 And what I dream include thee, as the wine 25 Must taste of its own grapes. And when I sue
 God for myself, He hears that name of
 thine,
 And sees within my eyes the tears of two.

XXXV

If I leave all for thee, wilt thou exchange
 And be all to me? Shall I never miss 30
 Home-talk and blessing and the common kiss
 That comes to each in turn, nor count it strange
 When I look up, to drop on a new range
 Of walls and floors, another home than this?
 Nay, wilt thou fill that place by me which is 35
 Filled by dead eyes too tender to know
 change?
 That's hardest. If to conquer love, has tried,
 To conquer grief, tries more, as all things prove;
 For grief indeed is love and grief beside.
 Alas, I have grieved so I am hard to love. 40
 Yet love me—wilt thou? Open thine heart
 wide,
 And fold within the wet wings of thy dove.

XLIII

How do I love thee? Let me count the ways.
 I love thee to the depth and breadth and
 height
 My soul can reach, when feeling out of sight 45
 For the ends of Being, and ideal Grace.
 I love thee to the level of everyday's
 Most quiet need, by sun and candlelight.
 I love thee freely, as men strive for Right;
 I love thee purely, as they turn from Praise. 50
 I love thee with the passion put to use
 In my old griefs, and with my childhood's faith.
 I love thee with a love I seemed to lose
 With my lost saints,—I love thee with the
 breath,
 Smiles, tears, of all my life!—and, if God
 choose, 55
 I shall but love thee better after death.

Matthew Arnold

(1822-1888)

THYRSIS

(A Monody, to commemorate the author's friend, Arthur Hugh Clough,<sup>1</sup> who died at Florence, 1861)

How changed is here each spot man makes or fills!

In the two Hinkseys<sup>2</sup> nothing keeps the same;

The village street its haunted mansion lacks,

And from the sign is gone Sibylla's name,
And from the roofs the twisted chimney-stacks—

Are ye too changed, ye hills?

See, 'tis no foot of unfamiliar men

Tonight from Oxford up your pathway strays!

Here came I often, often in old days—
Thyrsis and I; we still had Thyrsis then. 10

Runs it not here, the track by Childsworth's Farm,

Past the high wood, to where the elm-tree crowns

The hill behind whose ridge the sunset flames?

The signal-elm, that looks on Ilsley Downs,
The Vale, the three lone wears, the youthful Thames?— 15

This winter-eve is warm,

Humid the air! leafless, yet soft as spring,
The tender purple spray on copse and briers!

And that sweet city with her dreaming spires,

She needs not June for beauty's heightening, 20

Lovely all times, she lies, lovely to-night!—

Only, methinks, some loss of habit's power

Befalls me wandering through this upland dim.

Once passed I blindfold here, at any hour;

Now seldom come I, since I came with him. 25

That single elm-tree bright

Against the west—I miss it! is it gone?

We prized it dearly; while it stood, we said,

<sup>1</sup> A. H. Clough (1819-1861), a man of brilliant gifts and attractive personality, holds an honorable, if subordinate place among the Victorian poets. (See p. 663). He attended Rugby where he was a favorite pupil of Dr. Arnold; he went to Oxford in 1837, and became a fellow of Oriel College in 1842. Matthew Arnold entered Oxford in 1841 and was made a fellow of Oriel College in 1845. Immediately after Clough's death Arnold referred to him as "one of the few people who ever made a deep impression upon me," and hinted at his intention of expressing in some form his feeling for his dead friend. (V. Arnold's Letters I. 177).

<sup>2</sup> Two villages near Oxford. The poem gains in sincerity and definiteness by its numerous references to neighboring localities, intimately associated with the days which Clough and Arnold spent together at the University.

Our friend the Gipsy-Scholar,<sup>3</sup> was not dead;

While the tree lived, he in these fields lived on.

Too rare, too rare, grow now my visits here, 31

But once I knew each field, each flower, each stick;

And with the country folk acquaintance made

By barn in threshing-time, by new-built rick.

Here, too, our shepherd-pipes we first assay'd. 35

Ah me! this many a year

My pipe is lost, my shepherd's holiday!

Needs must I lose them, needs with heavy heart

Into the world and wave of men depart,

But Thyrsis of his own will went away. 40

It irk'd him here, he could not rest.

He loved each simple joy the country yields,

He loved his mates; but yet he could not keep,

For that a shadow lower'd on the fields,
Here with the shepherds and the silly sheep. 45

Some life of men unblest

He knew, which made him droop, and fill'd his head.

He went; his piping took a troubled sound
Of storms that rage outside our happy ground;

He could not wait their passing, he is dead. 50

So some tempestuous morn in early June,

When the year's primal burst of bloom is o'er,

Before the roses, and the longest day—

When garden-walks, and all the grassy floor,
With blossoms red and white of fallen May, 55

And chestnut-flowers are strewn—

So have I heard the cuckoo's parting cry,
From the wet field, through the vext garden-trees,

Come with the volleying rain and tossing breeze:

The bloom is gone, and with the bloom go I! 60

Too quick despairer, wherefore wilt thou go?

Soon will the high Midsummer pomps come on,

Soon will the musk carnations break and swell,

Soon shall we have gold-dusted snapdragon,
Sweet-William with his homely cottage-smell, 65

And stocks in fragrant blow;

Roses that down the alleys shine afar,
And open, jasmine-muffled lattices,

And groups under the dreaming garden-trees,

And the full-moon, and the white evening star.

<sup>3</sup> Arnold was much impressed by the old story of an Oxford student who, it was said, had been forced by poverty to leave the University, and who joined a company of wandering gipsies. Arnold made this story the basis of his poem The Scholar-Gipsy.

He hearkens not! light comes, he is flown! 71
 What matters it? next year he will return,
 And we shall have him in the sweet
 spring-days,
 With whitening hedges, and uncrumpling
 fern,
 And blue-bells trembling by the forest-
 ways, 75
 And scent of hay new-mown.
 But Thyrsis never more we swains shall see;
 See him come back, and cut a smoother
 reed,
 And blow a strain the world at last shall heed—
 For Time, not Corydon, hath conquer'd thee!
 Alack, for Corydon, no rival now!— 81
 But when Sicilian shepherds lost a mate,
 Some good survivor with his flute would go
 Piping a ditty sad for Bion's<sup>4</sup> fate;
 And cross the unpermitted ferry's flow, 85
 And relax Pluto's brow,
 And make leap up with joy the beauteous
 head
 Of Proserpine, among whose crowned hair
 Are flowers first open'd on Sicilian air,
 And flute his friend, like Orpheus, from the
 dead. 90

O easy access to the hearer's grace
 When Dorian shepherds sang to Proserpine!
 For she herself had trod Sicilian fields,
 She knew the Dorian water's gush divine, 94
 She knew each lily white which Enna's yields,
 Each rose with blushing face;
 She loved the Dorian pipe, the Dorian strain.
 But ah, of our poor Thames she never heard!
 Her foot the Cumnor cowslips never stirr'd;
 And we should tease her with our plaint in vain! 100
 Well! wind-dispersed and vain the words will
 be,
 Yet, Thyrsis, let me give my grief its hour
 In the old haunt, and find our tree-topp'd
 hill!
 Who, if not I, for questing here hath power?
 I know the wood which hides the daffodil,
 I know the Fyfield tree, 106
 I know what white, what purple fritillaries
 The grassy harvest of the river-fields,
 Above by Ensham, down by Sanford,
 yields,
 And what sedged brooks are Thames's tributaries; 110
 I know these slopes; who knows them if not I?
 But many a dingle on the loved hill-side,
 With thorns once studded, old, white-
 blossom'd trees,

Where thick the cowslips grew, and far desier'd
 High tower'd the spikes of purple orchises,
 Hath since our day put by 116
 The coronals<sup>5</sup> of that forgotten time;
 Down each green bank hath gone the plough-boy's team,
 And only in the hidden brookside gleam
 Primroses, orphans of the flowery prime. 120

Where is the girl, who by the boatman's door,
 Above the locks, above the boating throng,
 Unmoor'd our skiff when through the Wytham flats,
 Red loosestrife and blond meadow sweet
 among
 And darting swallows and light watergnats, 125
 We track'd the shy Thames shore?
 Where are the mowers, who, as the tiny swell
 Of our boat passing heaved the river-grass,
 Stood with suspended scythe to see us
 pass?—
 They all are gone, and thou art gone as
 well! 130

Yes, thou art gone! and round me too the
 night
 In ever-nearing circle weaves her shade.
 I see her veil draw soft across the day,
 I feel her slowly chilling breath invade
 The cheek grown thin, the brown hair sprent with grey; 135
 I feel her finger light
 Laid pausefully upon life's headlong train;—
 The foot less prompt to meet the morning
 dew,
 The heart less bounding at emotion new,
 And hope, once crush'd, less quick to spring
 again. 140

And long the way appears, which seem'd so short
 To the less practised eye of sanguine youth;
 And high the mountain-tops, in cloudy
 air,
 The mountain-tops where is the throne of Truth,
 Tops in life's morning-sun so bright and bare! 145
 Unbreachable the fort
 Of the long-battered world uplifts its wall;
 And strange and vain the earthly turmoil grows,
 And near and real the charm of thy repose,
 And night as welcome as a friend would fall. 150

But hush! the upland hath a sudden loss
 Of quiet!—Look adown the dusk hillside
 A troop of Oxford hunters going home,
 As in old days, jovial, and talking, ride!
 From hunting with the Berkshire hounds
 they come. 155
 Quick! let me fly, and cross

<sup>4</sup> Bion (cir. 280 B. C.), a Greek poet, the author of A Lament for Adonis. Bion himself was made the subject of a famous elegy by Moschus (cir. 200 B. C.), a Greek poet of Sicily.

<sup>5</sup> A plain in Sicily, where Proserpine was gathering flowers when she was carried off by Pluto to the lower world.

<sup>5</sup> i. e. in many a dingle, the trees, crowned with blossoms, have put by their coronals, or garlands of bloom.

Into yon farther field!—"Tis done; and see,
Back'd by the sunset, which doth glorify
The orange and pale violet evening-sky,
Bare on its lonely ridge, the Tree! the Tree! 160

I take the omen! Eve lets down her veil,
The white fog creeps from bush to bush about,
The west unflushes, the high stars grow
bright,
And in the scatter'd farms the lights come
out.
I cannot reach the signal-tree to-night, 165
Yet, happy omen, hail!
Hear it from thy broad lucent Arno-vale
(For there thine earth-forgetting eyelids keep
The morningless and unawakening sleep
Under the flowery oleanders pale,) 170

Hear it, O Thyriss, still our tree is there!—
Ah, vain! These English fields, this upland dim,
These brambles pale with mist engarlanded
That lone sky-pointing tree, are not for him;
To a boon southern country he is fled, 175
And now in happier air,
Wandering with the great Mother's train
divine
(And purer or more subtle soul than thee,
I trow the mighty Mother doth not see)
Within a folding of the Apennine, 180

Thou hearest the immortal chants of old!
Putting his sickle to the perilous grain
In the hot cornfield of the Phrygian king,
For thee the Lityrses-song again
Young Daphnis<sup>s</sup> with his silver voice doth sing; 185
Sings his Sicilian fold,
His sheep, his hapless love, his blinded eyes—
And how a celestial call round him rang,
And heavenward from the fountain-brink
he sprang,
And all the marvel of the golden skies. 190

There thou art gone, and me thou leavest here
Sole in these fields! yet will I not despair.
Despair I will not, while I yet descry
'Neath the soft canopy of English air
That lonely tree against the western sky.
Still, still these slopes, 'tis clear, 196

<sup>i. e.</sup> the "signal elm," the tree on the hill-top in "the old haunt," which Arnold has referred to several times before. It was evidently a favorite meeting place of the two friends, and associated with memories of the Scholar-Gipsy, whose spiritual presence typified the indestructible nature of the ideal.

<sup>s</sup> "Daphnis, the ideal Sicilian shepherd of Greek pastoral poetry, was said to have followed into Phrygia his mistress Piplea, who had been carried off by robbers, and to have found her in the power of the king of Phrygia, Lityrses. Lityrses used to make strangers try a contest with him in reaping corn, and to put them to death if he overcame them. Hercules arrived in time to save Daphnis, took upon himself the reaping-contest with Lityrses, overcame him, and slew him. The Lityrses-song connected with this tradition was, like the Linus-song, one of the early plaintive strains of Greek popular poetry and used to be sung by corn-reapers." Arnold.

Our Gipsy-Scholar haunts, outliving thee!
Fields where soft sheep from cages pull the hay,
Woods with anemonies in flower till May,
Know him a wanderer still; then why not me?

A fugitive and gracious light he seeks, 201
Shy to illumine; and I seek it too.
This does not come with houses or with
gold,
With place, with honour, and a flattering
crew;
'Tis not in the world's market bought and sold— 205
But the smooth-slipping weeks
Drop by, and leave its seeker still untired;
Out of the heed of mortals he is gone,
He wends unfollow'd, he must house
alone;
Yet on he fares, by his own heart inspired. 210

Thou too, O Thyriss, on like quest wert bound!
Thou wanderest with me for a little hour!
Men gave thee nothing; but this happy
quest,
If men esteem'd thee feeble, gave thee power,
If men procured thee trouble, gave thee
rest. 215
And this rude Cumnor ground,
Its fir-topped Hurst, its farms, its quiet
fields,
Here can'st thou in thy jocund youthful
time,
Here was thine height of strength, thy golden prime!
And still the haunt beloved a virtue yields. 220

What though the music of thy rustic flute
Kept not for long its happy, country tone;
Lost it too soon, and learnt a stormy note
Of men contention-tost, of men who groan,
Which task'd thy pipe too sore, and tired thy throat— 225
It fail'd and thou wast mute!
Yet hadst thou alway visions of our light,
And long with men of care thou couldst
not stay,
And soon thy foot resumed its wandering
way,
Left human haunt, and on alone till night. 230

Too rare, too rare, grow now my visits here!
'Mid city-noise, not, as with thee of yore, Thyriss! in reach of sheep-bells is my
home.

—Then through the great town's harsh,
heart-wearying roar,
Let in thy voice a whisper often come, 235
To chase fatigue and fear:
*Why faintest thou? I wander'd till I died.
Roam on! The light we sought is shining still.*

*Dost thou ask proof? Our tree yet crowns the hill,
Our Scholar travels yet the loved hillside.* 240

TO MARGUERITE

(From Switzerland)

Yes! in the sea of life enisled,
 With echoing straits between us thrown,
 Dotting the shoreless watery wild,
 We mortal millions live alone.
 The islands feel the enclapping flow,
 And then their endless bounds they know. 5

But when the moon their hollow lights,
 And they are swept by balms of spring,
 And in their glens, on starry nights,
 The nightingales divinely sing; 10
 And lovely notes, from shore to shore,
 Across the sounds and channels pour—

Oh, then a longing like despair
 Is to their farthest caverns sent;
 For surely once, they feel, we were
 Parts of a single continent! 15
 Now round us spreads the watery plain
 Oh might our marges meet again!

Who ordered, that their longing's fire
 Should be as soon as kindled, cool'd? 20
 Who renders vain their deep desire?—
 A God, a God their severance ruled!
 And bade betwixt their shores to be
 The unplumb'd, salt, estranging sea.

ABSENCE

(From the same)

In this fair stranger's eyes of grey
 Thine eyes, my love! I see.
 I shiver; for the passing day
 Had borne me far from thee.

This is the curse of life! that not 5
 A nobler, calmer train
 Of wiser thoughts and feelings blot
 Our passions from our brain;

But each day brings its petty dust
 Our soon-choked souls to fill, 10
 And we forget because we must
 And not because we will.

I struggle towards the light and ye,
 Once-long'd-for storms of love!
 If with the light ye cannot be, 15
 I bear that ye remove.

I struggle towards the light—but oh,
 While yet the night is chill,
 Upon time's barren, stormy flow, 20
 Stay with me, Marguerite, still!

SELF-DEPENDENCE

(From the same)

Weary of myself, and sick of asking
 What I am, and what I ought to be,
 At this vessel's prow I stand, which bears me
 Forwards, forwards, o'er the starlit sea.

And a look of passionate desire 5
 O'er the sea and to the stars I send:
 "Ye who from my childhood up have calm'd
 me,
 Calm me, ah, compose me to the end!

"Ah, once more," I cried, "ye stars, ye waters,
 On my heart your mighty charm renew; 10
 Still, still let me, as I gaze upon you,
 Feel my soul becoming vast like you!"

From the intense, clear, star-sown vault of
 heaven,
 Over the lit sea's unquiet way,
 In the rustling night-air came the answer: 15
 "Wouldst thou be as these are? Live as they.

"Unaffrighted by the silence round them,
 Undistracted by the sights they see, 15
 These demand not that the things without them
 Yield them love, amusement, sympathy. 20

"And with joy the stars perform their shining,
 And the sea its long moon-silver'd roll;
 For self-poised they live, nor pine with noting
 All the fever of some differing soul.

"Bounded by themselves, and unregardful 25
 In what state God's other works may be,
 In their own tasks all their powers pouring,
 These attain the mighty life you see."

O air-born voice! long since, severely clear,
 A cry like thine in mine own heart I hear: 30
 "Resolve to be thyself; and know, that he Who finds himself, loses his misery!"

DOVER BEACH

(From New Poems, 1867)

The sea is calm to-night.
 The tide is full, the moon lies fair
 Upon the straits;—on the French coast the light
 Gleams and is gone; the cliffs of England stand,
 Glimmering and vast, out in the tranquil bay. 5

Come to the window, sweet is the night-air!
 Only, from the long line of spray
 Where the sea meets the moon-blanch'd sand,
 Listen! you hear the grating roar
 Of pebbles which the waves draw back, and fling, 10
 At their return, up the high strand,
 Begin, and cease, and then again begin,
 With tremulous cadence slow, and bring
 The eternal note of sadness in.

Sophocles long ago 15
 Heard it on the Ægean, and it brought Into his mind the turbid ebb and flow
 Of human misery; we Find also in the sound a thought,
 Hearing it by this distant northern sea. 20

The sea of faith
 Was once, too, at the full, and round earth's shore
 Lay like the folds of a bright girdle furl'd.
 But now I only hear
 Its melancholy, long, withdrawing roar, 25
 Retreating, to the breath
 Of the night-wind, down the vast edges drear
 And naked shingles of the world.

Ah, love, let us be true
 To one another! for the world, which seems 30
 To lie before us like a land of dreams,
 So various, so beautiful, so new,
 Hath really neither joy, nor love, nor light,
 Nor certitude, nor peace, nor help for pain;
 And we are here as on a darkling plain 35 Swept with confused alarms of struggle and
 flight,
 Where ignorant armies clash by night.

SHAKESPEARE

(From The Strayed Reveller and Other Poems, 1849)

Others abide our question. Thou art free.
 We ask and ask—Thou smilest and art still,
 Out-topping knowledge. For the loftiest hill,
 Who to the stars uncrowns his majesty,

Planting his steadfast footsteps in the sea, 5
 Making the heaven of heavens his dwelling-
 place,
 Spares but the cloudy border of his base
 To the foil'd searching of mortality;

And thou, who didst the stars and sunbeams
 know,
 Self-school'd, self-scann'd, self-honour'd, self-secure, 10
 Didst tread on earth unguess'd at.—Better so!

All pains the immortal spirit must endure,
 All weakness which impairs, all griefs which bow
 Find their sole speech in that victorious brow.

WORLDLY PLACE

Even in a palace, life may be led well!<sup>1</sup>
 So spake the imperial sage, purest of men,
 Marcus Aurelius. But the stifling den
 Of common life, where, crowded up pell-mell,

Our freedom for a little bread we sell, 5
 And drudge under some foolish master's ken
 Who rates us if we peer outside our pen—
 Match'd with a palace, is not this a hell?

<sup>1</sup> "I was subject to the emperor my father, and bred under him, who was the most proper person living to put me out of conceit with pride, and to convince me that it is possible to live in a palace without the ceremony of guards, without richness and distinction of habit, without torches, statues, or such other marks of royalty and state; and that a prince may shrink himself almost into the figure of a private gentleman, and yet act, nevertheless, with all the force and majesty of his character when the common weal requires it." The Meditations of Marcus Aurelius, Bk. I.

Even in a palace! On his truth sincere,
 Who spake these words, no shadow ever came; 10
 And when my ill-school'd spirit is aflame

Some nobler, ampler stage of life to win,
 I'll stop and say: "There is no succour here:
 The aids to nobler life are all within."

GEIST'S GRAVE

(January, 1881)

Four years!—and didst thou stay above
 The ground, which hides thee now, but four?
 And all that life, and all that love,
 Were crowded, Geist! into no more?

Only four years those winning ways, 5
 Which make me for thy presence yearn,
 Call'd us to pet thee or to praise,
 Dear little friend! at every turn?

That loving heart, that patient soul,
 Had they indeed no longer span, 10
 To run their course, and reach their goal,
 And read their homily to man?

That liquid, melancholy eye,
 From whose pathetic, soul-fed springs
 Seem'd surging the Virgilian cry,<sup>1</sup> 15
 The sense of tears in mortal things—

That steadfast, mournful strain, consoled
 By spirits gloriously gay,
 And temper of heroic mould—
 What, was four years their whole short day? 20

Yes, only four!—and not the course
 Of all the centuries yet to come,
 And not the infinite resource
 Of nature, with her countless sum

Of figures, with her fulness vast 25
 Of new creation evermore,
 Can ever quite repeat the past,
 Or just thy little self restore.

Stern law of every mortal lot!
 Which man, proud man, finds hard to bear, 30
 And builds himself I know not what
 Of second life I know not where.

But thou, when struck thine hour to go,
 On us, who stood despondent by,
 A meek last glance of love didst throw, 35
 And humbly lay thee down to die.

Yet would we keep thee in our heart—
 Would fix our favourite on the scene,
 Nor let thee utterly depart
 And be as if thou ne'er hadst been. 40

<sup>1</sup> "Sunt lacrymæ rerum, et mentem mortalia tangunt." Æn. I. 462. This famous passage, which it is almost impossible to render adequately into English, is exquisitely paraphrased by Arnold in the succeeding line.

And so there rise these lines of verse
On lips that rarely form them now;
While to each other we rehearse:
Such ways, such arts, such looks hadst thou!

We stroke thy broad brown paws again, 45
We bid thee to thy vacant chair,
We greet thee by the window-pane,
We hear thy scuffle on the stair;

We see the flaps of thy large ears
Quick raised to ask which way we go; 50
Crossing the frozen lake, appears
Thy small black figure on the snow!

Nor to us only art thou dear
Who mourn thee in thine English home; 55
Thou hast thine absent master's tear,
Dropt by the far Australian foam.

Thy memory lasts both here and there,
And thou shalt live as long as we.
And after that—thou dost not care!
In us was all the world to thee. 60

Yet, fondly zealous for thy fame,
Even to a date beyond our own
We strive to carry down thy name,
By mounded turf, and graven stone.

We lay thee, close within our reach, 65
Here, where the grass is smooth and warm,
Between the holly and the beech,
Where oft we watch'd thy couchant form,

Asleep, yet lending half an ear
To travellers on the Portsmouth road;— 70
There choose we thee, O guardian dear,
Mark'd with a stone, thy last abode!

Then some, who through this garden pass,
When we too, like thyself, are clay,
Shall see thy grave upon the grass, 75
And stop before the stone, and say:

*People who lived here long ago
Did by this stone, it seems, intend
To name for future times to know
The dachs-hound, Geist, their little friend.* 80

LINES WRITTEN IN KENSINGTON GARDENS<sup>1</sup>

(From Empedocles in Etna and Other Poems, 1852)

In this lone, open glade I lie,
Screen'd by deep boughs on either hand;
And at its end, to stay the eye,
Those black-crown'd, red-boled pine-trees
stand!

<sup>1</sup> Kensington Gardens, a beautiful and wonderfully secluded park in the midst of London, west of Hyde Park and not far from Piccadilly. When Arnold wrote his Lines, the beauty and seclusion of the Gardens was increased by many fine old trees.

Birds here make song, each bird has his, 5
Across the girdling city's hum.
How green under the boughs it is!
How thick the tremulous sheep-cries come!

Sometimes a child will cross the glade
To take his nurse his broken toy; 10
Sometimes a thrush flit overhead
Deep in her unknown day's employ.

Here at my feet what wonders pass,
What endless, active life is here!
What blowing daisies, fragrant grass! 15
An air-stirr'd forest, fresh and clear.

Scarce fresher is the mountain sod
Where the tired angler lies, stretch'd out,
And, eased of basket and of rod,
Counts his day's spoil, the spotted trout. 20

In the huge world, which roars hard by,
Be others happy if they can!
But in my helpless cradle I
Was breathed on by the rural Pan.

I on men's impious uproar hurl'd, 25
Think often, as I hear them rave,
That peace has left the upper world
And now keeps only in the grave.

Yet here is peace for ever new!
When I who watch them am away, 30
Still all things in this glade go through
The changes of their quiet day,

Then to their happy rest they pass!
The flowers upclose, the birds are fed,
The night comes down upon the grass, 35
The child sleeps warmly in his bed.

Calm soul of all things! make it mine
To feel, amid the city's jar,
That there abides a peace of thine
Man did not make, and cannot mar. 40

The will to neither strive nor cry,
The power to feel with others give!
Calm, calm me more! nor let me die
Before I have begun to live.

Dante Gabriel Rossetti

1828-1882

THE BLESSED DAMOZEL<sup>1</sup>

(Third Version, from Poems, 1870)

The blessed<sup>2</sup> damozel leaned out
From the gold bar of Heaven;
Her eyes were deeper than the depth
Of waters stilled at even;
She had three lilies in her hand. 5
And the stars in her hair were seven.

<sup>1</sup> Rossetti wrote this poem in his nineteenth year, or in 1847. W. M. Rossetti remarks that The Blessed Damozel "ranks as highly remarkable among the works of juvenile writers," especially when its "total unlikeness to any other poem then extant is taken into account." It was published in the second number of The Germ, 1850; it appeared next in The Oxford and Cambridge Magazine, 1856, and finally in the Poems of 1870.

<sup>2</sup> i. e. one of the blest in paradise.

Her robe ungirt from clasp to hem,
 No wrought flowers did adorn,
 But a white rose of Mary's gift,
 For service meetly worn;
 Her hair that lay along her back
 Was yellow like ripe corn.

Herseemed<sup>1</sup> she scarce had been a day
 One of God's choristers;
 The wonder was not yet quite gone
 From that still look of hers;
 Albeit, to them she left, her day
 Had counted as ten years.

(To one, it is ten years of years.
 . . . Yet now, and in this place,
 Surely she leaned o'er me—her hair
 Fell all about my face. . .
 Nothing: the autumn fall of leaves.
 The whole year sets apace).

It was the rampart of God's house
 That she was standing on;
 By God built over the sheer depth
 The which is Space begun;
 So high, that looking downward thence
 She scarce could see the sun.

It lies in Heaven, across the flood
 Of ether, as a bridge.
 Beneath, the tides of day and night
 With flame and darkness ridge
 The void, as low as where this earth
 Spins like a fretful midge.

Around her, lovers, newly met
 'Mid deathless love's acclaims,
 Spoke evermore among themselves
 Their heart-remembered names;
 And the souls mounting up to God
 Went by her like thin flames.

And still she bowed herself and stooped
 Out of the circling charm;
 Until her bosom must have made
 The bar she leaned on warm,
 And the lilies lay as if asleep
 Along her bended arm.

From the fixed place of Heaven she saw
 Time like a pulse shake fierce
 Through all the world. Her gaze still strove
 Within the gulf to pierce
 Its path; and now she spoke as when
 The stars sang in their spheres.

The sun was gone now; the curled moon
 Was like a little feather
 Fluttering far down the gulf; and now
 She spoke through the still weather.
 Her voice was like the voice the stars
 Had when they sang together.

(Ah sweet! Even now, in that bird's song,
 Strove not her accents there,

<sup>1</sup> It seemed to her. Cf. messemed and v. Shaks. Rich. III., II. ii. 120.

Fain to be harkened? When those bells
 Possessed the mid-day air,
 Strove not her steps to reach my side
 Down all the echoing stair?) 65

"I wish that he were come to me,
 For he will come," she said.
 "Have I not prayed in Heaven?—on earth,
 Lord, Lord, has he not pray'd? 70
 Are not two prayers a perfect strength?
 And shall I feel afraid?"

"When round his head the aureole clings,
 And he is clothed in white,
 I'll take his hand and go with him 75
 To the deep wells of light;
 As unto a stream we will step down,
 And bathe there in God's sight.

"We two will stand beside that shrine,
 Occult, withheld, untrod, 80
 Whose lamps are stirred continually
 With prayer sent up to God;
 And see our old prayers, granted, melt
 Each like a little cloud.

"We two will lie i' the shadow of
 That living mystic tree<sup>4</sup> 85
 Within whose secret growth the Dove
 Is sometimes felt to be,
 While every leaf that His plumes touch
 Saith His name audibly. 90

"And I myself will teach to him,
 I myself, lying so,
 The songs I sing here; which his voice
 Shall pause in, hushed and slow,
 And find some knowledge at each pause, 95
 Or some new thing to know."

(Alas! We two, we two, thou say'st!
 Yea, one wast thou with me
 That once of old. But shall God lift 100
 To endless unity
 The soul whose likeness with thy soul
 Was but its love for thee?)

"We two," she said, "will seek the groves
 Where the lady Mary is,
 With her five handmaids, whose names 105
 Are five sweet symphonies,
 Cecily, Gertrude, Magdalen,
 Margaret and Rosalys.

<sup>4</sup> This may have been suggested by the Tree of Life (Gen. ii., 9), or by the tree Yggdrasil of the Scandinavian mythology, the tree of existence, which bound together heaven, earth, and hell. In the latter case, it may have been intended to symbolize the mystic union of spiritual existence, as Rossetti represents every leaf, or utmost part, responding in praise to the influence of the Divine Spirit. In Rossetti's picture founded on this poem, "a glimpse is caught (above the figure of the Blessed Damosel) of the groves of paradise, wherein, beneath the shade of the spreading branches of a vast tree, the newly-met lovers embrace and rejoice with each other, on separation over and union made perfect at last." V. Sharp's Rossetti, p. 251.

"Circlewise sit they, with bound locks
And foreheads garlanded; 110
Into the fine cloth white like flame
Weaving the golden thread,
To fashion the birth-robos for them
Who are just born, being dead.

"He shall fear, haply, and be dumb: 115
Then will I lay my cheek
To his, and tell about our love,
Not once abashed or weak:
And the dear Mother will approve
My pride, and let me speak. 120

"Herself shall bring us, hand in hand,
To Him round whom all souls
Kneel, the clear-ranged unnumbered heads
Bowed with their aureoles:
And angels meeting us shall sing 125
To their citherns and citoles.

"There will I ask of Christ the Lord
Thus much for him and me:—
Only to live as once on earth
With Love,—only to be, 130
As then awhile, forever now
Together, I and he."

She gazed and listened and then said,
Less sad of speech than mild,—
"All this is when he comes." She ceased. 135
The light thrilled towards her, fill'd
With angels in strong level flight.
Her eyes prayed, and she smil'd.

(I saw her smile). But soon their path
Was vague in distant spheres: 140
And then she cast her arms along
The golden barriers,
And laid her face between her hands,
And wept. (I heard her tears).

THE SEA-LIMITS

(From the same)

Consider the sea's listless chime:
Time's self it is, made audible—
The murmur of the earth's own shell.
Secret continuance sublime
Is the sea's end: our sight may pass
No furlong further. Since time was,
This sound hath told the lapse of time.

No quiet, which is death's,—it hath
The mournfulness of ancient life,
Enduring always at dull strife. 10
As the world's heart of rest and wrath,
Its painful pulse is in the sands.
Last utterly, the whole sky stands,
Gray and not known, along its path.

Listen alone beside the sea, 15
Listen alone among the woods;
Those voices of twin solitudes

Shall have one sound alike to thee:
Hark where the murmurs of thronged men
Surge and sink back and surge again,— 20
Still the one voice of wave and tree.

Gather a shell from the strown beach
And listen at its lips: they sigh
The same desire and mystery, 25
The echo of the whole sea's speech.
And all mankind is thus at heart
Not any thing but what thou art:
And Earth, Sea, Man, are all in each.

SONNETS

SIBYLLA PALMIFERA

(For a Picture)

Under the arch of Life, where love and death,
Terror and mystery, guard her shrine, I saw Beauty enthroned; and though her gaze struck awe, 5
I drew it in as simply as my breath.
Hers are the eyes which, over and beneath, 5
The sky and sea bend on thee,—which can draw,
By sea or sky or woman, to one law,
The allotted bondman of her palm and wreath. 10

This is that Lady Beauty, in whose praise
Thy voice and hand shake still,—long known to thee 10
By flying hair and fluttering hem,—the beat
Following her daily of thy heart and feet,
How passionately and irretrievably,
In what fond flight, how many ways and days!

SILENT NOON

(From, The House of Life, in Ballads and Sonnets, 1881)

Your hands lie open in the long fresh grass,—
The finger-points look through like rosy
blooms:
Your eyes smile peace. The pasture gleams and glooms
'Neath billowing skies that scatter and amass. 5
All round our nest, far as the eye can pass, 5
Are golden kingcup-fields with silver edge
Where the cow-parsley skirts the hawthorn-
hedge.
'Tis visible silence, still as the hour-glass. 10

Deep in the sun-searched growths the dragonfly
Hangs like a blue thread loosened from the sky:— 10
So this wing'd hour is dropt to us from above.
Oh! clasp we to our hearts, for deathless dower,
This close-companioned inarticulate hour
When twofold silence was the song of love. 15

INCLUSIVENESS

(From the same)

The changing guests, each in a different mood,
 Sit at the roadside table and arise:
 And every life among them in likewise
 Is a soul's board set daily with new food.
 What man has bent o'er his son's sleep, to brood
 How that face shall watch his when cold it lies?
 Or thought, as his own mother kissed his
 eyes,
 Of what her kiss was when his father wooed?

May not this ancient room thou sit'st in dwell
 In separate living souls for joy or pain? 10
 Nay, all its corners may be painted plain Where Heaven shows pictures of some life spent well;
 And may be stamped, a memory all in vain,
 Upon the sight of lidless eyes in Hell.

A SUPERScription

(From the same)

Look in my face; my name is Might-have-
 been;
 I am also called No-more, Too-late, Farewell;
 Unto thine ear I hold the dead-sea shell
 Cast up thy Life's foam-fretted feet between;
 Unto thine eyes the glass where that is seen 5
 Which had Life's form and Love's, but by my spell
 Is now a shaken shadow intolerable,
 Of ultimate things unuttered the frail screen.
 Mark me how still I am! But should there dart
 One moment through thy soul the soft surprise 10
 Of that winged Peace which lulls the breath of sighs,—
 Then shalt thou see me smile, and turn apart
 Thy visage to mine ambush at thy heart
 Sleepless with cold commemorative eyes.

Christina Georgina Rossetti

1830-1894

UP-HILL

(From Goblin Market, 1862)

Does the road wind up-hill all the way?
 Yes, to the very end.
 Will the day's journey take the whole long day?
 From morn to night, my friend.
 But is there for the night a resting place? 5
 A roof for when the slow dark hours begin.
 May not the darkness hide it from my face?
 You cannot miss that inn.

Shall I meet other wayfarers at night?

Those who have gone before. 10
 Then must I knock, or call when just in sight?
 They will not keep you standing at that door.

Shall I find comfort, travel-sore and weak?

Of labour you shall find the sum.
 Will there be beds for me and all who seek? 15
 Yea, beds for all who come.

SYMBOLS

(From Devotional Pieces)

I watched a rosebud very long
 Brought on by dew and sun and shower,
 Waiting to see the perfect flower;
 Then, when I thought it should be strong,
 It opened at the matin hour 5
 And fell at even-song.

I watched a nest from day to day,
 A green nest full of pleasant shade,
 Wherein three speckled eggs were laid:
 But when they should have hatched in May, 10
 The two old birds had grown afraid
 Or tired, and flew away.

Then in my wrath I broke the bough
 That I had tended so with care,
 Hoping its scent should fill the air; 15
 I crushed the eggs, not heeding how
 Their ancient promise had been fair:
 I would have vengeance now.

But the dead branch spoke from the sod,
 And the eggs answered me again: 20
 Because we failed dost thou complain?
 Is thy wrath just? And what if God,
 Who waiteth for thy fruits in vain,
 Should also take the rod?

SONNET

(From "Monna Innominata," in A Pageant and Other Poems, 1881)

Thou Who didst make and knowest whereof we are made,
 Oh bear in mind our dust and nothingness,
 Our wordless tearless dumbness of distress:
 Bear Thou in mind the burden Thou hast laid Upon us, and our feebleness unstayed 5
 Except Thou stay us: for the long long race
 Which stretches far and far before our face Thou knowest,—remember Thou whereof we are made.
 If making makes us Thine, then Thine we are;
 And if redemption, we are twice Thine own:
 If once Thou didst come down from heaven
 afar 11
 To seek us and to find us, how not save?
 Comfort us, save us, leave us not alone,
 Thou Who didst die our death and fill our grave.

William Morris

1834-1896

AN APOLOGY

(From The Earthly Paradise, 1868-1870)

Of Heaven or Hell I have no power to sing,
 I cannot ease the burden of your fears,
 Or make quick-coming death a little thing,
 Or bring again the pleasure of past years,
 Nor for my words shall ye forget your tears, 5
 Or hope again for aught that I can say,
 The idle singer of an empty day.

But rather when aweary of your mirth,
 From full hearts still unsatisfied ye sigh,
 And, feeling kindly unto all the earth, 10
 Grudge every minute as it passes by,
 Made the more mindful that the sweet days die—

Remember me a little then I pray,
 The idle singer of an empty day.

Dreamer of dreams, born out of my due
 time, 15
 Why should I strive to set the crooked straight?
 Let it suffice me that my murmuring rhyme
 Beats with light wing against the ivory gate,<sup>1</sup>
 Telling a tale not too importunate
 To those who in the sleepy region stay, 20
 Lulled by the singer of an empty day.

Folk say, a wizard to a northern king
 At Christmas-tide such wondrous things did show,
 That through one window men beheld the
 spring,
 And through another saw the summer glow, 25
 And through a third the fruited vines a-row,
 While still, unheard, but in its wonted way,
 Piped the drear wind of that December day.

So with this Earthly Paradise it is,
 If ye will read aright and pardon me, 30
 Who strive to build a shadowy isle of bliss
 Midmost the beating of a steely sea,
 Where tossed about all hearts of men must be;
 Whose ravening monsters men of might shall slay,
 Not the poor singer of an empty day. 35

PROLOGUE

(From the same)

Forget six counties overhung with smoke,
 Forget the snorting steam and piston stroke,
 Forget the spreading of the hideous town;
 Think rather of the pack-horse on the down,
 And dream of London, small, and white and clean, 5
 The clear Thames bordered by its gardens
 green;

<sup>1</sup> One of the two semi-transparent gates of the house of Sleep, the other being of horn. The dreams which came through the ivory gate were fair but deceitful, while true visions came through the gate of horn. V. Vergil, Æn. vi. 893.

Think, that below bridge the green lapping waves

Smite some few keels that bear Levantine
 staves,

Cut from the yew wood on the burnt-up hill, 9
 And pointed jars that Greek hands toiled to fill,
 And treasured scanty spice from some far sea,
 Florence gold cloth, and Ypres napery,
 And cloth of Bruges, and hogsheds of Guienne;
 While nigh the thronged wharf Geoffrey
 Chaucer's pen

Moves over bills of lading,—'mid such times 15
 Shall dwell the hollow puppets of my rhymes.

THE SON OF CRÆSUS

(From the same)

ARGUMENT

Cræsus, King of Lydia, dreamed that he saw his son slain by an iron weapon, and though by every means he strove to avert this doom from him, yet thus it happened, for his son was slain by the hand of the man who seemed least of all likely to do the deed.

Of Cræsus tells my tale, a king of old
 In Lydia, ere the Mede fell on the land,
 A man made mighty by great heaps of gold,
 Feared for the myriads strong of heart and hand
 That 'neath his banners wrought out his command, 5
 And though his latter ending happened on ill,
 Yet first of every joy he had his fill.

Two sons he had, and one was dumb from
 birth;
 The other one, that Atys had to name,
 Grew up a fair youth, and of might and worth, 10
 And well it seemed the race wherefrom he came
 From him should never get reproach or shame:
 But yet no stroke he struck before his death,
 In no war-shout he spent his latest breath.

Now Cræsus, lying on his bed at night, 15
 Dreamed that he saw his dear son laid a-low,
 And folk lamenting he was slain outright,
 And that some iron thing had dealt the blow;
 By whose hand guided he could nowise know,
 Or if in peace by traitors it were done, 20
 Or in some open war not yet begun.

Three times one night this vision broke his
 sleep,
 So that at last he rose up from his bed,
 That he might ponder how best he might keep
 The threatened danger from so dear a head; 25
 And, since he now was old enough to wed,
 The King sent men to search the lands around,
 Until some matchless maiden should be found;

That in her arms this Atys might forget
 The praise of men, and fame of history, 30
 Whereby full many a field has been made wet
 With blood of men, and many a deep green sea
 Been reddened therewithal, and yet shall be;
 That her sweet voice might drown the people's praise,
 Her eyes make bright the uneventful days. 35

So when at last a wonder they had brought,
From some sweet land down by the ocean's rim,
Than whom no fairer could by man be thought,
And ancient dames, scanning her limb by limb,
Had said that she was fair enough for him, 40
To her was Atys married with much show,
And looked to dwell with her in bliss enow.

And in meantime afield he never went,
Either to hunting or the frontier war,
No dart was cast, nor any engine bent 45
Anigh him, and the Lydian men afar
Must rein their steeds, and the bright blossoms
mar
If they have any lust of tourney now;
And in fair meadows must they bend the bow.

And also through the palace everywhere 50
The swords and spears were taken from the wall
That long with honour had been hanging there,
And from the golden pillars of the hall;
Lest by mischance some sacred blade should
fall,
And in its falling bring revenge at last 55
For many a fatal battle overpast.

And every day King Cræsus wrought with care
To save his dear son from that threatened end,
And many a beast he offered up with prayer Unto the gods, and much of wealth did spend, 60
That they so prayed might yet perchance defend
That life, until at least that he were dead,
With earth laid heavy on his unseeing head.

But in the midst even of the wedding feast
There came a man, who by the golden hall 65
Sat down upon the steps, and man or beast
He heeded not, but there against the wall
He leaned his head, speaking no word at all,
Till, with his son and son's wife, came the King,
And then unto his gown the man did cling. 70

"What man art thou?" the King said to him
then,
"That in such guise thou prayest on thy knee;
Hast thou some fell foe here among my men?
Or hast thou done an ill deed unto me?
Or hast thy wife been carried over sea? 75
Or hast thou on this day great need of gold?
Or say, why else thou now art grown so bold."

"O King," he said, "I ask no gold to-day,
And though indeed thy greatness drew me here,
No wrong have I that thou couldst wipe
away; 80
And nought of mine the pirate folk did bear
Across the sea; none of thy folk I fear:
But all the gods are now mine enemies,
Therefore I kneel before thee on my knees.

"For as with mine own brother on a day 85
Within the running place at home I played,
Unwittingly I smote him such-a-way

That dead upon the green grass he was laid;
Half-dead myself I fled away dismayed,
Wherefore I pray thee help me in my need, 90
And purify my soul of this sad deed.

"If of my name and country thou wouldst
know,
In Phrygia yet my father is a king,
Gordius, the son of Midas, rich enow
In corn and cattle, golden cup and ring; 95
And mine own name before I did this thing
Was called Adrastus, whom, in street and hall,
The slayer of his brother men now call."

"Friend," said the King, "have thou no fear
of me;
For though, indeed, I am right happy now, 100
Yet well I know this may not always be,
And I may chance some day to kneel full low,
And to some happy man mine head to bow
With prayers to do a greater thing than this,
Dwell thou with us, and win again thy bliss. 105

"For in this city men in sport and play
Forget the trouble that the gods have sent;
Who therewithal send wine, and many a may
As fair as she for whom the Trojan went;
And many a dear delight besides have lent, 110
Which, whoso is well loved of them shall keep Till in forgetful death he falls asleep.

"Therefore to-morrow shall those rites be done
That kindred blood demands that thou hast
shed,
That if the mouth of thine own mother's son 115
Did hap to curse thee ere he was quite dead,
The curse may lie the lighter on thine head,
Because the flower-crowned head of many a beast
Has fallen voiceless in our glorious feast."

Then did Adrastus rise and thank the
King, 120
And the next day when yet low was the sun,
The sacrifice and every other thing
That unto these dread rites belonged, was done;
And there Adrastus dwelt, hated of none,
And loved of many, and the King loved him, 125
For brave and wise he was and strong of limb.

But amongst all did Atys love
The luckless stranger, whose fair tales of war
The Lydian's heart abundantly did move,
And much they talked of wandering out afar 130
Some day, to lands where many marvels are,
With still the Phrygian through all things to be
The leader unto all felicity.

Now at this time folk came unto the King
Who on a forest's borders dwelling were, 135
Wherein there roamed full many a dangerous
thing,
As wolf and wild bull, lion and brown bear;
But chiefly in that forest was the lair
Of a great boar that no man could withstand,
And many a woe he brought upon the land. 140

Since long ago that men in Calydon Held chase, no beast like him had once been seen.
 He ruined vineyards lying in the sun,
 After his harvesting the men must glean
 What he had left; right glad they had not
 been 145
 Among the tall stalks of the ripening wheat,
 The fell destroyer's fatal tusks to meet.

For often would the lonely man entrapped,
 In vain from his dire fury strive to hide
 In some thick hedge, and other whiles it happened 150
 Some careless stranger by his place would ride,
 And the tusks smote his fallen horse's side,
 And what help then to such a wretch could come
 With sword he could not draw, and far from
 home?

Or else girls, sent their water-jars to fill, 155
 Would come back pale, too terrified to cry,
 Because they had but seen him from the hill;
 Or else again with side rent wretchedly,
 Some hapless damsel midst the brake would lie.
 Shortly to say, there neither man nor maid 160
 Was safe afield whether they wrought or played.

Therefore were come these dwellers by the wood
 To pray the King brave men to them to send,
 That they might live; and if he deemed it good,
 That Atys with the other knights should wend, 165
 They through their grief the easier should have
 end;
 For both by gods and men they knew him loved,
 And easily by hope of glory moved.

"O Sire," they said, "thou know'st how Hercules
 Was not content to wait till folk asked aid, 170
 But sought the pests among their guarded
 trees;
 Thou know'st what name the Theban Cadmus
 made,
 And how the bull of Marathon was laid
 Dead on the fallows of the Athenian land,
 And how folk worshipped Atlanta's hand. 175

"Fair would thy son's name look upon the roll
 Wherein such noble deeds as his are told;
 And great delight shall surely fill thy soul,
 Thinking upon his deeds when thou art old,
 And thy brave heart is waxen faint and cold: 180
 Dost thou not know, O King, how men will strive
 That they, when dead, still in their sons may live?"

He shuddered as they spoke, because he
 thought,
 Most certainly a winning tale is this
 To draw him from the net where he is caught,

For hearts of men grow weary of all bliss; 186
 Nor is he one to be content with his,
 If he should hear the trumpet-blast of fame
 And far-off people calling on his name.

"Good friends," he said, "go, get ye back
 again, 190
 And doubt not I will send you men to slay
 This pest ye fear: yet shall your prayer be vain
 If ye with any other speak to-day;
 And for my son, with me he needs must stay,
 For mighty cares oppress the Lydian land. 195
 Fear not, for ye shall have a noble band."

And with that promise must they be content,
 And so departed, having feasted well.
 And yet some god or other ere they went,
 If they were silent, this their tale must tell 200
 To more than one man; therefore it befell,
 That at the last Prince Atys knew the thing,
 And came with angry eyes unto the King.

"Father," he said, "since when am I grown vile?
 Since when am I grown helpless of my hands?
 Or else what folk, with words enwrought with guile, 206
 Thine ears have poisoned; that when far-off
 lands
 My fame might fill, by thy most strange commands
 I needs must stay within this slothful home,
 Whereunto would God that I had never come?"

"What! wilt thou take mine honour quite
 away? 211
 Wouldst thou, that, as with her I just have wed
 I sit among thy folk at end of day,
 She should be ever turning round her head
 To watch some man for war apparelled, 215
 Because he wears a sword that he may use,
 Which grace to me thou ever wilt refuse?"

"Or, dost thou think, when thou hast run thy race
 And thou art gone, and in thy stead I reign,
 The people will do honour to my place, 220
 Or that the lords leal men will still remain,
 If yet my father's sword be sharp in vain?
 If on the wall his armour still hang up,
 While for a spear I hold a drinking cup?"

"O Son!" quoth Croesus, "well I know thee brave, 225
 And worthy of high deeds of chivalry;
 Therefore the more thy dear life would I save,
 Which now is threatened by the gods on high;
 Three times one night I dreamed I saw thee die,
 Slain by some deadly pointed thing, 230
 While weeping lords stood round thee in a ring."

Then loud laughed Atys, and he said again,
 "Father, and did this ugly dream tell thee
 What day it was on which I should be slain?
 As may the gods grant I may one day be, 235
 And not from sickness die right wretchedly,
 Groaning with pain my lords about my bed
 Wishing to God that I were fairly dead;

Beheld next day his visage wild and wan,
Peering from out a thicket of the wood
Where he had spilt that well-belovèd blood.

And now the day of burial pomp must be,
And to those rites all lords of Lydia came 450
About the King, and that day, they and he
Cast royal gifts of rich things on the flame;
But while they stood and wept, and called by
name

Upon the dead, amidst them came a man
With raiment rent, and haggard face and wan.

Who when the marshalls would have thrust
him out 456
And men looked strange on him, began to say,
"Surely the world has changed since ye have doubt

Of who I am; nay, turn me not away,
For ye have called me princely ere to-day— 460
Adrastus, son of Gordius, a great king,
Where unto Pallas Phrygian maidens sing.

"O Lydians, many a rich thing have ye cast
Into this flame, but I myself will give
A greater gift, since now I see at last 465
The gods are wearied for that still I live,
And with their will, why should I longer strive?
Atys, O Atys, thus I give to thee.
A life that lived for thy felicity."

And therewith from his side a knife he drew,
And, crying out upon the pile he leapt, 471
And with one mighty stroke himself he slew.
So there these princes both together slept,
And their light ashes, gathered up, were kept
Within a golden vessel wrought all o'er 475
With histories of this hunting of the boar.

L'ENVOI

(From the same)

"Death have we hated, knowing not what it meant;
Life have we loved through green leaf and
through sere,
Though still the less we know of its intent:
The Earth and Heaven through countless year
on year,
Slow changing, were to us but curtains fair 5
Hung round about a little room, where play
Weeping and laughter, of man's empty day.

"O Master,<sup>1</sup> if thine heart could love us yet,
Spite of things left undone, and wrongly done,
Some place in loving hearts then should we get, 10
For thou, sweet-souled, didst never stand
alone,
But knew'st the joy and woe of many an one—
By lovers dead, who live through thee, we pray,
Help thus us singers of an empty day!"

<sup>1</sup> Geoffrey Chaucer, to whom Morris has commended his book in a preceding stanza. This was more than a general tribute to Chaucer's genius; Chaucer was Morris's actual master and model, and the Earthly Paradise shows its author's debt to the poet of The Canterbury Tales.

Fearlest thou, Book, what answer thou mayst
gain, 15
Lest he should scorn thee, and thereof thou die?
Nay, it shall not be.—Thou mayst toil in vain,
And never draw the House of Fame anigh;
Yet he and his shall know whereof we cry,
Shall call it not ill done to strive to lay, 20
The ghosts that crowd about life's empty day.

Then let the others go! and if indeed
In some old garden thou and I have wrought,
And made fresh flowers spring up from hoarded
seed,
And fragrance of old days and deeds have brought 25
Back to folk weary; all was not for nought.
—No little part it was for me to play—
The idle singer of an empty day.

DRAWING NEAR THE LIGHT

(From Poems by the Way, 1892)

Lo, when we wade the tangled wood,
In haste and hurry to be there,
Nought seem its leaves and blossoms good,
For all that they be fashioned fair.

But looking up, at last we see 5
The glimmer of the open light,
From o'er the place where we would be:
Then grow the very brambles bright.

So now, amidst our day of strife,
With many a matter glad we play, 10
When once we see the light of life
Gleam through the tangle of to-day.

Algernon Charles Swinburne

1837-1909

CHORUS

(From Atalanta in Calydon, 1865)

When the hounds of spring are on winter's traces,
The mother of months in meadow or plain
Fills the shadows and windy places
With lisp of leaves and ripple of rain;
And the brown bright nightingale amorous 5
Is half assuaged for Itylus,<sup>1</sup>
For the Thracian ships and the foreign faces,
The tongueless vigil, and all the pain.

Come with bows bent and with emptying of
quivers,
Maiden most perfect, lady of light, 10
With a noise of winds and many rivers,
With a clamour of waters, and with might;
Bind on thy sandals, O thou most fleet,
Ever the splendour and speed of thy feet;

<sup>1</sup> Here evidently used for Itys; v. Philomela, Progne, or Tereus, in Class-Dict. and cf. Swinburne's poem Itylus.

- For the faint east quickens, the wan west
shivers, 15
Round the feet of the day and the feet of the
night.
- Where shall we find her, how shall we sing to
her,
Fold our hands round her knees and cling?
O that man's heart were as fire and could
spring to her,
Fire, or the strength of the streams that
spring! 20
- For the stars and the winds are unto her
As raiment, as songs of the harp-player;
For the risen stars and the fallen cling to her,
And the southwest-wind and the west-wind
sing.
- For winter's rains and ruins are over, 25
And all the season of snows and sins;
The days dividing lover and lover,
The light that loses, the night that wins;
And time remembered is grief forgotten,
And frosts are slain and flowers begotten, 30
And in green underwood and cover
Blossom by blossom the spring begins.
- The full streams feed on flower of rushes,
Ripe grasses trammel a travelling foot, 34
The faint fresh flame of the young year flushes
From leaf to flower and from flower to fruit;
And fruit and leaf are as gold and fire,
And the oat is heard above the lyre,
And the hoofed heel of a satyr crushes
The chestnut-husk at the chestnut-root. 40
- And Pan by noon and Bacchus by night,
Fleeter of foot than the fleet-foot kid,
Follows with dancing and fills with delight
The Mænad and the Bassarid;<sup>2</sup> 45
And soft as lips that laugh and hide
The laughing leaves of the tree divide,
And screen from seeing and leave in sight
The god pursuing the maiden hid.
- The ivy falls with the Bacchanal's hair
Over her eyebrows hiding her eyes; 50
The wild vine slipping down leaves bare
Her bright breast shortening into sighs;
The wild vine slips with the weight of its leaves,
But the berried ivy catches and cleaves
To the limbs that glitter, the feet that scare 55
The wolf that follows, the fawn that flies.

CHORUS

(From the same)

- We have seen thee, O Love, thou art fair; thou
art goodly, O Love;
Thy wings make light in the air as the wings of a dove.
- Thy feet are as winds that divide the stream of
the sea;
Earth is thy covering to hide thee, the garment
of thee.
Thou art swift and subtle and blind as a flame
of fire; 5
Before thee laughter, behind thee the tears of
desire;
And twain go forth beside thee, a man with a
maid;
Her eyes are the eyes of a bride, whom delight
makes afraid;
As the breath in the buds that stir is her bridal
breath:
But fate is the name of her: and his name is
Death. 10
- For an evil blossom was born
Of sea-foam and the frothing of blood,
Blood-red and bitter of fruit,
And the seed of it laughter and tears, 15
And the leaves of it madness and scorn:
A bitter flower from the bud,
Sprung of the sea without root,
Sprung without graft from the years. . . .
- What hadst thou to do being born,
Mother, when winds were at ease, 20
As a flower of the springtime of corn,
A flower of the foam of the seas?
For bitter thou wast from thy birth,
Aphrodite, a mother of strife;
For before thee some rest was on earth, 25
A little respite from tears,
A little pleasure of life:
For life was not then as thou art,
But as one that waxeth in years
Sweet-spoken, a fruitful wife; 30
Earth had no thorn and desire
No sting, neither death any dart;
What hadst thou to do amongst these,
Thou, clothed with a burning fire,
Thou girt with sorrow of heart 35
Thou sprung of the seed of the seas
As an ear from a seed of corn,
As a brand plucked forth of a pyre,
As a ray shed forth of the morn,
For division of soul and disease, 40
For a dart and a sting and a thorn?
What ailed thee then to be born?
- Was there not evil enough,
Mother, and anguish on earth
Born with a man at his birth, 45
Wastes underfoot, and above
Storm out of heaven, and dearth
Shaken down from the shining thereof,
Wrecks from afar over seas
And peril of shallow and firth, 50
And tears that spring and increase
In the barren places of mirth,
That thou having wings as a dove,
Being girt with desire for a girth,
That thou must come after these, 55
That thou must lay on him love?

<sup>2</sup> Bassarid (Gr. Βασσαρίδα), and Mænad, are names for a bacchant, — a priestess of Bacchus, or a woman who joined in the festivals of Bacchus and who was inspired with the bacchic frenzy.

Beheld next day his visage wild and wan,
Peering from out a thicket of the wood
Where he had spilt that well-belovèd blood.

And now the day of burial pomp must be,
And to those rites all lords of Lydia came 450
About the King, and that day, they and he
Cast royal gifts of rich things on the flame;
But while they stood and wept, and called by
name

Upon the dead, amidst them came a man
With raiment rent, and haggard face and wan.

Who when the marshalls would have thrust
him out 456
And men looked strange on him, began to say,
"Surely the world has changed since ye have
doubt

Of who I am; nay, turn me not away,
For ye have called me princely ere to-day— 460
Adrastus, son of Gordius, a great king,
Where unto Pallas Phrygian maidens sing.

"O Lydians, many a rich thing have ye cast
Into this flame, but I myself will give
A greater gift, since now I see at last 465
The gods are wearied for that still I live,
And with their will, why should I longer strive?
Atys, O Atys, thus I give to thee.
A life that lived for thy felicity."

And therewith from his side a knife he drew,
And, crying out upon the pile he leapt, 471
And with one mighty stroke himself he slew.
So there these princes both together slept,
And their light ashes, gathered up, were kept
Within a golden vessel wrought all o'er 475
With histories of this hunting of the boar.

L'ENVOI

(From the same)

"Death have we hated, knowing not what it
meant;
Life have we loved through green leaf and
through sere,
Though still the less we know of its intent:
The Earth and Heaven through countless year
on year,
Slow changing, were to us but curtains fair 5
Hung round about a little room, where play
Weeping and laughter, of man's empty day.

"O Master,<sup>1</sup> if thine heart could love us yet,
Spite of things left undone, and wrongly done,
Some place in loving hearts then should we
get, 10
For thou, sweet-souled, didst never stand
alone,
But knew'st the joy and woe of many an one—
By lovers dead, who live through thee, we pray,
Help thus us singers of an empty day!"

<sup>1</sup> Geoffrey Chaucer, to whom Morris has commended his book in a preceding stanza. This was more than a general tribute to Chaucer's genius; Chaucer was Morris's actual master and model, and the Earthly Paradise shows its author's debt to the poet of The Canterbury Tales.

Fearest thou, Book, what answer thou mayst
gain, 15
Lest he should scorn thee, and thereof thou die?
Nay, it shall not be.—Thou mayst toil in vain,
And never draw the House of Fame anigh;
Yet he and his shall know whereof we cry,
Shall call it not ill done to strive to lay, 20
The ghosts that crowd about life's empty day.

Then let the others go! and if indeed
In some old garden thou and I have wrought,
And made fresh flowers spring up from hoarded
seed,
And fragrance of old days and deeds have brought 25
Back to folk weary; all was not for nought.
—No little part it was for me to play—
The idle singer of an empty day.

DRAWING NEAR THE LIGHT

(From Poems by the Way, 1892)

Lo, when we wade the tangled wood,
In haste and hurry to be there,
Nought seem its leaves and blossoms good,
For all that they be fashioned fair.

But looking up, at last we see 5
The glimmer of the open light,
From o'er the place where we would be:
Then grow the very brambles bright.

So now, amidst our day of strife,
With many a matter glad we play, 10
When once we see the light of life
Gleam through the tangle of to-day.

Algernon Charles Swinburne

1837–1909

CHORUS

(From Atalanta in Calydon, 1865)

When the hounds of spring are on winter's traces,
The mother of months in meadow or plain
Fills the shadows and windy places
With lisp of leaves and ripple of rain;
And the brown bright nightingale amorous 5
Is half assuaged for Itylus,<sup>1</sup>
For the Thracian ships and the foreign faces,
The tongueless vigil, and all the pain.

Come with bows bent and with emptying of
quivers,
Maiden most perfect, lady of light, 10
With a noise of winds and many rivers,
With a clamour of waters, and with might;
Bind on thy sandals, O thou most fleet,
Ever the splendour and speed of thy feet;

<sup>1</sup> Here evidently used for Itylus; v. Philomela, Progne, or Tereus, in Class-Dict. and cf. Swinburne's poem Itylus.

- For the faint east quickens, the wan west
shivers, 15
Round the feet of the day and the feet of the
night.
- Where shall we find her, how shall we sing to
her,
Fold our hands round her knees and cling?
O that man's heart were as fire and could
spring to her,
Fire, or the strength of the streams that
spring! 20
- For the stars and the winds are unto her
As raiment, as songs of the harp-player;
For the risen stars and the fallen cling to her,
And the southwest-wind and the west-wind
sing.
- For winter's rains and ruins are over, 25
And all the season of snows and sins;
The days dividing lover and lover,
The light that loses, the night that wins;
And time remembered is grief forgotten,
And frosts are slain and flowers begotten, 30
And in green underwood and cover
Blossom by blossom the spring begins.
- The full streams feed on flower of rushes,
Ripe grasses trammel a travelling foot, 34
The faint fresh flame of the young year flushes
From leaf to flower and from flower to fruit;
And fruit and leaf are as gold and fire,
And the oat is heard above the lyre,
And the hoofed heel of a satyr crushes
The chestnut-husk at the chestnut-root. 40
- And Pan by noon and Bacchus by night,
Fleeter of foot than the fleet-foot kid,
Follows with dancing and fills with delight
The Mænad and the Bassarid;<sup>2</sup> 45
And soft as lips that laugh and hide
The laughing leaves of the tree divide,
And screen from seeing and leave in sight
The god pursuing the maiden hid.
- The ivy falls with the Bacchanal's hair
Over her eyebrows hiding her eyes; 50
The wild vine slipping down leaves bare
Her bright breast shortening into sighs;
The wild vine slips with the weight of its leaves,
But the berried ivy catches and cleaves
To the limbs that glitter, the feet that scare 55
The wolf that follows, the fawn that flies.

CHORUS

(From the same)

- We have seen thee, O Love, thou art fair; thou
art goodly, O Love;
Thy wings make light in the air as the wings of
a dove.
- Thy feet are as winds that divide the stream of
the sea;
Earth is thy covering to hide thee, the garment
of thee.
Thou art swift and subtle and blind as a flame
of fire; 5
Before thee laughter, behind thee the tears of
desire;
And twain go forth beside thee, a man with a
maid;
Her eyes are the eyes of a bride, whom delight
makes afraid;
As the breath in the buds that stir is her bridal
breath:
But fate is the name of her: and his name is
Death. 10
- For an evil blossom was born
Of sea-foam and the frothing of blood,
Blood-red and bitter of fruit,
And the seed of it laughter and tears,
And the leaves of it madness and scorn: 15
A bitter flower from the bud,
Sprung of the sea without root,
Sprung without graft from the years. . .
- What hadst thou to do being born,
Mother, when winds were at ease, 20
As a flower of the springtime of corn,
A flower of the foam of the seas?
For bitter thou wast from thy birth,
Aphrodite, a mother of strife;
For before thee some rest was on earth, 25
A little respite from tears,
A little pleasure of life:
For life was not then as thou art,
But as one that waxeth in years
Sweet-spoken, a fruitful wife; 30
Earth had no thorn and desire
No sting, neither death any dart;
What hadst thou to do amongst these,
Thou, clothed with a burning fire,
Thou girt with sorrow of heart 35
Thou sprung of the seed of the seas
As an ear from a seed of corn,
As a brand plucked forth of a pyre,
As a ray shed forth of the morn,
For division of soul and disease, 40
For a dart and a sting and a thorn?
What ailed thee then to be born?
- Was there not evil enough,
Mother, and anguish on earth
Born with a man at his birth, 45
Wastes underfoot, and above
Storm out of heaven, and dearth
Shaken down from the shining thereof,
Wrecks from afar over seas
And peril of shallow and firth, 50
And tears that spring and increase
In the barren places of mirth,
That thou having wings as a dove,
Being girt with desire for a girth,
That thou must come after these, 55
That thou must lay on him love?

<sup>2</sup> Bassarid (Gr. Βασάρπα), and Mænad, are names for a bacchante,—a priestess of Bacchus, or a woman who joined in the festivals of Bacchus and who was inspired with the bacchic frenzy.

Thou shouldst not so have been born:
 But death should have risen with thee,
 Mother, and visible fear,
 Grief, and wringing of hands, 60
 And noise of many that mourn;
 The smitten bosom, the knee
 Bowed, and in each man's ear
 A cry as of perishing lands,
 A moan as of people in prison, 65
 A tumult of infinite griefs;
 And thunder of storm on the sands,
 And wailing of wives on the shore;
 And under thee newly arisen
 Loud shoals and shipwrecking reefs, 70
 Fierce air and violent light;
 Sail rent and sundering oar,
 Darkness, and noises of night;
 Clashing of streams in the sea,
 Wave against wave as a sword, 75
 Clamour of currents, and foam;
 Rains making ruin on earth;
 Winds that wax ravenous and roam
 As wolves in a wolfish horde;
 Fruits growing faint in the tree, 80
 And blind things dead in their birth:
 Famine and blighting of corn,
 When thy time was come to be born.

THE GARDEN OF PROSERPINE<sup>1</sup>

(From Laus Veneris, 1866)

Here where the world is quiet;
 Here, where all trouble seems
 Dead winds' and spent waves' riot
 In doubtful dream of dreams;
 I watch the green field growing 5
 For reaping folk and sowing,
 For harvest time and mowing,
 A sleepy world of streams.

I am tired of tears and laughter,
 And men that laugh and weep, 10
 Of what may come hereafter
 For men that sow to reap:
 I am weary of days and hours,
 Blown buds of barren flowers,
 Desires and dreams and powers 15
 And everything but sleep.

Here life hath death for neighbour,
 And far from eye or ear
 Wan waves and wet winds labour,
 Weak ships and spirits steer; 20

They drive adrift, and whither
 They wot not who make thither;
 But no such winds blow hither,
 And no such things grow here.

No growth of moor or coppice, 25
 No heather-flower or vine,
 But bloomless buds of poppies,<sup>2</sup>
 Green grapes of Proserpine,
 Pale beds of blowing rushes
 Where no leaf blooms or blushes 30
 Save this whereout she crushes
 For dead men deadly wine.

Pale, without name or number,
 In fruitless fields of corn,
 They bow themselves and slumber 35
 All night till light is born;
 And like a soul belated,
 In hell and heaven unmated,
 By clouds and mist abated
 Comes out of darkness morn. 40

Though one were strong as seven,
 He too with death shall dwell,
 Nor wake with wings in heaven,
 Nor weep for pains in hell;
 Though one were fair as roses, 45
 His beauty clouds and closes;
 And well though love reposes,
 In the end it is not well.

Pale, beyond porch or portal,
 Crowned with calm leaves, she stands 50
 Who gathers all things mortal
 With cold immortal hands;
 Her languid lips are sweeter
 Than love's who fears to greet her
 To men that mix and meet her 55
 From many times and lands.

She waits for each and other,
 She waits for all men born;
 Forgets the earth her mother,
 The life of fruits and corn; 60
 And spring and seed and swallow
 Take wing for her and follow
 Where summer song rings hollow
 And flowers are put to scorn.

There go the loves that wither, 65
 The old loves with wearier wings;
 And all dead years draw thither;
 And all disastrous things;
 Dead dreams of things forsaken,
 Blind buds that snows have shaken, 70
 Wild leaves that winds have taken,
 Red strays of ruined springs.

We are not sure of sorrow
 And joy was never sure;
 To-day will die to-morrow; 75
 Time stoops to no man's lure;

<sup>1</sup> Proserpine was the child of Demeter, the mother-earth. While gathering flowers in the Sicilian fields, she was caught up and carried off by Pluto, king of the Infernal regions, who made her queen of the lower realm, of darkness and death. She was afterwards permitted to leave the Shades for a part of each year and to visit Olympus. She typifies the corn, or grain, which passes from the dark prison in the earth to light, and leaves the light to return again to darkness. In this poem, Swinburne pictures the world as her garden, a place presided over by the Queen of the kingdom of darkness, a spot from which life is continually being carried off to the dark region of oblivion.

<sup>2</sup> The poppy, the flower of oblivion, was associated with Proserpine. She is often represented with a garland of poppies on her head.

And love, grown faint and fretful,
With lips but half regretful
Sighs, and with eyes forgetful
Weeps that no loves endure.

80

From too much love of living,
From hope and fear set free,
We thank with brief thanksgiving
Whatever gods may be
That no life lives forever;
That dead men rise up never;
That even the weariest river
Winds somewhere safe to sea.

Then star nor sun shall waken,
Nor any change of light:
Nor sound of waters shaken,
Nor any sound or sight:
Nor wintry leaves nor vernal,
Nor days nor things diurnal;
Only the sleep eternal
In an eternal night.

90

95

PASTICHE<sup>1</sup>

(From Poems and Ballads, 1878)

Now the days are all gone over
Of our singing, love by lover,
Days of summer-coloured seas
Blown adrift through beam and breeze.

5

Now the nights are all past over
Of our dreaming, dreams that hover
In a mist of fair false things,
Nights afloat on wide wan wings.

Now the loves with faith for mother,
Now the fears with hope for brother,
Scarce are with us as strange words,
Notes from songs of last year's birds.

10

Now all good that comes or goes is
As the smell of last year's roses,
And the radiance in our eyes
Shot from summer's ere he dies.

15

Now the morning faintlier risen
Seems no god come forth of prison,
But a bird of plume plucked wing,
Pale with thought of evening.

20

Now hath hope, outraced in running
Given the torch up of his cunning
And the palm he thought to wear
Even to his own strong child—despair.

A FORSAKEN GARDEN<sup>1</sup>

In a coign of the cliff between lowland and highland,

At the sea-down's edge between windward
and lee

Walled round with rocks as an inland island,
The ghost of a garden fronts the sea.

<sup>1</sup> Pastiche (or pasticcio) is the French word for a medley, or a work in imitation of the style of several masters.

<sup>1</sup> The scene of this poem is said to be East Dene, Bonchurch, in the Isle of Wight.

A girdle of brushwood and thorn encloses 5
The steep square slope of the blossomless
bed

Where the weeds that grew green from the graves of its roses
Now lie dead.

The fields fall southward, abrupt and broken,
To the low last edge of the long lone land. 10
If a step should sound or a word be spoken,
Would a ghost not rise at the strange guest's
hand?

So long have the gray bare walks lain guestless,
Through branches and briers if a man make
way,

He shall find no life but the sea-wind's restless
Night and day. 16

The dense hard passage is blind and stifled
That crawls by a track none turn to climb
To the strait waste place that the years have rifed

Of all but the thorns that are touched not by
time. 20

The thorns he spares when the rose is taken;
The rocks are left when he wastes the plain;
The wind that wanders, the weeds wind-shaken,
These remain.

Not a flower to be prest of the foot that falls
not; 25

As the heart of a dead man the seed-plots are
dry;

From the thicket of thorns whence the nightingale calls not,

Could she call, there were never a rose to reply.

Over the meadows that blossom and wither,
Rings but the note of a sea-bird's song. 30

Only the sun and the rain come hither
All year long.

The sun burns sear, and the rain dishevels
One gaunt bleak blossom of scentless breath.
Only the wind here hovers and revels 35

In a round where life seems barren as death.
Here there was laughing of old, there was weeping,

Haply of lovers none ever will know,
Whose eyes went seaward a hundred sleeping
Years ago. 40

Heart handfast in heart as they stood, "Look hither,"

Did he whisper? "Look forth from the flowers to the sea;

For the foam-flowers endure when the rose-blossoms wither,

And men that love lightly may die—But
we?"

And the same wind sang, and the same waves
whitened, 45

And or ever the garden's last petals were
shed,

In the lips that had whispered, the eyes that had lightened,

Love was dead.

Or they loved their life, through, and then went whither?
 And were one to the end—but what end who knows? 50

Love deep as the sea as a rose must wither,
 As the rose-red seaweed that mocks the
 rose.

Shall the dead take thought for the dead to love them?

What love was ever as deep as a grave?
 They are loveless now as the grass above
 them

Or the wave. 56

All are at one now, roses and lovers,
 Not known of the cliffs and the fields and the sea.

Not a breath of the time that has been hovers
 In the air now soft with summer to be. 60

Not a breath shall there sweeten the seasons hereafter

Of the flowers or the lovers that laugh now or
 weep,

When as they that are free now of weeping and laughter

We shall sleep.

Here death may deal not again forever; 65
 Here change may come not till all change
 end.

From the graves they have made they shall rise up never,

Who have left naught living to ravage and rend.

Earth, stones, and thorns of the wild ground growing,

While the sun and the rain live, these shall
 be; 70

Till a last wind's breath, upon all these blowing
 Roll the sea.

Till the slow sea rise, and the sheer cliff crumble,

Till the terrace and meadow the deep gulfs
 drink,

Till the strength of the waves the high tides
 humble 75

The fields that lessen, the rocks that shrink,
 Here now in his triumph where all things falter,

Stretched out on the spoils that his own hand
 spread,

As a god self-slain on his own strange altar,
 Death lies dead. 80

UPON A CHILD

Of such is the kingdom of heaven,
 No glory that ever was shed
 From the crowning star of the seven
 That crown the north world's head,<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> i. e. the North-star, or Pole-star, the brightest star in the Little Bear (Ursa Minor), a constellation composed of seven stars.

No word that ever was spoken
 Of human or godlike tongue,
 Gave ever such godlike token
 Since human harps were strung.

No sign that ever was given
 To faithful or faithless eyes 10
 Showed ever beyond clouds riven
 So clear a paradise.

Earth's creeds may be seventy times seven
 And blood have defiled each creed:
 If of such be the kingdom of heaven, 15
 It must be heaven indeed.

THE SALT OF THE EARTH

If childhood were not in the world,
 But only men and women grown;
 No baby-locks in tendrils curled,
 No baby-blossoms blown;

Though men were stronger, women fairer, 5
 And nearer all delights in reach,
 And verse and music uttered rarer
 Tones of more godlike speech;

Though the utmost life of life's best hours
 Found, as it cannot now find words; 10
 Though desert sands were sweet as flowers,
 And flowers could sing like birds,

But children never heard them, never
 They felt a child's feet leap and run;
 This were a drearier star than ever 15
 Yet looked upon the sun.

ON THE DEATHS OF THOMAS CARLYLE AND GEORGE ELIOT

Two souls diverse out of our human sight
 Pass, followed one with love and each with wonder:

The stormy sophist with his mouth of thunder,
 Clothed with loud words and mantled in the might

Of darkness and magnificence of night; 5
 And one whose eye could smite the night in sunder,
 Searching if light or no light were there—under,

And found in love of loving-kindness light.
 Duty divine and Thought with eyes of fire Still following Righteousness with deep desire 10

Shone stern and firm before her and above
 Sure stars and sole to steer by; but more sweet Shone lower the loveliest lamp for earthy
 feet,—

The light of little children and their love.

OTHER POETS OF THE VICTORIAN AGE

Hartley Coleridge<sup>1</sup>

1796-1849

SONG

(From Poems, 1833)

She is not fair to outward view
As many maidens be,
Her loveliness I never knew
Until she smiled on me;
Oh! then I saw her eye was bright,
A well of love, a spring of light. 5

But now her looks are coy and cold,
To mine they ne'er reply,
And yet I cease not to behold
The love-light in her eye: 10
Her very frowns are fairer far,
Than smiles of other maidens are.

SONNET ON PRAYER

There is an awful quiet in the air,
And the sad earth, with moist imploring eye,
Looks wide and wakeful at the pondering sky,
Like Patience slow subsiding to Despair.
But see, the blue smoke as a voiceless prayer, 5
Sole witness of a secret sacrifice,
Unfolds its tardy wreaths, and multiplies
Its soft chameleon breathings in the rare
Capacious ether,—so it fades away,
And naught is seen beneath the pendant blue, 10
The undistinguishable day.
So have I dream'd!—Oh! may the dream be true!—

That praying souls are purged from mortal hue,
And grow as pure as He to whom they pray.

Thomas Hood

1798-1845

THE DEATH BED

(From Poems, 1825)

We watched her breathing thro' the night,
Her breathing soft and low,
As in her breast the wave of life
Kept heaving to and fro.

So silently we seemed to speak, 5
So slowly moved about,
As we had lent her half our powers
To eke her living out.

Our very hopes belied our fears,
Our fears our hopes belied— 10
We thought her dying when she slept,
And sleeping when she died.

For when the morn came dim and sad,
And chill with early showers,
Her quiet eyelids closed—she had 15
Another morn than ours.

THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS

("Drowned! drowned!"—Hamlet)

(First published in Hood's Magazine, 1844)

One more Unfortunate,
Weary of breath,
Rashly importunate,
Gone to her death!

Take her up tenderly, 5
Lift her with care;
Fashioned so slenderly,
Young, and so fair!

Look at her garments
Clinging like cerements; 10
Whilst the wave constantly
Drips from her clothing;
Take her up instantly,
Loving, not loathing.—

Touch her not scornfully; 15
Think of her mournfully,
Gently and humanly;
Not of the stains of her,
All that remains of her
Now is pure womanly. 20

Make no deep scrutiny
Into her mutiny
Rash and undutiful:
Past all dishonor,
Death has left on her 25
Only the beautiful.

Still, for all slips of hers,
One of Eve's family—
Wipe those poor lips of hers
Oozing so clammily. 30

Loop up her tresses
Escaped from the comb,
Her fair auburn tresses;
Whilst wonderment guesses
Where was her home? 35

Who was her father?
Who was her mother?
Had she a sister?
Had she a brother?
Or was there a dearer one 40
Still, and a nearer one
Yet, than all other?

<sup>1</sup> Hartley Coleridge was the eldest son of Samuel Taylor Coleridge. As a child he was shy, dreamy, and sensitive; like his father he had a vivid imagination, and like his mother he was hampered (but in even greater measure) by weakness of will. He published several volumes of prose. As a poet, he belongs to the school of Wordsworth, and he is probably at his best in the sonnet.

Alas! for the rarity
Of Christian charity
Under the sun!
Oh! it was pitiful!
Near a whole city full,
Home she had none.

Sisterly, brotherly,
Fatherly, motherly
Feelings had changed:
Love, by harsh evidence,
Thrown from its eminence;
Even God's providence
Seeming estranged.

Where the lamps quiver
So far in the river,
With many a light
From window and casement,
From garret to basement,
She stood, with amazement,
Houseless by night.

The bleak wind of March
Made her tremble and shiver;
But not the dark arch,
Or the black flowing river:
Mad from life's history,
Glad to death's mystery,
Swift to be hurled—
Anywhere, anywhere
Out of the world.

In she plunged boldly,
No matter how coldly
The rough river ran,—
Over the brink of it,
Picture it—think of it,
Dissolute Man!
Lave in it, drink of it,
Then, if you can!

Take her up tenderly,
Lift her with care;
Fashioned so slenderly,
Young, and so fair!

Ere her limbs frigidly
Stiffen too rigidly,
Decently,—kindly,— Smooth, and compose them;
And her eyes, close them,
Staring so blindly!

Dreadfully staring
Thro' muddy impurity,
As when with the daring
Last look of despairing
Fix'd on futurity.

Perishing gloomily,
Spurred by contumely,
Cold inhumanity,
Burning insanity,
Into her rest.—
Cross her hands humbly
As if praying dumbly,
Over her breast.

Owning her weakness,
Her evil behavior,
And leaving, with meekness,
Her sins to her Saviour!

Thomas Babington Macaulay

1800-1859

THE BATTLE OF IVRY<sup>1</sup>

(1842)

Now glory to the Lord of Hosts, from whom all glories are!

And glory to our Sovereign Liege, King Henry
of Navarre!

Now let there be the merry sound of music and the dance;

Through thy corn-fields green, and sunny vines, O pleasant land of France!

And thou, Rochelle,<sup>2</sup> our own Rochelle, proud city of the waters,

Again let rapture light the eyes of all thy mourning daughters.

As thou wert constant in our ills, be joyous
in our joy;

For cold and stiff and still are they who wrought
thy walls annoy.

Hurrah! hurrah! a single field hath turned the chance of war!

Hurrah! hurrah! for Ivry, and King Henry of Navarre.

Oh! how our hearts were beating, when, at the dawn of day,

We saw the army of the League drawn out in long array;

With all its priest-led citizens, and all its rebel peers,

And Appenzel's<sup>3</sup> stout infantry, and Egmont's<sup>4</sup>
Flemish Spears;

There rode the blood of false Lorraine,<sup>5</sup> the curses of our land;

And dark Mayenne<sup>6</sup> was in the midst, a trun-cheon<sup>7</sup> in his hand;

And, as we look'd on them, we thought of Seine's empurpled flood,

And good Coligni's<sup>8</sup> hoary hair all dabbled with his blood;

<sup>1</sup> A village in France, where the battle was fought in 1590, between Henry of Navarre the Champion of Protestantism, and the forces of the Roman Catholic "League."

<sup>2</sup> A fortified sea-port in France, a stronghold of the Protestants.

<sup>3</sup> Appenzell is a double canton in Switzerland, half Protestant, half Roman Catholic. In this passage it is obvious that the Roman Catholics are meant.

<sup>4</sup> Count Philip of Egmont, a foremost man in the Spanish army, who commanded a body of Flemish troops.

<sup>5</sup> Henry of Lorraine, Duke of Guise, a spy, and agent of Philip II. of Spain.

<sup>6</sup> Duke of Mayenne, lieutenant-general for the League.

<sup>7</sup> A commander's staff.

<sup>8</sup> Gaspard of Coligni, the great commander of the Huguenots, was murdered by the Roman Catholics on St. Bartholomew's Eve. The remembrance of that massacre always aroused the opposite party to action.

And we cried unto the living God, who rules
the fate of war,
To fight for His own holy name, and Henry of Navarre. 20

The King is come to marshal us, in all his armor drest;
And he has bound a snow-white plume upon his gallant crest.
He look'd upon his people, and a tear was in his eye!
He look'd upon the traitors, and his glance was stern and high.
Right graciously he smil'd on us, as roll'd from wing to wing, 25
Down all our line, in deafening shout: "God save our lord, the King!"
"And if my standard-bearer fall, as fall full well he may,
For never saw I promise yet of such a bloody fray,
Press where ye see my white plume shine amidst the ranks of war,
And be your oriflamme<sup>9</sup> to-day the helmet of Navarre." 30

Hurrah! the foes are moving. Hark to the mingled din,
Of fife, and steed, and trump, and drum, and roaring culverin.
The fiery duke is pricking fast across St.
Andre's plain,
With all the hireling chivalry of Guelders<sup>10</sup> and Almayne.<sup>11</sup>
Now by the lips of those ye love, fair gentlemen of France, 35
Charge for the golden lilies,<sup>12</sup>—upon them with the lance!
A thousand spears are striking deep, a thousand spears in rest,
A thousand knights are pressing close behind
the snow-white crest;
And in they burst, and on they rushed, while,
like a guiding star,
Amidst the thickest carnage blazed the helmet
of Navarre. 40

Now, God be praised, the day is ours. Mayenne hath turned his rein;
D'Aumale<sup>13</sup> hath cried for quarter; the Flemish count is slain.
Their ranks are breaking like thin clouds before a Biscay gale;
The field is heaped with bleeding steeds, and flags, and cloven mail.
And then we thought on vengeance, and, all along our van, 45
"Remember Saint Barthomolew!" was passed from man to man.
But out spake gentle Henry, "No Frenchman is my foe:

Down, down with every foreigner, but let your brethren go."
Oh! was there ever such a knight, in friendship
or in war,
As our Sovereign Lord, King Henry, the soldier
of Navarre? 50
Right well fought all the Frenchmen who fought for France to-day;
And many a lordly banner God gave them for a
prey.
But we of the religion have borne us best in fight;
And the good Lord of Rosny<sup>14</sup> hath ta'en the cornet white.
Our own true Maximilian the cornet white hath ta'en, 55
The cornet white with crosses black, the flag of false Lorraine.
Up with it high; unfurl it wide; that all the host may know
How God hath humbled the proud house which wrought His Church such woe.
Then on the ground, while trumpets sound
their loudest point of war,
Fling the red shreds, a footcloth meet for Henry of Navarre. 60

Ho! maidens of Vienna; ho! matrons of Lucerne; Weep, weep, and rend your hair for those who never shall return.
Ho! Philip, send, for charity, thy Mexican pistoles,<sup>15</sup>
That Antwerp monks may sing a mass for thy poor spearmen's souls.
Ho! gallant nobles of the League, look that your arms be bright; 65
Ho! burghers of St. Genevieve,<sup>16</sup> keep watch and ward to-night;
For our God hath crushed the tyrant, our God
hath raised the slave,
And mocked the counsel of the wise, and the valor of the brave.
Then glory to his holy name, from whom all
glories are;
And glory to our Sovereign Lord, King Henry
of Navarre. 70

John Henry Newman

(1801-1890)

LEAD KINDLY LIGHT

(1833)

Lead kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead thou me on;
The night is dark, and I am far from home,
Lead thou me on.

Keep thou my feet; I do not ask to see 5
The distant scene: one step enough for me.

<sup>14</sup> Maximilian de Bethune Sully. Baron de Rosny and duc de Sully, fought with the squadron which met Egmont's first onset, and received seven wounds.

<sup>15</sup> An allusion to the moneys received from the Spanish conquest of Mexico. A pistole was a common name in Italy, Spain, and elsewhere for coins of differing values.

<sup>16</sup> i. e. citizens of Paris, as St. Genevieve was the patron saint of that city.

<sup>9</sup> The banner of France.

<sup>10</sup> A Dutch province half Protestant and half Roman Catholic.

<sup>11</sup> Germany. <sup>12</sup> The lily is the emblem of France.

<sup>13</sup> Charles de Lorraine, Duke d'Aumale, an ardent partisan of the "League."

I was not ever thus, nor prayed that thou Shouldst lead me on;
I loved to choose and see my path; but now
Lead thou me on. 10
I loved the garish day; and, spite of fears,
Pride ruled my will: remember not past years.
So long thy power hath blest me, sure it still Will lead me on
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone; 16
And with the morn those Angel faces smile,
Which I have loved long since, and lost awhile.

Robert Stephen Hawker

1803-1875

THE SONG OF THE WESTERN MEN

(Written in 1852)

A good sword and a trusty hand!
A merry heart and true!
King James's men shall understand
What Cornish lads can do!
And have they fixed the where and when? 5
And shall Trelawney<sup>1</sup> die?
Here's twenty thousand Cornish men
Will know the reason why!
Out spake their Captain brave and bold:
A merry wight was he:— 10
"If London Tower were Michael's<sup>2</sup> hold,
We'd set Trelawney free!
"We'll cross the Tamar, land to land:
The Severn is no stay:
With 'one and all,' and hand in hand; 15
And who shall bid us nay?
"And when we come to London wall,
A pleasant sight to view,
Come forth! come forth! ye cowards all;
Here's men as good as you. 20
"Trelawney he's in keep and hold:
Trelawney he may die:
But here's twenty thousand Cornish bold
Will know the reason why!"

Richard Chebenix Trench

1807-1886

"SOME MURMUR WHEN THEIR SKY IS CLEAR"

I

Some murmur when their sky is clear,
And wholly bright to view,
If one small speck of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue.

<sup>1</sup> James II issued a "Declaration of Indulgence," the object of which was to give the Roman Catholics greater power. He ordered it to be read in the churches. Many of the clergy refused to read this "declaration" and the King threatened to put them in the Tower. Among those who refused was Trelawney, Bishop of Bristol, a native of Cornwall.

<sup>2</sup> A small, precipitous, and rocky island, crowned by a castle, off the coast of Cornwall.

And some with thankful love are filled, 5
If but one streak of light,
One ray of God's good mercy, gild
The darkness of their night.

II

In palaces are hearts that ask,
In discontent and pride, 10
Why life is such a dreary task,
And all good things denied.
And hearts in poorest huts admire
How love has in their aid
(Love that not ever seems to tire) 15
Such rich provision made.

Edward Fitzgerald<sup>1</sup>

1809-1883

(From his translation of The Rubaiyat,<sup>2</sup> 1859)

VII

Come, fill the Cup, and in the fire of Spring
Your Winter-garment of repentance fling:
The Bird of Time has but a little way
To flutter—and the bird is on the Wing.

VIII

Whether at Naishapur<sup>3</sup> or Babylon, 5
Whether the Cup with sweet or bitter run,
The Wine of Life keeps oozing drop by drop,
The Leaves of Life keep falling one by one.

IX

Each morn a thousand Roses brings, you say;
Yes, but where leaves the Rose of Yesterday? 10
And this first Summer month that brings the Rose
Shall take Jamshyd<sup>4</sup> and Kaikobád away.

X

Well, let it take them! What have we to do
With Kaikobád the Great, or Kaikhosrú?
Let Zál and Rustum<sup>5</sup> thunder as they will, 15
Or Hatim<sup>6</sup> call to Supper—heed not you. . . .

<sup>1</sup> Edward Fitzgerald, a man of wide and curious learning and fastidious taste, held a unique position among the poets of his time. His original productions were few, and comparatively unimportant; his reputation rests on his work as a translator, and it rests largely on his translation of a single poem. He translated six plays of the Spanish dramatist Calderon; he translated several poems from the Persian, and then, in 1859, he astounded and delighted innumerable readers by his rendering of the "quatrains" of Omar Khayyam. While Fitzgerald lived a most secluded life, he was the warm friend of Tennyson, Thackeray, Spedding, and other eminent men. Tennyson, in dedicating his Tiresias to "Old Fitz," as he calls his life-long friend, declared that he knew no translation in English done "more divinely well" than Fitzgerald's Omar.

<sup>2</sup> A poem by Omar Khayyam (i. e. Omar, the Tent-maker) a Persian poet and astronomer of the 11th and 12th centuries. The title of his most famous poem refers simply to its poetic form. Rubaiyat is the technical name for a quatrain of a certain metrical character.

<sup>3</sup> The birthplace of Omar, in the province of Khorasan, northern Persia.

<sup>4</sup> Jamshyd, Kaikobád, and Kaikhosru, were early Persian kings in Firdusi's poem Shahnamah, or epic of kings.

<sup>5</sup> Heroes in Firdusi's great epic. Zál is Rustum's father. The tragic error of Rustum, who unwittingly kills his son Sohrab, is the theme of Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum.

<sup>6</sup> Hátim Tai, a type of oriental generosity.

XII

A Book of Verses underneath the Bough,
A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread—and Thou
Beside me singing in the Wilderness—
Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow! 20

XIII

Some for the Glories of this World; and some Sigh for the Prophet's Paradise to come;
Ah, take the cash, and let the Credit go,
Nor heed the rumble of a distant Drum. . . .

XVII

Think, in this batter'd Caravanseraï 25
Whose Portals are alternate Night and Day,
How Sultán after Sultán with his Pomp
Abode his destined Hour, and went his way. . . .

XXI

Ah, my Belovéd, fill the cup that clears
To-day of past Regrets and future Fears: 30
To-morrow!—Why, To-morrow I may be Myself with Yesterday's sev'n thousand Years. . . .

XXIV

Ah, make the most of what we yet may spend,
Before we too into the Dust descend;
Dust into Dust, and under Dust, to lie, 35
Sans Wine, sans Song, sans Singer, and—sans
End!

Sir Francis Hastings Charles Doyle
1810–1888

THE PRIVATE OF THE BUFFS

(1866)

Last night, among his fellow roughs,
He jested, quaff'd, and swore:
A drunken Private of the Buffs,
Who never look'd before. 5
To-day, beneath the foeman's frown,
He stands in Elgin's place,
Ambassador from Britain's crown,
And type of all her race.

Poor, reckless, rude, low-born, untaught, 10
Bewilder'd, and alone,
A heart with English instinct fraught,
He yet can call his own.
Ay, tear his body limb from limb,
Bring cord, or axe, or flame:
He only knows, that not through him 15
Shall England come to shame.

Far Kentish hop-fields round him seem'd,
Like dreams, to come and go;
Bright leagues of cherry-blossom gleam'd,
One sheet of living snow; 20

The smoke, above his father's door,
In grey soft eddying hung:
Must he then watch it rise no more,
Doom'd by himself, so young?

Yes, honour calls!—with strength like steel 25
He put the vision by.
Let dusky Indians whine and kneel;
An English lad must die.
And thus, with eyes that would not shrink,
With knee to man unbent, 30
Unflinching on its dreadful brink,
To his red grave he went.

Vain, mightiest fleets, of iron fram'd;
Vain, those all-shattering guns;
Unless proud England keep, untam'd, 35
The strong heart of her sons.
So let his name through Europe ring—
A man of mean estate,
Who died as firm as Sparta's king,<sup>1</sup>
Because his soul was great. 40

William Makepeace Thackeray

1811–1863

AT THE CHURCH GATE

(From Pendennis, 1849–1850)

Although I enter not,
Yet round about the spot
Ofttimes I hover:
And near the sacred gate,
With longing eyes I wait, 5
Expectant of her.

The Minster bell tolls out
Above the city's rout,
And noise and humming:
They've hushed the Minster bell: 10
The organ 'gins to swell:
She's coming, she's coming!

My lady comes at last,
Timid, and stepping fast,
And hastening hither, 15
With modest eyes downcast:
She comes—she's here—she's past—
May heaven go with her.

Kneel undisturbed, fair Saint!
Pour out your praise or plaint! 20
Meekly and duly;
I will not enter there,
To sully your pure prayer
With thoughts unruly.

But suffer me to pace 25
Round the forbidden place,
Lingering a minute
Like outcast spirits who wait
And see through heaven's gate
Angels within it. 30

<sup>1</sup> Leonidas, King of Sparta who died at Thermopylae, after rejecting the offer of the Persian king to make him the ruler of all Greece.

THE END OF THE PLAY

(From Dr. Birch and His Young Friends, 1848-1849)

The play is done; the curtain drops,
Slow falling to the prompter's bell:
A moment yet the actor stops,
And looks around, to say farewell.
It is an irksome word and task 5
And, when he's laughed and said his say,
He shows, as he removes the mask,
A face that's anything but gay.

One word, ere yet the evening ends,
Let's close it with a parting rhyme, 10
And pledge a hand to all young friends,
As fits the merry Christmas time.
On life's wide scene you, too, have parts,
That Fate ere long shall bid you play;
Good night! with honest gentle hearts 15
A kindly greeting go away!

Good night!—I'd say, the griefs, the joys,
Just hinted in this mimic page,
The triumphs and defeats of boys, 20
Are but repeated in our age.
I'd say, your woes were not less keen,
Your hopes more vain, than those of men;
Your pangs or pleasures of fifteen
At forty-five played o'er again.

I'd say, we suffer and we strive, 25
Not less nor more as men than boys;
With grizzled beards at forty-five,
As erst at twelve in corduroys.
And if, in time of sacred youth,
We learned at home to love and pray, 30
Pray Heaven that early Love and Truth
May never wholly pass away.

And in the world, as in the school,
I'd say, how fate may change and shift; 35
The prize be sometimes with the fool,
The race not always to the swift.
The strong may yield, the good may fall,
The great man be a vulgar clown,
The knave be lifted over all, 40
The kind cast pitilessly down.

Who knows the inscrutable design?
Blessèd be He who took and gave!
Why should your mother, Charles, not mine,
Be weeping at her darling's grave?
We bow to Heaven that will'd it so, 45
That darkly rules the fate of all,
That sends the respite or the blow,
That's free to give, or to recall.

This crowns his feast with wine and wit:
Who brought him to that mirth and state? 50
His betters, see, below him sit,
Or hunger hopeless at the gate.
Who bade the mud from Dives' wheel
To spurn the rags of Lazarus?
Come, brother, in that dust we'll kneel, 55
Confessing Heaven that ruled it thus.

So each shall mourn, in life's advance,
Dear hopes, dear friends, untimely killed;
Shall grieve for many a forfeit chance,
And longing passion unfulfilled. 60

Amen! whatever fate be sent,
Pray God the heart may kindly glow,
Although the head with cares be bent,
And whitened with the winter's snow.

Come wealth or want, come good or ill, 65
Let young and old accept their part,
And bow before the Awful Will,
And bear it with an honest heart,
Who misses or who wins the prize. 70
Go, lose or conquer as you can;
But if you fail, or if you rise,
Be each, pray God, a gentleman.

A gentleman, or old, or young!
(Bear kindly with my humble lays); 75
The sacred chorus first was sung
Upon the first of Christmas days:
The shepherds heard it overhead—
The joyful angels raised it then:
Glory to God, on high, it said, 80
And peace on earth to gentle men.

My song, save this, is little worth;
I lay the weary pen aside,
And wish you health, and joy, and mirth,
As fits the solemn Christmas-tide. 85
As fits the holy Christmas birth,
Be this, good friends, our carol still—
Be peace on earth, be peace on earth,
To men of gentle will.

William E. Aytoun

1813-1865

THE WIDOW OF GLENCOE<sup>1</sup>

I

Do not lift him from the bracken,
Leave him lying where he fell—
Better bier ye cannot fashion:
None beseems him half so well 5
As the bare and broken heather,
And the hard and trampled sod,
Whence his angry soul ascended
To the judgment-seat of God!
Winding sheet we cannot give him— 10
Seek no mantle for the dead,
Save the cold and spotless covering
Showered from heaven upon his head.
Leave his broadsword as we found it,
Bent and broken with the blow, 15
Which before he died, avenged him
On the foremost of the foe.
Leave the blood upon his bosom—
Wash not off that sacred stain;

<sup>1</sup> The Clan of Macdonald, in the Highland valley of Glencoe, were late in taking the required oath of loyalty to King William III. Under royal warrant a regiment was sent to Glencoe and many of the Macdonalds were treacherously killed.

Let it stiffen on the tartan,
 Let his wounds unclosed remain, 20
 Till the day when he shall show them
 At the throne of God on high,
 When the murderer and the murdered
 Meet before the judge's eye.

II

Nay—ye should not weep, my children! 25
 Leave it to the faint and weak;
 Sobs are but a woman's weapon—
 Tears befit a maiden's cheek.
 Weep not, children of Macdonald!
 Weep not, thou his orphan heir— 30
 Not in shame, but stainless honour,
 Lies thy slaughtered father there.
 Weep not—but when years are over,
 And thine arm is strong and sure,
 And thy foot is swift and steady 35
 On the mountain and the muir—
 Let thy heart be hard as iron,
 And thy wrath as fierce as fire,
 Till the hour when vengeance cometh
 For the race that slew thy sire! 40
 Till in deep and dark Glenlyon
 Rise a louder shriek of woe,
 Than at midnight, from their eyrie,
 Scared the eagles of Glencoe:
 Louder than the screams that mingled 45
 With the howling of the blast,
 When the murderer's steel was clashing,
 And the fires were rising fast;
 When thy noble father bounded
 To the rescue of his men, 50
 And the slogan of our kindred
 Pealed throughout the startled glen!
 When the herd of frantic women
 Stumbled through the midnight snow,
 With their fathers' houses blazing, 55
 And their dearest dead below!
 Oh, the horror of the tempest,
 As the flashing drift was blown,
 Crimsoned with the conflagration,
 And the roofs went thundering down! 60
 Oh, the prayers—the prayers and curses
 That together winged their flight
 From the maddened hearts of many
 Through that long and woful night!
 Till the fires began to dwindle, 65
 And the shots grew faint and few,
 And we heard the foeman's challenge
 Only as a far halloo.
 Till the silence once more settled
 O'er the gorges of the glen 70
 Broken only by the Cona
 Plunging through its naked den.
 Slowly from the mountain summit
 Was the drifting veil withdrawn,
 And the ghastly valley glimmered 75
 In the grey December dawn.
 Better had the morning never
 Dawned upon our dark despair!
 Black amidst the common whiteness
 Rose the spectral ruins there: 80
 But the sight of these was nothing
 More than wrings the wild dove's breast,

When she searches for her offspring
 Round the relics of her nest.
 For in many a spot the tartan 85
 Peered above the wintry heap,
 Marking where a dead Macdonald
 Lay within his frozen sleep.
 Tremblingly we scooped the covering
 From each kindred victim's head, 90
 And the living lips were burning
 On the cold ones of the dead.
 And I left them with their dearest—
 Dearest charge had every one—
 Left the maiden with her lover, 95
 Left the mother with her son.
 I alone of all was mateless—
 Far more wretched I than they,
 For the snow would not discover
 Where my lord and husband lay. 100
 But I wandered up the valley,
 Till I found him lying low,
 With the gash upon his bosom
 And the frown upon his brow—
 Till I found him lying murdered, 105
 Where he wooed me long ago!

III

Woman's weakness shall not shame me—
 Why should I have tears to shed?
 Could I rain them down like water,
 O my hero! on thy head— 110
 Could the cry of lamentation
 Wake thee from thy silent sleep,
 Could it set thy heart a-throbbing,
 It were mine to wail and weep!
 But I will not waste my sorrow, 115
 Lest the Campbell women say
 That the daughters of Clanranald
 Are as weak and frail as they.
 I had wept thee hadst thou fallen,
 Like our fathers, on thy shield, 120
 When a host of English foemen
 Camped upon a Scottish field—
 I had mourned thee, hadst thou perished
 With the foremost of thy name,
 When the valiant and the noble 125
 Died around the dauntless Graeme!
 But I will not wrong thee, husband!
 With my unavailing cries,
 Whilst thy cold and mangled body
 Stricken by the traitor lies; 130
 Whilst he counts the gold and glory
 That this hideous night has won,
 And his heart is big with triumph
 At the murder he has done.
 Other eyes than mine shall glisten, 135
 Other hearts be rent in twain,
 Ere the heathbells on thy hillock
 Wither in the autumn rain.
 Then I'll seek thee where thou sleepest,
 And I'll veil my weary head, 140
 Praying for a place beside thee,
 Dearer than my bridal bed:
 And I'll give thee tears, my husband!
 If the tears remain to me,
 When the widows of the foeman 145
 Cry the coronach for thee!

Charles Kingsley

1819-1875

SONG

(From The Saint's Tragedy, 1848)

Oh! that we two were Maying
Down the stream of the soft spring breeze;
Like children with violets playing
In the shade of the whispering trees.

Oh! that we two sat dreaming
On the sward of some sheep-trimmed down
Watching the white mist steaming
Over river and mead and town.

Oh! that we two lay sleeping
In our nest in the churchyard sod,
With our limbs at rest on the quiet earth's
breast,
And our souls at home with God.

THE SANDS OF DEE

(From Alton Locke, 1849)

"O Mary, go and call the cattle home
And call the cattle home,
And call the cattle home
Across the sands of Dee;"
The western wind was wild and dank with foam
And all alone went she.

The western tide crept up along the sand,
And o'er and o'er the sand,
And round and round the sand,
As far as eye could see.
The rolling mist came down and hid the land:
And never home came she.

"Oh! is it weed, or fish, or floating hair—
A tress of golden hair,
A drowned maiden's hair
Above the nets at sea?
Was never salmon yet that shone so fair
Among the stakes on Dee."

They rowed her in across the rolling foam,
The cruel crawling foam,
The cruel hungry foam,
To her grave beside the sea:
But still the boatmen hear her call the cattle
home
Across the sands of Dee.

THE THREE FISHERS

(1851)

Three fishers went sailing away to the West,
Away to the West as the sun went down;
Each thought on the woman who loved him
the best,

And the children stood watching them out of the town,
For men must work, and women must weep, 5
And there's little to earn, and many to keep,
Though the harbour bar be moaning.

Three wives sat up in the lighthouse tower,
And they trimmed the lamps as the sun went
down;
They looked at the squall, and they looked at the shower,
And the night-rack came rolling up ragged
and brown.
But men must work, and women must weep,
Though storms be sudden, and waters deep,
And the harbour bar be moaning.

Three corpses lay out on the shining sands 15
In the morning gleam as the tide went
down,
And the women are weeping and wringing their hands
For those who will never come home to the town;
For men must work, and women must weep,
And the sooner it's over, the sooner to sleep; 20
And good-bye to the bar and its moaning.

CLEAR AND COOL

(Song from The Water Babies, 1863)

Clear and cool, clear and cool,
By laughing shallow, and dreaming pool;
Cool and clear, cool and clear,
By shining shingle, and foaming wear;
Under the crag where the ouzel sings, 5
And the ivied wall where the church-bell
rings,
Undeified, for the undeified;
Play by me, bathe in me, mother and child.

Dank and foul, dank and foul,
By the smoky town in its murky cowl; 10
Foul and dank, foul and dank,
By wharf and sewer and slimy bank;
Darker and darker the further I go,
Baser and baser the richer I grow;
Who dare sport with the sin-defiled? 15
Shrink from me, turn from me, mother and child.

Strong and free, strong and free;
The floodgates are open, away to the sea.
Free and strong, free and strong.
Cleansing my streams as I hurry along 20
To the golden sands, and the leaping bar,
And the taintless tide that awaits me afar,
As I lose myself in the infinite main,
Like a soul that has sinned and is pardoned
again.
Undeified, for the undeified; 25
Play by me, bathe in me, mother and child.

George Eliot

(Mary Ann Evans)

1819-1880

'O MAY I JOIN THE CHOIR INVISIBLE"

(1867)

Longum illud tempus, quum non ero, magis me movet, quam hoc exiguum.—Cicero, ad
Att., xii. 18.<sup>1</sup>

O may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence: live
In pulses stirr'd to generosity,
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn 5
For miserable aims that end with self,
In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars,
And with their mild persistence urge man's search
To vaster issues.

So to live is heaven: 10

To make undying music in the world,
Breathing as beauteous order that controls
With growing sway the growing life of man.
So we inherit that sweet purity
For which we struggl'd, fail'd, and agoniz'd 15
With widening retrospect that bred despair.
Rebellious flesh that would not be subdued,
A vicious parent shaming still its child,
Poor anxious penitence, is quick dissolv'd;
Its discords, quench'd by meeting harmonies, 20
Die in the large and charitable air.
And all our rarer, better, truer self,
That sobb'd religiously in yearning song,
That watch'd to ease the burthen of the
world,
Laboriously tracing what must be; 25
And what may yet be better,—saw within
A worthier image for the sanctuary,
And shap'd it forth before the multitude,
Divinely human, raising worship so
To higher reverence more mix'd with love,— 30
That better self shall live till human Time
Shall fold its eyelids, and the human sky
Be gathered like a scroll within the tomb,
Unread forever.

This is life to come, 35

Which martyr'd men have made more glorious
For us who strive to follow. May I reach
That purest heaven, be to other souls
The cup of strength in some great agony,
Enkindle generous ardor, feed pure love, 40
Beget the smiles that have no cruelty,
Be the sweet presence of a good diffus'd,
And in diffusion ever more intense!
So shall I join the choir invisible
Whose music is the gladness of the world. 45

<sup>1</sup> That long time, when I shall not be, moves me more than this brief, mortal life.

Arthur Hugh Clough<sup>1</sup>

1819-1861

QUA CURSUM VENTUS

(From Ambarvalia, 1843)

As ships, becalmed at eve, that lay
With canvas drooping, side by side,
Two towers of sail at dawn of day
Are scarce long leagues apart descried;
When fell the night, upsprung the breeze, 5
And all the darkling hours they plied,
Nor dreamt but each the self-same seas
By each was cleaving, side by side:
E'en so—but why the tale reveal
Of those, whom year by year unchanged, 10
Brief absence joined anew to feel,
Astounded, soul from soul estranged?
At dead of night their sails were filled,
And onward each rejoicing steered—
Ah, neither blame, for neither willed, 15
Or wist, what first with dawn appeared!
To veer, how vain! On, onward strain,
Brave barks! In light, in darkness too,
Through winds and tides one compass guides—
To that, and your own selves, be true. 20
But O blithe breeze! and O great seas,
Though ne'er, that earliest parting past,
On your wide plain they join again,
Together lead them home at last.
One port, methought, alike they sought, 25
One purpose hold where'er they fare,—
O bounding breeze, O rushing seas!
At last, at last, unite them there.

"WITH WHOM IS NO VARIABLENESS, NEITHER SHADOW OF TURNING"<sup>1</sup>

(From the same)

It fortifies my soul to know
That, though I perish, Truth is so:
That, howsoe'er I stray and range,
Whate'er I do, Thou dost not change.
I steadier step when I recall 5
That, if I slip Thou dost not fall.

SAY NOT, THE STRUGGLE NOUGHT
AVAILETH

(From the same)

Say not, the struggle nought availeth,
The labour and the wounds are vain,
The enemy faints not, nor faileth,
And as things have been they remain.
If hopes were dupes, fears may be liars; 5
It may be, in yon smoke concealed,
Your comrades chase e'en now the fiars,
And, but for you, possess the field.
For while the tired waves, vainly breaking,
Seem here no painful inch to gain, 10
Far back, through creeks and inlets making,
Comes silent, flooding in, the main.

<sup>1</sup> V. note on Arnold's Thyrsis, p. 636, supra.

<sup>1</sup> St. James, i. 17.

George Meredith

1828-1909

JUGGLING JERRY

(From Modern Love and Poems of the English Roadside, 1862)

I

Pitch here the tent, while the old horse grazes:
 By the old hedge-side we'll halt a stage.
 It's nigh my last above the daisies:
 My next leaf'll be man's blank page.
 Yes, my old girl! and it's no use crying: 5
 Juggler, constable, king, must bow.
 One that outjuggles all's been spying
 Long to have me, and he has me now.

II

We've travelled times to this old common:
 Often we've hung our pots in the gorse. 10
 We've had a stirring life, old woman!
 You, and I, and the old grey horse.
 Races, and fairs, and royal occasions,
 Found us coming to their call:
 Now they'll miss us at their stations: 15
 There's a Juggler outjuggles all!

III

Up goes the lark, as if all were jolly!
 Over the duck-pond the willow shakes.
 Easy to think that grieving's folly,
 When the hand's firm as driven stakes! 20
 Ay, when we're strong, and braced, and manful,
 Life's a sweet fiddle: but we're a batch
 Born to become the Great Juggler's han'ful:
 Balls he shies up, and is safe to catch.

IV

Here's where the lads of the village cricket: 25
 I was a lad not wide from here:
 Couldn't I whip off the bale from the wicket?
 Like an old world those days appear!
 Donkey, sheep, geese, and thatched ale-house—I know them!
 They are old friends of my halts, and seem, 30
 Somehow, as if kind thanks I owe them:
 Juggling don't hinder the heart's esteem.

V

Juggling's no sin, for we must have victual:
 Nature allows us to bait for the fool.
 Holding one's own makes us juggle no little; 35
 But, to increase it, hard juggling's the rule.
 You that are sneering at my profession,
 Haven't you juggled a vast amount?
 There's the Prime Minister, in one Session,
 Juggles more games than my sins 'll count. 40

VI

I've murdered insects with mock thunder:
 Conscience, for that, in men don't quail.
 I've made bread from the bump of wonder:
 That's my business, and there's my tale.

Fashion and rank all praised the professor: 45
 Ay! and I've had my smile from the Queen:
 Bravo, Jerry! she meant: God bless her!
 Ain't this a sermon on that scene?

VII

I've studied men from my topsy-turvy
 Close, and I reckon, rather true. 50
 Some are fine fellows: some, right scurvy:
 Most, a dash between the two.
 But it's a woman, old girl, that makes me
 Think more kindly of the race:
 And it's a woman, old girl, that shakes me 55
 When the Great Juggler I must face.

VIII

We two were married, due and legal:
 Honest we've lived since we've been one.
 Lord! I could then jump like an eagle: 60
 You danced bright as a bit o' the sun.
 Birds in a May-bush, we were! right merry!
 All night we kiss'd, we juggled all day.
 Joy was the heart of Juggling Jerry!
 Now from his old girl he's juggled away.

IX

It's past parsons to console us: 65
 No, nor no doctor fetch for me:
 I can die without my bolus;<sup>1</sup>
 Two of a trade, lass, never agree!
 Parson and Doctor!—don't they love rarely,
 Fighting the devil in other men's fields! 70
 Stand up yourself and match him fairly:
 Then see how the rascal yields!

X

I, lass, have lived no gypsy, flaunting
 Finery while his poor helpmate grubs:
 Coin I've stored, and you won't be wanting: 75
 You sha'n't beg from the troughs and tubs.
 Nobly you've stuck to me, though in his kitchen
 Many a Marquis would hail you Cook!
 Palaces you could have ruled and grown rich in,
 But your old Jerry you never forsook. 80

XI

Hand up the chirper! ripe ale winks in it;
 Let's have comfort and be at peace.
 Once a stout draught made me light as a linnet.
 Cheer up! the Lord must have his lease.
 May be—for none see in that black hollow— 85
 It's just a place where we're held in pawn,
 And when the Great Juggler makes as to swallow,
 It's just the sword trick—I ain't quite gone!

XII

Yonder came smells of the gorse, so nutty,
 Gold-like and warm: it's the prime of May. 90
 Better than mortar, brick and putty,
 Is God's house on a blowing day.
 Lean me more up the mound; now I feel it:
 All the old heath-smells! Ain't it strange?
 There's the world laughing, as if to conceal it, 95
 But He's by us, juggling the change.

<sup>1</sup> Pill.

XIII

I mind it well, by the sea-beach lying,
 Once—it's long gone—when two gulls we beheld,
 Which, as the moon got up, were flying
 Down a big wave that sparkled and swelled.
 Crack, went a gun: one fell: the second 101 Wheeled round him twice, and was off for new luck:
 Where in the dark her white wing beckon'd:—
 Drop me a kiss—I'm the bird dead-struck!

LUCIFER IN STARLIGHT

(From Poems and Lyrics, 1883)

On a starred night Prince Lucifer uprose.
 Tired of his dark dominion swung the fiend
 Above the rolling ball in cloud part screened,
 Where sinners hugged their spectre of repose. 5
 Poor prey to his hot fit of pride were those.
 And now upon his western wing he leaned,
 Now his huge bulk o'er Afric's sands careened,
 Now the black planet shadowed Arctic snows.
 Soaring through wider zones that pricked his scars
 With memory of the old revolt from Awe, 10
 He reached a middle height, and at the stars,
 Which are the brain of heaven, he looked, and sank.
 Around the ancient track marched, rank on rank,
 The army of unalterable law.

LOVE IN THE VALLEY

(From the same)

Under yonder beech-tree single on the green-sward,
 Couched with her arms behind her golden
 head,
 Knees and tresses folded to slip and ripple idly,
 Lies my young love sleeping in the shade.
 Had I the heart to slip an arm beneath her, 5
 Press her parting lips as her waist I gather slow,
 Waking in amazement she could not but embrace me:
 Then would she hold me and never let me
 go? . . .

Shy as the squirrel and wayward as the swallow,
 Swift as the swallow along the river's light 10
 Circling the surface to meet his mirrored winglets,
 Fleeter she seems in her stay than in her
 flight.
 Shy as the squirrel that leaps among the pine
 tops,
 Wayward as the swallow overhead at set of
 sun,
 She whom I love is hard to catch and conquer, Hard, but O the glory of the winning were she won! . . . 16

Lovely are the curves of the white owl sweeping
 Wavy in the dusk lit by one large star.
 Lone on the fir-branch, his rattle note unvaried,
 Brooding o'er the gloom, spins the brown
 eve-jar. 20
 Darker grows the valley, more and more forgetting:
 So were it with me if forgetting could be willed.
 Tell the grassy hollow that holds the bubbling
 well-spring,
 Tell it to forget the source that keeps it filled. . . .

Large and smoky red the sun's cold disk drops,
 Clipped by naked hills, on violet shaded snow: 26
 Eastward large and still lights up a bower of
 moonrise,
 Whence at her leisure steps the moon aglow.
 Nightlong on black print-branches our beech-
 tree
 Gazes in this whiteness: nightlong could I. 30
 Here may life on death or death on life be painted.
 Let me clasp her soul to know she cannot die!
 Could I find a place to be alone with heaven,
 I would speak my heart out: heaven is my
 need.
 Every woodland tree is flushing like the dogwood, 35
 Flashing like the whitebeam,<sup>1</sup> swaying like the reed.
 Flushing like the dogwood crimson in October;
 Streaming like the flag-reed South-West
 blown;
 Flashing as in gusts the sudden-lighted white-beam:
 All seem to know what is for heaven alone. 40

Henry Austin Dobson

1840

A GENTLEMAN OF THE OLD SCHOOL

(From Old World Idylls, 1883)

He lived in that past Georgian day
 When men were less inclined to say
 That "Time is Gold," and overlay
 With toil their pleasure;
 He held some land, and dwelt thereon,— 2
 Where, I forget,—the house is gone;
 His Christian name, I think was John,—
 His surname, Leisure.

Reynolds<sup>1</sup> has painted him,—a face
 Filled with a fine, old-fashioned grace, 10
 Fresh-colored, frank, with ne'er a trace
 Of trouble shaded;
 The eyes are blue, the hair is drest
 In plainest way,—one hand is prest
 Deep in a flapped canary vest, 15
 With buds brocaded.

<sup>1</sup> A small tree, whose leaves are silvery underneath.<sup>2</sup> Sir Joshua Reynolds, a famous English portrait painter. Cf. p. 435, supra.

He wears a brown old Brunswick coat,
 With silver buttons,—round his throat,
 A soft cravat;—in all you note
     An elder fashion,—
 A strangeness, which, to us who shine
 In shapely hats,—whose coats combine
 All harmonies of hue and line,—
     Inspires compassion.

He lived so long ago, you see!
 Men were untravell'd then, but we,
 Like Ariel, post o'er land and sea
     With careless parting;
 He found it quite enough for him
 To smoke his pipe in "garden trim,"
 And watch about the fish tank's brim,
     The swallows darting.

He liked the well-wheel's creaking tongue,—
 He liked the thrush that stopped and sung,—
 He liked the drone of flies among
     His netted peaches;
 He liked to watch the sunlight fall
 Athwart his ivied orchard wall;
 Or pause to catch the cuckoo's call
     Beyond the beeches.

His were the times of Paint and Patch,
 And ye no Ranelagh<sup>2</sup> could match
 The sober doves that round his thatch
     Spread tails and sidled;
 He liked their ruffling, puffed content,—
 For him their drowsy wheelings meant
 More than a Mall of Beaus that bent,
     Or Belles that bridled.

Not that, in truth, when life began,
 He shunned the flutter of the fan;
 He too had maybe "pinked his man"
     In Beauty's quarrel;
 But now his "fervent youth" had flown
 Where lost things go; and he was grown
 As staid and slow-paced as his own
     Old hunter, Sorrel.

Yet still he loved the chase, and held
 That no composer's score excelled
 The merry horn, when Sweetlip swelled
     Its jovial riot;
 But most his measured words of praise
 Caressed the angler's easy ways,—
 His idly meditative days,—
     His rustic diet.

Not that his "meditating" rose
 Beyond a sunny summer doze;
 He never troubled his repose
     With fruitless prying;
 But held, as law for high and low,
 What God withholds no man can know,
 And smiled away inquiry so,
     Without replying.

We read—alas, how much we read!
 The jumbled strifes of creed and creed
 With endless controversies feed
     Our groaning tables;
 His books—and they sufficed him—were Cotton's "Montaigne," "The Grave" of Blair,
 A "Walton" much the worse for wear—
     And "Æsop's Fables."

One more,—“The Bible.” Not that he Had searched its pages as deep as we;
 No sophistries could make him see
     Its slender credit;
 It may be that he could not count
 The sires and sons to Jesse's fount,—
 He liked the "Sermon on the Mount,"—
     And more, he read it.

Once he had loved, but failed to wed,
 A red-cheeked lass who long was dead;
 His ways were far too slow, he said,
     To quite forget her;
 And still when time had turned him gray,
 The earliest hawthorn buds in May
 Would find his lingering feet astray,
     Where first he met her.

"In Caelo Quies"<sup>3</sup> heads the stone
 On Leisure's grave,—now little known,
 A tangle of wild-rose has grown
     So thick across it;
 The "Benefactions" still declare
 He left the clerk an elbow-chair,
 And "twelve Pence Yearly to Prepare A Christmas Posset."

Lie softly, Leisure! Doubtless you
 With too serene a conscience drew
 Your easy breath, and slumbered through
     The gravest issue;
 But we to whom our age allows
 Scarce space to wipe our weary brows,
 Look down upon your narrow house,
     Old friend, and miss you!

THE BALLAD OF "BEAU BROCADE"

"Hark! I hear the sound of Coaches!"
Beggar's Opera.<sup>1</sup>

Seventeen hundred and thirty-nine:—
 That was the date of this tale of mine.

First Great George was buried and gone:
 George the Second was plodding on.

London then as the "Guides" aver,
 Shared its glories with Westminster;

And people of rank, to correct their "tone,"
 Went out of town to Marybone.

<sup>2</sup> At rest in Heaven.

<sup>1</sup> An opera by John Gay: the characters are highway-men, pickpockets, etc.

<sup>2</sup> Pleasure gardens in Chelsea, near London, famous for their entertainments in the 18th century.

Those were the days of the war with Spain,
Porto-Bello would soon be ta'en;

10

Whitefield preached to the colliers grim,
Bishops in lawn sleeves preached at him;

Walpole talked of "a man and his price;"
Nobody's virtue was over-nice;—

Those, in fine, were the brave days when Coaches were stopped by . . . Highwaymen!

15

And of all the knights of the gentle trade
Nobody bolder than "BEAU BROCADE."

This they knew on the whole way down;
Best,—maybe,—at the "Oak and Crown."

20

(For timorous cits<sup>2</sup> on their pilgrimage
Would "club" for a "Guard" to ride the stage;

And the Guard that rode on more than one
Was the Host of this hostel's sister's son.)

Open we here on a March-day fine,
Under the oak with the hanging sign.

25

There was Barber DICK with his basin by;
Cobbler JOE with the patch on his eye:

Portly product of Beef and Beer,
JOHN the host he was standing near.

30

Straining and creaking, with wheels awry,
Lumbering came the "Plymouth Fly."

Lumbering up from Bagshot Heath,
Guard in the basket armed to the teeth;

Passengers heavily armed inside;
Not the less surely the coach had been tried!

35

Tried!—but a couple of miles away,
By a well-dressed man!—in the open day!

Tried successfully, never a doubt,—
Pockets of passengers all turned out!

40

Cloak-bags rifled and cushions ripped,—
Even an Ensign's wallet stripped!

Even a Methodist hosier's wife
Offered the choice of her Money or Life!

Highwayman's manners no less polite,
Hoped that their coppers (returned) were right;—

45

Sorry to find the company poor,
Hoped that next time they'd travel with
more;—

Plucked them all at his ease, in short:—
Such was the "Plymouth Fly's" report.

50

Sympathy! horror! and wonderment!
"Catch the Villain!" (But Nobody went.)

Hosier's wife led into the Bar;
(That's where the best strong waters are!)

Followed the tale of the hundred-and-one
Things that Somebody ought to have done.

55

Ensign (of Bragg's) made a terrible clangour:
But for the Ladies had drawn his hanger!

Robber, of course, was "Beau Brocade;"
Out-spoke DOLLY the Chambermaid.

60

Devonshire DOLLY, plump and red,
Spoke from the gallery overhead;—

Spoke it out boldly, staring hard:—
"Why didn't you shoot then, GEORGE the Guard?"

Spoke it out bolder, seeing him mute:—
"GEORGE the Guard, why didn't you shoot?"

65

Portly JOHN grew pale and red,
(John was afraid of her, people said;)

Gasped that "DOLLY was surely cracked,"
(John was afraid of her—that's a fact!)

70

GEORGE the Guard grew red and pale,
Slowly finished his quart of ale:—

"Shoot? Why—Rabbit him!—didn't he shoot?"
Muttered—"The Baggage was far too 'cute!"

"Shoot? Why he'd flashed the pan in his eye!"
Muttered—"She'd pay for it by and by!"
Further than this he made no reply.

75

Nor could a further reply be made,
For George was in league with "Beau Brocade!"

And John the Host, in his wakefullest state,
Was not—on the whole—immaculate.

80

But nobody's virtue was over-nice
When Walpole talked of "a man and his price;"

And wherever Purity found abode,
'Twas certainly not on a posting road.

85

II

"Forty" followed to "thirty-nine."
Glorious days of the Hanover line!

Princes were born, and drums were banged;
Now and then batches of Highwaymen hanged.

"Glorious news!"—from the Spanish Main;
PORTO-BELLO at last was ta'en.

<sup>2</sup> Citizens.

- "Glorious news!"—for the liquor trade;
Nobody dreamed of "Beau Brocade."
- People were thinking of Spanish Crowns;
Money was coming from seaport towns! 95
- Nobody dreamed of "Beau Brocade,"
(Only DOLLY the Chambermaid!)
- Blessings on Vernon! Fill up the cans;
Money was coming in "Flys" and "Vans."
- Possibly John the Host had heard; 100
Also, certainly, GEORGE the Guard.
- And DOLLY had possibly tidings, too,
That made her rise from her bed anew,
- Plump as ever, but stern of eye,
With a fixed intention to warn the "Fly." 105
- Lingering only at John his door,
Just to make sure of a jerky snore;
- Saddling the grey mare, Dumpling Star,
Fetching the pistol out of the bar;
- (The old horse-pistol that, they say,
Came from the battle of Malplaquet;) 110
- Loading with powder that maids would use,
Even in "Forty," to clear the flues;
- And a couple of silver buttons, the Squire
Gave her, away in Devonshire. 115
- These she wadded—for want of better—
With the B-sh-p of L-and-n's "Pastoral Letter;"
- Looked to the flint, and hung the whole,
Ready to use, at her pocket-hole.
- Thus equipped and accoutred, DOLLY 120
Clattered away to "Exciseman's Folly;"—
- Such was the name of a ruined abode,
Just on the edge of the London road.
- Thence she thought she might safely try,
As soon as she saw it, to warn the "Fly." 125
- But, as chance fell out, her rein she drew,
As the BEAU came cantering into view.
- By the light of the moon she could see him drest
In his famous gold-sprigged tambour vest;
- And under his silver-gray surtout, 130
The laced, historical coat of blue,
- That he wore when he went to London-Spaw,
And robbed Sir MUNGO MUCKLETHRAW.
- Out-spoke DOLLY the Chambermaid,
(Trembling a little, but not afraid.) 135
"Stand and Deliver, O BEAU BROCADE!"
- But the BEAU drew nearer and would not
speak,
For he saw by the moonlight a rosy cheek;
- And a spavined mare with a rusty hide;
And a girl with her hand at her pocket-side. 140
- So never a word he spoke as yet,
For he thought 'twas a freak of MEG or BET;—
A freak of the "Rose" or the "Rummer" set.
- Out-spoke DOLLY the Chambermaid,
(Tremulous now, and sore afraid), 145
"Stand and Deliver, O 'Beau Brocade!'"
- Firing then, out of sheer alarm,
Hit the BEAU in the bridle-arm.
- Button the first went none knows where,
But it carried away his solitaire; 150
- Button the second a circuit made,
Glanced in under the shoulder blade;—
Down from the saddle fell "BEAU BROCADE!"
- Down from the saddle and never stirred!—
DOLLY grew white as a Windsor curd, 155
- Slipped not less from the mare, and bound Strips of her kirtle about her wound.
- Then, lest his Worship should rise and flee,
Fettered his ankles—tenderly.
- Jumped on his chestnut, BET the fleet 160
(Called after BET of Portugal Street);
- Came like the wind to the old Inn-door;—
Roused fat JOHN from a three-fold snore;—
- Vowed she'd 'peach if he misbehaved . . .
Briefly, the "Plymouth Fly" was saved! 165
- Staines* and Windsor were all on fire;—
DOLLY was wed to a Yorkshire squire;
Went to Town at the K-g's desire!
- But whether His M-j-sty saw her or not,
HOGARTH jotted her down on the spot; 170
- And something of DOLLY one still may trace
In the fresh contours of his "Milkmaid's" face.
- George the Guard fled over the sea:
John had a fit—of perplexity;
- Turned King's evidence, sad to state;— 175
But John was never immaculate.
- As for the BEAU, he was duly tried,
When his wound was healed, at Whitsuntide;
- Served—for a day—as the last of "sights,"
To the world of St. James's Street and "White's."

Went on his way to TYBURN TREE 181
With a pomp befitting his high degree.

Every privilege rank confers:—
Bouquet of pinks at St. Sepulchre's;

Flagon of ale at Holborn Bar; 185
Friends (in mourning) to follow his Car—
("t" is omitted where our Heroes are!)

Every one knows the speech he made;
Swore that he "rather admired the Jade!"

Waved to the crowd with his gold-laced hat: 190
Talked to the Chaplain after that;

Turned to the Topsman undismayed . . .
This was the finish of "BEAU BROCADE!"

And this is the Ballad that seemed to hide;
In the leaves of a dusty "Londoners' Guide;" 195

"Humbly Inscrib'd (with curls and tails)
By the Author to Frederick, Prince of Wales:—

"Published by FRANCIS and OLIVER PINE;
Ludgate-Hill, at the Blackmoor Sign.
Seventeen-Hundred-and-Thirty-Nine." 200

Robert Louis Stevenson

(1850-1894)

A SONG OF THE ROAD

(From Underwoods, 1887)

The gauger walked with willing foot,
And aye the gauger played the flute;
And what would Master Gauger play
But Over the hills and far away?

Whene'er I buckle on my pack 5
And foot it gaily in the track
O pleasant gauger, long since dead,
I hear you fluting on ahead.

You go with me the self-same way— 10
The self-same air for me you play;
For I do think and so do you
It is the tune to travel to.

For who would gravely set his face
To go to this or t'other place?
There's nothing under heav'n so blue 15
That's fairly worth the travelling to.

On every hand the roads begin,
And people walk with zeal therein;
But wheresoe'er the highways tend,
Be sure there's nothing at the end. 20

Then follow you wherever hie
The travelling mountains of the sky.
Or let the streams of civil mode
Direct your choice upon the road;

For one and all, or high or low, 25
Will lead you where you wish to go;
And one and all go night and day
Over the hills and far away!

THE CELESTIAL SURGEON

(From the same)

If I have faltered more or less
In my great task of happiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes 5
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain:—
Lord, thy most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake; 10
Or, Lord, if too obdurate I,
Choose thou, before that spirit die,
A piercing pain, a killing sin,
And to my dead heart run them in!

THE COUNTERBLAST—1886

(From the same)

My bonny man, the world, it's true,
Was made for neither me nor you;
It's just a place to warstle<sup>1</sup> through,
As Job confessed o't; 5
And aye the best that we'll can do
Is mak the best o't.

There's rowth<sup>2</sup> o' wrang, I'm free to say:
The simmer brunt,<sup>3</sup> the winter blae,<sup>4</sup>
The face of earth a' fyled<sup>5</sup> wi' clay
An' dour wi' chuckies,<sup>6</sup> 10
An' life a rough an' land'art play
For country buckies.

An' food's anither name for clart;<sup>7</sup>
An' beasts and brambles bite an' scart;<sup>8</sup>
An' what would WE be like, my heart! 15
If bared o' claethin'<sup>9</sup>?
—Aweel, I cannae mend your cart:
It's that or naethin'.

A feck<sup>10</sup> o' folk frae first to last 19
Have through this queer experience passed:
Twa-three, I ken, just damn an' blast<sup>11</sup>
The hale transaction;
But twa-three ithers, east an' wast,
Fand satisfaction.

Whaur braid<sup>12</sup> the briery muirs<sup>13</sup> expand, 25
A waefu' an' a weary land,
The bumblebees, a gowden band,
Are blithely hingin';
An' there the canty<sup>14</sup> wanderer fand
The laverock<sup>15</sup> singin'. 30

<sup>1</sup> Wrestle.

<sup>2</sup> Abundance.

<sup>3</sup> Burnt, hot.

<sup>4</sup> Cold, with east winds.

<sup>5</sup> Dirtied.

<sup>6</sup> Hard with stones.

<sup>7</sup> Grease or dirt.

<sup>8</sup> Scare.

<sup>9</sup> Clothing.

<sup>10</sup> Quantity.

<sup>11</sup> Curse.

<sup>12</sup> Broad.

<sup>13</sup> Moors.

<sup>14</sup> Lively.

<sup>15</sup> Lark.

Trout in the burn<sup>16</sup> grow great as herr'n;
 The simple sheep can find their fair'n';<sup>17</sup>
 The wind blows clean about the cairn
     Wi' caller<sup>18</sup> air;
 The muircock<sup>19</sup> an' the barefit bairn      35
     Are happy there.

Sic-like, the howes<sup>20</sup> o' life to some:
 Green loans<sup>21</sup> whaur they ne'er fash their thumb,
 But mark the muckle wadens that come,
     Soopin'<sup>22</sup> and cool,      40
 Or hear the powrin' burnie drum<sup>23</sup>
     In the shilfa's<sup>24</sup> pool.

The evil wi' the guid they tak;
 They ca' a gray thing gray, no black;
 To a steigh brae,<sup>25</sup> a stubborn back      45
     Addressin' daily;
 An' up the rude, unbildy<sup>26</sup> track
     O' life, gang gaily.

What you would like's a palace ha',
 Or Sinday parlour dink<sup>27</sup> and braw      50
 Wi' a' things ordered in a raw
     By denty leddies.
 Weel, than, ye cannae hae't, that's a'
     That to be said is.

An' since at life ye've ta'en the grue,<sup>28</sup>      55
 An' winnae blithely hirstle<sup>29</sup> through,
 Ye've fund the very thing to do—
     That's to drink speerit;
 An' shüne<sup>30</sup> we'll hear the last o' you—
     An' blithe<sup>31</sup> to hear it!      60

The shoon ye coft,<sup>32</sup> the life ye lead,
 Ithers will heir when aince ye're deid;
 They'll heir your tasteless bite o' breid,
     An' find it sappy;<sup>33</sup>
 They'll to your dulefū' house succeed,      65
     An' there be happy.

An' whan a glum an' fractious wean
 Has sat an' sullened by his lane
 Till, wi' a rowstin' skelp,<sup>34</sup> he's taen
     An' shoo'd to bed—
 The ither bairns a' fa' to play'n,
     As gleg's a gleg.<sup>35</sup>      70

A LAD THAT IS GONE

(From the same)

Sing me a song of a lad that is gone
 Say, could that lad be I?
 Merry of soul he sailed on a day
 Over the sea to Skye.

Mull was astern, Rum<sup>1</sup> on the port,      5
 Egg<sup>2</sup> on the starboard bow;
 Glory of youth glowed in his soul:
 Where is that glory now?

Sing me a song of a lad that is gone,
 Say, could that lad be I?      10
 Merry of soul he sailed on a day
 Over the sea to Skye.

Give me again all that was there,
 Give me the sun that shone!
 Give me the eyes, give me the soul,      15
 Give me the lad that's gone!

Sing me a song of a lad that is gone,
 Say, could that lad be I?
 Merry of soul he sailed on a day
 Over the sea to Skye.      20

Billow and breeze, islands and seas,
 Mountains of rain and sun,
 All that was good, all that was fair,
 All that was me is one.

REQUIEM

(From the same)

Under the wide and starry sky,
 Dig the grave and let me lie.
 Glad did I live, and gladly die,
 And I laid me down with a will.

This be the verse you grave for me:      5
Here he lies where he longed to be;
Home is the sailor, home from the sea,
And the hunter home from the hill.

Thomas Carlyle

1795-1881

THE PHILOSOPHY OF CLOTHES<sup>1</sup>

(From Sartor Resartus, 1831)

"Well sang the Hebrew Psalmist:<sup>2</sup> "If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the universe, God is there." Thou thyself, O cultivated reader,

<sup>1</sup> Two small islands in the Hebrides.

<sup>2</sup> The "Philosophy of Clothes," by which Carlyle meant the true significance of the relations in which outward, visible, and material things stand to the inner or underlying world of reality or spirit, is the theme of the book Sartor Resartus (the tailor patched or restored). Carlyle regarded the whole world of the senses—Nature, man's history, institutions, and customs—as the vesture, or clothes, of the spirit beneath. This philosophy he puts in the mouth of an imaginary German professor, Herr Teufelsdröckh, whose "Life and Opinions" are supposed to be set forth by his friend the editor, "a young and enthusiastic Englishman." Teufelsdröckh is described as professor of Allerlei Wissenschaft (all sorts of knowledge) at Weissnichtwo (Don't know where), a name which is the equivalent of Sir Thomas More's Utopia.

<sup>3</sup> Psalms, cxxxix. 9-10.

<sup>16</sup> Brook.      <sup>17</sup> Fodder.      <sup>18</sup> Cold.      <sup>19</sup> Moor-cock.

<sup>20</sup> Valleys.      <sup>21</sup> An open space between fields of corn.

<sup>22</sup> Sweeping.      <sup>23</sup> Pouring brook beat rhythmically.

<sup>24</sup> Chaffinch.      <sup>25</sup> Steep hill.      <sup>26</sup> Uncomfortable.

<sup>27</sup> Neat.      <sup>28</sup> Grudge.

<sup>29</sup> To push one's self along over a rough surface.

<sup>30</sup> Soon.      <sup>31</sup> Glad.      <sup>32</sup> The shoes you cast off.

<sup>33</sup> Tasty.      <sup>34</sup> Rough slap.      <sup>35</sup> As quickly as a hawk.

who too probably art no psalmist, but a Prosaist, knowing God only by tradition, knowest thou any corner of the world where at least Force is not? The drop which thou shakest from thy wet hand, rests not where it falls, but tomorrow thou findest it swept away; already on the wings of the North-wind, it is nearing the Tropic of Cancer. How came it to evaporate, and not lie motionless? Thinkest thou there is aught motionless; without Force, and utterly dead?

"As I rode through the Schwarzwald,<sup>3</sup> I said to myself: That little fire which glows star-like across the dark growing (nachtende) moor, where the sooty smith bends over his anvil, and thou hopest to replace thy lost horse-shoe,—is it a detached, separated speck, cut off from the whole Universe; or indissolubly joined to the whole? Thou fool, that smithy-fire was primarily kindled at the Sun; is fed by air that circulates from before Noah's Deluge, from beyond the Dog-star; therein, with Iron Force, and Coal Force, and the far stranger Force of Man, are cunning affinities and battles and victories of Force brought about; it is a little ganglion, or nervous centre, in the great vital system of Immensity. Call it, if thou wilt, an unconscious Altar, kindled on the bosom of the All; whose iron sacrifice, whose iron smoke and influence, reach quite through the All; whose dingy Priest, not by word, yet by brain and sinew, preaches forth the mystery of Force; nay, preaches forth (exoterically<sup>4</sup> enough) one little textlet from the Gospel of Freedom, the Gospel of Man's Force, commanding, and one day to be all-commanding.

"Detached, separated! I say there is no such separation: nothing hitherto was ever stranded, cast aside; but all, were it only a withered leaf, works together with all; is borne forward on the bottomless, shoreless flood of Action, and lives through perpetual metamorphoses. The withered leaf is not dead and lost, there are Forces in it and around it, though working in inverse order; else how could it rot? Despise not the rag from which man makes Paper, or the litter from which the earth makes Corn. Rightly viewed no meanest object is insignificant; all objects are as windows, through which the philosophic eye looks into infinitude itself."

Again leaving that wondrous Schwarzwald Smithy-Altar, what vacant, high-sailing airships are these, and whither will they sail with us?

"All visible things are emblems; what thou seest is not there on its own account; strictly taken, is not there at all: Matter exists only spiritually, and to represent some Idea, and body it forth. Hence Clothes, as despicable as we think them, are so unspeakably significant. Clothes, from the King's mantle downwards, are emblematic, not of want only, but of a manifold cunning Victory over Want. On the other hand, all Emblematic things are properly Clothes, thought-woven or hand-woven: must not the Imagination weave Garments, visible Bodies, wherein the else invisible creations and inspirations of our Reason, are, like Spirits, revealed, and first become all-powerful;—the rather if, as we often see, the Hand too aid her, and (by wool Clothes or otherwise) reveal such even to the outward eye?

"Men are properly said to be clothed with Authority, clothed with Beauty, with Curses, and the like. Nay, if you consider it, what is Man himself, and his whole terrestrial life, but an Emblem; a Clothing or visible Garment for that divine Me of his, cast hither, like a light-particle, down from Heaven? Thus is he said also to be clothed with a Body.

"Language is called the Garment of Thought: however, it should rather be, Language is the Flesh-Garment, the Body of Thought. I said that Imagination wove this Flesh-Garment; and does not she? Metaphors are her stuff: examine Language; what, if you except some primitive elements (of natural sound), what is it all but Metaphors, recognized as such, or no longer recognized; still fluid and florid, or now solid-grown and colorless? If those same primitive elements are the osseous fixtures in the Flesh-Garment, Language,—then are Metaphors its muscles and tissues, and living integuments. An unmetaphorical style you shall in vain seek for; is not your very Attention a Stretching-to? The difference lies here: some styles are lean, adust,<sup>5</sup> wiry, the muscle itself seems osseous; some are even quite pallid, hunger-bitten, and dead-looking; while others again glow in the flush of health and vigorous self-growth, sometimes (as in my own case) not without an apoplectic tendency. Moreover, there are sham Metaphors, which overhanging that same Thought's Body (best naked), and deceptively bedizening, or bolstering it out, may be called its false stuffings, superfluous show-cloaks (Putz-Mäntel), and tawdry woolen rags: whereof he that runs and reads may gather whole hampers,—and burn them."

Than which paragraph on Metaphors did the reader ever chance to see a more surprisingly metaphorical? However, that is not our chief grievance; the Professor continues:—

<sup>3</sup> The Black Forest.

<sup>4</sup> In a manner intelligible to the uninitiated, the public.

<sup>5</sup> Dried up with heat, dry-as-dust.

"Why multiply instances? It is written, the Heavens and the earth shall fade away like a Vesture:<sup>6</sup> which indeed they are: the Time-vesture of the Eternal. Whatsoever sensibly exists, whatsoever represents Spirit to Spirit, is properly a Clothing, a suit of Raiment, put on for a season, and to be laid off. Thus in this one pregnant subject of Clothes, rightly understood, is included all that men have thought, dreamed, done, and been: the whole External Universe and what it holds is but Clothing; and the essence of all Science lies in the Philosophy of Clothes."

NATURAL SUPERNATURALISM

(From the same)

It is in his stupendous Section, headed Natural Supernaturalism, that the Professor first becomes a Seer; and, after long effort, such as we have witnessed, finally subdues under his feet this refractory Clothes-Philosophy, and takes victorious possession thereof. Phantasms enough he has had to struggle with; "Cloth-webs and Cobwebs," of Imperial Mantles, Superannuated Symbols, and what not: yet still did he courageously pierce through. Nay, worst of all, two quite mysterious, world-embracing Phantasms, TIME and SPACE, have ever hovered round him, perplexing and bewildering: but with these also he now resolutely grapples, these also he victoriously rends asunder. In a word, he has looked fixedly on Existence, till, one after the other, its earthly hulls and garnitures have all melted away; and now, to his rapid vision, the interior celestial Holy of Holies lies disclosed.

Here, therefore, properly it is that the Philosophy of Clothes attains to Transcendentalism;<sup>1</sup> this last leap, can we but clear it, takes us safe into the promised land, where Palingenesia,<sup>2</sup> in all senses, may be considered as beginning. "Courage, then!" may our Diogenes<sup>3</sup> exclaim, with better right than Diogenes the First once did. This stupendous Section we, after long painful meditation, have found not to be unintelligible; but on the contrary to grow clear, nay radiant, and all-illuminating. Let the reader, turning on it what utmost force of speculative intellect is in him, do his part; as we, by judicious selection and adjustment, shall study to do ours:

"Deep has been, and is, the significance of Miracles," thus quietly begins the Professor; 5 "far deeper perhaps than we imagine. Meanwhile the question of questions were: What specially is a Miracle? To that Dutch King of Siam, an icicle had been a miracle; whose had carried with him an air-pump, and phial of vitriolic ether, might have worked a miracle. To my Horse again who unhappily is still more unscientific, do not I work a miracle, and magical 'Open sesame'<sup>4</sup> every time I please to pay twopence, and open for him an impassable Schlagbaum, or shut Turnpike?"

"But is not a real Miracle simply a violation of the Laws of Nature?" ask several. Whom I answer by this new question: What are the Laws of Nature? To me perhaps the rising 20 of one from the dead were no violation of these Laws, but a confirmation; were some far deeper Law, now first penetrated into, and by Spiritual Force, even as the rest have all been, brought to bear on us with its Material Force.

"Here* too may some inquire, not without astonishment: On what ground shall one, that can make Iron swim,<sup>5</sup> come and declare that therefore he can teach Religion? To us, truly, of the Nineteenth Century, such declaration 30 were inept enough; which nevertheless to our fathers, of the First Century, was full of meaning.

"But is it not the deepest Law of Nature that she be constant?" cries an illuminated 35 class: 'Is not the Machine of the Universe fixed to move by unalterable rules?' Probable enough, good friends: nay, I too must believe that the God, whom ancient, inspired men, assert to be 'without variableness or shadow 40 of turning,' does indeed never change; that Nature, that the Universe, which no one whom it so pleases can be prevented from calling a Machine, does move by the most unalterable rules. And now of you, too, I make the 45 inquiry: What those same unalterable rules, forming the complete Statute-Book of Nature, may possibly be?

"They stand written in our Works of Science, say you; in the accumulated records of man's 50 Experience?—Was Man with his Experience present at the Creation, then, to see how it all went on? Have any deepest scientific individuals yet dived down to the foundations of the Universe, and gauged everything there? 55 Did the Maker take them into His counsel, that they read His ground-plan of the incom-

<sup>6</sup> Palm, cii. 26-27.

<sup>1</sup> i. e. succeeds in passing beyond the world of appearance woven by the senses on the loom of "Time and Space," to the world of the Real, the Essential which transcends the visible and tangible.

<sup>2</sup> The new birth, the regeneration.

<sup>3</sup> Diogenes Teufelsdröckh.

<sup>4</sup> In the tale of Ali Baba, in The Arabian Nights, Open Sesame, was the magic phrase by which the robbers' cavern was opened.

<sup>5</sup> V. II Kings, vi. 6.

prehensible All; and can say, This stands marked therein, and no more than this? Alas, not in any wise! These scientific individuals have been nowhere but where we also are; have seen some handbreadths deeper than we see into the Deep that is infinite, without bottom as without shore.

"Laplace's Book on the Stars,<sup>6</sup> wherein he exhibits that certain Planets, with their Satellites, gyrate round our worthy Sun, at a rate and in a course, which, by greatest good fortune, he and the like of him have succeeded in detecting,—is to me as precious as to another. But is this what thou namest 'Mechanism of the Heavens,' and 'System of the World,' this, wherein Sirius and the Pleiades, and all Herschel's Fifteen-thousand Suns' per minute, being left out, some paltry handful of Moons, and inert Balls, had been—looked at, nicknamed, and marked in the Zodiacal way-bill; so that we can now prate of their Whereabout; their How, their Why, their What, being hid from us, as in the signless Inane?

"System of Nature! To the wisest man, wide as is his vision, Nature remains of quite infinite depth, of quite infinite expansion; and all Experience thereof limits itself to some few computed centuries, and measured square-miles. The course of Nature's phases, on this our little fraction of a Planet, is partially known to us; but who knows what deeper courses these depend on; what infinitely larger Cycle (of causes) our little Epicycle<sup>8</sup> revolves on? To the Minnow every cranny and pebble, and quality and accident, of its little native Creek may have become familiar; but does the Minnow understand the Ocean Tides and periodic Currents, the Trade-winds, and Monsoons, and Moon's Eclipses; by all which the condition of its little Creek is regulated, and may, from time to time, (unmiraculously enough), be quite overset and reversed? Such a minnow is man; his Creek this Planet Earth; his Ocean the immeasurable All; his Monsoons and periodic Currents the mysterious Course of Providence through Aeons of Aeons.

"We speak of the Volume of Nature: and truly a Volume it is,—whose Author and Writer is God. To read it! Dost thou, does man, so much as well know the Alphabet thereof? With its Words, Sentences, and grand descriptive Pages, poetical and philosophical, spread out through Solar Systems, and Thousands of Years, we shall not try thee. It is a Volume written in celestial hieroglyphs, in the true Sacred-writing; of which even Prophets are happy that they can read here a line and there a line. As for your Institutes, and Academies of Science they strive bravely; and from amid the thick-crowded, inextricably intertwisted hieroglyphic writing, pick out by dexterous combination, some Letters in the vulgar Character,<sup>9</sup> and therefrom put together this and the other economic Recipe, of high avail in Practice. That Nature is more than some boundless Volume of such Recipes, or huge well-nigh inexhaustible Domestic-Cookery Book, of which the whole secret will in this manner one day evolve itself, the fewest dream.

"Custom," continues the Professor, "doth make dotards of us all. Consider well, thou wilt find that Custom is the greatest of Weavers; and weaves air-raiment for all the Spirits of the Universe; whereby indeed these dwell with us visibly, as ministering servants, in our houses and workshops; but their spiritual nature becomes, to the most, for ever hidden. Philosophy complains that Custom has hoodwinked us, from the first; that we do everything by Custom, even Believe by it; that our very Axioms, let us boast of Free-thinking as we may, are oftentimes simply such Beliefs as we have never heard questioned. Nay, what is Philosophy throughout but a continual battle against Custom; an ever-renewed effort to transcend the sphere of blind Custom, and so become Transcendental?

"Innumerable are the illusions and legerdemain-tricks of Custom: but of all these, perhaps the cleverest is her knack of persuading us that the Miraculous, by simple repetition, ceases to be Miraculous. True, it is by this means we live: for man must work as well as wonder: and herein is Custom so far a kind nurse, guiding him to his true benefit. But she is a fond foolish nurse, or rather we are false foolish nurslings, when, in our resting and reflecting hours, we prolong the same deception. Am I to view the Stupendous with stupid indifference, because I have seen it twice, or two hundred or two-million times? There is no reason in Nature or in Art why I should: unless, indeed, I am a mere Work-Machine, for whom the divine gift of Thought were no other than the terrestrial gift of Steam is to the Steam-engine; a power whereby cotton might be spun, and money and money's worth realised.

"Notable enough too, here as elsewhere,

<sup>9</sup> i. e. the common writing, legible to all.

<sup>6</sup> Laplace, a noted French astronomer (1749-1827), wrote Mécanique Céleste, and Exposition du Systeme du Monde, to which Carlyle refers in the next sentence.

<sup>7</sup> Sir William Herschel (1738-1822), the discoverer of the planet Saturn, erected a great telescope (completed in 1789), by means of which he greatly extended our knowledge of the heavens and enlarged our conception of the vastness of the universe. Carlyle means, that in every minute of time, 15,000 stars rise and begin their westward course across the sky.

<sup>8</sup> A cycle moving upon another cycle.

wilt thou find the potency of Names; which indeed are but one kind of such custom-woven, wonder-hiding Garments. Witchcraft, and all manner of Spectre-work, and Demonology, we have now named Madness, and Diseases of the Nerves. Seldom reflecting that still the new question comes upon us: What is Madness, what are Nerves? Ever, as before, does Madness remain a mysterious-terrific, altogether infernal boiling-up of the Nether Chaotic Deep, through this fair-painted Vision of Creation, which swims thereon, which we name the Real. Was Luther's Picture of the Devil<sup>10</sup> less a Reality, whether it were formed within the bodily eye, or without it? In every, the wisest Soul, lies a whole world of internal Madness, an authentic Demon-Empire; out of which, indeed, his world of Wisdom has been creatively built together, and now rests there, as on its dark foundations does a habitable flowery Earth-rind.

"But deepest of all illusory Appearances, for hiding Wonder, as for many other ends, are your two grand fundamental world-enveloping Appearances, SPACE and TIME. These, as spun and woven for us before Birth itself, to clothe our celestial ME for dwelling here, and yet to blind it,—lie all-embracing, as the universal canvas, or warp and woof, whereby all minor Illusions, in this Phantasm Existence, weave and paint themselves. In vain, while here on Earth, shall you endeavour to strip them off; you can at best but rend them asunder for moments, and look through.

"Fortunatus had a wishing Hat, which when he put on, and wished himself Anywhere, behold he was There. By this means had Fortunatus triumphed over Space, he had annihilated Space; for him there was no Where, but all was Here. Were a Hatter to establish himself in the Wahngasse<sup>11</sup> of Weissnichtwo, and make felts of this sort for all mankind, what a world we should have of it! Still stranger, should, on the opposite side of the street, another Hatter establish himself; and, as his fellow-craftsman made Space-annihilating hats, make Time-annihilating! Of both would I purchase, were it with my last groschen;<sup>12</sup> but chiefly of this latter. To clap on your felt, and, simply by wishing that you were Anywhere, straightway to be There! Next to clap on your other felt, and, simply by wishing that you were Anywhen, straightway to be Then! This were indeed the grander: shooting at will from the Fire-Creation of the World, to its Fire-Consummation; here historically present in the First Century, conversing face to face with Paul and Seneca; there prophetically in the Thirty-first, conversing also face to face with other Pauls and Senecas, who as yet stand hidden in the depth of that late time!

<sup>10</sup> The devil was so real to Luther, that according to the story, he once threw his ink pot at him.

<sup>11</sup> "Illusion Street."

<sup>12</sup> A small German coin.

"Or thinkest thou, it were impossible, unimaginable? Is the Past annihilated, then, or only past; is the Future non-extant, or only future? Those mystic faculties of thine, Memory and Hope, already answer: already through those mystic avenues, thou the Earth-blinded summonest both Past and Future, and communest with them, though as yet darkly, and with mute beckonings. The curtains of Yesterday drop down, the curtains of Tomorrow roll up; but Yesterday and Tomorrow both are. Pierce through the Time-Element, glance into the Eternal. Believe what thou findest written in the sanctuaries of Man's Soul, even as all Thinkers, in all ages, have devoutly read it there: that Time and Space are not God, but creations of God; that with God as it is a universal HERE, so is it an ever-lasting NOW.

"And seest thou therein any glimpse of IMMORTALITY? O Heaven! Is the white Tomb of our Loved One, who died from our arms, and had to be left behind us there, which rises in the distance, like a pale, mournfully receding Milestone, to tell how many toilsome uncheered miles we have journeyed on alone,—but a pale spectral Illusion! Is the lost Friend still mysteriously Here, even as we are Here mysteriously with God!—Know of a truth that only the Time-shadows have perished, or are perishable; that the real Being of whatever was, and whatever is, and whatever will be, is even now and for ever. This, should it unhappily seem new, thou mayest ponder at thy leisure; for the next twenty years, or the next twenty centuries: believe it thou must; understand it thou canst not.

"That the Thought-forms, Space and Time, wherein, once for all, we are sent into this Earth to live, should condition and determine our whole Practical reasonings, conceptions, and imagings or imaginings, seems altogether fit, just and unavoidable. But that they should furthermore, usurp such sway over pure spiritual Meditation, and blind-us to the wonder everywhere lying close on us, seems nowise so. Admit Space and Time to their due rank as Forms of Thought; nay, even if thou wilt, to their quite undue rank of Realities: and consider, then, with thyself, how their thin disguises hide from us the brightest God-efulgences! Thus, were it not miraculous, could I stretch forth my hand and clutch the Sun!

Yet thou seest me daily stretch forth my hand, and therewith clutch many a thing, and swing it hither and thither. Art thou a grown Baby, then, to fancy that the Miracle lies in miles of distance, or in pounds avoirdupois of weight; and not to see that the true inexplicable God-revealing Miracle lies in this, that I can stretch forth my hand at all; that I have free Force to clutch aught therewith? Innumerable other of this sort are the deceptions, and wonder-hiding stupefactions, which Space practises on us.

"Still worse is it with regard to Time. Your grand anti-magician and universal wonder-hider, is this same lying Time. Had we but the Time-annihilating Hat, to put on for once only, we should see ourselves in a World of Miracles, wherein all fabled or authentic Thaumaturgy, and feats of Magic, were undone. But unhappily we have not such a Hat; and man, poor fool that he is, can seldom and scantily help himself without one.

"Were it not wonderful, for instance, had Orpheus, or Amphion, built the walls of Thebes by the mere sound of his Lyre?<sup>13</sup> Yet tell me, Who built these walls of Weissnichtwo; summoning out all the sandstone rocks, to dance along from the Steinbruch<sup>14</sup> (now a huge Troglodyte Chasm,<sup>15</sup> with frightful green-mantled pools); and shape themselves into Doric and Ionic pillars, squared ashlar houses, and noble streets? Was it not the still higher Orpheus, or Orpheuses, who, in past centuries, by the divine Music of Wisdom, succeeded in civilizing Man? Our highest Orpheus walked in Judea, eighteen-hundred years ago: his sphere-melody, flowing in wild native tones, took captive the ravished souls of men; and being of a truth sphere-melody, still flows and sounds, though now with thousandfold Accompaniments, and rich symphonies, through all our hearts; and modulates and divinely leads them. Is that a wonder, which happens in two hours; and does it cease to be wonderful, if happening in two million? Not only was Thebes built, by the Music of an Orpheus; but without the music of some inspired Orpheus, was no city ever built, no work that man glories in ever done.

"Sweep away the Illusion of Time; glance, if thou have eyes, from the near moving-cause to its far distant Mover: The stroke that came transmitted through a whole galaxy of elastic balls, was it less a stroke than if the last ball only had been struck, and sent flying? Oh, could I (with the Time-annihilating Hat) transport thee direct from the Beginnings to the Endings, how were thy eyesight unsealed, and thy heart set flaming in the Light-sea of celestial wonder! Then sawest thou that this fair Universe, were it in the meanest province thereof, is in very deed, the star-domed City of God; that through every star, through every grassblade, and most through every Living Soul, the glory of a present God still beams. But Nature, which is the Time-vesture of God, and reveals Him to the wise, hides Him from the foolish.

<sup>13</sup> "Were the stories of Orpheus and of Amphion true, would they not be miraculous?" Orpheus gathered the wild creatures of the forest about him to listen to his lyre; and Amphion, by the mere power and beauty of his music, built the walls of Thebes.

<sup>14</sup> A quarry.

<sup>15</sup> A hole or cavern, like those once occupied by the Troglodytes, or pre-historic cave-dwellers.

"Again, could anything be more miraculous than an actual authentic Ghost? The English Johnson<sup>16</sup> longed, all his life, to see one; but could not, though he went to Cock Lane, and thence to the church-vaults, and tapped on coffins. Foolish Doctor! Did he never with the Mind's eye, as well as with the body's, look round him into that full tide of human Life he so loved; did he never so much as look into Himself? The good Doctor was a Ghost, as actual and authentic as heart could wish; wellnigh a million of Ghosts were travelling the streets by his side. Once more I say, sweep away the illusion of Time: compress the three-score years into three minutes: what else was he, what else are we? Are we not Spirits, shaped into a Body, into an Appearance; and that fade away again into air, and Invisibility? This is no metaphor, it is a simple scientific fact: we start out of Nothingness, take figure, and are Apparitions; round us, as round the veriest spectre, is Eternity; and to Eternity minutes are as years and eons. Come there not tones of Love and Faith, as from celestial harp-strings, like the Song of beatified Souls? And again, do not we squeak and gibber (in our discordant screech-owlish debates and recriminations); and glide, bodeful, and feeble, and fearful; or uproar (poltern), and revel in our mad Dance of the Dead,<sup>17</sup>—till the scent of the morning-air summons us to our still Home; and dreamy Night becomes awake and Day? Where now is Alexander of Macedon: does the steel Host, that yelled in fierce battle-shouts at Issus and Arbela, remain behind him; or have they all vanished utterly, even as perturbed Goblins must? Napoleon too, and his Moscow Retreats and Austere Campaigns! Was it all other than the veriest Spectre-Hunt; which has now, with its howling tumult that made Night hideous, flitted away?—Ghosts! There are nigh a thousand-million walking the earth openly at noontide; some half-hundred have vanished from it, some half-hundred have arisen in it, ere they watch ticks once.

<sup>16</sup> For the story of Dr. Johnson and the Cock Lane Ghost, see Boswell's Johnson.

<sup>17</sup> The Dance of Death was a medieval allegory of Death; a skeleton musician leads the dance, in which all men join.

"O Heaven, it is mysterious, it is awful to consider that we not only carry each a future Ghost within him; but are in very deed, Ghosts! These Limbs, whence had we them; this stormy Force; this life-blood with its burning Passion? They are dust and shadow; a Shadow-system gathered round our ME; wherein, through some moments or years, the Divine Essence is to be revealed in the Flesh. That warrior on his strong war-horse, fire flashes through his eyes; force dwells in his arm and heart: but warrior and war-horse are a vision; a revealed Force, nothing more. Stately they tread the Earth, as if it were a firm substance: fool! the Earth is but a film; it cracks in twain and warrior and war-horse sink beyond plummet's sounding. Plummet's? Fantasy herself will not follow them. A little while ago, they were not; a little while, and they are not, their very ashes are not.

"So has it been from the beginning, and so will it be to the end. Generation after generation takes to itself the Form of a Body; and forth-issuing from Cimmerian Night, on heaven's mission APPEARS. What Force and Fire is in each he expends: one grinding in the mill of Industry; one hunter-like climbing the giddy Alpine heights of Science; one madly dashed in pieces on the rocks of Strife, in war with his fellow:—and then the Heaven-sent is recalled; his earthly Vesture falls away, and soon even to Sense becomes a vanished Shadow. Thus, like some wild-flaming, wild-thundering train of Heaven's Artillery, does this mysterious MANKIND thunder and flame, in long-drawn, quick-succeeding grandeur, through the unknown Deep. Thus like a God-created, fire-breathing Spirit-host, we emerge from the Inane; haste stormfully across the astonished Earth; then plunge again into the Inane. Earth's mountains are levelled, and her seas filled up, in our passage: can the Earth which is but dead and a vision, resist Spirits which have reality and are alive? On the hardest adamant some foot-print of us is stamped-in; the last Rear of the host will read traces of the earliest Van. But whence?—O Heaven, whither? Sense knows not; Faith knows not; only that it is through Mystery to Mystery, from God and to God.

"We are such stuff

As dreams are made of, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep!"<sup>19</sup>

BOSWELL THE HERO-WORSHIPPER

(From Essay on Johnson, 1832)

We have a word to say of James Boswell.<sup>1</sup> Boswell has already been much commented upon; but rather in the way of censure and vituperation than of true recognition. He was a man that brought himself much before the world; confessed that he eagerly coveted fame, or if that were not possible, notoriety; of which latter as he gained far more than was his due, the public were incited, not only by their natural love of scandal, but by a special ground of envy, to say whatever ill of him could be said. Out of the fifteen millions that then lived, and had bed and board in the British islands, this man has provided us a greater pleasure than any other individual, at whose cost we now enjoy ourselves; perhaps has done us a greater service than can be especially attributed to more than two or three: yet, ungrateful that we are, no written or spoken eulogy of James Boswell anywhere exists; his recompense in solid pudding (so far as copyright went) was not excessive; and as for the empty praise, it has altogether been denied him. Men are unwiser than children; they do not know the hand that feeds them.

Boswell was a person whose mean or bad qualities lay open to the general eye; visible, palpable to the dullest. His good qualities, again, belonged not to the time he lived in; were far from common then; indeed, in such a degree, were almost unexampled; not recognizable therefore by every one; nay, apt even (so strange had they grown) to be confounded with the very vices they lay contiguous to and had sprung out of. That he was a wine-bibber and gross liver; gluttonously fond of whatever would yield him a little solacement, were it only of a stomachic character, is undeniable enough. That he was vain, heedless, a babbler; had much of the sycophant, alternating with the braggadocio, curiously spiced too with an all-pervading dash of the coxcomb; that he gloried much when the tailor, by a court-suit, had made a new man of him; that he appeared at the Shakespeare Jubilee with a ribbon, imprinted "Corsica Boswell,"<sup>2</sup> round his hat; and in short, if you will, lived no day

<sup>19</sup> Tempest, IV. 15).

<sup>1</sup> See p. 424, supra.

<sup>2</sup> An allusion to his adoption of the cause of Corsican independence and to his Account of Corsica, p. 1768.

<sup>18</sup> A proverbial expression for utter darkness. The Cimmerians are mentioned by Homer as living beyond the ocean-stream in a land where no sun ever shines.

of his life without doing and saying more than one pretentious ineptitude: all this unhappily is evident as the sun at noon. The very look of Boswell seems to have signified so much. In that cocked nose, cocked partly in triumph over his weaker fellow-creatures, partly to snuff up the smell of coming pleasure, and scent it from afar; in those bag-cheeks, hanging like half-filled wine-skins, still able to contain more; in that coarsely protruded shelf-mouth, that fat dew-lapped chin: in all this, who sees not sensuality, pretension, boisterous imbecility enough; much that could not have been ornamental in the temper of a great man's overfed great man (what the Scotch name flunky), though it had been more natural there? The under part of Boswell's face is of a low, almost brutish character.

Unfortunately, on the other hand, what great and genuine good lay in him was nowise so self-evident. That Boswell was a hunter after spiritual notabilities, that he loved such, and longed, and even crept and crawled to be near them; that he first (in old Touchwood Auchinleck's<sup>3</sup> phraseology) "took on with Paoli;"<sup>4</sup> and then being off with "the Corsican landlouser,"<sup>5</sup> took on with a schoolmaster,<sup>6</sup> "ane that kepted a schule, and ca'd it an academy;" that he did all this, and could not help doing it, had an "open sense," an open loving heart, which so few have: where excellence existed, he was compelled to acknowledge it; was drawn towards it, and (let the old sulphur-brand of a laird say what he liked) could not but walk with it—if not as superior, if not as equal, then as inferior and lackey, better so than not at all. If we reflect now that this love of excellence had not only such as evil nature to triumph over; but also what an education and social position withstood it and weighed it down, its innate strength, victorious over all these things, may astonish us. Consider what an inward impulse there must have been, how many mountains of impediment hurled aside, before the Scottish laird could, as humble servant, embrace the knees (the bosom was not permitted him) of the English dominie! Your Scottish laird, says an English naturalist of these days, may be defined as the hungriest and vainest of all bipeds yet known. Boswell too was a Tory;<sup>7</sup> of quite peculiarly feudal, genealogical, pragmatism<sup>8</sup> temper; had been nurtured in an atmosphere of heraldry, at the feet of a very Gamaliel<sup>9</sup> in that kind; within bare walls, adorned only with pedigrees, amid serving-men in threadbare livery; all things teaching him, from birth upwards, that a laird was a laird. Perhaps there was a special vanity in his very blood: old Auchinleck had, if not the gay, tail-spreading, peacock vanity of his son, no little of the slow stalking, contentious, hissing vanity of the gander; a still more fatal species. Scottish advocates will tell you how the ancient man, having chanced to be the first sheriff appointed (after the abolition of "hereditary jurisdiction"<sup>10</sup>) by royal authority, was wont, in dull-snuffing pompous tone, to preface many a deliverance from the bench with these words: "I, the first king's sheriff in Scotland."

And now behold the worthy Boszy, so prepossessed and held back by nature and by art, fly nevertheless like iron to its magnet with what enclosures and encumbrances you please—with wood, with rubbish, with brass: it matters not, the two feel each other, they struggle restlessly towards each other, they will be together. The iron may be a Scottish squirelet, full of gulosity and "gigmanity;"<sup>11</sup> The magnet an English plebeian, and moving rag-and-dust mountain, coarse, proud, irascible, imperious: nevertheless, behold how they embrace, and inseparably cleave to one another! It is one of the strangest phenomena of the past century, that at a time when the old reverent feeling of discipleship (such as brought men from far countries with rich gifts, and prostrate soul, to the feet of the prophets) had passed utterly away from men's practical experience, and was no longer surmised to exist (as it does), perennial, indestructible, in man's inmost heart—James Boswell should have been the individual, of all others, predestined to recall it, in such singular guise, to the wondering and, for a long while, laughing and unrecognizing world. It has been commonly said, "The man's vulgar vanity

<sup>3</sup> Boswell's father, Alexander Boswell, who had the title of Lord Auchinleck from the name of his property in Ayrshire. He was one of the Judges of the Court of Session. Carlyle calls him "Touchwood" in allusion to his explosive irascibility.

<sup>4</sup> Pasquale Paoli (1725–1807), a Corsican patriot, to whom Boswell was introduced by a letter from Rousseau, and with whom he contracted a warm and lasting friendship.

<sup>5</sup> An adventurer, a vagabond.

<sup>6</sup> i. e. Johnson himself, who set up an "academy" near Litchfield, where "young gentlemen are boarded and taught the Latin and Greek languages," (1736).

<sup>7</sup> A member of the Tory party, which was the ultra-conservative party of the time.

<sup>8</sup> Self-important, busy; engrossed with every-day business, and hence commonplace.

<sup>9</sup> A member of the Sanhedrin, and St. Paul's instructor in the law. V. Acts v. 34–39; xxii. 3. Boswell's Gamaliel presumably was his father.

<sup>10</sup> In Scotland the Sheriff was the judge of the county. After 1748, the office, which had been hereditary, was filled by royal appointment.

<sup>11</sup> Gulosity is gluttony, voracity; gigmanity is narrow-minded respectability. The latter word was invented by Carlyle (gig and man) to indicate the character of "one whose respectability is measured by his keeping a gig." N. E. D.

was all that attached him to Johnson; he delighted to be seen near him, to be thought connected with him. Now let it be at once granted that no consideration springing out of vulgar vanity could well be absent from the mind of James Boswell, in this his intercourse with Johnson, or in any considerable transaction of his life. At the same time, ask yourself; whether such vanity, and nothing else, actuated him therein; whether this was the true essence and moving principle of the phenomenon, or not rather its outward vesture, and the accidental environment (and defacement) in which it came to light? The man was, by nature and habit, vain; a sycophant-coxcomb, be it granted; but had there been nothing more than vanity in him, was Samuel Johnson the man of men to whom he must attach himself? At the date when Johnson was a poor rusty-coated "scholar," dwelling in Temple-lane,<sup>12</sup> and indeed throughout their whole intercourse afterwards, were there not chancellors and prime ministers enough; graceful gentlemen, the glass of fashion; honor-giving noblemen; dinner-giving rich men; renowned fire-eaters, swordsmen, gowmsmen, quacks and realities of all hues—any one of whom bulked much larger in the world's eye than Johnson ever did? To any one of whom, by half that submissiveness and assiduity, our Bozzy might have recommended himself; and sat there, the envy of surrounding lickspittles; pocketing now solid emolument, swallowing now well cooked viands and wines of rich red vintage; in each case, also, shone-on by some glittering reflex of renown or notoriety, so as to be the observed of innumerable observers. To no one of whom, however, though otherwise a most diligent solicitor and purveyor, did he so attach himself: such vulgar courtierships were his paid drudgery, or leisure amusement; the worship of Johnson was his grand, ideal, voluntary business. Does not the frothy-hearted, yet enthusiastic man, doffing his advocate's wig, regularly take post, and hurry up to London, for the sake of his sage chiefly; as to a feast of tabernacles, the Sabbath of his whole year? The plate-licker and wine-bibber dives into Bolt Court, to sip muddy coffee with a cynical old man and a sour-tempered blind old woman<sup>13</sup> (feeling the cups, whether they are full, with her finger); and patiently endures contradictions without end; too happy so he may be but allowed to listen and live. Nay, it does not appear that vulgar vanity could ever have been much flattered by Boswell's relation to

Johnson. Mr. Croker<sup>14</sup> says, Johnson was, to the last, little regarded by the great world; from which, for a vulgar vanity, all honor, as from its fountain, descends. Bozzy, even among Johnson's friends and special admirers, seems rather to have been laughed at than envied: his officious, whisking, consequential ways, the daily reproofs and rebuffs he underwent, could gain from the world no golden but only leaden opinions. His devout discipleship seemed nothing more than a mean spanielship, in the general eye. His mighty "constellation," or sun, round whom he, as satellite, observantly gyrated, was, for the mass of men, but a huge ill-snuffed tallow-light, and he a weak night-moth, circling foolishly, dangerously about it, not knowing what he wanted. If he enjoyed Highland dinners and toasts, as henchmen to a new sort of chieftain, Henry Erskine<sup>15</sup> could hand him a shilling "for the sight of his bear." Doubtless the man was laughed at, and often heard himself laughed at for his Johnsonism. To be envied is the grand and sole aim of vulgar vanity; to be filled with good things is that of sensuality: for Johnson perhaps no man living envied poor Bozzy; and of good things (except himself paid for them) there was no vestige in that acquaintanceship. Had nothing other or better than vanity and sensuality been there, Johnson and Boswell had never come together, or had soon and finally separated again.

In fact, the so copious terrestrial dross that welters chaotically, as the outer sphere of this man's character, does but render for us more remarkable, more touching, the celestial spark of goodness, of light, and reverence for wisdom which dwelt in the interior, and could struggle through such encumbrances, and in some degree illuminate and beautify them. There is much lying yet undeveloped in the love of Boswell for Johnson. A cheering proof, in a time which else utterly wanted and still wants such, that living wisdom is quite infinitely precious to man, is the symbol of the god-like to him, which even weak eyes may discern; that loyalty, discipleship, all that was ever meant by hero-worship, lives perennially in the human bosom, and waits, even in these dead days, only for occasions to unfold it, and inspire all men with it, and make again the world alive! James Boswell we can regard as a practical witness, or real martyr, to this high everlasting truth. A wonderful martyr, if you will; and in a time

<sup>14</sup> John Wilson Croker, editor of Boswell's Johnson, 1831, which Carlyle is reviewing. Macaulay reviewed the same work. V. p. 687.

<sup>15</sup> Henry Erskine, a brother of Lord Buchan and Lord Erskine, was presented to Johnson by Boswell, while on a visit to the Parliament House at Edinburgh in 1773. The incident mentioned occurred on that occasion.

<sup>12</sup> V. selection, p. 425, supra.

<sup>13</sup> Mrs. Anna Williams, who at this time had lodgings in Bolt Court, Fleet Street, had formerly found an asylum in Johnson's house.

which made such martyrdom doubly wonderful: yet the time and its martyr perhaps suited each other. For a decrepit, death-sick era, when Cant had first decisively opened her poison-breathing lips to proclaim that God-worship and Mammon-worship were one and the same, that life was a lie, and the earth Beelzebub's, which the Supreme Quack should inherit, and so all things were fallen into the yellow leaf, and fast hastening to noisome corruption: for such an era, perhaps no better prophet than a parti-colored zany<sup>16</sup>-prophet, concealing, from himself and others, his prophetic significance in such unexpected vestures, was deserved, or would have been in place. A precious medicine lay hidden in floods of coarsest, most composite treacle; the world swallowed the treacle, for it suited the world's palate; and now, after half a century, may the medicine also begin to show itself! James Boswell belonged, in his corruptible part, to the lowest classes of mankind; a foolish, inflated creature, swimming in an element of self-conceit: but in his corruptible there dwelt an incorruptible, all the more impressive and indubitable for the strange lodging it had taken.

Consider, too, with what force, diligence, and vivacity he has rendered back all this which, in Johnson's neighborhood, his "open sense" had so eagerly and freely taken in. That loose-flowing, careless-looking work of his is as a picture by one of nature's own artists; the best possible remembrance of a reality; like the very image thereof in a clear mirror. Which indeed it was: let but the mirror be clear, this is the great point; the picture must and will be genuine. How the babbling Bozzy, inspired only by love, and the recognition which love can lend, epitomizes nightly the words of wisdom, the deeds and aspects of wisdom, and so, by little and little, unconsciously works together for us a whole Johnsoniad<sup>17</sup> a more free, perfect, sunlit and spirit-speaking likeness than for many centuries had been drawn by man of man! Scarcely since the days of Homer has the feat been equalled; indeed, in many senses, this also is a kind of heroic poem. The fit "Odyssey" of our unheroic age was to be written, not sung; of a thinker, not of a fighter; and (for want of a Homer) the first open soul that might offer—looked such even through the organs of a Boswell. We do the man's intellectual endowment great wrong, if we measure it by its mere logical outcome; though, here too, there is not wanting a light ingenuity, a figurativeness and fanciful sport, with glimpses of insight far deeper than the common. But Boswell's grand intellectual talent was, as such ever is, an unconscious one, of far higher reach, and significance than logic; and showed itself in the whole, not in parts. Here again we have that old saying verified, "The heart sees further than the head."

Thus does poor Bozzy stand out to us an ill-assorted, glaring mixture of the highest and the lowest. What, indeed, is man's life generally but a kind of beast godhood; the god in us triumphing in us more and more over the beast; striving more and more to subdue it under his feet? Did not the ancients, in their wise, perennially-significant way, figure nature itself, in their sacred ALL, or PAN, as a portentous commingling of these two discords; as musical, humane, oracular in its upper part, yet ending below in the cloven hairy feet of a goat? The union of melodious, celestial free-will and reason with foul irrationality and lust; in which, nevertheless, dwelt a mysterious unspeakable fear and half mad panic awe; as for mortals there well might! And is not man a microcosm, or epitomized mirror of that same universe; or rather, is not that universe even himself, the reflex of his own fearful and wonderful being, "the waste fantasy of his own dream?" No wonder that man, that each man, and James Boswell like the others, should resemble it! The peculiarity in his case was the unusual defect of amalgamation and subordination: the highest lay side by side with the lowest; not morally combined with it and spiritually transfiguring it, but tumbling in half-mechanical juxtaposition with it, and from time to time, as the mad alternation chanced, irradiating it, or eclipsed by it.

The world, as we said, has been but unjust to him; discerning only the outer terrestrial and often sordid mass; without eye, as it generally is, for his inner divine secret; and thus figuring him nowise as a god Pan, but simply of the bestial species, like the cattle on a thousand hills. Nay, sometimes a strange enough hypothesis has been started of him; as if it were in virtue even of these same bad qualities that he did his good work; as if it were the very fact of his being among the worst men in this world that had enabled him to write one of the best books therein! Falser hypothesis, we may venture to say, never rose in human soul. Bad is by its nature negative, and can do nothing; whatsoever enables us to do anything is by its very nature good. Alas, that there should be teachers in Israel, or even learners, to whom this world-ancient fact is still problematical, or even deniable! Boswell wrote a good book because he had a heart and an eye to discern wisdom, and an utterance to render it forth; because of his free insight, his lively talent—above all, of his love and open-mindedness. His sneaking sycophancies, his greediness and forwardness, whatever was bestial and earthy in him, are so many blemishes in his book, which still disturb us in its clearness; wholly hindrances, not helps. Towards Johnson, however, his feeling was not sycophancy, which is the lowest, but reverence, which is the highest of human feelings. None but a reverent man (which so unspeakably few are) could have found his way from Boswell's environment to Johnson's: if such worship for real God-made superiors, showed itself also as worship for apparent tailor-made superiors, even as hollow interested mouth-worship for such—the case, in this composite human nature of ours, was not miraculous, the more was the pity! But for ourselves, let every one of us cling to this last article of faith, and know it as the beginning of all knowledge worthy the name: That neither James Boswell's good book, nor any other good thing, in any time or in any place, was, is, or can be performed by any man in virtue of his badness, but always and solely in spite thereof.

<sup>16</sup> A jester who mimicked the professional jester.

<sup>17</sup> An epic of Johnson. Cf. Iliad, Æneid.

THE HERO

(From Heroes and Hero Worship, 1841)

You remember that fancy of Plato's,<sup>1</sup> of a man who had grown to maturity in some dark distance, and was brought on a sudden into the upper air to see the sun rise. What would his wonder be, his rapt astonishment at the sight we daily witness with indifference! With the free open sense of a child, yet with the ripe faculty of a man, his whole heart would be kindled by that sight, he would discern it well to be Godlike, his soul would fall down in worship before it. Now, just such a childlike greatness was in the primitive nations. The first Pagan Thinker among rude men, the first man that began to think, was precisely this child-man of Plato's. Simple, open as a child, yet with the depth and strength of a man. Nature had as yet no name to him; he had not yet united under a name the infinite variety of sights, sounds, shapes and motions, which we now collectively name Universe, Nature, or the like—and so with a name dismiss it from us. To the wild deep-hearted man all was yet new, not veiled under names or formulas; it stood naked, flashing-in on him there, beautiful, awful, unspeakable. Nature was to this man, what to the Thinker and Prophet it forever is, preternatural. This green flowery rock-built earth, the trees, the mountains, rivers, many-sounding seas;—that great deep sea of azure that swims overhead; the winds sweeping through it; the black cloud fashioning itself together, now pouring out fire, now hail and rain; what is it? Ay, what? At bottom we do not yet know; we can never know at all. It is not by our superior insight that we escape the difficulty; it is by our superior levity, our inattention, our want of insight. It is by not thinking that we cease to wonder at it. Hardened round us, encasing wholly every notion we form, is a wrappage of traditions, hearsays, mere words. We call that fire of the black thunder cloud "electricity," and lecture learnedly about it, and grind the like of it out of glass and silk; but what is it? What made it? Whence comes it? Whither goes it? Science has done much for us; but it is a poor science that would hide from us the great deep sacred infinitude of Nescience, whither we can never penetrate, on which all science swims as a mere superficial film. This world, after all our science and sciences, is still a miracle; wonderful, inscrutable, magical and more, to whosoever will think of it.

That great mystery of Time, were there no other; the illimitable, silent, never-resting thing called Time, rolling, rushing on, swift, silent, like an all-embracing ocean-tide, on which we and all the Universe swim like exhalations, like apparitions which are, and then are not; this is forever very literally a miracle; a thing to strike us dumb,—for we have no word to speak about it. This Universe, ah me—what could the wild man know of it; what can we yet know? That it is a Force, and thousandfold Complexity of forces; a Force which is not we. That is all; it is not we, it is altogether different from us. Force, Force, everywhere Force; we ourselves a mysterious Force in the centre of that. "There is not a leaf rotting on the highway but has Force in it: how else could it rot?" Nay, surely, to the Atheistic Thinker, if such a one were possible, it must be a miracle too, this huge illimitable whirlwind of Force, which envelopes us here; never-resting whirlwind, high as Immensity, old as Eternity. What is it? God's creation, the religious people answer; it is the Almighty God's! Atheistic science babbles poorly of it, with scientific nomenclatures, experiments and what-not, as if it were a poor dead thing, to be bottled-up in Leyden jars and sold over counters: but the natural sense of man, in all times, if he will honestly apply his sense, proclaims it to be a living thing,—ah, an unspeakable, godlike thing; towards which the best attitude for us, after never so much science, is awe, devout prostration and humility of soul; worship if not in words, then in silence.

<sup>1</sup> See Plato's Republic, Bk. VII.

But now I remark farther: What in such a time as ours it requires a Prophet or Poet to teach us, namely, the stripping off of those poor undevout wrappages, nomenclatures and scientific hearsays,—this, the ancient earnest soul, as yet unencumbered with these things, did for itself. The world, which is now divine only to the gifted, was then divine to whosoever would turn his eye upon it. He stood bare before it face to face. "All was Godlike or God:"—Jean Paul<sup>2</sup> still finds it so; the giant Jean Paul, who has power to escape out of hearsays: but there were no hearsays. Canopus,<sup>3</sup> shining-down over the desert, with its blue diamond brightness (that wild blue spirit-like brightness, far brighter than we ever witness here), would pierce into the heart of the wild Ishmaelitish man, whom it was guiding through the solitary waste there. To his wild heart, with all feelings in it, with no speech for any feeling, it might seem a little eye, that Canopus, glancing-out on him from the great deep Eternity; revealing the inner splendour to him. Cannot we understand how these men worshipped Canopus; became what we call Sabæans,<sup>4</sup> worshipping the stars? Such is to me the secret of all forms of Paganism. Worship is transcendent wonder; wonder for which there is now no limit or measure; that is worship. To these primeval men, all things and everything they saw exist beside them were an emblem of the Godlike, of some God.

And look what perennial fibre of truth was in that. To us also, through every star, through every blade of grass, is not a God made visible, if we will open our minds and eyes? We do not worship in that way now: but is it not reckoned still a merit, proof of what we call a "poetic nature," that we recognize how every object has a divine beauty in it; how every object still verily is "a window through which we may look into Infinity itself." He that can discern the loveliness of things, we call him Poet, Painter, Man of Genius, gifted, loveable. These poor Sabæans did even what he does,—in their own fashion. That they did it, in what fashion soever, was a merit: better than what the entirely stupid man did, what the horse and camel did,—namely, nothing!

But now if all things whatsoever that we look upon are emblems to us of the Highest God, I add that more so than any of them is man such an emblem. You have heard of St. Chrysostom's<sup>5</sup> celebrated saying in reference to the Shekinah, or Ark of Testimony, visible Revelation of God, among the Hebrews: "The true Shekinah<sup>6</sup> is Man!" Yes, it is even so: this is no vain phrase, it is veritably so. The essence of our being, the mystery in us that calls itself "I,"—ah, what words have we for such things?—is a breath of Heaven; the Highest Being reveals himself in man. This body, these faculties, this life of ours, is it not all as a vesture for that Unnamed? "There is but one Temple in the Universe," says the devout Novalis,<sup>7</sup> "and that is the Body of Man. Nothing is holier than that high form. Bending before men is a reverence done to this Revelation in the Flesh. We touch heaven when we lay our hand on a human body." This sounds much like a mere flourish of rhetoric; but it is not so. If well meditated, it will turn out to be a scientific fact; the expression, in such words as can be had, of the actual truth of the thing. We are the miracle of miracles,—the great inscrutable mystery of God. We cannot understand it, we know not how to speak of it; but we may feel and know it, if we like, that it is verily so.

Well, these truths were once more readily felt than now. The young generations of the world, who had in them the freshness of young children, and yet the depth of earnest men, who did not think that they had finished off all things in Heaven and Earth by merely giving them scientific names, but had to gaze direct at them there, with awe and wonder: they felt better what of divinity is in man and Nature;—they, without being mad, could worship Nature, and man more than anything else in Nature. Worship, that is, as I said above, admire without limit: this, in the full use of their faculties, with all sincerity of heart, they could do. I consider Hero-worship to be the grand modifying element in that ancient system of thought. What I called the perplexed jungle of Paganism sprang, we may say, out of three roots: every admiration, adoration of a star or natural object, was a

<sup>2</sup> Jean Paul Richter (1763–1825), one of the most widely known of the German humorists and satirists.

<sup>3</sup> A very brilliant star of the Southern hemisphere, in the constellation of the ship Argo. According to Plutarch, it was named from Canopus, the pilot of Menelaus.

<sup>4</sup> A people of Southern Arabia, formerly supposed to be worshippers of the stars.

<sup>5</sup> St. John Chrysostom ("mouth of gold," so named, because of his eloquence) was one of the greatest of the early Fathers of the Church, especially famous for his Homilies.

<sup>6</sup> A term in Jewish and early Christian theology, expressing the divine presence either in heaven or upon the earth, among the people of Israel or in the sanctuary.

<sup>7</sup> A name assumed by Friedrich von Hardenberg (1772–1801), a German romantic writer.

root, or fibre of a root; but Hero-worship is the deepest root of all; the tap-root, from which in a great degree all the rest were nourished and grown.

And now if worship even of a star had some meaning in it, how much more might that of a Hero! Worship of a Hero is transcendent admiration of a great Man! I say great men are still admirable; I say, there is at bottom, nothing else admirable! No nobler feeling than this of admiration for one higher than himself dwells in the breast of man. It is to this hour, and at all hours, the vivifying influence in man's life. Religions I find stand upon it; not paganism only, but far higher and truer religions,—all religion hitherto known. Hero-worship, heartfelt prostrate admiration, submission, burning, boundless, for a noblest godlike Form of Man,—is not that the germ of Christianity itself? The greatest of all Heroes is One—whom we do not name here! Let sacred silence meditate that sacred matter; you will find it the ultimate perfection of a principle extant throughout man's history on earth.

Or coming into lower, less unspeakable provinces, is not all Loyalty akin to religious Faith also? Faith is loyalty to some inspired Teacher, some spiritual Hero. And what therefore is loyalty proper, the life-breath of all society, but an effluence of Hero-worship, submissive admiration for the truly great? Society is founded on Hero-worship. All dignities of rank, on which human association rests, are what we may call a Heroarchy (Government of Heroes),—or a Hierarchy,<sup>8</sup> for it is "sacred" enough withal! The Duke means Dux, Leader; King is Kon-ning, Kan-ning, Man that knows or cans.<sup>9</sup> Society everywhere is some representation, not insupportably inaccurate, of a graduated Worship of Heroes:—reverence and obedience done to men really great and wise. Not insupportably inaccurate, I say! They are all as bank-notes, these social dignities, all representing gold;—and several of them alas, always are forged notes. We can do with some forged false notes; with a good many even; but not with all, or the most of them forged! No: there have to come revolutions then; cries of Democracy, Liberty and Equality, and I know not what:—the notes being all false, and no gold to be had for them, people take to crying in their despair that there is no gold, that there never was any!—"Gold," Hero-worship, is nevertheless, as it was always and everywhere, and cannot cease till man himself ceases.

I am well aware that in these days Hero-worship, the thing I call Hero-worship, professes to have gone out, and finally ceased. This, for reasons which it will be worth while sometime to inquire into, is an age that as it were denies the existence of great men; denies the desirableness of great men. Show our critics a great man, a Luther for example, they begin to what they call "account" for him; not to worship him, but take the dimensions of him,—and bring him out to be a little kind of man! He was the "creature of the Time," they say; the Time called him forth, the Time did everything, he nothing—but what we the little critic could have done too! This seems to me but melancholy work. The Time call forth? Alas, we have known Times call loudly enough for their great man; but not find him when they called! He was not there; Providence had not sent him; the Time, calling its loudest, had to go down to confusion and wreck because he would not come when called. For if we think of it, no Time need have gone to ruin, could it have found a man great enough, a man wise and good enough: wisdom to discern truly what the Time wanted, valour to lead it on the right road thither; these are the salvation of any Time. But I liken common languid Times, with their unbelief, distress, perplexity, with their languid doubting characters and embarrassed circumstances, impotently crumbling down into ever worse distress towards final ruin:—all this I liken to dry dead fuel, waiting for the lightning out of Heaven that shall kindle it. The great man, with his free force direct out of God's own hand, is the lightning. His word is the wise healing word which all can believe in. All blazes round him now, when he has once struck on it, into fire like his own. The dry mouldering sticks are thought to have called him forth. They did want him greatly; but as to calling him forth! Those are critics of small vision, I think, who cry: "See, is it not the sticks that made the fire?" No sadder proof can be given by a man of his own littleness than disbelief in great men. There is no sadder symptom of a generation than such general blindness to the spiritual lightning, with faith only in the heap of barren dead fuel. It is the last consummation of unbelief. In all epochs of the world's history, we shall find the Great Man to have been the indispensable saviour of his epoch:—the lightning, without which the fuel never would have burnt. The History of the World, I said already, was the Biography of Great Men.

<sup>8</sup> From the Greek hieros, sacred, and archo, I rule. Here used as "government by the holy or sacred ones."

<sup>9</sup> This derivation of king from can is a mistaken etymology. King comes from O. E. cuning, and is related to English kin.

BURNS

(From the same)

It was a curious phenomenon, in the withered, unbelieving, secondhand Eighteenth Century, that of a hero starting up, among the artificial pasteboard figures and productions, in the guise of a Robert Burns. Like a little well in the rocky desert places,—like a sudden splendour of Heaven in the artificial Vauxhall!<sup>1</sup> People knew not what to make of it. They took it for a piece of the Vauxhall fireworks; alas, it let itself be so taken, though struggling half-blindly, as in bitterness of death, against that! Perhaps no man had such a false reception from his fellowmen. Once more a very wasteful life-drama was enacted under the sun.

The tragedy of Burns' life is known to all of you. Surely we may say if discrepancy between place held and place merited constitute perverseness of lot for a man, no lot could be more perverse than Burns's. Among those secondhand acting-figures, mimes for most part, of the Eighteenth Century, once more a giant Original Man; one of those men who reach down to the perennial Deep, who take rank with the Heroic among men: and he was born in a poor Ayrshire hut. The largest soul of all the British lands came among us in the shape of a hard-handed Scottish Peasant.

His Father, a poor toiling man, tried various things; did not succeed in any; was involved in continual difficulties. The Steward, Factor as the Scotch call him, used to send letters and threatenings, Burns says, "which threw us all into tears." The brave, hard-toiling, hard-suffering Father, his brave heroine of a wife; and those children, of whom Robert was one! In this Earth, so wide otherwise, no shelter for them. The letters "threw us all into tears:" figure it. The brave Father, I say always;—a silent Hero and Poet; without whom the son had never been a speaking one! Burns's school-master<sup>2</sup> came afterwards to London, learnt what good society was; but declares that in no meeting of men did he ever enjoy better discourse than at the hearth of this peasant. And his poor "seven acres of nursery-ground,"—not that, nor the miserable patch of clay-farm, nor anything he tried to get a living by, would prosper with him; he had a sore unequal battle all his days. But he stood to it valiantly; a wise, faithful, unconquerable man;—swallowing down how many sore sufferings daily into silence; fighting like an unseen Hero,—nobody publishing newspaper paragraphs about his nobleness; voting pieces of plate to him! However, he was not lost; nothing is lost. Robert is there; the outcome of him,—and indeed of many generations of such as him.

This Burns appeared under every disadvantage; uninstructed, poor, born only to hard manual toil; and writing, when it came to that, in a rustic special dialect, known only to a small province of the country he lived in. Had he written, even what he did write, in the general language of England, I doubt not he had already become universally recognized as being, or capable to be, one of our greatest men. That he should have tempted so many to penetrate through the rough husk of that dialect of his, is proof that there lay something far from common within it. He has gained a certain recognition, and is continuing to do so over all quarters of our wide Saxon world: wheresoever a Saxon dialect is spoken, it begins to be understood, by personal inspection of this and the other, that one of the most considerable Saxon men of the Eighteenth Century was an Ayrshire Peasant named Robert Burns. Yes, I will say, here too was a piece of the right Saxon stuff: strong as the Harz-rock,<sup>3</sup> rooted in the depths of the world;—rock, yet with wells of living softness in it! A wild impetuous whirlwind of passion and faculty slumbered quiet there; such heavenly melody dwelling in the heart of it. A noble rough genuineness; homely, rustic, honest; true simplicity of strength; with its lightning-fire, with its soft dewy pity;—like the old Norse Thor,<sup>4</sup> the Peasant-god!

Burns's brother Gilbert, a man of much sense and worth, has told me that Robert, in his young days, in spite of their hardship, was usually the gayest of speech; a fellow of infinite frolic, laughter, sense and heart; far pleasanter to hear there, stript, cutting peats in the bog, or suchlike, than he ever afterwards knew him. I can well believe it. The basis of mirth ("fond gaillard," as old Marquis Mirabeau calls it), a primal-element of sunshine and joyfulness, coupled with his other deep and earnest qualities, is one of the most attractive characteristics of Burns. A large fund of Hope dwells in him; spite of his tragical history, he is not a mourning man. He shakes his sorrows gallantly aside; bounds forth victorious over them. It is as the lion shaking "dew-drops from his mane;" as the swift-bounding horse, that laughs at the shaking of the spear.—But indeed, Hope, Mirth, of the sort like Burns's, are they not the outcome

<sup>1</sup> Vauxhall Gardens on the outskirts of London, a place of public amusement.

<sup>2</sup> John Murdoch, who was instrumental in guiding Burns's early reading.

<sup>3</sup> Rocky mountains in Germany, the highest peak the Brecken is the scene of the witches in Goethe's Faust.

<sup>4</sup> The Scandinavian god of Thunder.

properly of warm generous affection,—such as is the beginning of all to every man?

You would think it strange if I called Burns the most gifted British soul we had in all that century of his: and yet I believe the day is coming when there will be little danger in saying so. His writings, all that he did under such obstructions are only a poor fragment of him. Professor Stewart<sup>5</sup> remarked very justly, what indeed is true of all Poets good for much, that his poetry was not any particular faculty; but the general result of a naturally vigorous original mind expressing itself in that way. Burns's gifts, expressed in conversation, are the theme of all that ever heard him. All kinds of gifts: from the gracefulest utterances of courtesy, to the highest fire of passionate speech; loud floods of mirth, soft wailings of affection, laconic emphasis, clear piercing insight; all was in him. Witty duchesses celebrate him as a man whose speech "led them off their feet." This is beautiful: but still more beautiful that which Mr. Lockhart<sup>6</sup> has recorded, which I have more than once alluded to, How the waiters and ostlers at inns would get out of bed, and come crowding to hear this man speak! Waiters and ostlers:—they too were men, and here was a man! I have heard much about his speech; but one of the best things I ever heard of it was, last year, from a venerable gentleman long familiar with him. That it was speech distinguished by always having something in it. "He spoke rather little than much," this old man told me; "sat rather silent in those early days, as in the company of persons above him; and always when he did speak, it was to throw new light on the matter." I know not why any one should ever speak otherwise!—But if we look at his general force of soul, his healthy robustness every way, the rugged downrightness, penetration, generous valour and manfulness that was in him,—where shall we readily find a better-gifted man?

Among the great men of the Eighteenth Century, I sometimes feel as if Burns might be found to resemble Mirabeau<sup>7</sup> more than any other. They differ widely in vesture; yet look at them intrinsically. There is the same burly thick-necked strength of body as of soul;—built, in both cases, on what the old Marquis calls a fond gaillard. By nature, by course of breeding, indeed by nation, Mirabeau has much more of bluster; a noisy, forward, unresting man. But the characteristic of Mirabeau too is veracity and sense, power of true insight, superiority of vision. The thing that he says is worth remembering. It is a flash of insight into some object or other: so do both these men speak. The same raging passions; capable too in both of manifesting themselves as the tenderest noble affections. Wit, wild laughter, energy, directness, sincerity: these were in both. The types of the two men are not dissimilar. Burns too could have governed, debated in National Assemblies; policised, as few could. Alas, the courage which had to exhibit itself in capture of smuggling schooners in the Solway Frith;<sup>8</sup> in keeping silence over so much, where no good speech, but only inarticulate rage was possible: this might have bellowed forth Ushers de Brézé<sup>9</sup> and the like; and made itself visible to all men, in managing of kingdoms, in ruling of great, ever-memorable epochs! But they said to him reprovingly, his Official Superiors said, and wrote: "You are to work, not to think." Of your thinking-faculty, the greatest in this land, we have no need; you are to gauge beer there; for that only are you wanted. Very notable;—and worth mentioning, though we know what is to be said and answered! As if thought, Power of Thinking, were not at all times, in all places and situations of the world, precisely the thing that was wanted. The fatal man, is he not always the unthinking man, the man who cannot think and see; but only grope, and hallucinate; and missee the nature of the thing he works with? He misses it, mistakes it as we say; takes it for one thing, and it is another thing,—and leaves him standing like a Futility there! He is the fatal man; unutterably fatal, put in the high places of men.—"Why complain of this?" say some: "Strength is mournfully denied its arena; that was true from of old." Doubtless; and the worse for the arena, answer I! Complaining profits little; stating of the truth may profit. That a Europe, with its French Revolution just breaking out, finds no need of a Burns except for gauging beer,—is a thing I, for one, cannot rejoice at.

Once more we have to say here, that the chief quality of Burns is the sincerity of him. So in his Poetry, so in his life. The Song he <sup>5</sup> An allusion to Burns' occupation as excise officer and gauger of ale at Dumfries, where it sometimes became his duty to board and seize a smuggling brig, as was the case on Feb. 27, 1792.

<sup>6</sup> The Marquis de Brézé was Chief Usher to the Court at the time of the French Revolution. On one occasion, June 22, 1789, when de Brézé attempted to dismiss the National Deputies by the King's orders, Mirabeau defied him in the name of the will of the people, and thus held the deputies in check. V. Carlyle's French Revolution, Vol. I., Bk. V., chap. II.

<sup>7</sup> Dugald Stewart (1753–1828), professor of moral philosophy at the University of Edinburgh.

<sup>8</sup> John Gibson Lockhart, the son-in-law and biographer of Scott, wrote also a Life of Burns, 1828.

<sup>9</sup> A famous French writer, orator, and statesman (1749–91). The "old Marquis," mentioned later, is his father.

sings is not of fantasticalities; it is of a thing felt, really there; the prime merit of this, as of all in him, and of his life generally, is truth. The life of Burns is what we may call a great tragic sincerity. A sort of savage sincerity,—not cruel, far from that; but wild, wrestling naked with the truth of things. In that sense, there is something of the savage in all great men.

Hero-worship.—Odin, Burns?<sup>10</sup> Well: These 10
Men of Letters too were not without a kind of Hero-worship; but what a strange condition has that got into now! The waiters and ostlers of Scotch inns, prying about the door, eager to catch any words that fell from Burns, were 15 doing unconscious reverence to the Heroic. Johnson had his Boswell for worshipper, Rousseau<sup>11</sup> had worshippers enough; princes calling on him in his mean garret; the great, the beautiful doing reverence to the poor moon- 20 struck man. For himself a most portentous contradiction; the two ends of his life not to be brought into harmony. He sits at the tables of grantees; and has to copy music for his own living. He cannot even get his 25 music copied: "By dint of dining out," says he, "I run the risk of dying by starvation at home." For his worshippers too a most questionable thing! If doing Hero-worship 30 well or badly be the test of vital wellbeing or illbeing to a generation, can we say that these generations are very first-rate?—And yet our heroic Men of Letters do teach, govern, are kings, priests, or what you like to call them; intrinsically there is no preventing it by any 35 means whatever. The world has to obey him who thinks and sees in the world. The world can alter the manner of that; can either have it as blessed continuous summer sunshine, or as unblessed black thunder and tornado,— 40 with unspeakable difference of profit for the world! The manner of it is very alterable; the matter and fact of it is not alterable by any power under the sky. Light; or, failing that, lightning: the world can take its choice. Not 45 whether we call an Odin god, prophet, priest, or what we call him; but whether we believe the word he tells us: there it all lies. If it be a true word, we shall have to believe it; believing it, we shall have to do it. What 50
name or welcome we give him or it, is a point that concerns ourselves mainly. It, the new Truth, new deeper revealing of the Secret of this Universe, is verily of the nature of a message from on high; and must and will have itself obeyed.

My last remark is on that notablest phasis of Burns's history,—his visit to Edinburgh.<sup>12</sup> 5
Often it seems to me as if his demeanour there were the highest proof he gave of what a fund of worth and genuine manhood was in him. If we think of it, few heavier burdens could be laid on the strength of a man. So sudden; all common Lionism, which ruins 10 innumerable men, was as nothing to this. It is as if Napoleon had been made a King of, not gradually, but at once from the Artillery Lieutenantcy in the Regiment La Fère. Burns, 15 still only in his twenty-seventh year, is no longer even a ploughman; he is flying to the West Indies to escape disgrace and jail. This month he is a ruined peasant, his wages seven pounds a year, and these gone from him: next month he is in the blaze of rank and beauty, 20 handing down jewelled Duchesses to dinner; the cynosure of all eyes! Adversity is sometimes hard upon a man; but for one man who can stand prosperity, there are a hundred that will stand adversity. I admire much the 25 way in which Burns met all this. Perhaps no man one could point out, was ever so sorely tried, and so little forgot himself. Tranquil, unastonished; not abashed, not inflated, neither awkwardness nor affectation: he feels that 30
he there is the man Robert Burns; that the "rank is but the guinea-stamp;" that the celebrity is but the candle-light, which will show what man, not in the least make him a better or other man! Alas, it may readily, 35 unless he look to it, make him a worse man; a wretched inflated wind-bag,—inflated till he burst, and become a dead lion; for whom, as some one has said, "there is no resurrection of the body;" worse than a living dog!—Burns 40 is admirable here.

And yet, alas, as I have observed elsewhere, these Lion-hunters were the ruin and death of Burns. It was they that rendered it impossible 45 for him to live! They gathered round him in his Farm; hindered his industry; no place was remote enough from them. He could not get his Lionism forgotten, honestly as he was disposed to do so. He falls into discontents, 50 into miseries, faults; the world getting ever more desolate for him; health, character, peace of mind, all gone;—solitary enough now. It is tragical to think of! These men came but

<sup>10</sup> Carlyle began his series of lectures on Heroes and Hero Worship, with that on "The Hero as Divinity," in which he first considered the Norse god Odin.

<sup>11</sup> Rousseau (1712-78), was one of the greatest French writers of the pre-revolutionary period. Johnson, Rousseau, and Burns, are the three illustrations of the "Hero as Man of Letters" used by Carlyle in this lecture.

<sup>12</sup> The winter of 1786-7, Burns spent in Edinburgh, where he became the lion of the season and was courted by the witty, the fashionable, and the learned. Just before this he was on the point of leaving the country "to escape disgrace, or jail," and "of flying to the West Indies." News of the success of his poems, however, determined him to go to Edinburgh to publish a second edition.

to see him; it was out of no sympathy with him, nor no hatred to him. They came to get a little amusement: they got their amusement;—and the Hero's life went for it!

Richter says, in the Island of Sumatra there is a kind of "Lightchafers," large Fire-flies, which people stick upon spits, and illuminate the ways with at night. Persons of condition can thus travel with a pleasant radiance, which they much admire. Great honour to the Fire-flies! But!—

THE GOSPEL OF WORK

(From Past and Present, 1843)

A High Class without duties to do is like a tree planted on precipices; from the roots of which all the earth has been crumbling. Nature owns no man who is not a Martyr withal. Is there a man who pretends to live luxuriously housed up; screened from all work, from want, danger, hardship, the victory over which is what we name work,—he himself to sit serene, amid down-bolsters and appliances, and have all his work and battling done by other men? And such a man calls himself a noble-man? His fathers worked for him, he says; or successfully gambled for him: here he sits; professes, not in sorrow but in pride, that he and his have done no work, time out of mind. It is the law of the land, and is thought to be the law of the Universe, that he, alone of recorded men, shall have no task laid on him, except that of eating his cooked victuals, and not flinging himself out of window. Once more I will say, there was no stranger spectacle ever shown under this Sun. A veritable fact in our England of the Nineteenth Century. His victuals he does eat: but as for keeping in the inside of the window—have not his friends, like me, enough to do? Truly, looking at his Corn-Laws, Game-Laws, Chandos-Clauses, Bribery-Elections<sup>1</sup> and much else, you do shudder over the tumbling and plunging he makes, held back by the lapels and coat-skirts; only a thin fence of window-glass before him,—and in the streets mere horrid ironspikes! My sick brother, as in hospital-maladies men do, thou dreamest of Paradises and Eldorados, which are far from thee. "Cannot I do what I like with my own?" Gracious Heaven, my brother, this that thou seest with those sick eyes is no firm Eldorado, and Corn-Law Paradise of Donothings, but a dream of thy own fevered brain. It is a glass-window, I tell thee, so many stories from the street; where are iron spikes and the law of gravitation!

<sup>1</sup> The Corn laws were a source of great agitation in the early 19th century. They were laws passed in the interests of the land-owners; they restricted the importation of grain by imposing a heavy tax on the imports. They were not repealed until 1846. The Game laws were very strict and cruel and were in the interests of the landed gentry. The Chandos Clauses proposed by Lord Chandos in 1831, as an alteration of the First Reform Bill, extended the county suffrage to all tenants-at-will of £50 rental, and thus aimed to strengthen the aristocracy and in a measure to check the cause of Reform. Bribery Elections refers to the extensive practice of bribing voters at elections, which was partly corrected by the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act passed in 1854.

What is the meaning of nobleness, if this be "noble?" In a valiant suffering for others, not in a slothful making others suffer for us, did nobleness ever lie. The chief of men is he who stands in the van of men; fronting the peril which frightens back all others; which, if it be not vanquished, will devour the others. Every noble crown is, and on Earth will forever be, a crown of thorns. The Pagan Hercules, why was he accounted a hero? Because he had slain Nemean Lions, cleaned Augean Stables, undergone Twelve Labors<sup>2</sup> only not too heavy for a god. In modern, as in ancient and in all societies, the Aristocracy, doing them or not, have taken the post of honor; which is the post of difficulty, the post of danger,—of death, if the difficulty be not overcome. Il faut payer de sa vie.<sup>3</sup> Why was our life given us, if not that we should manfully give it? Descend, O Donothing Pomp; quit thy down-cushions; expose thyself to learn what wretches feel, and how to cure it? The czar of Russia<sup>4</sup> became a dusty toiling shipwright; worked with his axe in the docks of Saardam; and his aim was small to thine. Descend thou: undertake this horrid "living chaos of Ignorance and Hunger" weltering round thy feet; say, "I will heal it, or behold I will die foremost in it." Such is verily the law. Everywhere and everywhen a man has to "pay with his life;" to do his work, as a soldier does, at the expense of life. In no Pie-powder<sup>5</sup> earthly court can you sue an Aristocracy to do its work, at this moment: but in the Higher Court, which even it calls "Court of Honor," and which is the Court of Necessity withal, and the eternal Court of the Universe, in which all Fact comes to plead, and every Human Soul is an apparitor,<sup>6</sup>—the Aristocracy is answerable, and even now answering, there. . . .

<sup>2</sup> The killing of the Nemean Lion, and the cleansing of the Augean stable were two of the twelve labors of Hercules.

<sup>3</sup> One must pay with one's life.

<sup>4</sup> Peter the Great (1672-1725), who, in his desire to create a Russian navy, visited among other countries, Holland, and worked as a common shipwright at Amsterdam and Saardam.

<sup>5</sup> The Pie powder courts of the middle ages in England had jurisdiction for the trial of controversies arising at fairs, markets, etc. The phrase is an English version of the French piepoudre (pied poudre), "dusty foot" which probably referred to the dusty-footed tradesmen, pedlars, etc., who resorted to these courts.

<sup>6</sup> An official who serves the summons and executes the process of an ecclesiastical court.

For there is a perennial nobleness, and even sacredness, in Work. Were he never so benighted, forgetful of his high calling, there is always hope in a man that actually and earnestly works: in Idleness alone is there perpetual despair. Work, never so mammonish, mean, is in communion with Nature: the real desire to get work done will itself lead one more and more to truth, to Nature's appointments and regulations, which are truth.

The latest Gospel in this world is, Know thy work and do it. "Know thyself:" long enough has that poor "self" of thine tormented thee; thou wilt never get to "know" it, I believe! Think it not thy business, this of knowing thyself; thou art an unknowable individual: know what thou canst work at; and work at it, like a Hercules! That will be thy better plan.

It has been written, "an endless significance lies in Work!" a man perfects himself by working. Foul jungles are cleared away, fair seed-fields rise instead, and stately cities; and withal the man himself first ceases to be a jungle and foul unwholesome desert thereby. Consider how, even in the meanest sorts of Labor, the whole soul of a man is composed into a kind of real harmony, the instant he sets himself to work! Doubt, Desire, Sorrow, Remorse, Indignation, Despair itself, all these like hell-dogs lie beleaguering the soul of the poor day-worker, as of every man: but he bends himself with free valor against his task, and all these are stilled, all these shrink murmuring far off into their caves. The man is now a man. The blessed glow of Labor in him, is it not as purifying fire, wherein all poison is burnt up, and of sour smoke itself there is made bright blessed flame!

Destiny, on the whole, has no other way of cultivating us. A formless Chaos, once set it revolving, grows round and ever rounder; ranges itself by mere force of gravity, into strata, spherical courses; is no longer a Chaos, but a round compacted World. What would become of the Earth, did she cease to revolve? In the poor old Earth, so long as she revolves, all inequalities, irregularities, disperse themselves; all irregularities are incessantly becoming regular. Hast thou looked on the Potter's wheel,—one of the venerable objects; old as the Prophet Ezekiel and far older? Rude lumps of clay, how they spin themselves up, by mere quick whirling, into beautiful circular dishes. And fancy the most assiduous Potter, but without his wheel; reduced to making dishes, or rather amorphous botches, by mere kneading and baking! Even such a Potter were Destiny, with a human soul that would rest and lie at ease; that would not work and spin! Of an idle unrevolving man the kindest Destiny, like the most assiduous Potter without wheel, can bake and knead nothing other than a botch; let her spend on him what expensive coloring, what gilding and enamelling she will, he is but a botch. Not a dish; no, a bulging, kneaded, crooked, shambling, squint-cornered, amorphous botch,—a mere enamelled vessel of dishonor! Let the idle think of this.

Blessed is he who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness. He has a work, a life-purpose; he has found it, and will follow it! How, as a free-flowing channel, dug and torn by noble force through the sour mud-swamp of one's existence, like an ever-deepening river there, it runs and flows;—draining off the sour festering water, gradually from the root of the remotest grass-blade; making, instead of pestilential swamp, a green fruitful meadow itself, let the stream and its value be great or small! Labor is Life: from the inmost heart of the Worker rises his god-given Force, the sacred celestial life-essence breathed into him by Almighty God; from his inmost heart awakens him to all nobleness,—to all knowledge, "self-knowledge" and much else, so soon as Work fitly begins. Knowledge? The knowledge that will hold good in working, cleave thou to that; for Nature herself accredits that, says Yea to that. Properly thou hast no other knowledge but what thou hast got by working: the rest is yet all a hypothesis of knowledge; a thing to be argued of in schools, a thing floating in the clouds, in endless logic-vortices, till we try it and fix it. "Doubt, of whatever kind, can be ended by Action alone."

Thomas Babington Macaulay

1800-1859

BOSWELL

(From Review of Croker's Boswell's Johnson, 1831)

The "Life of Johnson" is assuredly a great, a very great work. Homer is not more decidedly the first of dramatists, Demosthenes is not more decidedly the first of orators, than Boswell is the first of biographers. He has no second. He has distanced all his competitors so decidedly that it is not worth while to place them. Eclipse is first, and the rest nowhere.

We are not sure that there is in the whole history of the human intellect so strange a phenomenon as this book. Many of the greatest men that ever lived have written biography.

Boswell was one of the smallest men that ever lived, and he has beaten them all. He was, if we are to give any credit to his own account or to the united testimony of all who knew him, a man of the meanest and feeblest intellect. Johnson described him as a fellow who had missed his only chance of immortality by not having been alive when the "Dunciad" was written. Beauclerk<sup>1</sup> used his name as a proverbial expression for a bore. He was the laughing-stock of the whole of that brilliant society which has owed to him the greater part of its fame. He was always laying himself at the feet of some eminent man, and begging to be spit upon and trampled upon. He was always earning some ridiculous nickname, and the "binding it as a crown unto him," not merely in metaphor, but literally. He exhibited himself, at the Shakespeare Jubilee, to all the crowd which filled Stratford-on-Avon, with a placard round his hat bearing the inscription of Corsica Boswell.<sup>2</sup> In his Tour, he proclaimed to all the world that at Edinburgh he was known by the appellation of Paoli Boswell.<sup>3</sup> Servile and impertinent, shallow and pedantic, a bigot and a sot, bloated with family pride, and eternally blustering about the dignity of a born gentleman, yet stooping to be a talebearer, and eavesdropper, a common butt in the taverns of London, so curious to know everybody that was talked about, that, Tory and High Churchman as he was, he manoeuvred, we have been told, for an introduction to Tom Paine;<sup>4</sup> so vain of the most childish distinctions, that when he had been to Court, he drove to the office where his book was printing without changing his clothes, and summoned all the printer's devils to admire his new ruffles and sword; such was this man, and such he was content and proud to be. Everything which another man would have hidden, everything the publication of which would have made another man hang himself, was matter of gay and clamorous exultation to his weak and diseased mind. What silly things he said, what bitter retorts he provoked, how at one place he was troubled with evil presentiments which came to nothing, how at another place, on waking from a drunken doze, he read the prayer-book and took a hair of the dog that had bitten him, how he went to see men hanged and came away maudlin, how he added five hundred pounds to the fortune of one of his babies because she was not scared at Johnson's ugly face, how he was frightened out of his wits at sea, and how the sailors quieted him as they would have quieted a child, how tipsy he was at Lady Cork's one evening and how much his merriment annoyed the ladies, how impertinent he was to the Duchess of Argle and with what stately contempt she put down his impertinence, how Colonel Macleod sneered to his face at his impudent obtrusiveness, how his father, and the very wife of his bosom laughed and fretted at his fooleries—all these things he proclaimed to all the world, as if they had been subjects for pride and ostentatious rejoicing. All caprices of his temper, all the illusions of his vanity, all his hypochondriac whimsies, all his castles in the air, he displayed with a cool self-complacency, a perfect unconsciousness that he was making a fool of himself, to which it is impossible to find a parallel in the whole history of mankind. He had used many people ill; but assuredly he has used nobody so ill as himself.

That such a man should have written one of the best books in the world is strange enough. But this is not all. Many persons who have conducted themselves foolishly in active life, and whose conversation has indicated no superior powers of mind, have left us valuable works. Goldsmith was very justly described by one of his contemporaries as an inspired idiot,<sup>5</sup> and by another as a being. "Who wrote like an angel, and talked like poor Poll."<sup>6</sup>

La Fontaine<sup>7</sup> was in society a mere simpleton. His blunders would not come in amiss among the stories of Hierocles.<sup>8</sup> But these men attained literary eminence in spite of their weaknesses. Boswell attained it by reason of his weaknesses. If he had not been a great fool, he would never have been a great writer. Without all the qualities which made him the jest and the torment of those among whom he lived, without the officiousness, the inquisitiveness, the effrontery, the toad-eating, the insensibility to all reproach, he never could have produced so excellent a book. He was a slave proud of his servitude, a Paul Pry,<sup>9</sup> convinced that his own curiosity and garrulity were virtues, an unsafe companion who never scrupled to repay the most liberal hospitality

<sup>5</sup> A remark of Horace Walpole's. Cf. Johnson's remark on Goldsmith, as reported by Boswell, "No man was more foolish when he had not a pen in his hand, or more wise when he had."

<sup>6</sup> Garrick's impromptu epitaph:

"Here lies poet Goldsmith, for shortness called Noll, Who wrote like an angel, and talked like poor Poll."

<sup>7</sup> Jean de La Fontaine (1621-95), a famous French poet, noted for his tales and fables.

<sup>8</sup> A very old collection of jokes and amusing stories in Greek, told under the name of Hierocles.

<sup>9</sup> An inquisitive character in a comedy, Paul Pry, by John Poole, 1825.

<sup>1</sup> Topham Beauclerk, a young aristocrat who was the intimate friend of Johnson.

<sup>2</sup> V. p. 676, and n. 2.

<sup>3</sup> V. p. 677, and n. 4.

<sup>4</sup> The Anglo-American patriot and political philosopher, author of Common Sense and The Rights of Man.

by the basest violation of confidence, a man without delicacy, without shame, without sense enough to know when he was hurting the feelings of others or when he was exposing himself to derision; and because he was all this, he has, in an important department of literature, immeasurably surpassed such writers as Tacitus, Clarendon, Alfieri, and his own idol<sup>10</sup> Johnson.

Of the talents which ordinarily raise men to eminence as writers, Boswell had absolutely none. There is not in all his books a single remark of his own on literature, politics, religion, or society, which is not either commonplace or absurd. His dissertations on hereditary gentility, on the slave-trade, and on the entailing of landed estates, may serve as examples. To say that these passages are sophistical would be to pay them an extravagant compliment. They have no pretense to argument, or even to meaning. He has reported innumerable observations made by himself in the course of conversation. Of those observations we do not remember one which is above the intellectual capacity of a boy of fifteen. He has printed many of his own letters, and in these letters he is always ranting or twaddling. Logic, eloquence, wit, taste, all those things which are generally considered as making a book valuable were utterly wanting to him. He had, indeed, a quick observation and a retentive memory. These qualities, if he had been a man of sense and virtue would scarcely of themselves have sufficed to make him conspicuous; but because he was a dunce, a parasite, and a coxcomb, they have made him immortal.

Those parts of his book which, considered abstractedly, are most utterly worthless, are delightful when we read them as illustrations of the character of the writer. Bad in themselves, they are good dramatically, like the nonsense of Justice Shallow, the clipped English of Dr. Caius, or the misplaced consonants of Fluellen.<sup>11</sup> Of all confessors, Boswell is the most candid. Other men who have pretended to lay open their own hearts, Rousseau, for example, and Lord Byron, have evidently written with a constant view to effect, and are to be then most distrusted when they seem to be most sincere. There is scarcely any man who would not rather accuse himself of great crimes and of dark and tempestuous passions than proclaim all his little vanities and wild fancies. It would be easier to find a person who would avow actions like those of Cæsar Borgia<sup>12</sup> or Danton,<sup>13</sup> than one who would publish a day-dream like those of Alnaschar<sup>14</sup> and Malvolio.<sup>15</sup> Those weaknesses which most men keep covered up in the most secret places of the mind, not to be disclosed to the eye of friendship or of love, were precisely the weaknesses which Boswell paraded before all the world. He was perfectly frank, because the weakness of his understanding and the tumult of his spirits prevented him from knowing when he made himself ridiculous. His book resembles nothing so much as the conversation of the inmates of the Palace of Truth.

His fame is great; and it will, we have no doubt, be lasting; but it is fame of a peculiar kind, and indeed marvellously resembles infamy. We remember no other case in which the world has made so great a distinction between a book and its author. The case of Boswell is an exception, we think the only exception, to this rule. His work is universally allowed to be interesting, instructive, eminently original; yet it has brought him nothing but contempt. All the world reads it; yet we do not remember ever to have read or ever to have heard any expression of respect and admiration for the man to whom we owe so much instruction and amusement. While edition after edition of his book was coming forth, his son, as Mr. Croker<sup>16</sup> tells us, was ashamed of it, and hated to hear it mentioned. This feeling was natural and reasonable. Sir Alexander saw that, in proportion to the celebrity of the work, was the degradation of the author. The very editors of this unfortunate gentleman's books have forgotten their allegiance, and like those Puritan casuists who took arms by the authority of the king against his person, have attacked the writer while doing homage to his writings. Mr. Croker, for example, has published two thousand five hundred notes on the life of Johnson, and yet scarcely ever mentions the biographer whose performance he has taken such pains to illustrate without some expression of contempt.

An ill-natured man Boswell certainly was not; yet the malignity of the most malignant satirist could scarcely cut deeper than his thoughtless loquacity. Having himself no

<sup>10</sup> Tacitus' Agricola, one of his most famous works, is a masterpiece of biography. The earl of Clarendon (1609-74) wrote among other things a famous biography. Vittorio, Count Alfieri (1749-1803), an Italian dramatic poet, wrote an Autobiography of absorbing interest. Johnson's Lives of the Poets, is well known.

<sup>11</sup> Justice Shallow is the weak-minded country justice of Shakespeare's Merry Wives and II Henry IV.; Dr. Caius is a physician in Merry Wives, and Fluellen is a Welsh Captain in Henry V.

<sup>12</sup> One of the most cruel and unscrupulous Italian dukes of the 15th century, was guilty of treachery and murder in the furthering of his ambition.

<sup>13</sup> One of the leaders of the French Revolution.

<sup>14</sup> A character in the Arabian Nights, proverbial as a dreamer.

<sup>15</sup> The steward in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, who aspires to the hand of his mistress.

<sup>16</sup> The editor of the edition of Boswell's Johnson which Macaulay is reviewing.

sensibility to derision and contempt, he took it for granted that all others were equally callous. He was not ashamed to exhibit to the whole world as a common spy, a common tattler, a humble companion without the excuse of poverty, and to tell a hundred stories of his own pertness and folly, and of the insults which his pertness and folly brought upon him. It was natural that he should show little discretion in cases in which the feelings or the honor of others might be concerned. No man, surely, ever published such stories respecting persons whom he professed to love and revere. He would infallibly have made his hero as contemptible as he has made himself, had not his hero really possessed some moral and intellectual qualities of a very high order. The best proof that Johnson was really an extraordinary man is that his character, instead of being degraded, has, on the whole, been decidedly raised by a work in which all his vices and weaknesses are exposed more unsparingly than they ever were exposed by Churchill or by Kenrick.<sup>17</sup>

Johnson grown old, Johnson in the fulness of his fame and in the enjoyment of a competent fortune, is better known to us than any other man in history. Everything about him, his coat, his wig, his figure, his face, his scrofula, his St. Vitus's dance, his rolling walk, his blinking eye, the outward signs which too clearly marked his approbation of his dinner, his insatiable appetite for fish sauce and veal pie with plums, his inextinguishable thirst for tea, his trick of touching the posts as he walked, his mysterious practice of treasuring up scraps of orange peel, his morning slumbers, his midnight disputations, his contortions, his mutterings, his gruntings, his puffings, his vigorous, acute, and ready eloquence, his sarcastic wit, his vehemence, his insolence, his fits of tempestuous rage, his queer inmates, old Mr. Levett<sup>18</sup> and blind Mrs. Williams,<sup>19</sup> the cat Hodge<sup>20</sup> and the negro Frank, all are as familiar to us as the objects by which we have been surrounded from childhood.

THE TRIAL OF WARREN HASTINGS<sup>1</sup> (1841)

In the meantime the preparations for the trial had proceeded rapidly; and on the thir-

<sup>17</sup> Churchill attacked Dr. Johnson and his circle in The Ghost; Kenrick attacked Johnson's edition of Shakespeare.

<sup>18</sup> Johnson's "humble friend, Mr. Robert Levett, an obscure practitioner in physic amongst the lower people."

<sup>19</sup> V. p. 678, n. 13.

<sup>20</sup> For a description of these pensioners of Johnson see Macaulay's Essay on Johnson.

<sup>1</sup> Warren Hastings (1732-1818), was created Governor

General of India in 1774. He made a capable ruler, though his methods were sometimes open to question. On returning to England in 1785, he was impeached for various alleged acts of tyranny. He was tried before the bar at the House of Lords in Westminster Hall. The trial opened February 13, 1788, and closed with Hastings's acquittal seven years later, 1795. V. p. 403, supra, and notes.

teenth of February, 1788, the sittings of the Court commenced. There have been spectacles more dazzling to the eye, more gorgeous with jewellery and cloth of gold, more attractive to grown-up children, than that which was then exhibited at Westminster; but, perhaps, there never was a spectacle so well calculated to strike a highly cultivated, a reflecting, an imaginative mind. All the various kinds of interest which belong to the near and to the distant, to the present and to the past, were collected on one spot and in one hour. All the talents and all the accomplishments which are developed by liberty and civilization were now displayed, with every advantage which could be derived both from co-operation and from contrast. Every step in the proceedings carried the mind either backward, through many troubled centuries, to the days when the foundations of our constitution were laid; or far away, over boundless seas and deserts, to dusky nations living under strange stars, worshipping strange gods, and writing strange characters from right to left. The High Court of Parliament was to sit, according to forms handed down from the days of the Plantagenets, on an Englishman accused of exercising tyranny over the lord of the holy city of Benares, and over the ladies of the princely house of Oude.

The place was worthy of such a trial. It was the great hall of William Rufus, the hall which had resounded with acclamations at the inauguration of thirty kings, the hall which had witnessed the just sentence of Bacon<sup>2</sup> and the just absolution of Somers, the hall where the eloquence of Strafford had for a moment awed and melted a victorious party inflamed with just resentment, the hall where Charles had confronted the High Court of Justice with the placid courage which has half redeemed his fame. Neither military nor civil pomp was wanting. The avenues were lined with grenadiers. The streets were kept clear by cavalry. The peers, robed in gold and ermine, were marshalled by the heralds under Garter King-at-arms.<sup>3</sup> The judges in their vestments of state attended to give advice on points of law. Near a hundred and seventy lords, three fourths of the Upper House as the Upper House then was, walked in solemn order from their usual place of assembling to the tribunal. The junior Baron present led the way, George Elliot, Lord Heathfield, recently ennobled for his memorable defence of Gibraltar against the fleets and armies of France and Spain. The long procession was closed by the Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshall of the realm, by the great dignitaries and by the brothers and sons of the King. Last of all came the Prince of Wales, conspicuous by his fine person and noble bearing. The grey old walls were hung with scarlet. The long galleries were crowded by an audience such as has rarely excited the fears or the emulations of an orator. There were gathered together from all parts of a great, free, enlightened, and prosperous empire, grace and female loveliness, wit and learning, the representatives of every science and of every art. There were seated round the Queen the fair-haired young daughters of the House of Brunswick. There the Ambassadors of great Kings and Commonwealths gazed with admiration on a spectacle which no other country in the world could present. There Siddons,<sup>4</sup> in the prime of her majestic beauty, looked with emotion on a scene surpassing all the imitations of the stage. There the historian of the Roman Empire<sup>5</sup> thought of the days when Cicero pleaded the cause of Sicily against Verres, and when, before a senate which still retained some show of freedom, Tacitus thundered against the oppressor of Africa.<sup>6</sup> There were seen side by side the greatest painter<sup>7</sup> and the greatest scholar of the age.<sup>8</sup> The spectacle had allured Reynolds from that easel which preserved to us the thoughtful foreheads of so many writers and statesmen, and the sweet smiles of so many noble matrons. It had induced Parr to suspend his labours in that dark and profound mine from which he had extracted a vast treasure of erudition, a treasure too often buried in the earth, too often paraded with injudicious and inelegant ostentation, but still, precious, massive, and splendid. There appeared the voluptuous charms of her to whom the heir of the throne had in secret plighted his faith.<sup>9</sup> There too was she, the beautiful mother of a beautiful race, the Saint Cecilia, whose delicate features, lighted up by love and music, art has rescued from the common decay. There were the members of that brilliant society, which quoted, criticized, and exchanged repartees, under the rich peacock-hangings of Mrs. Montague.<sup>10</sup> And there the ladies whose lips, more persuasive than those of Fox himself, had carried the Westminster election against palace and treasury, shone around Georgiana Duchess of Devonshire.

<sup>2</sup> Lord Bacon was tried on the charge of bribery and found guilty in 1621. John, Lord Somers, Chancellor under William and Mary, was tried and absolved in 1700. Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Strafford, one of the trusted advisers of Charles I. was tried and condemned on a charge of treason in 1641. Charles I himself was tried and condemned in January, 1649.

<sup>3</sup> An officer of the Order of the Garter, and the Chief Herald of England, one of whose duties it is to assign lords their seats in Parliament.

The Serjeants made proclamation. Hastings advanced to the bar, and bent his knee. The culprit was indeed not unworthy of that great presence. He had ruled an extensive and populous country, had made laws and treaties, had sent forth armies, had set up and pulled down princes. And in his high places had so borne himself, that all had feared him, that most had loved him, and that hatred itself could deny him no title to glory, except virtue. He looked like a great man, and not like a bad man. A person small and emaciated, yet deriving dignity from a carriage which, while it indicated deference to the Court, indicated also habitual self-possession and self-respect, a high and intellectual forehead, a brow pensive, but not gloomy, a mouth of inflexible decision, a face pale and worn, but serene, on which was written, as legibly as under the picture in the council-chamber at Calcutta, Mens æqua in arduis,<sup>11</sup> such was the aspect with which the great Proconsul presented himself to his judges.

His counsel accompanied him, men all of whom were afterwards raised by their talents and learning to the highest post in their profession, the bold and strong-minded Law, afterwards Chief Justice of the King's Bench; the more humane and eloquent Dallas, afterwards Chief Justice of the Common Pleas; and Plomer who, near twenty years later, successfully conducted in the same high court the defence of Lord Melville,<sup>12</sup> and subsequently became Vice-chancellor and Master of the Rolls.

But neither the culprit nor his advocates attracted so much notice as the accusers. In the midst of the blaze of red drapery, a space had been fitted up with green benches and tables for the Commons. The managers, with Burke at their head, appeared in full

<sup>4</sup> Sarah Siddons, a great English actress (1755-1831).

<sup>5</sup> Edward Gibbon (1737-94), author of The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.

<sup>6</sup> Marius Priscus, pro-consul of Africa, was charged with extortion, and successfully prosecuted by Tacitus and Pliny the Younger.

<sup>7</sup> Sir Joshua Reynolds (1723-92).

<sup>8</sup> Dr. Samuel Parr (1747-1825), a man of vast learning.

<sup>9</sup> The Prince of Wales (afterward George III), had married Mrs. Fitzherbert in 1785.

<sup>10</sup> Elizabeth Montague (1720-1800), a writer of some note in her day, and a leader of London society, who numbered among her visitors Walpole, Johnson, Burke, Garrick, and Reynolds.

<sup>11</sup> A calm mind in the midst of troubles.

<sup>12</sup> Melville, who had been largely responsible for the investigation of Indian affairs which led to the impeachment of Hastings, was tried in 1806 for "gross malversation and breach of duty," while acting as treasurer of the Navy.

dress. The collectors of gossip did not fail to remark that even Fox, generally so regardless of his appearance, had paid to the illustrious tribunal the compliment of wearing a bag and sword. Pitt<sup>13</sup> had refused to be one of the conductors of the impeachment; and his commanding, copious, and sonorous eloquence was wanting to that great muster of various talents. Age and blindness had unfitted Lord North<sup>14</sup> for the duties of a public prosecutor; and his friends were left without the help of his excellent sense, his tact, and his urbanity. But, in spite of the absence of these two distinguished members of the Lower House, the box in which the managers stood contained an array of speakers such as perhaps had not appeared together since the great age of Athenian eloquence. There were Fox and Sheridan, the English Demosthenes and the English Hyperides.<sup>15</sup> There was Burke, ignorant indeed, or negligent of the art of adapting his reasonings and his style to the capacity and taste of his hearers, but in amplitude of comprehension and richness of imagination superior to every orator, ancient or modern. There, with eyes reverentially fixed on Burke, appeared the finest gentleman of the age, his form developed by every manly exercise, his face beaming with intelligence and spirit, the ingenious, the chivalrous, the high-souled Windham.<sup>16</sup> Nor, though surrounded by such men, did the youngest manager pass unnoticed. At an age when most of those who distinguish themselves in life are still contending for prizes and fellowships at college, he had won for himself a conspicuous place in parliament. No advantage of fortune or connection was wanting that could set off to the height his splendid talents, and his unblemished honor. At twenty-three he had been thought worthy to be ranked with the veteran statesmen who appeared as the Delegates of the British Commons, at the bar of the British nobility. All who stood at that bar, save him alone, are gone, culprit, advocates, accusers. To the generation which is now in the vigor of life, he is the sole representative of a great age which has passed away. But those who, within the last ten years, have listened with delight, till the morning sun shone on the tapestries of the House of Lords, to the lofty and animated eloquence of Charles, Earl Grey,<sup>17</sup> are able to form some estimate of the powers of a race of men among whom he was not the foremost.

The charges and the answers of Hastings were first read. The ceremony occupied two whole days, and was rendered less tedious than it otherwise would have been by the silver voice and just emphasis of Cowper, the clerk of the court, a near relation of the amiable poet. On the third day Burke rose. Four sittings were occupied by his opening speech, which was intended to be a general introduction to all the charges. With an exuberance of thought and a splendor of diction which more than satisfied the highly raised expectation of the audience, he described the character and institutions of the natives of India, recounted the circumstances in which the Asiatic empire of Britain had originated, and set forth the constitution of the Company<sup>18</sup> and of the English presidencies. Having thus attempted to communicate to his hearers an idea of Eastern society, as vivid as that which existed in his own mind, he proceeded to arraign the administration of Hastings as systematically conducted in defiance of morality and public law. The energy and pathos of the great orator extorted expressions of unwonted admiration from the stern and hostile Chancellor, and, for a moment seemed to pierce even the resolute heart of the defendant. The ladies in the galleries, unaccustomed to such displays of eloquence, excited by the solemnity of the occasion, and perhaps not unwilling to display their taste and sensibility, were in a state of uncontrollable emotion. Handkerchiefs were pulled out; smelling bottles were handed round; hysterical sobs and screams were heard; and Mrs. Sheridan<sup>19</sup> was carried out in a fit. At length the orator concluded. Raising his voice till the old arches of Irish oak resounded, "Therefore," said he, "hath it with all confidence been ordered, by the Commons of Great Britain, that I impeach Warren Hastings of high crimes and misdemeanors. I impeach him in the name of the Commons' House of Parliament, whose trust he has betrayed. I impeach him in the name of the English nation, whose ancient honor he has sullied. I impeach him in the name of the people of India, whose rights he has trodden under foot, and whose country he has turned into a desert. Lastly, in the name of human nature itself, in the name of both sexes, in the

<sup>13</sup> William Pitt the Younger (1759-1806), Prime Minister of England.

<sup>14</sup> Prime Minister from 1770-82, he may be remembered by his obstinate adherence to the policy of oppression with respect to America.

<sup>15</sup> An Athenian orator of the fourth century B. C., who although a friend of Demosthenes was chosen to prosecute him on a charge of bribery.

<sup>16</sup> William Windham, a member of Parliament, and afterwards a member of the Ministry of the Pitt and Grenville administration.

<sup>17</sup> Grey later became Prime Minister, and did much toward the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832.

<sup>18</sup> The East India Company.

<sup>19</sup> The wife of the dramatist and statesman Richard Brinsley Sheridan.

name of every age, in the name of every rank, I impeach the common enemy and oppressor of all!"<sup>20</sup>

OLIVER GOLDSMITH

(1856)

Oliver Goldsmith was one of the most pleasing English writers of the eighteenth century. He was of a Protestant and Saxon family which had been long settled in Ireland, and which had, like most other Protestant and Saxon families, been, in troubled times, harassed and put in fear by the native population. His father, Charles Goldsmith, studied, in the reign of Queen Anne, at the diocesan school of Elphin, became attached to the daughter of the school-master, married her, took orders, and settled at a place called Pallas, in the county of Longford. There he with difficulty supported his wife and children on what he could earn, partly as a curate and partly as a farmer.

At Pallas, Oliver Goldsmith was born in November, 1728. That spot was then, for all practical purposes, almost as remote from the busy and splendid capital in which his later years were passed, as any clearing in Upper Canada or any sheep-walk in Australasia now is. Even at this day those enthusiasts who venture to make a pilgrimage to the birthplace of the poet are forced to perform the latter part of their journey on foot. The hamlet lies far from any high-road, on a dreary plain which, in wet weather, is often a lake. The lanes would break any jaunting-car to pieces; and there are ruts and sloughs through which the most strongly built wheels cannot be dragged.

When Oliver was still a child, his father was presented to a living, worth about two hundred pounds a year, in the county of Westmeath. The family accordingly quitted their cottage in the wilderness for a spacious house on a frequented road, near the village of Lissoy. Here the boy was taught his letters by a maid-servant, and was sent, in his seventh year, to a village school kept by an old quarter-master on half pay, who professed to teach nothing but reading, writing and arithmetic, but who had an inexhaustible fund of stories about ghosts, banshees, and fairies, about the great Rapparee chiefs, Baldearg O'Donnell and galloping Hogan and about the exploits of Peterborough and Stanhope, the surprise of Monjuich, and the glorious disaster of Brihuega. This man must have been of the Protestant religion, but he was of the aboriginal race, and not only spoke the Irish language, but could pour forth unpremeditated Irish verses. Oliver early became, and through life continued to be, a passionate admirer of the Irish music, and especially of the compositions of Carolan,<sup>1</sup> some of the last notes of whose harp he heard. It ought to be added that Oliver, though by birth one of the Englishry, and though connected by numerous ties with the Established Church, never showed the least sign of that contemptuous antipathy with which, in his days, the ruling minority in Ireland too generally regarded the subject majority. So far, indeed, was he from sharing in the opinions and feelings of the caste to which he belonged, that he conceived an aversion to the Glorious and Immortal Memory, and, even when George the Third was on the throne, maintained that nothing but the restoration of the banished dynasty could save the country.

From the humble academy kept by the old soldier Goldsmith was removed in his ninth year. He went to several grammar-schools, and acquired some knowledge of the ancient languages. His life at this time seems to have been far from happy. He had, as appears from the admirable portrait of him at Knowle, features harsh even to ugliness. The small-pox had set its mark on him with more than usual severity. His stature was small, and his limbs ill put together. Among boys little tenderness is shown to personal defects; and the ridicule excited by poor Oliver's appearance was heightened by a peculiar simplicity and a disposition to blunder which he retained to the last. He became the common butt of boys and masters, and was pointed at as a fright in the play-ground, and flogged as a dunce in the school-room. When he had risen to eminence, those who once derided him ransacked their memory for the events of his early years, and recited repartees and couplets which had dropped from him, and which, though little noticed at the time, were supposed, a quarter of a century later, to indicate the powers which produced the "Vicar of Wakefield" and the "Deserted Village."

In his seventeenth year Oliver went up to Trinity College, Dublin, as a sizar. The sizars<sup>2</sup> paid nothing for food and tuition, and very little for lodging; but they had to perform some menial services from which they have long been relieved. They swept the court; they carried up the dinner to the fellows' table, and changed the plates and poured out the ale of the rulers of the society. Goldsmith was quartered, not alone, in a garret, on the window of which his name, scrawled by himself, is still read with interest. From such garrets many men of less parts than his have made their way to the wool-sack<sup>3</sup> or to the episcopal bench. But Goldsmith, while he suffered all the humiliations, threw away all the advantages of his situation. He neglected the studies of the place, stood low at the examinations, was turned down to the bottom of his class for playing the buffoon in the lecture-room, was severely reprimanded for pumping on a constable, and was caned by a brutal tutor for giving a ball in the attic story of the college to some gay youths and damsels from the city.

<sup>1</sup> Turlogh O'Carolan (1670-1738). One of the last of the Irish bards, who spent his days wandering about Ireland, singing, and playing on his harp.

<sup>2</sup> At Cambridge, and at Trinity College, Dublin, a sizar was a student allowed free commons, and other gratuities, in return for services rendered.

While Olivér was leading at Dublin a life divided between squalid distress and squalid dissipation, his father died, leaving a mere pittance. The youth obtained his bachelor's degree, and left the university. During some time the humble dwelling to which his widowed mother had retired was his home. He was now in his twenty-first year; it was necessary that he should do something; and his education seemed to have fitted him to do nothing but to dress himself in gaudy colors, of which he was as fond as a magpie, to take a hand at cards, to sing Irish airs, to play the flute, to angle in summer, and to tell ghost stories by the fire in winter. He tried five or six professions in turn without success. He applied for ordination; but, as he applied in scarlet clothes, he was speedily turned out of the episcopal palace. He then became tutor in an opulent family, but soon quitted his situation in consequence of a dispute about play. Then he determined to emigrate to America. His relations, with much satisfaction, saw him set out for Cork on a good horse, with thirty pounds in his pocket. But in six weeks he came back on a miserable hack, without a penny, and informed his mother that the ship in which he had taken his passage, having got a fair wind while he was at a party of pleasure, had sailed without him. Then he resolved to study the law. A generous kinsman advanced fifty pounds. With this sum Goldsmith went to Dublin, was enticed into a gaming-house, and lost every shilling. He then thought of medicine. A small purse was made up; and in his twenty-fourth year he was sent to Edinburgh. At Edinburgh he passed eighteen months in nominal attendance on lectures, and picked up some superficial information about chemistry and natural history. Thence he went to Leyden still pretending to study phisic. He left that celebrated university—the third university at which he had resided—in his twenty-seventh year, without a degree, with the merest smattering of medical knowledge, and with no property but his clothes and his flute. His flute, however, proved a useful friend. He rambled on foot through Flanders, France, and Switzerland, playing tunes which everywhere set the peasantry dancing, and which often procured for him a supper and a bed. He wandered as far as Italy. His musical performances, indeed, were not to the taste of the Italians; but he contrived to live on the alms which he obtained at the gates of convents. It should, however, be observed, that the stories which he told about this part of his life ought to be received with great caution; for strict veracity was never one of his virtues, and a man who is ordinarily inaccurate in narration is likely to be more than ordinarily inaccurate when he talks about his own travels. Goldsmith, indeed, was so regardless of truth as to assert in print that he was present at a most interesting conversation between Voltaire and Fontenelle, and that this conversation took place at Paris. Now, it is certain that Voltaire never was within a hundred leagues of Paris during the whole time which Goldsmith passed on the continent.

In 1756 the wanderer landed at Dover, without a shilling, without a friend, and without a calling. He had, indeed, if his own unsupported evidence may be trusted, obtained from the University of Padua a doctor's degree; but this dignity proved utterly useless to him. In England his flute was not in request: there were no convents; and he was forced to have recourse to a series of desperate expedients. He turned strolling player; but his face and figure were ill suited to the boards even of the humblest theatre. He pounded drugs and ran about London with phials for charitable chemists. He joined a swarm of beggars, which made its nest in Axe Yard.<sup>4</sup> He was for a time usher of a school, and felt the miseries and humiliations of this situation so keenly, that he thought it a promotion to be permitted to earn his bread as a bookseller's hack; but he soon found the new yoke more galling than the old one, and was glad to become an usher again. He obtained a medical appointment in the service of the East India Company; but the appointment was speedily revoked. Why it was revoked we are not told. The subject was one on which he never liked to talk. It is probable that he was incompetent to perform the duties of the place. Then he presented himself at Surgeons' Hall for examination, as mate to a naval hospital. Even to so humble a post he was found unequal. By this time the school-master whom he had served for a morsel of food and the third part of a bed was no more. Nothing remained but to return to the lowest drudgery of literature. Goldsmith took a garret in a miserable court, to which he had to climb from the brink of Fleet Ditch by a dizzy ladder of flag-stones called Breakneck Steps. The court and the ascent have long disappeared; but old Londoners well remember both. Here, at thirty, the unlucky adventurer sat down to toil like a galley-slave.

<sup>3</sup> i. e. the office of Lord High Chancellor, who sat upon a cushion of wool.

<sup>4</sup> Probably Axe and Bottle Yard (now King Street), an open space near the old Marshalsea Prison in Southwark.

In the succeeding six years he sent to the press some things which have survived, and many which have perished. He produced articles for reviews, magazines, and newspapers; children's books, which, bound in gilt paper and adorned with hideous woodcuts, appeared in the window of the once famous shop at the corner of St. Paul's Churchyard; "An Inquiry into the State of Polite Learning in Europe," which, though of little or no value, is still reprinted among his works; a "Life of Beau Nash," which is not reprinted, though it well deserves to be so; a superficial and incorrect, but very readable, "History of England," in a series of letters purporting to be addressed by a nobleman to his son; and some very lively and amusing "Sketches of London Society," in a series of letters purporting to be addressed by a Chinese traveller to his friends.<sup>5</sup> All these works were anonymous; but some of them were well known to be Goldsmith's; and he gradually rose in the estimation of the booksellers for whom he drudged. He was, indeed, emphatically a popular writer. For accurate research or grave disquisition he was not well qualified by nature or by education. He knew nothing accurately: his reading had been desultory; nor had he meditated deeply on what he had read. He had seen much of the world; but he had noticed and retained little more of what he had seen than some grotesque incidents and characters which had happened to strike his fancy. But, though his mind was very scantily stored with materials, he used what materials he had in such a way as to produce a wonderful effect. There have been many greater writers; but perhaps no writer was ever more uniformly agreeable. His style was always pure and easy, and, on proper occasions, pointed and energetic. His narratives were always amusing, his descriptions always picturesque, his humor rich and joyous, yet not without an occasional tinge of amiable sadness. About everything that he wrote, serious or sportive, there was a certain natural grace and decorum, hardly to be expected from a man a great part of whose life had been passed among thieves and beggars, street-walkers, and merry-andrews, in those squalid dens which are the reproach of great capitals.

As his name gradually became known, the circle of his acquaintance widened. He was introduced to Johnson, who was then considered as the first of living English writers; to Reynolds, the first of English painters; and to Burke, who had not yet entered Parliament, but had distinguished himself greatly by his writings and by the eloquence of his conversation. With these eminent men Goldsmith became intimate. In 1763 he was one of the nine original members of that celebrated fraternity which has sometimes been called the Literary Club, but which has always disclaimed that epithet, and still glories in the simple name of The Club.

By this time Goldsmith had quitted his miserable dwelling at the top of Breakneck Steps, and had taken chambers in the more civilized region of the Inns of Court. But he was still often reduced to pitiable shifts. Toward the close of 1764 his rent was so long in arrear that his landlady one morning called in the help of a sheriff's officer. The debtor, in great perplexity, despatched a messenger to Johnson; and Johnson, always friendly, though often surly, sent back the messenger with a guinea, and promised to follow speedily.<sup>6</sup> He came, and found that Goldsmith had changed the guinea, and was railing at the landlady over a bottle of Madeira. Johnson put the cork into the bottle, and entreated his friend to consider calmly how money was to be procured. Goldsmith said that he had a novel ready for the press. Johnson glanced at the manuscript, saw that there were good things in it, took it to a bookseller, sold it for sixty pounds, and soon returned with the money. The rent was paid, and the sheriff's officer withdrew. According to one story, Goldsmith gave his landlady a sharp reprimand for her treatment of him; according to another, he insisted on her joining him in a bowl of punch. Both stories are probably true. The novel which was thus ushered into the world was the "Vicar of Wakefield."

But before the "Vicar of Wakefield" appeared in print came the great crisis of Goldsmith's literary life. In Christmas week, 1764, he published a poem, entitled the "Traveller." It was the first work to which he had put his name; and it at once raised him to the rank of a legitimate English classic. The opinion of the most skilful critics was that nothing finer had appeared in verse since the fourth book of the "Dunciad." In one respect, the "Traveller" differs from all Goldsmith's other writings. In general, his designs were bad, and his execution good. In the "Traveller," the execution, though deserving of much praise, is far inferior to the design. No philosophical poem, ancient or modern, has a plan so noble, and at the same time so simple. An English wanderer, seated on a crag among the Alps, near the point where three great countries meet, looks down on the boundless prospect, reviews his long pilgrimage, recalls the varieties of scenery, of climate, of government, of religion, of national character, which he has observed, and comes to the conclusion, just or unjust, that our happiness depends little on political institutions, and much on the temper and regulation of our own minds.

<sup>5</sup> V. p. 397, supra.

<sup>6</sup> For an account of this incident, v. p. 427, supra.

While the fourth edition of the "Traveller" was on the counters of the booksellers, the "Vicar of Wakefield" appeared, and rapidly obtained a popularity which has lasted down to our own time, and which is likely to last as long as our language. The fable is indeed one of the worst that ever was constructed. It wants not merely that probability which ought to be found in a tale of common English life, but that consistency which ought to be found even in the wildest fiction about witches, giants, and fairies. But the earlier chapters have all the sweetness of pastoral poetry, together with all the vivacity of comedy. Moses and his spectacles, the Vicar and his monogamy, the Sharper and his cosmogony, the Squire proving from Aristotle that relatives are related, Olivia preparing herself for the arduous task of converting a rakish lover by studying the controversy between Robinson Crusoe and Friday, the great ladies with their scandal about Sir Tomkyn's amours and Dr. Burdock's verses, and Mr. Burchell with his Fudge! have caused as much harmless mirth as has ever been caused by matter packed into so small a number of pages. The latter part of the tale is unworthy of the beginning. As we approach the catastrophe, the absurdities lie thicker and thicker, and the gleams of pleasantry become rarer and rarer.

The success which had attended Goldsmith as a novelist emboldened him to try his fortune as a dramatist. He wrote the "Good-natured Man," a piece which had a worse fate than it deserved. Garrick refused to produce it at Drury Lane. It was acted at Covent Garden in 1768, but was coldly received. The author, however, cleared by his benefit nights, and by the sale of the copyright, not less than five hundred pounds—five times as much as he had made by the "Traveller" and the "Vicar of Wakefield" together. The plot of the "Good-natured Man" is, like almost all Goldsmith's plots, very ill constructed. But some passages are exquisitely ludicrous; much more ludicrous, indeed, than suited the taste of the town at that time. A canting, mawkish play, entitled "False Delicacy," had just had an immense run. Sentimentality was all the mode. During some years, more tears were shed at comedies than at tragedies; and a pleasantry which moved the audience to anything more than a grave smile was reprobated as low. It is not strange, therefore, that the very best scene in the "Good-natured Man"—that in which Miss Richland finds her lover attended by the bailiff and the bailiff's follower in full court-dresses—should have been mercilessly hissed, and should have been omitted after the first night.

In 1770 appeared the "Deserted Village." In mere diction and versification, this celebrated poem is fully equal, perhaps superior, to the "Traveller;" and it is generally preferred to the "Traveller" by that large class of readers who think, with Bayes in the "Rehearsal," that the only use of a plan is to bring in fine things. More discerning judges, however, while they admire the beauty of the details, are shocked by one unpardonable fault which pervades the whole. The fault we mean is not that theory about wealth and luxury which has so often been censured by political economists. The theory is indeed false; but the poem, considered merely as a poem, is not necessarily the worse on that account. The finest poem in the Latin language,<sup>7</sup> indeed the finest didactic poem in any language, was written in defense of the silliest and meanest of all systems of natural and moral philosophy. A poet may easily be pardoned for reasoning ill; but he cannot be pardoned for describing ill—for observing the world in which he lives so carelessly that his portraits bear no resemblance to the originals—for exhibiting as copies from real life monstrous combinations of things which never were, and never could be, found together. What would be thought of a painter who should mix August and January in one landscape? Who should introduce a frozen river into a harvest scene? Would it be a sufficient defense of such a picture to say that every part was exquisitely colored, that the green hedges, the apple-trees loaded with fruit, the wagons reeling under the yellow sheaves, and the sunburnt reapers wiping their foreheads were very fine, and that the ice and the boys sliding were also very fine? To such a picture the "Deserted Village" bears a great resemblance. It is made up of incongruous parts. The village in its happy days is a true English village. The village in its decay is an Irish village. The felicity and the misery which Goldsmith has brought close together belong to two different countries, and to two different stages in the progress of society. He had assuredly never seen in his native island such a rural paradise, such a seat of plenty, content, and tranquillity, as his Auburn. He had assuredly never seen in England all the inhabitants of such a paradise turned out of their homes in one day, and forced to emigrate in a body to America. The hamlet he had probably seen in Kent; the ejectment he had probably seen in Munster; but by joining the two, he has produced something which never was and never will be seen in any part of the world.

<sup>7</sup> A character in The Rehearsal, a play by the Duke of Buckingham, meant to satirize Dryden.

<sup>8</sup> The De Rerum Natura of Lucretius, a Roman poet of the first century B. C. In this poem (On the Nature of Things) Lucretius aspired to explain the origin of the universe by philosophical theories, and to attack and denounce all religion and the belief in immortality.

In 1773 Goldsmith tried his chance at Covent Garden with a second play—"She Stoops to Conquer." The manager was not without great difficulty induced to bring this piece out. The sentimental comedy still reigned, and Goldsmith's comedies were not sentimental. The "Good-natured Man" had been too funny to succeed; yet the mirth of the "Good-natured Man" was sober when compared with the rich drollery of "She Stoops to Conquer," which is, in truth, an incomparable farce in five acts. On this occasion, however, genius triumphed. Pit, boxes, and galleries were in a constant roar of laughter. If any bigoted admirer of Kelly and Cumberland<sup>9</sup> ventured to hiss or groan, he was speedily silenced by a general cry of, "Turn him out!" or "Throw him over!" Two generations have since confirmed the verdict which was pronounced on that night.

While Goldsmith was writing the "Deserted Village" and "She Stoops to Conquer," he was employed on works of a very different kind—works from which he derived little reputation, but much profit. He compiled for the use of schools a "History of Rome," by which he made three hundred pounds; a "History of England," by which he made six hundred pounds; a "History of Greece," for which he received two hundred and fifty pounds; a "Natural History," for which the booksellers covenanted to pay him eight hundred guineas. These works he produced without any elaborate research, by merely selecting, abridging, and translating into his own clear, pure, and flowing language, what he found in books well known to the world, but too bulky or too dry for boys and girls. He committed some strange blunders, for he knew nothing with accuracy. Thus, in his "History of England" he tells us that Naseby<sup>10</sup> is in Yorkshire; nor did he correct this mistake when the book was reprinted. He was very nearly hoaxed into putting into the "History of Greece" an account of a battle between Alexander the Great and Montezuma. In his "Animated Nature" he relates, with faith and with perfect gravity, all the most absurd lies which he could find in books of travels about gigantic Patagonians, monkeys that preach sermons, nightingales that repeat long conversations. "If he can tell a horse from a cow," said Johnson, "that is the extent of his knowledge of zoölogy." How little Goldsmith was qualified to write about the physical sciences is sufficiently proved by two anecdotes. He on one occasion denied that the sun is longer in the northern than in the southern signs. It was vain to cite the authority of Maupertuis. "Maupertuis!" he cried; "I understand those matters better than Maupertuis." On another occasion he, in defiance of the evidence of his own senses, maintained obstinately, and even angrily, that he chewed his dinner by moving his upper jaw.

<sup>9</sup> Hugh Kelly was the author of False Delicacy, the "canting, mawkish play" mentioned above. Richard Cumberland was a novelist and dramatist, whose best play is The West Indian.

Yet, ignorant as Goldsmith was, few writers have done more to make the first steps in the laborious road to knowledge easy and pleasant. His compilations are widely distinguished from the compilations of ordinary book-makers. He was a great, perhaps an unequalled master of the arts of selection and condensation. In these respects his histories of Rome and of England, and still more his own abridgments of these histories, well deserve to be studied. In general nothing is less attractive than an epitome: but the epitomes of Goldsmith, even when most concise, are always amusing; and to read them is considered by intelligent children not as a task, but as a pleasure.

Goldsmith might now be considered as a prosperous man. He had the means of living in comfort, and even in what to one who had so often slept in barns and on bulks must have been luxury. His fame was great, and was constantly rising. He lived in what was intellectually far the best society of the kingdom, in a society in which no talent or accomplishment was wanting, and in which the art of conversation was cultivated with splendid success. There probably were never four talkers more admirable in four different ways than Johnson, Burke, Beauclerk, and Garrick; and Goldsmith was on terms of intimacy with all the four. He aspired to share in their colloquial renown; but never was ambition more unfortunate. It may seem strange that a man who wrote with so much perspicuity, vivacity, and grace, should have been, whenever he took a part in conversation, an empty, noisy, blundering rattle. But on this point the evidence is overwhelming. So extraordinary was the contrast between Goldsmith's published works and the silly things which he said, that Horace Walpole described him as an inspired idiot. "Noll," said Garrick, "wrote like an angel, and talked like poor Poll." Chamier<sup>11</sup> declared that it was a hard exercise of faith to believe that so foolish a chatterer could have really written the "Traveller." Even Boswell could say, with contemptuous compassion, that he liked very well to hear honest Goldsmith run on. "Yes, sir," said Johnson, "but he should not like to hear himself." Minds differ as rivers differ. There are transparent and sparkling rivers from which it is delightful to drink as they flow; to such rivers the minds of such men as Burke and Johnson may be compared. But there are rivers of which the water when first drawn is turbid and noisome, but becomes pellucid as crystal and delicious to the taste if it be suffered to stand till it has deposited a sediment; and such a river is a type of the mind of Goldsmith. His first thoughts on every subject were confused even to absurdity, but they required only a little time to work themselves clear. When he wrote they had that time, and therefore his readers pronounced him a man of genius; but when he talked, he talked nonsense, and made himself the laughing-stock of his hearers. He was painfully sensible of his inferiority in conversation; he felt every failure keenly; yet he had not sufficient judgment and self-command to hold his tongue. His animal spirits and vanity were always impelling him to try to do the one thing which he could not do. After every attempt, he felt that he had exposed himself, and writhed with shame and vexation; yet the next moment he began again.

<sup>10</sup> Naseby, where the battle was fought between Charles I and Cromwell's army is in Northamptonshire.

His associates seem to have regarded him with kindness, which, in spite of their admiration of his writings, was not unmixed with contempt. In truth, there was in his character much to love, but very little to respect. His heart was soft, even to weakness; he was so generous, that he quite forgot to be just; he forgave injuries so readily, that he might be said to invite them, and was so liberal to beggars that he had nothing left for his tailor and his butcher. He was vain, sensual, frivolous, profuse, improvident. One vice of a darker shade was imputed to him—envy. But there is not the least reason to believe that this bad passion, though it sometimes made him wince and utter fretful exclamations, ever impelled him to injure by wicked arts the reputation of any of his rivals. The truth probably is, that he was not more envious, but merely less prudent, than his neighbors. His heart was on his lips. All those small jealousies, which are but too common among men of letters, but which a man of letters who is also a man of the world does his best to conceal, Goldsmith avowed with the simplicity of a child. When he was envious, instead of affecting indifference, instead of damning with faint praise, instead of doing injuries slyly and in the dark, he told everybody that he was envious. "Do not, pray do not, talk of Johnson in such terms," he said to Boswell; "you harrow up my very soul." George Steevens<sup>12</sup> and Cumberland were men far too cunning to say such a thing. They would have echoed the praises of the man whom they envied, and then have sent to the newspapers anonymous libels upon him. Both what was good and what was bad in Goldsmith's character was to his associates a perfect security that he would never commit such villany. He was neither ill-natured enough, nor long-headed enough, to be guilty of any malicious act which required contrivance and disguise.

Goldsmith has sometimes been represented as a man of genius, cruelly treated by the world, and doomed to struggle with difficulties which at last broke his heart. But no representation can be more remote from the truth. He did, indeed, go through much sharp misery before he had done anything considerable in literature. But after his name had appeared on the title-page of the "Traveller," he had none but himself to blame for his distresses. His average income during the last seven years of his life certainly exceeded four hundred pounds a year, and four hundred pounds a year ranked, among the incomes of that day, at least as high as eight hundred pounds a year would rank at present. A single man living in the Temple with four hundred pounds a year might then be called opulent. Not one in ten of the young gentlemen of good families who were studying the law there had so much. But all the wealth which Lord Clive had brought from Bengal, and Sir Lawrence Dundas from Germany, joined together, would not have sufficed for Goldsmith. He spent twice as much as he had. He wore fine clothes, gave dinners of several courses, paid court to venal beauties. He had also, it should be remembered to the honor of his heart, though not of his head, a guinea, or five, or ten, according to the state of his purse, ready for any tale of distress, true or false. But it was not in dress or feasting, in promiscuous amours or promiscuous charities, that his chief expense lay. He had been from boyhood a gambler, and at once the most sanguine and the most unskilful of gamblers. For a time he put off the day of inevitable ruin by temporary expedients. He obtained advances from booksellers by promising to execute works which he never began. But at length this source of supply failed. He owed more than two thousand pounds, and he saw no hope of extrication from his embarrassments. His spirits and health gave way. He was attacked by a nervous fever, which he thought himself competent to treat. It would have been happy for him if his medical skill had been appreciated as justly by himself as by others. Notwithstanding the degree which he pretended to have received at Padua, he could procure no patients. "I do not practise," he once said; "I make it a rule to prescribe only for my friends." "Pray, dear Doctor," said Beauclerk, "alter your rule, and prescribe only for your enemies." Goldsmith now, in spite of this excellent advice, prescribed for himself. The remedy aggravated the malady. The sick man was induced to call in real physicians, and they at one time imagined that they had cured the disease. Still his weakness and restlessness continued. He could get no sleep; he could take no food. "You are worse," said one of his medical attendants, "than you should be from the degree of fever which you have. Is your mind at ease?" "No, it is not," were the last recorded words of Oliver Goldsmith. He died on the 3d of April, 1774, in his forty-sixth year. He was laid in the churchyard of the Temple; but the spot was not marked by any inscription, and is now forgotten. The coffin was followed by Burke and Reynolds. Both these great men were sincere mourners. Burke, when he heard of Goldsmith's death, had burst into a flood of tears. Reynolds had been so much moved by the news, that he had flung aside his brush and palette for the day.

<sup>11</sup> Anthony Chamier, was one of the original members of the Literary Club founded by Reynolds and Johnson.

<sup>12</sup> A Shakespearean commentator. He was a friend of Johnson, and he made some valuable additions to Dr. Johnson's work on Shakespeare.

A short time after Goldsmith's death, a little poem<sup>13</sup> appeared, which will, as long as our language lasts, associate the names of his two illustrious friends with his own. It has already been mentioned that he sometimes felt keenly the sarcasm which his wild, blundering talk brought upon him. He was, not long before his last illness, provoked into retaliating. He wisely betook himself to his pen, and at that weapon he proved himself a match for all his assailants together. Within a small compass he drew with a singularly easy and vigorous pencil the characters of nine or ten of his intimate associates. Though this little work did not receive his last touches, it must always be regarded as a master-piece. It is impossible, however, not to wish that four or five likenesses which have no interest for posterity were wanting to that noble gallery, and that their places were supplied by sketches of Johnson and Gibbon, as happy and vivid as the sketches of Burke and Garrick.

<sup>13</sup> Goldsmith's Retaliation.

Some of Goldsmith's friends and admirers honored him with a cenotaph in Westminster Abbey. Nollekens<sup>14</sup> was the sculptor, and Johnson wrote the inscription. It is much to be lamented that Johnson did not leave to posterity a more durable and a more valuable memorial of his friend. A life of Goldsmith would have been an inestimable addition to the "Lives of the Poets." No man appreciated Goldsmith's writings more justly than Johnson; no man was better acquainted with Goldsmith's character and habits; and no man was more competent to delineate with truth and spirit the peculiarities of a mind in which great powers were found in company with great weaknesses. But the list of poets to whose works Johnson was requested by the booksellers to furnish prefaces ended with Lyttleton, who died in 1773. The line seems to have been drawn expressly for the purpose of excluding the person whose portrait would have most fitly closed the series. Goldsmith, however, has been fortunate in his biographers. Within a few years his life has been written by Mr. Prior, by Mr. Washington Irving, and by Mr. Forster. The diligence of Mr. Prior deserves great praise; the style of Mr. Washington Irving is always pleasing; but the highest place must in justice be assigned to the eminently interesting work of Mr. Forster.

THE STATE OF ENGLAND IN 1685

(From History of England, 1848-1860)

I intend, in this chapter to give a description of the state in which England was at the time when the crown passed from Charles the Second to his brother. Such a description, composed from scanty and dispersed materials, must necessarily be very imperfect. Yet it may perhaps correct some false notions which would make the subsequent narrative unintelligible or uninteresting.

<sup>14</sup> Joseph Nollekens (1737-1823), a sculptor who executed busts of Garrick, Sterne, Goldsmith, etc.

If we would study with profit the history of our ancestors, we must be constantly on our guard against the delusions which the well known names of families, places, and offices naturally produce, and must never forget that the country of which we read was a very different country from that in which we live. In every experimental science there is a tendency towards perfection. In every human being there is a wish to ameliorate his own condition. These two principles have often sufficed, even when counteracted by great public calamities and by bad institutions, to carry civilisation rapidly forward. No ordinary misfortune, no ordinary misgovernment, will do so much to make a nation wretched, as the constant progress of physical knowledge and the constant effort of every man to better himself will do to make a nation prosperous. It has often been found that profuse expenditure, heavy taxation, absurd commercial restrictions, corrupt tribunals, disastrous wars, seditions, persecutions, conflagrations, inundations, have not been able to destroy capital so fast as the exertions of private citizens have been able to create it. It can easily be proved that, in our own land, the national wealth has, during at least six centuries, been almost uninterruptedly increasing; that it was greater under the Tudors than under the Plantagenets; that it was greater under the Stuarts than under the Tudors; that, in spite of battles, sieges and confiscations, it was greater on the day of the Restoration than on the day when the Long Parliament met; that, in spite of maladministration, of extravagance, of public bankruptcy, of two costly and unsuccessful wars, of the pestilence and of the fire, it was greater on the day of the death of Charles the Second than on the day of his Restoration. This progress, having continued during many ages became at length about the middle of the eighteenth century, portentously rapid, and has proceeded, during the nineteenth, with accelerated velocity. In consequence partly of our geographical and partly of our moral position, we have, during several generations, been exempt from evils which have elsewhere impeded the efforts and destroyed the fruits of industry. While every part of the Continent, from Moscow to Lisbon, has been the theatre of bloody and devastating wars, no hostile standard has been seen here but as a trophy. While revolutions have taken place all around us, our government has never once been subverted by violence. During more than a hundred years there has been in our island no tumult of sufficient importance to be called an insurrection; nor has the law been once borne down either by popular fury or by regal tyranny: public credit has been held sacred: the administration of justice has been pure: even in times which by Englishmen might be justly called evil times, we have enjoyed what almost every other nation in the world would have considered as an ample measure of civil and religious freedom. Every man has felt entire confidence that the state would protect him in the possession of what had been earned by his diligence and hoarded by his self-denial. Under the benignant influence of peace and liberty, science has flourished, and has been applied to practical purposes on a scale never before known. The consequence is that a change to which the history of the old world furnishes no parallel has taken place in our country. Could the England of 1685 be, by some magical process, set before our eyes, we should not know one landscape in a hundred or one building in ten thousand. The country gentleman would not recognize his own fields. The inhabitant of the town would not recognise his own street. Everything has been changed, but the great features of nature, and a few massive and durable works of human art. We might find out Snowdon and Windermere, the Cheddar Cliffs and Beachy Head. We might find out here and there a Norman minster, or a castle which witnessed the wars of the Roses. But with such rare exceptions, everything would be strange to us. Many thousands of square miles which are now rich corn land and meadow, intersected by green hedgerows, and dotted with villages and pleasant country seats, would appear as moors overgrown with furze, or fens abandoned to wild ducks. We should see straggling huts built of wood and covered with thatch, where we now see manufacturing towns and seaports renowned to the farthest ends of the world. The capital itself would shrink to dimensions not much exceeding those of its present suburb on the south of the Thames. Not less strange to us would be the garb and manners of the people, the furniture and the equipages, the interior of the shops and dwellings. Such a change in the state of a nation seems to be at least as well entitled to the notice of a historian as any change of the dynasty or of the ministry.

THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY SQUIRE

(From the same)

We should be much mistaken if we pictured to ourselves the squires of the seventeenth century as men bearing a close resemblance to their descendants, the county members and chairmen of quarter sessions with whom we are familiar. The modern country gentleman generally receives a liberal education, passes from a distinguished school to a distinguished college, and has ample opportunity to become an excellent scholar. He has generally seen something of foreign countries. A considerable part of his life has generally been passed in the capital; and the refinements of the capital follow him into the country. There is perhaps no class of dwellings so pleasing as the rural seats of the English gentry. In the parks and pleasure grounds, nature, dressed yet not disguised by art, wears her most alluring form. In the buildings, good sense and good taste combine to produce a happy union of the comfortable and the graceful. The pictures, the musical instruments, the library, in any other country would be considered as proving the owner to be an eminently polished and accomplished man. A country gentleman who witnessed the Revolution was probably in receipt of about a fourth part of the rent which his acres now yield to his posterity. He was, therefore, as compared with his posterity, a poor man, and was generally under the necessity of residing, with little interruption, on his estate. To travel on the Continent, to maintain an establishment in London, or even to visit London frequently, were pleasures in which only the great proprietors could indulge. It may be confidently affirmed that of the squires whose names were then in the Commissions of Peace and Lieutenancy not one in twenty went to town once in five years, or had ever in his life wandered so far as Paris. Many lords of manors had received an education differing little from that of their menial servants. The heir of an estate often passed his boyhood and youth at the seat of his family with no better tutors than grooms and gamekeepers, and scarce attained learning enough to sign his name to a Mitimus. If he went to school and to college, he generally returned before he was twenty to the seclusion of the old hall, and there, unless his mind were very happily constituted by nature, soon forgot his academical pursuits in rural business and pleasures. His chief serious employment was the care of his property. He examined samples of grain, handled pigs, and, on market days, made bargains over a tankard with drovers and hop merchants. His chief pleasures were commonly derived from field sports and from an unrefined sensuality.

His language and pronunciation were such as we should now expect to hear only from the most ignorant clowns. His oaths, coarse jests, scurrilous terms of abuse, were uttered with the broadest accent of his province. It was easy to discern from the first words which he spoke, whether he came from Somersetshire or Yorkshire. He troubled himself little about decorating his abode, and, if he attempted decoration, seldom produced anything but deformity. The litter of a farmyard gathered under the windows of his bedchamber, and the cabbages and gooseberry bushes grew close to his hall door. His table was loaded with coarse plenty; and guests were cordially welcomed to it. But as the habit of drinking to excess was general in the class to which he belonged, and as his fortune did not enable him to intoxicate large assemblies daily with claret or canary, strong beer was the ordinary beverage. The quantity of beer consumed in those days was indeed enormous. For beer then was to the lower and middle classes, not only all that beer is, but all that wine, tea, and ardent spirits now are. It was only at great houses, or on great occasions, that foreign drink was placed upon the board. The ladies of the house, whose business it had commonly been to cook the repast, retired as soon as the dishes had been devoured, and left the gentlemen to their ale and tobacco. The coarse jollity of the afternoon was often prolonged till the revellers were laid under the table.

It was very seldom that the country gentleman caught glimpses of the great world; and what he saw of it tended rather to confuse than to enlighten his understanding. His opinions respecting religion, government, foreign countries and former times, having been derived, not from study, from observation, or from conversation with enlightened companions, but from such traditions as were current in his own small circle, were the opinions of a child. He adhered to them, however, with the obstinacy which is generally found in ignorant men accustomed to be fed with flattery. His animosities were numerous and bitter. He hated Frenchmen and Italians, Scotchmen and Irishmen, Papists and Presbyterians, Independents and Baptists, Quakers and Jews. Towards London and Londoners he felt an aversion which more than once produced important political effects. His wife and daughter were in tastes and acquirements below a housekeeper or a stillroom maid of the present day. They stitched and spun, brewed gooseberry wine, cured marigolds, and made the crust for the venison pasty.

From this description it might be supposed that the English esquire of the seventeenth century did not materially differ from a rustic miller or alehouse keeper of the present time. There are, however, some important parts of his character still to be noted, which will greatly modify this estimate. Unlettered as he was and unpolished, he was still in some most important points a gentleman. He was a member of a proud and powerful aristocracy, and was distinguished by many both of the good and of the bad qualities which belong to aristocrats. His family pride was beyond that of a Talbot or a Howard. He knew the genealogies and coats of arms of all his neighbors, and could tell which of them had assumed supporters without any right, and which of them were so unfortunate as to be grandsons of aldermen. He was a magistrate, and, as such, administered gratuitously to those who dwelt around him a rude patriarchal justice, which, in spite of innumerable blunders, and of occasional acts of tyranny, was yet better than no justice at all. He was an officer of the trainband;<sup>1</sup> and his military dignity, though it might move the mirth of gallants who had served a campaign in Flanders, raised his character in his own eyes and in the eyes of his neighbors. Nor indeed was his soldiiership justly a subject of derision. In every county there were elderly gentlemen who had seen service which was no child's play. One had been knighted by Charles the First, after the battle of Edgehill. Another still wore a patch over the scar which he had received at Naseby. A third had defended his old house till Fairfax had blown in the door with a petard. The presence of these old Cavaliers, with their old swords and holsters, and with their old stories about Goring and Lunsford,<sup>2</sup> gave to the musters of the militia an earnest and warlike aspect which would otherwise have been wanting. Even those country gentlemen who were too young to have themselves exchanged blows with the cuirassiers of the Parliament had, from childhood, been surrounded by the traces of recent war, and fed with stories of the martial exploits of their fathers and their uncles. Thus the character of the English esquire of the seventeenth century was compounded of two elements which we seldom or never find united. His ignorance and uncouthness, his low tastes and gross phrases, would, in our time, be considered as indicating a nature and a breeding thoroughly plebeian. Yet he was essentially a partisan, and had, in large measure, both the virtues and the vices which flourish among men set from their birth in high place, and used to respect themselves and to be respected by others. It is not easy for a generation accustomed to find chivalrous sentiments only in company with liberal studies and polished manners, to image to himself a man with the deportment, the vocabulary, and the accent of a carter, yet punctilious on matters of genealogy and precedence, and ready to risk his life rather than see a stain cast on the honor of his house. It is, however, only by thus joining together things seldom or never found together in our own experience, that we can form a just idea of that rustic aristocracy which constituted the main strength of the armies of Charles the First, and which long supported, with strange fidelity, the interest of his descendants.

THE COFFEE HOUSE

(From the same)

The coffee house must not be dismissed with a cursory mention. It might indeed at that time have been not improperly called a most important political institution. No Parliament had sat for years. The municipal council of the City had ceased to speak the sense of the citizens. Public meetings, harangues, resolutions, and the rest of the modern machinery of agitation had not yet come into fashion. Nothing resembling the modern newspaper existed. In such circumstances the coffee houses were the chief organs through which the public opinion of the metropolis vented itself.

The first of these establishments had been set up by a Turkey merchant, who had acquired among the Mahometans a taste for their favorite beverage. The convenience of being able to make appointments in any part of the town, and of being able to pass evenings socially at a very small charge, was so great that the fashion spread fast. Every man of the upper or middle class went daily to his coffee house to learn the news and to discuss it. Every coffee house had one or more orators to whose eloquence the crowd listened with admiration, and who soon became, what the journalists of our time have been called, a fourth Estate of the realm.<sup>1</sup> The Court had long seen with uneasiness the growth of this new power in the state. An attempt had been made, during Danby's administration, to close the coffee houses. But men of all parties missed their usual places of resort so much that there was an universal outcry. The government did not venture, in opposition to a feeling so strong and general, to enforce a regulation of which the legality might well be questioned. Since that time ten years had elapsed, and during those years the number and influence of the coffee houses had been constantly increasing. Foreigners remarked that the coffee house was that which especially distinguished London from all other cities; that the coffee house was the Londoner's home, and that those who wished to find a gentleman commonly asked, not whether he lived in Fleet Street or Chancery Lane, but whether he frequented the Grecian or the Rainbow. Nobody was excluded from these places who laid down his penny at the bar. Yet every rank and profession, and every shade of religious and political opinion, had its own headquarters. There were houses near St. James's Park where fops congregated, their heads and shoulders covered with black or flaxen wigs, not less ample than those which are now worn by the Chancellor and by the Speaker of the House of Commons. The wig came from Paris and so did the rest of the fine gentleman's ornaments, his embroidered coat, his fringed gloves, and the tassel which upheld his pantaloons. The conversation was in that dialect which, long after it had ceased to be spoken in fashionable circles, continued in the mouth of Lord Foppington,<sup>2</sup> to excite the mirth of theatres. The atmosphere was like that of a perfumer's shop. Tobacco in any other form than that of richly scented snuff was held in abomination. If any clown, ignorant of the usages of the house, called for a pipe, the sneers of the whole assembly and the short answers of the waiters soon convinced him that he had better go somewhere else. Nor, indeed, would he have had far to go. For, in general the coffee rooms reeked with tobacco like a guard room: and strangers sometimes expressed their surprise that so many people should leave their own firesides to sit in the midst of eternal fog and stench. Nowhere was the smoking more constant than at Will's. That celebrated house, situated between Covent Garden and Bow Street, was sacred to polite letters. There the talk was about poetical justice and the unities of place and time. There was a faction for Perrault<sup>3</sup> and the moderns, a faction for Boileau and the ancients. One group debated whether Paradise Lost ought not to have been in rhyme. To another an envious poetaster demonstrated that Venice Preserved<sup>4</sup> ought to have been hooted from the stage. Under no roof was a greater variety of figures to be seen. There were Earls in stars and garters, clergymen in cassocks and bands, pert Templars, sheepish lads from the Universities, translators and index makers in ragged coats of frieze. The great press was to get near the chair where John Dryden sate. In winter that chair was always in the warmest nook by the fire; in summer it stood in the balcony. To bow to the Laureate, and to hear his opinion of Racine's last tragedy or of Bossu's treatise on epic poetry,<sup>5</sup> was thought a privilege. A pinch from his snuff box was an honour sufficient to turn the head of a young enthusiast. There were coffee houses where the first medical men might be consulted. Doctor John Radcliffe, who, in the year 1685, rose to the largest practice in London, came daily, at the hour when the Exchange was full, from his house in Bow Street, then a fashionable part of the capital, to Garraway's, and was to be found, surrounded by surgeons and apothecaries, at a particular table. There were Puritan coffee houses where no oath was heard and where lankhaired men discussed election, and reprobation through their noses; Jew coffee houses where dark eyed money changers from Venice and Amsterdam greeted each other; and Popish coffee houses where, as good Protestants believed, Jesuits planned, over their cups, another great fire, and cast silver bullets to shoot the King. These gregarious habits had no small share in forming the character of the Londoner of that age. He was, indeed, a different being from the rustic Englishman. There was not then the intercourse which now exists between the two classes. Only very great men were in the habit of dividing the year between town and country. Few esquires came to the capital thrice in their lives. Nor was it yet the practice of all citizens in easy circumstances to breathe the fresh air of the fields and woods during some weeks of every summer. A cockney, in a rural village, was stared at as much as if he had intruded into a Kraal of Hottentots. On the other hand, when the lord of a Lincolnshire or Shropshire manor appeared in Fleet Street, he was as easily distinguished from the resident population as a Turk or a Lascar. His dress, his gait, his accent, the manner in which he (1636-1711) defended the ancients against Perrault's support of the moderns.

<sup>1</sup> The militia.

<sup>2</sup> Two unprincipled Royalist leaders.

<sup>1</sup> Edmund Burke on one occasion referring to the Reporters' Gallery, said "Yonder sits the Fourth Estate, more important than them all."

<sup>3</sup> Venice Preserved was a play by Otway, 1682.

<sup>2</sup> Charles Perrault (1628-1703), a distinguished French critic, precipitated the long dispute on the relative merits of the ancient and modern writers. Nicholas Boileau

<sup>5</sup> René Le Bossu (1631-1680), who published his Traité du poème épique in 1675.

gazed at the shops, stumbled into the gutters, ran against the porters, and stood under the waterspouts, marked him out as an excellent subject for the operations of swindlers and banterers. Bullies jostled him into the kennel.<sup>6</sup> Hackney coachmen splashed him from head to foot. Thieves explored with perfect security the huge pockets of his horseman's coat, while he stood entranced by the splendour of the Lord Mayor's show. Moneydroppers,<sup>7</sup> sore from the cart's tail, introduced themselves to him, and appeared to him the most honest friendly gentlemen he had ever seen. Painted women, the refuse of Lewkner Lane and Whetstone Park, passed themselves on him for countesses and maids of honour. If he asked his way to St. James's, his informants sent him to Mile End. If he went into a shop, he was instantly discerned to be a fit purchaser of everything that nobody else would buy, of second-hand embroidery, copper rings, and watches that would not go. If he rambled into any fashionable coffee house, he became a mark for the insolent derision of fops and the grave wagery of Templars. Enraged and mortified, he soon returned to his mansion, and there, in the homage of his tenants and the conversation of his boon companions, found consolation for the vexations and humiliations which he had undergone. There he was once more a great man, and saw nothing above himself except when at the assizes he took his seat on the bench near the Judge, or when at the muster of the militia he saluted the Lord Lieutenant.

John Henry Newman

1801-1890

KNOWLEDGE AND CHARACTER

(From Discussions and Arguments, 1841)

A distinguished Conservative statesman tells us from a town-hall of Tamworth that "in becoming wiser a man will become better;" meaning by wiser more conversant with the facts and theories of physical science; and that such a man will "rise at once in the scale of intellectual and moral existence." "That," he adds, "is my belief." He avows, also, that the fortunate individual whom he is describing, by being "accustomed to such contemplations, will feel the moral dignity of his nature exalted." He speaks also of physical knowledge as "being the means of useful occupation and rational recreation;" of "the pleasures of knowledge" superseding "the indulgence of sensual appetite," and of its "contributing to the intellectual and moral improvement of the community." Accordingly, he very consistently wishes it to be set before "the female as well as the male portion of the population;" otherwise, as he truly observes, "great injustice would be done to the well-educated and virtuous" women of the place. They are to "have equal power and equal influence with others." It will be difficult to exhaust the reflections which rise in the mind on reading avowals of this nature.

<sup>6</sup> The drainage gutter, which ran through the middle of the street.

<sup>7</sup> Sharpers who pretended to find a coin, which they themselves had dropped, and return it to the owner in order to win his confidence. They were frequently punished by being tied to a cart and whipped through the streets.

The first question which obviously suggests itself is how these wonderful moral effects are to be wrought under the instrumentality of the physical sciences. Can the process be analyzed and drawn out, or does it act like a dose or a charm which comes into general use empirically? Does Sir Robert Peel mean to say, that whatever be the occult reasons for the result, so it is; you have but to drench the popular mind with physics, and moral and religious advancement follows on the whole, in spite of individual failures? Yet where has the experiment been tried on so large a scale as to justify such anticipations? Or rather, does he mean, that, from the nature of the case, he who is imbued with science and literature, unless adverse influences interfere, cannot but be a better man? It is natural and becoming to seek for some clear idea of the meaning of so dark an oracle. To know is one thing, to do is another; the two things are altogether distinct. A man knows he should get up in the morning,—he lies a-bed; he knows he should not lose his temper, yet he cannot keep it. A labouring man knows he should not go to the ale-house and his wife knows she should not filch when she goes out charring, but, nevertheless, in these cases, the consciousness of a duty is not all one with the performance of it. There are then, large families of instances, to say the least, in which men may become wiser, without becoming better; what, then, is the meaning of this great maxim in the mouth of its promulgators?

Mr. Bentham would answer, that the knowledge which carries virtue along with it, is the knowledge how to take care of number one—a clear appreciation of what is pleasurable, what painful, and what promotes the one and prevents the other. An uneducated man is ever mistaking his own interest, and standing in the way of his own true enjoyments. Useful Knowledge is that which tends to make us more useful to ourselves;—a most definite and intelligible account of the matter, and needing no explanation. But it would be a great injustice, both to Lord Brougham and to Sir Robert, to suppose, when they talk of Knowledge being Virtue, that they are Benthamizing. Bentham had not a spark of poetry in him; on the contrary, there is much of high aspiration, generous sentiment, and impassioned feeling in the tone of Lord Brougham and Sir Robert. They speak of knowledge as something “pulchrum,” fair and glorious, exalted above the range of ordinary humanity, and so little connected with the personal interest of its votaries, that, though Sir Robert does obiter<sup>1</sup> talk of improved methods of draining, and the chemical properties of manure, yet he must not be supposed to come short of the lofty enthusiasm of Lord Brougham, who expressly panegyricizes certain ancient philosophers who gave up riches, retired into solitude, or embraced a life of travel, smit with a sacred curiosity about physical or mathematical truth.

Here Mr. Bentham, did it fall to him to offer a criticism, doubtless would take leave to inquire whether such language was anything better than a fine set of words “signifying nothing,”—flowers of rhetoric, which bloom, smell sweet, and die. But it is impossible to suspect so grave and practical a man as Sir Robert Peel of using words literally without any meaning at all; and though I think at best they have not a very profound meaning, yet, such as it is, we ought to attempt to draw it out.

Now, without using exact theological language, we may surely take it for granted, from the experience of facts, that the human mind is at best in a very unformed or disordered state; passions and conscience, likings and reason, conflicting,—might rising against right, with the prospect of things getting worse. Under these circumstances, what is it that the School of Philosophy in which Sir Robert has enrolled himself proposes to accomplish? Not a victory of the mind over itself—not the supremacy of the law—not the reduction of the rebels—not the unity of our complex nature—not an harmonizing of the chaos—but the mere lulling of the passions to rest by turning the course of thought; not a change of character, but a mere removal of temptation. This should be carefully observed. When a husband is gloomy, or an old woman peevish and fretful, those who are about them do all they can to keep dangerous topics and causes of offence out of the way, and think themselves lucky, if, by such skilful management, they get through the day without an outbreak. When a child cries, the nurserymaid dances it about, or points to the pretty black horses out of window, or shows how ashamed poll-parrot or poor puss must be of its tantrums. Such is the sort of prescription which Sir Robert Peel offers to the good people of Tamworth. He makes no pretence of subduing the giant nature, in which we were born, of smiting the lions of the domestic enemies of our peace, of overthrowing passion and fortifying reason; he does but offer to bribe the foe for the nonce with gifts which will avail for that purpose just so long as they will avail, and no longer.

<sup>1</sup> Incidentally.

This was mainly the philosophy of the great Tully, except when it pleased him to speak as a disciple of the Porch. Cicero handed the recipe to Brougham, and Brougham has passed it on to Peel. If we examine the old Roman’s meaning in “O philosophia, vitæ dux,”<sup>2</sup> it was neither more nor less than this;—that, while we were thinking of philosophy, we were not thinking of anything else; we did not feel grief, or anxiety, or passion, or ambition, or hatred all that time, and the only point was to keep thinking of it. How to keep thinking of it was extra artem. If a man was in grief, he was to be amused; if disappointed, to be excited; if in a rage, to be soothed; if in love, to be roused to the pursuit of glory. No inward change was contemplated, but a change of external objects; as if we were all White Ladies or Undines,<sup>3</sup> our moral life being one of impulse and emotion, not subjected to laws, not consisting in habits, nor capable of growth. When Cicero was outwitted by Cæsar, he solaced himself with Plato;<sup>4</sup> when he lost his daughter, he wrote a treatise on consolation. Such, too, was the philosophy of that Lydian city, mentioned by the historian,<sup>5</sup> who in a famine played at dice to stay their stomachs.

And such is the rule of life advocated by Lord Brougham; and though, of course, he protests that knowledge “must invigorate the mind as well as entertain it, and refine and elevate the character, while it gives listlessness and weariness their most agreeable excitement and relaxation,” yet his notions of vigour and elevation, when analyzed, will be found to resolve themselves into a mere preternatural excitement under the influence

<sup>2</sup> “O philosophy, guide of life.”

<sup>3</sup> Undine by La Motte Fouqué was a water nymph born without a soul.

<sup>4</sup> After the overthrow of Pompey’s cause at the Battle of Pharsalia (48 B. C.) Cicero who, after much vacillation, had supported Pompey, found his political career for the time at an end. In his enforced inactivity he turned to philosophy for consolation.

<sup>5</sup> Heroditus, Bk. I. 94.

of some stimulating object, or the peace which is attained by there being nothing to quarrel with. . . .

In morals, as in physics, the stream cannot rise higher than its source. Christianity raises men from earth, for it comes from heaven; but human morality creeps, struts, or frets upon the earth's level, without wings to rise. The Knowledge School does not contemplate raising man above himself; it merely aims at disposing of his existing powers and tastes, as is most convenient, or is practicable under circumstances. It finds him, like the victims of the French Tyrant,<sup>6</sup> doubled up in a cage in which he can neither lie, stand, sit, nor kneel, and its highest desire is to find an attitude in which his unrest may be least. Or it finds him like some musical instrument, of great power and compass, but imperfect; from its very structure some keys must ever be out of tune, and its object, when ambition is highest, is to throw the fault of its nature where least it will be observed. It leaves a man where it found him—man, and not an Angel—a sinner, not a Saint; but it tries to make him look as much like what he is not as ever it can. The poor indulge in low pleasures; they use bad language, swear loudly and recklessly, laugh at coarse jests, and are rude and boorish. Sir Robert would open on them a wider range of thought and more intellectual objects, by teaching them science; but what warrant will he give us that, if his object could be achieved, what they would gain in decency they would not lose in natural humility and faith? If so, he has exchanged a gross fault for a more subtle one. "Temperance topics" stop drinking; let us suppose it; but will much be gained, if those who give up spirits take to opium? Naturam expellas furcâ, tamen usque recurret,<sup>7</sup> is at least a heathen truth, and universities and libraries which recur to heathenism may reclaim it from the heathen for their motto.

Nay, everywhere, so far as human nature remains hardly or partially Christianized, the heathen law remains in force; as is felt in a measure even in the most religious places and societies. Even there, where Christianity has power, the venom of the old Adam is not subdued. Those who have to do with our Colleges give us their experience, that in the case of the young committed to their care, external discipline may change the fashionable excess, but cannot allay the principle of sinning. Stop cigars, they will take to drinking parties; stop stop drinking, they gamble; stop gambling, and a worse license follows. You do not get rid of vice by human expedients; you can but use them according to circumstances, and in their place, as making the best of a bad matter. You must go to a higher source for renovation of the heart and of the will. You do but play a sort of "hunt the slipper" with the fault of our nature, till you go to Christianity.

I say, you must use human methods in their place, and there they are useful; but they are worse than useless out of their place. I have no fanatical wish to deny to any whatever subject of thought or method of reason a place altogether, if it chooses to claim it, in the cultivation of the mind. Mr. Bentham may despise verse-making, or Mr. Dugald Stewart logic, but the great and true maxim is to sacrifice none—to combine, and therefore to adjust, all. All cannot be first, and therefore each has its place, and the problem is to find it. It is at least not a lighter mistake to make what is secondary first, than to leave it out altogether. Here then it is that the Knowledge Society, Gower Street College, Tamworth Reading Room, Lord Brougham and Sir Robert Peel, are all so deplorably mistaken. Christianity, and nothing short of it, must be made the element and principle of all education. Where it has been laid as the first stone, and acknowledged as the governing spirit, it will take up into itself, assimilate, and give a character to literature and science. Where Revealed Truth has given the aim and direction to Knowledge, Knowledge of all kinds will minister to Revealed Truth. The evidences of Religion, natural theology, metaphysics,—or, again, poetry, history, and the classics,—or physics and mathematics, may all be grafted into the mind of a Christian, and give and take by the grafting. But if in education we begin with nature before grace, with evidences before faith, with science before conscience, with poetry before practice, we shall be doing much the same as if we were to indulge the appetites and passions, and turn a deaf ear to the reason. In each case we misplace what in its place is a divine gift. If we attempt to effect a moral improvement by means of poetry, we shall but mature into a mawkish, frivolous, and fastidious sentimentalism;—if by means of argument, into a dry, unamiable longheadedness;—if by good society, into a polished outside, with hollowness within, in which vice has lost its grossness, and perhaps increased its malignity;—if by experimental science, into an upish, supercilious temper much inclined to scepticism. But reverse the order of things: put Faith first and Knowledge second; let the University minister to the Church, and then classical poetry becomes the type of Gospel truth, and physical science a comment on Genesis or Job, and Aristotle changes into Butler, and Arcesilaus into Berkeley.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Louis XI (1461-83). Scott describes these cages in Quentin Durward, I. xv. "In point of fact these cages were eight feet long and about seven feet high."

<sup>7</sup> "You may cast out nature with a pitchfork, but it will always return."

SITE OF A UNIVERSITY

(From The Office and Work of Universities, 1854)

If we would know what a University is, considered in its elementary idea, we must betake ourselves to the first and most celebrated home of European literature and source of European civilization, to the bright and beautiful Athens,—Athens, whose schools drew to her bosom, and then sent back again to the business of life, the youth of the western world for a long thousand years. Seated on the verge of the continent, the city seemed hardly suited for the duties of a central metropolis of knowledge; yet, what it lost in convenience of approach, it gained in its neighbourhood to the traditions of the mysterious East, and of the loveliness of the regions in which it lay. Hither, then, as to a sort of ideal land, where all archetypes of the great and the fair were found in substantial being, and all departments of truth explored, and all diversities of intellectual power exhibited, where taste and philosophy were majestically enthroned as in a royal court, where there was no sovereignty but that of mind, and no nobility but that of genius, where professors were rulers, and princes did homage, hither flocked continually from the very corners of the orbis terrarum,<sup>1</sup> the many-tongued generation, just rising, or just risen into manhood, in order to gain wisdom.

Pisistratus<sup>2</sup> had in an early age discovered and nursed the infant genius of his people, and Cimon,<sup>3</sup> after the Persian war, had given it a home. That war had established the naval supremacy of Athens; she had become an imperial state; and the Ionians, bound to her by the double chain of kindred and of subjection, were importing into her both their merchandise and their civilization. The arts and philosophy of the Asiatic coast were easily carried across the sea, and there was Cimon, as I have said, with his ample fortune, ready to receive them with due honours. Not content with patronizing their professors, he built the first of those noble porticos, of which we hear so much in Athens, and he formed the groves, which in process of time became the celebrated Academy.

Planting is one of the most graceful, as in Athens it was once the most beneficent, of employments. Cimon took in hand the wild wood, pruned and dressed it, and laid it out with handsome walks and welcome fountains. Nor, while hospitable to the authors of the city's civilization, was he ungrateful to the instruments of her prosperity. His trees extended their cool, umbrageous branches over the merchants, who assembled in the Agora,<sup>4</sup> for many generations.

Those merchants certainly had deserved that act of bounty; for all the while their ships had been carrying forth the intellectual fame of Athens to the western world. Then commenced what may be called her University existence. Pericles, who succeeded Cimon both in the government and in the patronage of art, is said by Plutarch to have entertained the idea of making Athens the capital of federated Greece; in this he failed, but his encouragement of such men as Phidias and Anaxagoras led the way to her acquiring a far more lasting sovereignty over a far wider empire. Little understanding the sources of her own greatness, Athens would go to war: peace is the interest of a seat of commerce and the arts; but to war she went; yet to her, whether peace or war, it mattered not. The political power of Athens waned and disappeared; kingdoms rose and fell; centuries rolled away,—they did but bring fresh triumphs to the city of the poet and the sage. There at length the swarthy Moor and Spaniard were seen to meet the blue-eyed Gaul; and the Cappadocian, late subject of Mithridates, gazed without alarm at the haughty conquering Roman. Revolution after revolution passed over the face of Europe, as well as of Greece, but still she was there,—Athens, the city of mind,—as radiant, as splendid, as delicate, as young, as ever she had been.

Many a more fruitful coast or isle is washed by the blue Ægean, many a spot is there more beautiful or sublime to see, many a territory more ample; but there was one charm in Attica, which in the same perfection was nowhere else. The deep pastures of Arcadia, the plain

<sup>1</sup> "Of the circle of lands."

<sup>2</sup> Pisistratus' administration was famous for its encouragement of literature and the arts. He had a new edition of the Homeric poems prepared, and he built the Lyceum and several temples.

<sup>3</sup> This commander, after defeating the Persians, spent much of his money on improving Athens.

<sup>4</sup> The market place, used not only for buying and selling, but as a place of assembly for debating, elections, trials, etc.

of Argos, the Thessalian vale, these had not the gift; Bœotia, which lay to its immediate north, was notorious for its very want of it. The heavy atmosphere of that Bœotia might be good for vegetation, but it was associated in popular belief with the dulness of the Bœotian intellect: on the contrary, the special purity, elasticity, clearness, and salubrity of the air of Attica, fit concomitant and emblem of its genius, did that for it which earth did not;—it brought out every bright hue and tender shade of the landscape over which it was spread, and would have illuminated the face even of a more bare and rugged country.

A confined triangle, perhaps fifty miles its greatest length, and thirty its greatest breadth; two elevated rocky barriers, meeting at an angle; three prominent mountains, commanding the plain,—Parnes, Pentelicus, and Hymettus; an unsatisfactory soil; some streams, not always full;—such is about the report which the agent of a London company would have made of Attica. He would report that the climate was mild; the hills were limestone; there was plenty of good marble; more pasture land than at first survey might have been expected, sufficient certainly for sheep and goats; fisheries productive; silver mines once, but long since worked out; figs fair; oil first-rate; olives in profusion. But what he would not think of noting down, was, that the olive tree was so choice in nature and so noble in shape, that it excited a religious veneration; and that it took so kindly to the light soil, as to expand into woods upon the open plain, and to climb up and fringe the hills. He would not think of writing word to his employers, how that clear air, of which I have spoken, brought out, yet blended and subdued, the colours on the marble, till they had a softness and harmony, for all their richness, which in a picture looks exaggerated, yet is after all within the truth. He would not tell, how that same delicate and brilliant atmosphere freshened up the pale olive, till the olive forgot its monotony, and its cheek glowed like the arbutus or beech of the Umbrian hills. He would say nothing of the thyme and thousand fragrant herbs which carpeted Hymettus; he would hear nothing of the hum of its bees; nor take much account of the rare flavour of its honey, since Gozo and Minor-a were sufficient for the English demand. He would look over the Ægean from the height he had ascended; he would follow with his eye the chain of islands, which, starting from the Sunian<sup>5</sup> headland, seemed to offer the fabled divinities of Attica, when they would visit their Ionian cousins, a sort of viaduct thereto across the sea; but that fancy would not occur to him, nor any admiration of the dark violet billows with their white edges down below; nor of those graceful, fan-like jets of silver upon the rocks, which slowly rise aloft like water spirits from the deep, then shiver, and break, and spread, and shroud themselves, and disappear, in a soft mist of foam; nor of the gentle, incessant heaving and panting of the whole liquid plain; nor of the long waves, keeping steady time, like a line of soldiery, as they resound upon the hollow shore,—he would not deign to notice that restless living element at all, except to bless his stars that he was not upon it. Nor the distinct detail, nor the refined colouring, nor the graceful outline and roseate golden hue of the jutting crags, nor the bold shadows cast from Otus or Laurium<sup>6</sup> by the declining sun;—our agent of a mercantile firm would not value these matters even at a low figure. Rather we must turn for the sympathy we seek to yon pilgrim student, come from a semi-barbarous land to that small corner of the earth, as to a shrine, where he might take his fill of gazing on those emblems and coruscations of invisible unoriginate perfection. It was the stranger from a remote province, from Britain or from Mauritania, who in a scene so different from that of his chilly, woody swamps, or of his fiery choking sands, learned at once what a real University must be, by coming to understand the sort of country, which was its suitable home.

Nor was this all that a University required, and found in Athens. No one, even there, could live on poetry. If the students at that famous place had nothing better than bright hues and soothing sounds, they would not have been able or disposed to turn their residence there to much account. Of course they must have the means of living, nay, in a certain sense, of enjoyment, if Athens was to be an Alma Mater at the time, or to remain afterwards a pleasant thought in their memory. And so they had: be it recollected Athens was a port, and a mart of trade, perhaps the first in Greece; and this was very much to the point, when a number of strangers were ever flocking to it, whose combat was to be with intellectual, not physical difficulties, and who claimed to have their bodily wants supplied, that they might be at leisure to set about furnishing their minds. Now, barren as was the soil of Attica, and bare the face of the country, yet it had only too many resources for an elegant, may luxurious abode there. So abundant were the imports of the place, that it was a common saying, that the productions, which were found singly elsewhere, were brought all together in Athens. Corn and wine, the staple of subsistence in such a climate, came from the isles of the Ægean; fine wool and carpeting from Asia Minor; slaves, as now, from the Euxine, and timber too; and iron and brass from the coasts of the Mediterranean. The Athenian did not condescend to manufactures himself, but encouraged them in others; and a population of foreigners caught at the lucrative occupation both for home consumption and for exportation. Their cloth, and other textures for dress and furniture, and their hardware—for instance, armour—were in great request. Labour was cheap; stone and marble in plenty; and the taste and skill, which at first were devoted to public buildings, as temples and porticos, were in course of time applied to the mansions of public men. If nature did much for Athens, it is undeniable that art did much more.

<sup>5</sup> A promontory forming the extreme southern point of the province of Attica.

<sup>6</sup> Laurium was a mountain range in Attica. Otus is apparently a misprint for Orus, the peak of Ægina.

Here some one will interrupt me with the remark: "By the bye, where are we, and whither are we going?—what has all this to do with a University? at least what has it to do with education? It is instructive doubtless; but still how much has it to do with your subject?" Now I beg to assure the reader that I am most conscientiously employed upon my subject; and I should have thought every one would have seen this: however, since the objection is made, I may be allowed to pause awhile, and show distinctly the drift of what I have been saying, before I go farther. What has this to do with my subject! why, the question of the site is the very first that comes into consideration, when a Studium Generale is contemplated; for that site should be a liberal and a noble one; who will deny it? All authorities agree in this, and very little reflection will be sufficient to make it clear. I recollect a conversation I once had on this very subject with a very eminent man. I was a youth of eighteen, and was leaving my University for the Long Vacation, when I found myself in company in a public conveyance with a middle-aged person, whose face was strange to me. However, it was the great academical luminary of the day, whom afterwards I knew very well. Luckily for me, I did not suspect it; and luckily too, it was a fancy of his, as his friends knew, to make himself on easy terms especially with stage-coach companions. So, what with my flippancy and his condescension, I managed to hear many things which were novel to me at the time; and one point which he was strong upon, and was evidently fond of urging, was the material pomp and circumstance which should environ a seat of learning. He considered it was worth the consideration of the government, whether Oxford should not stand in a domain of its own. An ample range, say four miles in diameter, should be turned into wood and meadow, and the University should be approached on all sides by a magnificent park, with fine trees in groups and groves and avenues, and with glimpses and views of the fair city, as the traveler drew near it. There is nothing surely absurd in the idea, though it would cost a round sum to realize it. What has a better claim to the purest and fairest possessions of nature, than the seat of wisdom? So thought my coach companion; and he did but express the tradition of ages and the instinct of mankind.

THE AIM OF A UNIVERSITY COURSE

(From Idea of a University, 1852)

To-day I have confined myself to saying that that training of the intellect, which is best for the individual himself, best enables him to discharge his duties to society. The Philosopher, indeed, and the man of the world differ in their very notion, but the methods by which they are respectively formed, are pretty much the same. The Philosopher has the same command of matters of thought, which the true citizen and gentleman has of matters of business and conduct. If then a practical end must be assigned to a University course; I say that it is that of training good members of society. Its art is the art of social life; and its end is fitness for the world. It neither confines its views to particular professions on the one hand, nor creates heroes or inspires genius on the other. Works indeed of genius fall under no art; heroic minds come under no rule; a University is not a birthplace of poets or of immortal authors, of founders of schools, leaders of colonies, or conquerors of nations. It does not promise a generation of Aristotles or Newtons, of Napoleons or Washingtons, of Raphaels or Shakespeares, though such miracles of nature it has before now contained within its precincts. Nor is it content on the other hand with forming the critic or the experimentalist, the economist or the engineer, though such too it includes within its scope. But a University training is the great ordinary means to a great but ordinary end; it aims at raising the intellectual tone of society, at cultivating the public mind, at purifying the national taste, at supplying true principles to popular enthusiasm and fixed aims to popular aspiration, at giving enlargement and sobriety to the ideas of the age, at facilitating the exercise of political power, and refining the intercourse of private life. It is the education which gives a man a clear conscious view of his own opinions and judgments, a truth in developing them, an eloquence in expressing them, and a force in urging them. He is at home in any society, he has common ground with every class; he knows when to speak and when to be silent; he is able to converse, he is able to listen; he can ask a question pertinently, and gain a lesson seasonably, when he has nothing to impart himself; he is ever ready, yet never in the way; he is a pleasant companion, and a comrade you can depend upon; he knows when to be serious and when to trifle; and he has a sure tact which enables him to trifle with gracefulness and to be serious with effect. He has the repose of a mind which lives in itself, while it lives in the world, and which has resources for its happiness at home when it cannot go abroad. He has a gift which serves him in public, and supports him in retirement, without which good fortune is but vulgar, and with which failure and disappointment have a charm. The art which tends to make a man all this, is in the object which it pursues as useful as the art of wealth or the art of health, though it is less susceptible of method, and less tangible, less certain, less complete, in its result.

<sup>7</sup> A university, or school of universal learning.

William Makepeace Thackeray

1811-1863

THE RESTORATION DRAMA

(From "Congreve and Addison," in The English Humourists, written 1851)

There is life and death going on in everything: truth and lies are always at battle. Pleasure is always warring against self-restraint. Doubt is always crying Psha! and sneering. A man in life, a humourist in writing about life, sways over to one principle or the other, and laughs with the reverence for right and the love of truth in his heart, or laughs at these from the other side. Didn't I tell you that dancing was a serious business to Harlequin? <sup>1</sup> I have read two or three of Congreve's plays over before speaking of him; and my feelings were rather like those, which I dare say most of us here have had, at Pompeii, looking at Sallust's house<sup>2</sup> and the relics of an orgy: a dried wine-jar or two, a charred supper-table, the breast of a dancing-girl pressed against the ashes, the laughing skull of a jester: a perfect stillness round about, as the cicerone<sup>3</sup> twangs his moral and the blue sky shines calmly over the ruin. The Congreve Muse is dead, and her song choked in Time's ashes. We gaze at the skeleton, and wonder at the life which once revelled in its mad veins. We take the skull up, and muse over the frolic and daring, the wit, scorn, passion, hope, desire, with which that empty bowl once fermented. We think of the glances that allured, the tears that melted, of the bright eyes that shone in those vacant sockets; and of lips whispering love, and cheeks dimpling with smiles, that once covered yon ghastly yellow framework. They used to call those teeth pearls once. See, there's the cup she drank from, the gold-chain she wore on her neck, the vase which held the rouge for her cheeks, her looking-glass, and the harp she used to dance to. Instead of a feast we find a gravestone, and in place of a mistress, a few bones!

<sup>1</sup> The stage buffoon, one of the regular character types in French comedy.

Reading in these plays now, is like shutting your ears and looking at people dancing. What does it mean? the measures, the grimaces, the bowing, shuffling and retreating, the cavalier seul<sup>4</sup> advancing upon those ladies—those ladies and men twirling round at the end in a mad gallop, after which everybody bows and the quaint rite is celebrated. Without the music we can't understand that comic dance of the last century—its strange gravity and gaiety, its decorum or its indecorum. It has a jargon of its own quite unlike life; a sort of moral of its own quite unlike life too. I'm afraid it's a Heathen mystery, symbolizing a Pagan doctrine; protesting—as the Pompeians very likely were, assembled at their theatre and laughing at their games; as Sallust and his friends, and their mistresses, protested, crowned with flowers, with cups in their hands—against the new, hard, ascetic, pleasure-hating doctrine whose gaunt disciples, lately passed over from the Asian shores of the Mediterranean, were for breaking the fair images of Venus and flinging the altars of Bacchus down.

<sup>2</sup> One of the houses laid bare by the excavations at Pompeii is commonly said to have belonged to Sallust. It is the contrast between the levity and licentiousness of Pompeii, jesting almost within the shadow of a volcano, and the inexorable and terrible doom that overtakes it, which suggests and gives point to Thackeray's comparison. The witty and immoral comedies of Congreve, like the relics of Pompeian orgies, speak of a dead generation of triflers, of a gaiety destined to be choked in ashes.

<sup>3</sup> A name given to Italian guides for their volubility, in humorous allusion to the fluency of the great Roman orator Cicero.

<sup>4</sup> The cavalier who dances alone.

I fancy poor Congreve's theatre is a temple of Pagan delights, and mysteries not permitted except among heathens. I fear the theatre carries down that ancient tradition and worship, as masons have carried their secret signs and rites<sup>5</sup> from temple to temple. When the libertine hero carries off the beauty in the play, and the dotard is laughed to scorn for 10 having the young wife: in the ballad, when the poet bids his mistress to gather roses while she may, and warns her that old Time is still a-flying: in the ballet, when honest Corydon courts Phillis under the treillage of the pasteboard cottage, and leers at her over the head of grandpapa in red stockings, who is opportunely asleep; and when seduced by the invitations of the rosy youth she comes forward to the footlights, and they perform on each 20 other's tiptoes that pas which you all know, and which is only interrupted by old grandpapa awaking from his doze at the pasteboard chalet (whither he returns to take another nap in case the young people get an encore): when 25 Harlequin, splendid in youth, strength, and agility, arrayed in gold and a thousand colours, springs over the heads of countless perils, springs down the throat of bewildered giants, and, dauntless and splendid, dances danger 30 down: when Mr. Punch, that Godless old rebel breaks every law and laughs at it with odious triumph, outwits his lawyer, bullies the beadle, knocks his wife about the head, and hangs the hangman—don't you see in the comedy, in 35 the song, in the dance, in the ragged little Punch's puppet-show—the Pagan protest? Doesn't it seem as if Life puts in its plea and sings its comment? Look how the lovers walk and hold each other's hands and whisper! 40 Sing the chorus—"There is nothing like love, there is nothing like youth, there is nothing like beauty of your springtime. Look! how old age tries to meddle with merry sport! Beat him with his own crutch, the wrinkled old dotard! There is nothing like youth, there is nothing like beauty, there is nothing like strength. Strength and valour win beauty and youth. Be brave and conquer. Be young and happy. Enjoy, enjoy, enjoy! Would you 50 know the Segreto per esser felice?<sup>6</sup> Here it is, in a smiling mistress and a cup of Falernian."<sup>7</sup>

<sup>5</sup> In the middle ages when skilled masons moved from place to place to work upon the great abbeys and cathedrals, it was important for them to have some sign by which they could be known as reliable workmen. Thus originated the secret organization of free or unfranchised operative masons, from which modern Freemasonry derives its symbols and rites.

<sup>6</sup> "Secret of being happy."

<sup>7</sup> A wine of southern Italy celebrated by the Latin poets.

As the boy tosses the cup and sings his song—hark! what is that chaunt coming nearer and nearer? What is that dirge which will disturb us? The lights of the festival burn dim—the 5 cheeks turn pale—the voice quavers—and the cup drops on the floor. Who's there? Death and Fate are at the gate, and they will come in.

NIL NISI BONUM<sup>1</sup>

(From Roundabout Papers, 1860–1862)

Almost the last words which Sir Walter 15 spoke to Lockhart, his biographer, were, "Be a good man, my dear!" and with the last flicker of breath on his dying lips, he sighed a farewell to his family, and passed away blessing them.

Two men,<sup>2</sup> famous, admired, beloved, have just left us, the Goldsmith and Gibbon of our time. Ere a few weeks are over, the critic's pen will be at work, reviewing their lives, and passing judgment on their works. This is no review, or history, or criticism: only a word in testimony of respect and regard from a man of letters, who owes to his own professional labour the honour of becoming acquainted with these two eminent literary men. One 30 was the first ambassador whom the New World of Letters sent to the Old. He was born almost with the republic; the pater patriæ had laid his hand on the child's head.<sup>3</sup> He bore Washington's name: he came amongst us bringing the kindest sympathy, the most artless, smiling good-will. His new country (which some people here might be disposed to regard rather superciliously) could send us, as he showed in his own person, a gentleman, who, though himself born in no very high sphere, was most finished, polished, easy, witty, quiet; and, socially, the equal of the most refined Europeans. If Irving's welcome in England was a kind one, was it not also gratefully remembered? If he ate our salt, did he not pay us with a thankful heart? Who can calculate the amount of friendliness and good feeling for our country which this writer's generous and untiring regard for us disseminated in his own? His books are read by millions of his countrymen, whom he has taught to love England, and why to love her. It would have been easy to speak otherwise than he did: to inflame national rancours, which, at the time when he first became known as a public writer, war had just renewed: to cry down the old civilization at the expense of the new: to point out our faults, arrogance, short-comings, and give the republic to infer how much she was the parent state's superior. There are writers enough in the United States, honest and otherwise, who preach that kind of doctrine. But the good Irving, the peaceful, the friendly, had no place for bitterness in his heart, and no scheme but kindness. Received in England with extraordinary tenderness and friendship (Scott, Southey, Byron, a hundred others have borne witness to their liking for him), he was a messenger of good-will and peace between his country and ours. "See, friends!" he seems to say, "these English are not so wicked, rapacious, callous, proud, as you have been taught to believe them. I went amongst them a humble man; won my way by my pen; and, when known, found every hand held out to me with kindness and welcome. Scott is a great man you acknowledge. Did not Scott's King of England give a gold medal to him, and another to me, your countryman, and a stranger?"

<sup>1</sup> The Latin proverb runs De mortuis nil nisi bonum, concerning the dead nothing but good.

<sup>2</sup> Washington Irving died Nov. 28, 1859; Lord Macaulay died Dec. 28, 1859.

<sup>3</sup> During one of Washington's visits to New York a Scotch maid servant had presented the boy Irving to the great man with the words "Please your honour, here's a bairn was named after you." The president thereupon gave him his blessing. Cf. C. D. Warner's Life of Irving, p. 23.

Tradition in the United States still fondly retains the history of the feasts and rejoicings which awaited Irving on his return to his native country from Europe. He had a national welcome; he stammered in his speeches, hid himself in confusion, and the people loved him the better. He had worthily represented America in Europe. In that young community a man who brings home with him abundant European testimonials is still treated with respect (I have found American writers, of wide-world reputation, strangely solicitous about the opinions of quite obscure British critics, and elated or depressed by their judgments); and Irving went home medalled by the King, diplomatised by the University, crowned and honoured and admired. He had not in any way intrigued for his honours, he had fairly won them; and, in Irving's instance, as in others, the old country was glad and eager to pay them.

In America the love and regard for Irving was a national sentiment. Party wars are perpetually raging there, and are carried on by the press with a rancour and fierceness against individuals which exceed British, almost Irish, virulence. It seemed to me, during a year's travel in the country, as if no one ever aimed a blow at Irving. All men held their hands from that harmless, friendly peace-maker. I had the good fortune to see him at

New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, and remarked how in every place he was honoured and welcomed. Every large city has its "Irving House." The country takes pride in the fame of its men of letters. The gate of his own charming little domain on the beautiful Hudson River was for ever swinging before visitors who came to him. He shut out no one. I had seen many pictures of his house, and read descriptions of it, in both of which it was treated with a not unusual American exaggeration. It was but a pretty little cabin of a place; the gentleman of the press who took notes of the place, whilst his kind old host was sleeping, might have visited the whole house in a couple of minutes.

And how came it that this house was so small, when Mr. Irving's books were sold by hundreds of thousands, nay, millions, when his profits were known to be large, and the habits of life of the good old bachelor were notoriously modest and simple? He had loved once in his life. The lady he loved died; and he, whom all the world loved, never sought to replace her. I can't say how much the thought of that fidelity has touched me. Does not the very cheerfulness of his after life add to the pathos of that untold story? To grieve always was not in his nature; or, when he had his sorrow, to bring all the world in to condole with him and bemoan it. Deep and quiet he lays the love of his heart, and buries it; and grass and flowers grow over the scarred ground in due time.

Irving had such a small house and such narrow rooms, because there was a great number of people to occupy them. He could only afford to keep one old horse (which, lazy and aged as it was, managed once or twice to run away with that careless old horseman). He could only afford to give plain sherry to that amiable British paragraph-monger, who saw the patriarch asleep over his modest, blameless cup, and fetched the public into his private chamber to look at him. Irving could only live very modestly, because the wifeless, childless man had a number of children to whom he was as a father. He had as many as nine nieces, I am told—I saw two of these ladies at his house—with all of whom the dear old man had shared the produce of his labour and genius.

"Be a good man, my dear." One can't but think of these last words of the veteran Chief of Letters, who had tasted and tested the value of worldly success, admiration, prosperity. Was Irving not good, and, of his works, was not his life the best part? In his family, gentle, generous, good-humoured, affectionate, self-denying; in society, a delightful example of complete gentlemanhood; quite unspoiled by prosperity; never obsequious to the great (or, worse still, to the base and mean, as some public men are forced to be in his and other countries); eager to acknowledge every contemporary's merit; always kind and affable to the young members of his calling; in his professional bargains and mercantile dealings delicately honest and grateful; one of the most charming masters of our lighter language; the constant friend to us and to our nation; to men of letters doubly dear, not for his wit and genius merely, but as an exemplar of goodness, probity, and pure life:—I don't know what sort of testimonial will be raised to him in his own country, where generous and enthusiastic acknowledgment of American merit is never wanting; but Irving was in our service as well as theirs; and as they have placed a stone at Greenwich yonder in memory of that gallant young Bellot,<sup>4</sup> who shared the perils and fate of some of our Arctic seamen, I would like to hear of some memorial raised by English writers and friends of letters in affectionate remembrance of the dear and good Washington Irving.

As for the other writer, whose departure many friends, some few most dearly-loved, and multitudes of admiring readers deplore, our republic has already decreed his statue, and he must have known that he had earned this posthumous honour. He is not a poet and man of letters merely, but citizen, statesman, a great British worthy. Almost from the first moment when he appears amongst boys, amongst college students, amongst men, he is marked, and takes rank as a great Englishman. All sorts of successes are easy to him: as a lad he goes down into the arena with others, and wins all the prizes to which he has a mind. A place in the senate is straightway offered to the young man. He takes his seat there; he speaks, when so minded, without party anger or intrigue, but not without party faith and a sort of heroic enthusiasm for his cause. Still he is poet and philosopher even more than orator. That he may have leisure and means to pursue his darling studies, he absents himself for a while, and accepts a richly-remunerative post in the East.<sup>5</sup> As learned a man may live in a cottage or a college common-room; but it always seemed to me that ample means and recognized rank were Macaulay's as of right. Years ago there was a wretched outcry raised because Mr. Macaulay dated a letter from Windsor Castle,<sup>6</sup> where he was staying. Immortal gods! Was this man not a fit guest for any palace in the world? or a fit companion for any man or woman in it? I dare say, after Austerlitz, the old K. K.<sup>7</sup> court officials and footmen sneered at Napoleon for dating from Schönbrunn.<sup>8</sup> But that miserable "Windsor Castle" outcry is an echo out of fast-retreating old-world remembrances. The place of such a natural chief was amongst the first of the land; and that country is best, according to our British notion at least, where the man of eminence has the best chance of investing his genius and intellect.

If a company of giants were got together, very likely one or two of the mere six-foot-six people might be angry in the incontestable superiority of the very tallest of the party; and so I have heard some London wits, rather peevish at Macaulay's superiority, complain that he occupied too much of the talk, and so forth. Now that wonderful tongue is to speak no more, will not many a man grieve that he no longer has the chance to listen? To remember the talk is to wonder: to think not only of the treasures he had in his memory, but of the trifles he had stored there, and could produce with equal readiness. Almost on the last day I had the fortune to see him, a conversation happened suddenly to spring up about senior wranglers,<sup>9</sup> and what they had done in after life. To the almost terror of the persons present, Macaulay began with the senior wrangler of 1801–2–3–4, and so on, giving the name of each, and relating his subsequent career and rise. Every man who has known him has his story regarding that astonishing memory. It may be that he was not ill pleased that you should recognize it; but to those prodigious intellectual feats, which were so easy to him, who would grudge his tribute of homage? His talk was, in a word, admirable, and we admired it.

Of the notices which have appeared regarding Lord Macaulay, up to the day when the present lines are written (the 9th of January), the reader should not deny himself the pleasure

<sup>4</sup> Joseph René Bellot (1826–53), a French naval officer and a volunteer in English Arctic expeditions, who lost his life in the search for Franklin. Bellot's Straits, in the North American Arctic, is named after him. He is commemorated by a red granite obelisk on the river terrace at Greenwich, seat of the Royal Naval College.

<sup>5</sup> Macaulay was a member of the Supreme Council at Calcutta, 1834–38.

<sup>6</sup> In 1839, when Macaulay became Secretary of War, he announced the fact to his constituents in a letter dated from Windsor Castle, the Royal Palace, as though it were his residence. The London Times attacked him, and among those who had their laugh at his expense was Thackeray himself. But Thackeray made ample amends for what Trevelyan calls "a very innocent and not ill-natured touch of satire," in this passage.

<sup>7</sup> K. K. in German stands for Kaiserlich Königlich, i.e. Imperial Royal.

<sup>8</sup> The Austrian Imperial residence, three miles southwest of Vienna.

<sup>9</sup> In Vienna University the student taking first place in the mathematical tripos or honor examination.

of looking especially at two. It is a good sign of the times when such articles as these (I mean the articles in The Times and Saturday Review) appear in our public prints about our public men. They educate us, as it were, to admire rightly. An uninstructed person in a museum or at a concert may pass by without recognizing a picture or a passage of music, which the connoisseur by his side may show him is a masterpiece of harmony, or a wonder of artistic skill. After reading these papers, you like and respect more the person you have admired so much already. And so with regard to Macaulay's style there may be faults of course—what critic can't point them out? But for the nonce we are not talking about faults: we want to say nil nisi bonum. Well—take at hazard any three pages of the "Essays" or "History;"—and, glimmering below the stream of the narrative, as it were, you, an average reader, see one, two, three, a half-score of allusions to other historic facts, characters, literature, poetry, with which you are acquainted. Why is this epithet used? Whence is that simile drawn? How does he manage in two or three words, to paint an individual, or to indicate a landscape? Your neighbour, who has his reading, and his little stock of literature stowed away in his mind, shall detect more points, allusions, happy touches, indicating not only the prodigious memory and vast learning of this master, but the wonderful industry, the honest, humble previous toil of this great scholar. He reads twenty books to write a sentence; he travels a hundred miles to make a line of description.

Many Londoners—not all—have seen the British Museum Library. I speak à cœur ouvert,<sup>10</sup> and pray the kindly reader to bear with me. I have seen all sorts of domes of Peters and Pauls, Sophia, Pantheon,—what not?—and have been struck by none of them so much as by that Catholic dome in Bloomsbury, under which our million volumes are housed. What peace, what love, what truth, what beauty, what happiness for all, what generous kindness for you and me, are here spread out! It seems to me one cannot sit down in that place without a heart full of grateful reverence. I own to have said my grace at the table, and to have thanked heaven for this my English birthright, freely to partake of these bountiful books, and to speak the truth I find there. Under the dome which held Macaulay's brain, and from which his solemn eyes looked out on the world but a fortnight since, what a vast, brilliant, and wonderful store of learning was ranged! what strange lore would he not fetch for you at your bidding! A volume of law, or history, a book of poetry familiar or forgotten (except by himself who forgot nothing), a novel ever so old, and he had it at hand. I spoke to him once about "Clarissa."<sup>11</sup> "Not read 'Clarissa'!" he cried out. "If you have once thoroughly entered on 'Clarissa' and are infected by it, you can't leave it. When I was in India I passed one hot season at the hills, and there were the Governor-General, and the Secretary of Government, and the Commander-in-Chief, and their wives. I had 'Clarissa' with me: and, as soon as they began to read, the whole station was in a passion of excitement about Miss Harlowe and her misfortunes, and her scoundrelly Lovelace! The Governor's wife seized the book, and the Secretary waited for it, and the Chief Justice could not read it for tears!" He acted the whole scene: he paced up and down the "Athenæum" library: I dare say he could have spoken pages of the book—of that book, and of what countless piles of others.

<sup>10</sup> From an open heart.

In this little paper let us keep to the text of nil nisi bonum. One paper I have read regarding Lord Macaulay says "he had no heart." Why, a man's books may not always speak the truth, but they speak his mind in spite of himself: and it seems to me this man's heart is beating through every page he penned. He is always in a storm of revolt and indignation against wrong, craft, tyranny. How he cheers heroic resistance; how he backs and applauds freedom struggling for its own; how he hates scoundrels, ever so victorious and successful; how he recognizes genius, though selfish villains possess it! The critic who says Macaulay had none: and two men more generous, and more loving, and more hating, and more partial, and more noble, do not live in our history. Those who knew Lord Macaulay knew how admirably tender and generous, and affectionate he was. It was not his business to bring his family before the theatre footlights, and call for bouquets from the gallery as he wept over them.

If any young man of letters reads this little sermon—and to him, indeed, it is addressed—I would say to him, "Bear Scott's words in your mind, and 'be good, my dear.'" Here are two literary men, gone to their account, and, laus Deo,<sup>12</sup> as far as we know, it is fair, and open, and clean. Here is no need of apologies for shortcomings, or explanations of vices which would have been virtues but for unavoidable &c. Here are two examples of men most differently gifted: each pursuing his calling; each speaking his truth as God bade him; each honest in his life; just and irreproachable in his dealings; dear to his friends; honoured by his country; beloved at his fireside. It has been the fortunate lot of each to give incalculable happiness and delight to the world, which thanks them in return with an immense kindness, respect, affection. It may not be our chance, brother scribe, to be endowed with such merit, or rewarded with such fame. But the rewards of these men are rewards paid to our service. We may not win the baton or epaulettes;<sup>13</sup> but God give us strength to guard the honour of the flag!

<sup>11</sup> Clarissa Harlowe, Samuel Richardson's novel, published 1748. Lovelace, the principal male character in the book, is an unscrupulous libertine.

<sup>12</sup> Praise to God.

Charles Dickens

1812-1870

OUR SCHOOL

(From Household Words, 1852)

We went to look at it, only this last Midsummer, and found that the railway had cut it up root and branch. A great trunk-line had swallowed the play-ground, sliced away the schoolroom, and pared off the corner of the house, which thus curtailed of its proportions, presented itself, in a green stage of stucco, profilewise towards the road, like a forlorn flatiron without a handle, standing on end.

It seems as if our schools were doomed to be the sport of change. We have faint recollections of a Preparatory Day-School, which we have sought in vain, and which must have been pulled down to make a new street, ages ago. We have dim impressions, scarcely amounting to a belief, that it was over a dyer's shop. We know that you went up steps to it; that you frequently grazed your knees in doing so; that you generally got your leg over the scraper, in trying to scrape the mud off a very unsteady little shoe. The mistress of the establishment holds no place in our memory; but rampant on one eternal door-mat, in an eternal entry long and narrow, is a puffy pug-dog, with a personal animosity towards us, who triumphs over Time. The bark of that baleful Pug, a certain radiating way he had of snapping at our undefended legs, the ghastly grinning of his moist black muzzle and white teeth, and the insolence of his crisp tail curled like a pastoral crook, all live and flourish.

<sup>13</sup> May not become commanding generals or even officers. The baton is the field marshal's staff.

From an otherwise unaccountable association of him with a fiddle, we conclude that he was of French extraction, and his name Fidèle. He belonged to some female, chiefly inhabiting a back-parlour, whose life appears to us to have been consumed in sniffing, and in wearing a brown beaver bonnet. For her, he would sit up and balance cake upon his nose, and not eat it until twenty had been counted. To the best of our belief we were once called in to witness this performance; when, unable even in his milder moments, to endure our presence, he instantly made at us, cake and all.

Why a something in mourning, called "Miss Frost," should still connect itself with our preparatory school, we are unable to say. We retain no impression of the beauty of Miss Frost—if she were beautiful; or of the mental fascinations of Miss Frost—if she were accomplished; yet her name, and her black dress hold an enduring place in our remembrance. An equally impersonal boy, whose name has long since shaped itself unalterably into "Master Mawls," is not to be dislodged from our brain. Retaining no vindictive feeling towards Mawls—no feeling whatever, indeed—we infer that neither he nor we can have loved Miss Frost. Our first impression of Death and Burial is associated with this formless pair. We all three nestled awfully in a corner one wintry day, when the wind was blowing shrill, with Miss Frost's pinafore over our heads; and Miss Frost told us in a whisper about somebody being "screwed down." It is the only distinct recollection we preserve of these impalpable creatures, except a suspicion that the manners of Master Mawls were susceptible of much improvement. Generally speaking, we may observe that whenever we see a child intently occupied with its nose, to the exclusion of all other subjects of interest, our mind reverts in a flash to Master Mawls.

But, the School that was our School before the Railroad came and overthrew it, was quite another sort of place. We were old enough to be put into Virgil when we went there, and to get prizes for a variety of polishing on which the rust has long accumulated. It was a School of some celebrity in its neighbourhood—nobody could have said why—and we had the honour to attain and hold the eminent position of first boy. The master was supposed among us to know nothing, and one of the ushers was supposed to know everything. We are still inclined to think the first-named supposition perfectly correct.

We have a general idea that its subject had been in the leather trade, and had bought us—meaning our school—of another proprietor, who was immensely learned. Whether this belief had any real foundation, we are not likely ever to know now. The only branches of education with which he showed the least acquaintance, were, ruling and corporally punishing. He was always ruling ciphering-books with a bloated mahogany ruler, or smiting the palms of offenders with the same diabolical instrument, or viciously drawing a pair of pantaloons tight with one of his large hands, and caning the wearer with the other. We have no doubt whatever that this occupation was the principal solace of his existence.

A profound respect for money pervaded Our School, which was of course, derived from its Chief. We remember an idiotic goggle-eyed boy, with a big head, and half-crowns without end, who suddenly appeared as a parlour-boarder, and was rumoured to have come by sea from some mysterious part of the earth where his parents rolled in gold. He was usually called "Mr." by the Chief, and was said to feed in the parlour on steaks and gravy; likewise to drink currant wine. And he openly stated that if rolls and coffee were ever denied him at breakfast, he would write home to that unknown part of the globe from which he had come, and cause himself to be recalled to the regions of gold. He was put into no form or class, but learnt alone, as little as he liked—and he liked very little—and there was a belief among us that this was because he was too wealthy to be "taken down." His special treatment, and our vague association of him with the sea, and with storms, and sharks, and Coral Reefs occasioned the wildest legends to be circulated as his history. A tragedy in blank verse was written on the subject—if our memory does not deceive us, by the hand that now chronicles these recollections—in which his father figured as a Pirate, and was shot for a voluminous catalogue of atrocities: first imparting to his wife the secret of the cave in which his wealth was stored, and from which his only son's half-crowns now issued. Dumbledon (the boy's name) was represented as "yet unborn" when his brave father met his fate; and the despair and grief of Mrs. Dumbledon at that calamity was movingly shadowed forth as having weakened the parlour-boarder's mind. This production was received with great favour, and was twice performed with closed doors in the dining-room. But, it got wind, and was seized as libellous, and brought the unlucky poet into severe affliction. Some two years afterwards, all of a sudden one day, Dumbledon vanished. It was whispered that the Chief himself had taken him down to the Docks, and reshipped him for the Spanish Main; but nothing certain was ever known about his disappearance. At this hour we cannot thoroughly disconnect him from California.

Our School was rather famous for mysterious pupils. There was another—a heavy young man, with a large double-cased silver watch, and a fat knife, the handle of which was a perfect tool-box—who unaccountably appeared one day at a special desk of his own, erected close to that of the Chief, with whom he held familiar converse. He lived in the parlour, and went out for walks, and never took the least notice of us—even of us, the first boy—unless to give us a depreciatory kick, or grimly to take our hat off and throw it away, when he encountered us out of doors, which unpleasant ceremony he always performed as he passed—not even condescending to stop for the purpose. Some of us believed that the classical attainments of this phenomenon were terrific, but that his penmanship and arithmetic were defective, and he had come there to mend them; others, that he was going to set up a school, and had paid the Chief "twenty-five pound down," for leave to see Our School at work. The gloomier spirits even said that he was going to buy US, against which contingency conspiracies were set on foot for a general defection and running away. However, he never did that. After staying for a quarter, during which period, though closely observed, he was never seen to do anything but make pens out of quills, write small-hand in a secret portfolio, and punch the point of the sharpest blade in his knife into his desk all over it, he too disappeared, and his place knew him no more.

There was another boy, a fair, meek boy, with a delicate complexion, and rich curling hair, who, we found out, or thought we found out (we have no idea now, and probably had none then, on what grounds, but it was confidentially revealed from mouth to mouth) was the son of a Viscount who had deserted his lovely mother. It was understood that if he had his rights, he would be worth twenty thousand a year. And that if his mother ever met his father, she would shoot him with a silver pistol, which she carried, always loaded to the muzzle, for that purpose. He was a very suggestive topic. So was a young mulatto, who was always believed (though very amiable) to have a dagger about him somewhere. But, we think they were both outshone, upon the whole, by another boy who claimed to have been born on the twenty-ninth of February, and to have only one birthday in five years. We suspect this to have been a fiction—but he lived upon it all the time he was at Our School.

The principal currency of Our School was slate pencil. It had some inexplicable value, that was never ascertained, never reduced to a standard. To have a great hoard of it, was somehow to be rich. We used to bestow it in charity, and confer it as a precious boon upon our chosen friends. When the holidays were coming, contributions were solicited for certain boys whose relatives were in India, and who were appealed for under the generic names of "Holiday-stoppers," appropriate marks of remembrance that should enliven and cheer them in their homeless state. Personally, we always contributed these tokens of sympathy in the form of slate pencil, and always felt that it would be a comfort and a treasure to them.

Our School was remarkable for white mice. Red-polls, linnets, and even canaries, were kept in desks, drawers, hat-boxes, and other strange refuges for birds, but white mice were the favourite stock. The boys trained the mice, much better than the masters trained the boys. We recall one white mouse, who lived in the cover of a Latin dictionary, who ran up ladders, drew Roman chariots, shouldered muskets, turned wheels, and made even a very creditable appearance on the stage as the Dog of Montargis.<sup>1</sup> He might have achieved greater things, but for having the misfortune to mistake his way in a triumphal procession to the Capitol, when he fell into a deep inkstand, and was dyed black and drowned. The mice were the occasion of some most ingenious engineering, in the construction of their houses and instruments of performance. The famous one belonged to a Company of proprietors, some of whom have since made Railroads, Engines, and Telegraphs; the chairman has erected mills and bridges in New Zealand.

The usher at Our School, who was considered to know everything, as opposed to the Chief, who was considered to know nothing, was a bony, gentle-faced, clerical-looking young man in rusty black. It was whispered that he was sweet upon one of Maxby's sisters (Maxby lived close by, and was a day pupil), and further that he "favoured Maxby." As we remember, he taught Italian to Maxby's sisters on half-holidays. He once went to the play with them, and wore a white waistcoat, and a rose; which was considered among us as equivalent to a declaration. We were of opinion on that occasion, that to the last moment he expected Maxby's father to ask him to dinner at five o'clock, and therefore neglected his own dinner at half-past one, and finally got none. We exaggerated in our imaginations the extent to which he punished Maxby's father's cold meat at supper; and we agreed to believe that he was elevated with wine and water when he came home. But, we all liked him; for he had a good knowledge of boys, and would have made it a much better school if he had had more power. He was writing-master, mathematical master, English master, made out the bills, mended the pens, and did all sorts of things. He divided the little boys with the Latin master (they were smuggled through their rudimentary books, at odd times when there was nothing else to do), and always called at parents' houses to inquire after sick boys, because he had gentlemanly manners. He was rather musical, and on some remote quarter-day had bought an old trombone; but a bit of it was lost, and it made the most extraordinary sounds when he sometimes tried to play it of an evening. His holidays never began (on account of the bills) until long after ours; but, in the summer vacations he used to take pedestrian excursions with a knapsack; and at Christmas-time he went to see his father at Chipping Norton, who we all said (on no authority) was a dairy-fed-pork-butcher. Poor fellow! He was very low all day on Maxby's sister's wedding-day, and afterwards was thought to favour Maxby more than ever, though he had been expected to spite him. He has been dead these twenty years. Poor fellow!

Our remembrance of Our School, presents the Latin master as a colourless, doubled-up, near-sighted man with a crutch, who was always cold, and always putting onions into his ears for deafness, and always disclosing ends of flannel under all his garments, and almost always applying a ball of pocket-handkerchief to some part of his face with a screwing action round and round. He was a very good scholar, and took great pains where he saw intelligence and a desire to learn: otherwise, perhaps not. Our memory presents him (unless teased into a passion) with as little energy as colour—as having been worried and tormented into monotonous feebleness—as having had the best part of his life ground out of him in a Mill of boys. We remember with terror how he fell asleep one sultry afternoon with the little smuggled class before him, and awoke not when the foot-step of the Chief fell heavy on the floor; how the Chief aroused him, in the midst of a dread silence, and said, "Mr. Blinkins, are you ill, sir?" how he blushing replied, "Sir, rather so;" how the Chief retorted with severity, "Mr. Blinkins, this is no place to be ill in" (which was very very true) and walked back, solemn as the ghost in Hamlet, until, catching a wandering eye, he caned that boy for inattention, and happily expressed his feelings towards the Latin master through the medium of a substitute.

<sup>1</sup> Aubrey of Montdidier was murdered in 1371. He had a dog, Dragon, who after the murder showed a marked dislike toward one, Richard of Macaire. Suspicion was aroused, and Richard of Macaire was condemned to judicial combat with the dog. He was mortally wounded, and before dying confessed the crime. A bronze group at Montargis, France, commemorates the dog.

There was a fat little dancing-master who used to come in a gig, and taught the more advanced among us hornpipes (as an accomplishment in great social demand in after-life); and there was a brisk little French master who used to come in the sunniest weather, with a handleless umbrella, and to whom the Chief was always polite, because (as we believed), if the Chief offended him he would instantly address the Chief in French, and forever confound him before the boys with his inability to understand or reply.

There was besides a serving man, whose name was Phil. Our retrospective glance presents Phil as a shipwrecked carpenter, cast away upon the desert island of a school, and carrying into practice an ingenious inkling of many trades. He mended whatever was broken, and made whatever was wanted. He was general glazier, among other things, and mended all the broken windows—at the prime cost (as was darkly rumoured among us) of ninepence, for every square charged three-and-six to parents. We had a high opinion of his mechanical genius, and generally held that the Chief "knew something bad of him," and on pain of divulgence forced Phil to be his bondsman. We particularly remember that Phil had a sovereign contempt for learning: which engenders in us a respect for his sagacity, as it implies his accurate observation of the relative positions of the Chief and the ushers. He was an impenetrable man, who waited at table between whiles, and throughout "the half" kept the boxes in severe custody. He was morose even to the Chief, and never smiled, except at breaking-up, when in acknowledgement to the toast, "Success to Phil! Hooray!" he would slowly carve a grin out of his wooden face, where it would remain until we were all gone. Nevertheless, one time, when we had the scarlet fever in the school, Phil nursed all the sick boys of his own accord, and was like a mother to them. There was another school not far off, and of course our school could have nothing to say to that school. It is mostly the way with schools, whether of boys or men. Well! the railway has swallowed up ours, and the locomotives now run smoothly over its ashes.

So fades and languishes, grows dim and dies,
All that this world is proud of,

—and is not proud of, too. It had little reason to be proud of Our School, and has done much better since in that way, and will do far better yet.

George Eliot

(Mary Ann Evans)

1819-1880

THE OLD COACH ROADS OF ENGLAND

(From the Introduction to Felix Holt, 1866)

Five-and-thirty years<sup>1</sup> ago the glory had not yet departed from the old coach roads: the great road-side inns were still brilliant with well polished tankards, the smiling glances of pretty barmaids, and the repartees of jocose hostlers; the mail still announced itself by the merry notes of the horn; the hedge-cutter or the rick-thatcher might still know the exact hour by the unfailing yet otherwise meteoric apparition of the pea-green Tally-ho or the yellow Independent; and elderly gentlemen in pony chaises, quartering<sup>2</sup> nervously to make way for the rolling, swinging swiftness, had not yet ceased to remark that times were finely changed since they used to see the pack-horses and hear the tinkling of their bells on this very highway.

In those days there were pocket-boroughs,<sup>3</sup> a Birmingham unrepresented in Parliament and compelled to make strong representations out of it, unrepealed corn-laws,<sup>4</sup> three-and-sixpenny letters,<sup>5</sup> a brawny and many-breeding pauperism, and other departed evils; but there were some pleasant things, too, which have also departed. Non omnia grandior ætas quæ fugiamus habet,<sup>6</sup> says the wise goddess: you have not the best of it in all things, oh youngsters! the elderly man has his enviable memories, and not the least of them is the memory of a long journey in midspring or autumn on the outside of a stage-coach. Posterity may be shot, like a bullet, through a tube, by atmospheric pressure from Winchester to New-castle: that is a fine result to have among our

<sup>1</sup> i. e. about 1830, when travel by the railway had but just begun.

<sup>2</sup> V. page 576, n. 3.

<sup>3</sup> A borough controlled by one man, which, as it were, he carried in his pocket. There were many of them, and many important places like Birmingham that were unrepresented before the enactment of the Reform Bill in 1832.

<sup>4</sup> V. page 686, n. 1.

<sup>5</sup> i. e. at that time it cost three shillings and six pence to send a letter.

<sup>6</sup> The older time does not hold all those things which we naturally avoid. The passage is from Ovid's Metamorphoses, and the "wise goddess" is Minerva.

hopes; but the slow, old-fashioned way of getting from one end of our country to the other is the better thing to have in the memory. The tube-journey can never lend much of a picture and narrative; it is as barren as an exclamatory O! Whereas the happy outside passenger seated on the box from the dawn to the gloaming gathered enough stories of English life, enough of English labors in town and country, enough aspects of earth and sky, to make episodes for a modern Odyssey. Suppose only that his journey took him through that central plain,<sup>7</sup> watered at one extremity by the Avon, at the other by the Trent. As the morning silvered the meadows with their long lines of bushy willows marking the water-courses, or burnished the golden corn-ricks clustered near the long roofs of some midland homestead, he saw the full-uddered cows driven from their early pasture to the milking. Perhaps it was the shepherd, head-servant of the farm, who drove them, his sheep-dog following with a heedless, unofficial air as of a beadle in undress. The shepherd with a slow and slouching walk, timed by the walk of grazing beasts, moved aside, as if unwillingly, throwing out a monosyllabic hint to his cattle; his glance, accustomed to rest on things very near the earth, seemed to lift itself with difficulty to the coachman. Mail or stage coach for him belonged to that mysterious distant system of things called "Gover'nment," which, whatever it might be, was no business of his, any more than the most outlying nebula or the coal-sacks of the southern hemisphere; his solar system was the parish; the master's temper and the casualties of lambing-time were his region of storms. He cut his bread and bacon with his pocket-knife, and felt no bitterness except in the matter of pauper laborers and the bad luck that sent contrarious seasons and the sheep-rot. He and his cows were soon left behind, and the homestead too, with its pond overhung by elder-trees, its untidy kitchen-garden and cone-shaped yew-tree arbor. But everywhere the bushy hedgerows wasted the land with their straggling beauty, shrouded the grassy borders of the pastures with cat-kined<sup>8</sup> hazels, and tossed their long blackberry branches on the corn-fields. Perhaps they were white with May,<sup>9</sup> or starred with pale-pink dog-roses; perhaps the urchins were already nutting among them, or gathering the plenteous crabs. It was worth the journey only to see those hedgerows, the liberal homes of unmarketable beauty—of the purpleblossomed, ruby-berried night-shade, or the wild convolvulus climbing and spreading in tendrilled strength till it made a great curtain of pale-green hearts and white trumpets, of the many-tubed honeysuckle, which, in its most delicate fragrance, hid a charge more subtle and penetrating than beauty. Even if it were winter the hedgerows showed their coral, the scarlet haws, the deep-crimson hips,<sup>10</sup> with lingering brown leaves to make a resting place for the jewels of the hoar-frost. Such hedgerows were often as tall as the laborers' cottages dotted along the lanes, or clustered into a small hamlet, their little dingy windows telling, like thick-filmed eyes, of nothing but the darkness within. The passenger on the coach-box, bowled along above such a hamlet, saw chiefly the roofs of it: probably it turned its back on the road, and seemed to lie away from everything but its own patch of earth and sky, away from the parish church by long fields and green lanes, away from all intercourse except that of tramps. If its face could be seen it was most likely dirty; but the dirt was Protestant dirt, and the big, bold, gin-breathing tramps were Protestant tramps. There was no sign of superstition near, no crucifix or image near to indicate a misguided reverence: the inhabitants were probably so free from superstition that they were in much less awe of the parson than of the overseer. Yet they were saved from the excesses of Protestantism by not knowing how to read, and by the absence of hand-looms and mines to be the pioneers of Dissent, they were kept safely in the via media<sup>11</sup> of indifference, and could have registered themselves in the census by a big black mark as members of the Church of England.

But there were trim cheerful villages, too, with a neat or handsome parsonage and grey church set in the midst; there was the pleasant tinkle of the blacksmith's anvil, the patient cart-horses waiting at his door; the basket-maker peeling his willow wands in the sunshine; the wheelwright putting the last touch to a blue cart with red wheels; here and there a cottage with bright, transparent windows showing pots full of blooming balsams or geraniums, and little gardens in front, all double-daisies or dark wall-flowers; at the well clean and comely women carrying yoked buckets, and toward the free-school small Britons dawdling on, and handling their marbles in the pockets of unpatched corduroys adorned with brass buttons. The land round was rich and marly;<sup>12</sup> great

<sup>7</sup> i. e. through the heart of England the Midlands, including Warwickshire, the county of Shropshire and George Eliot.

<sup>8</sup> Catkin.

<sup>9</sup> Hawthorne.

<sup>10</sup> Haws, the fruit of the hawthorne, and hips, the fruit of the rose.

<sup>11</sup> The middle way.

<sup>12</sup> A soil rich in the mixture of calcium carbonate, clay, and sand.

corn-stacks stood in the rick-yards—for the rick-burners<sup>13</sup> had not found their way hither; the homesteads were those of rich farmers who paid no rent, or had the rare advantage of a lease, and could afford to keep their corn till prices had risen. The coach would be sure to overtake some of them on their way to their outlying fields or to the market town, sitting heavily on their well-groomed horses, or weighing down one side of an olive-green gig. They probably thought of the coach with some contempt, as an accommodation for people who had not their own gigs, or who, wanting to travel to London or such distant parts, belonged to the trading and less solid part of the nation. The passenger on the box could see that this was the district of protuberant optimists, sure that old England was the best of all countries, and that if there were any facts that had not fallen under their own observation, they were facts not worth observing: the district of clean little market towns without manufactures, of fat livings, an aristocratic clergy, and low poor-rates. But as the day wore on the scene would change: the land would begin to be blackened with coal-pits, the rattle of hand-loom to be heard in hamlets and villages. Here were powerful men walking queerly with knees bent outward from squatting in the mine, going home to throw themselves down in their blackened flannel and sleep through the daylight, then rise and spend much of their high wages at the ale-house with their fellows of the Benefit club; here the pale, eager faces of hand-loom weavers, men and women, haggard from sitting up late at night to finish the week's work, hardly begun till the Wednesday. Everywhere the cottagers and the small children were dirty, for the languid mothers gave their strength to the loom—pious Dissenting women, perhaps, who took life patiently, and thought that salvation depended chiefly on predestination, and not at all on cleanliness. The gables of Dissenting chapels now made a visible sign of religion, and of a meeting-place to counter-balance the ale-house, even in the hamlets; but if a couple of old termagants were seen tearing each other's caps, it was a safe conclusion that, if they had not received the sacraments of the Church, they had not at least given in to schismatic rites, and were free from the errors of Voluntarism.<sup>14</sup> The breath of the manufacturing town, which made a cloudy day and a red gloom by night on the horizon, diffused itself over all the surrounding country, filling the air with eager unrest. Here was a population not convinced that old England was as good as possible; here were multitudinous men and women aware that their religion was not exactly the religion of their rulers, who might therefore be better than they were, and who, if better, might alter many things which now made the world perhaps more painful than it need be, and certainly more sinful. Yet there were the grey steeples, too, and the church-yards, with their grassy mounds and venerable head-stones, sleeping in the sunlight; there were broad fields and homesteads, and fine old woods covering a rising ground, or stretching far by the road-side, and allowing only peeps at the park and mansion which they shut in from the working-day world. In these midland districts the traveller passed rapidly from one phase of English life to another; after looking down on a village dingy with coal-dust, noisy with the shaking of looms, he might skirt a parish all of fields, high hedges, and deep-rutted lanes; after the coach had rattled over the pavement of a manufacturing town, the scene of riots and trades-union meetings, it would take him in another ten minutes into a rural region, where the neighborhood of the town was only felt in the advantages of a near market for corn, cheese, and hay, and where men with a considerable banking account were accustomed to say that "they never meddled with politics themselves." The busy scenes of the shuttle and the wheel, of the roaring furnace, of the shaft and the pulley, seemed to make but crowded nests in the midst of the large-spaced, slow-moving life of homesteads and far-away cottages and oak-sheltered parks. Looking at the dwellings scattered among the woody flats and the ploughed uplands, under the low grey sky which overhung them with an unchanging stillness as if Time itself were pausing, it was easy for the traveller to conceive that town and country had no pulse in common, except where the hand-looms made a far-reaching, straggling fringe about the great centres of manufacture; that till the agitation about the Catholics in '29,<sup>15</sup> rural Englishmen had hardly known more of Catholics than of the fossil mammals; and that their notion of Reform was a confused combination of rick-burners, trades-unions, Nottingham riots,<sup>16</sup> and in

<sup>13</sup> During the autumn of 1830, especially in the southern counties of England, certain malcontents instituted a reign of terror by setting fire to the hay-ricks.

<sup>14</sup> The system of those who believe in the separation of Church and State.

<sup>15</sup> After much agitation a Roman Catholic Relief Bill was passed in 1829, removing many of the restrictions from Roman Catholics, and making it possible for them to sit in Parliament.

<sup>16</sup> A reference to the popular agitation that arose when the House of Lords registered the Reform Bill in 1832. Nottingham was one of the important centres that was without representation.

general whatever required the calling out of the yeomanry. It was still easier to see that, for the most part, they resisted the rotation of crops and stood by their fallows: and the coachman would perhaps tell how in one parish an innovating farmer, who talked of Sir Humphrey Davy,<sup>17</sup> had been fairly driven out by popular dislike, as if he had been a confounded Radical; and how, the parson having one Sunday preached from the words "Plough up the fallow ground of your hearts,"<sup>18</sup> the people thought he had made the text out of his own head, otherwise it would never have come "so pat" on a matter of business; but when they found it in the Bible at home, some said it was an argument for fallows (else why should the Bible mention fallows?), but a few of the weaker sort were shaken, and thought it was an argument that fallows should be done away with, else the Bible would have said, "Let your hearts lie fallow;" and the next morning the parson had a stroke of apoplexy, which, as coincident with a dispute about fallows, so set the parish against the innovating farmer and the rotation of crops, that he could stand his ground no longer, and transferred his lease.

The coachman was an excellent travelling companion and commentator on the landscape; he could tell the name of sites and persons, and explain the meaning of groups, as well as the shade of Virgil in a more memorable journey;<sup>19</sup> he had as many stories about parishes, and the men and women in them, as the Wanderer in the "Excursion,"<sup>20</sup> only his style was different. His views of life had originally been genial, and such as became a man who was well-warned within and without, and held a position of easy, undisputed authority; but the recent initiation of Railways had embittered him: he now, as in a perpetual vision, saw the ruined country strewn with shattered limbs, and regarded Mr. Huskisson's death<sup>21</sup> as a proof of God's anger against Stephenson.<sup>22</sup> "Why, every inn on the road would be shut up!" and at that word the coachman looked before him with the blank gaze of one who had driven his coach to the outermost edge of the universe, and saw his leaders plunging into the abyss. Still he would soon relapse from the high prophetic strain to the familiar one of narrative. He knew whose the land was wherever he drove; what noblemen had half ruined themselves by gambling; who made handsome returns of rent; and who was at daggers-drawn with his eldest son. He perhaps remembered the fathers of actual baronets, and knew stories of their extravagant or stingy housekeeping; whom they had married, whom they had horsewhipped, whether they were particular about preserving their game, and whether they had had much to do with canal companies. About any actual landed proprietor he could also tell whether he was a Reformer or an Anti-Reformer. That was a distinction which had "turned up" in later times, and along with it the paradox, very puzzling to the coachman's mind, that there were men of old family and large estate who had voted for the Bill.<sup>23</sup> He did not grapple with the paradox; he let it pass, with all the discreetness of an experienced theologian or learned scholiast, preferring to point his whip at some object which could raise no questions.

James Anthony Froude

1818-1894

THE EXECUTION OF MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS

(From History of England from the fall of Wolsey to the Defeat of the Armada, 1856-1870)

The blow<sup>1</sup> when it came at last, therefore came suddenly. Beale rode hard—for unless, which is unlikely, he trusted the letter to Kent to a second hand he called at Wrest on his way down—and he arrived at Fotheringay on Sunday evening. The purpose of his coming was not made known in the castle. Early on Monday he went in search of Lord Shrewsbury, while a message was dispatched to the Sheriff of Northamptonshire, to be in attendance on Wednesday morning. On Monday evening the Earl of Kent came. Shrewsbury appeared on Tuesday before noon, and when the early castle dinner was over, they sent a servant to the Queen of Scots with a request to be admitted to her presence.

<sup>23</sup> The Reform Bill.

<sup>1</sup> i. e. the news of the arrival of the commission signed by Queen Elizabeth for her execution. Mary, deposed from the Scottish throne, had taken refuge in England in 1568. She became a prisoner of State and was placed under the care of Sir Amias Paulet. In 1586 she was accused of complicity in the Babington plot to assassinate Queen Elizabeth and to usurp the throne. She was tried at Fotheringay Castle near Peterborough and condemned to death.

<sup>17</sup> A great chemist. He lectured and wrote much on the subject of agricultural chemistry, and on the need of applying science to farming. The old-fashioned farmers who believed in the rotation of crops were opposed to these new ideas.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. Hosea, x. 12.

<sup>19</sup> Dante's journey through Purgatory, under the guidance of the shade of Virgil.

<sup>20</sup> Wordsworth's poem of that name.

<sup>21</sup> William Huskisson was a prominent public official, who died from injuries received at the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester railway.

<sup>22</sup> Stephenson was the inventor of the famous locomotive the "Rocket" and was the engineer who built the Liverpool and Manchester railway.

Shrewsbury had not seen her since she had passed from under his charge. He had not been on the Commission which tried her; illness had prevented him from attending the last Parliament, and he had taken no public part in the prosecution; and although he had signified privately as his personal opinion that her death was necessary, it could not have been without emotion that he was once more brought into a brief relation with her in so terrible a form. Kent was an austere Puritan, to whom she was merely a wicked woman overtaken at last by the punishment which she had too long deserved and escaped.

Briefly, solemnly, and sternly they delivered their awful message. They informed her that they had received a commission under the great seal to see her executed, and she was told that she must prepare to suffer on the following morning.

She was dreadfully agitated. For a moment she refused to believe them. Then, as the truth forced itself upon her, tossing her head in disdain and struggling to control herself, she called her physician and began to speak to him of money that was owed to her in France. At last it seems that she broke down altogether, and they left her with a fear either that she would destroy herself in the night, or that she would refuse to come to the scaffold, and that it might be necessary to drag her there by violence.

The end had come. She had long professed to expect it, but the clearest expectation is not certainty. The scene for which she had affected to prepare she was to encounter in its dread reality, and all her busy schemes, her dreams of vengeance, her visions of a revolution, with herself ascending out of the convulsion and seating herself on her rival's throne—all were gone. She had played deep, and the dice had gone against her.

Yet in death, if she encountered it bravely, victory was still possible. Could she but sustain to the last the character of a calumniated suppliant accepting heroically for God's sake and her creed's the concluding stroke of a long series of wrongs, she might stir a tempest of indignation which, if it could not save herself, might at least overwhelm her enemy. Persisting, as she persisted to the last, in denying all knowledge of Babington, it would be affection to credit her with a genuine feeling of religion; but the imperfection of her motive exalts the greatness of her fortitude. To an impassioned believer death is comparatively easy.

Her chaplain was lodged in a separate part of the castle. The Commissioners, who were as anxious that her execution should wear its real character as she was herself determined to convert it into a martyrdom, refused, perhaps unwisely, to allow him access to her, and offered her again the assistance of an Anglican Dean. They gave her an advantage over them which she did not fail to use. She would not let the Dean come near her. She sent a note to the chaplain telling him that she had meant to receive the sacrament, but as it might not be she must content herself with a general confession. She bade him watch through the night and pray for her. In the morning when she was brought out she might perhaps see him, and receive his blessing on her knees. She supped cheerfully, giving her last meal with her attendants a character of sacred parting; afterwards she drew aside her apothecary, M. Gorion, and asked him if she might depend upon his fidelity: when he satisfied her that she might trust him, she said she had a letter and two diamonds which she wished to send to Mendoza.<sup>2</sup> He undertook to melt some drug and conceal them in it where they would never be looked for, and promised to deliver them faithfully. One of the jewels was for Mendoza himself; the other and the largest was for Philip.<sup>2</sup> It was to be a sign that she was dying for the truth, and was meant also to bespeak his care for her friends and servants. Every one of them so far as she was able, without forgetting a name, she commended to his liberality. Arundel, Paget, Morgan, the Archbishop of Glasgow, Westmorland, Throgmorton, The Bishop of Ross, her two secretaries, the ladies who had shared the trials of her imprisonment, she remembered them all, and specified the sums which she desired Philip to bestow on them. And as Mary Stuart then and throughout her life never lacked gratitude to those who had been true to her, so then as always she remembered her enemies. There was no cant about her, no unreal talk of forgiveness of injuries. She bade Gorion tell Philip it was her last prayer that he should persevere, notwithstanding her death, in the invasion of England. It was God's quarrel, she said, and worthy of his greatness: and as soon as he had conquered it, she desired him not to forget how she had been treated by Cecil, and Leicester, and Walsingham; by Lord Huntingdon, who had ill-used her fifteen years before at Tutbury; by Sir Amyas Paulet, and Secretary Wade.

Her last night was a busy one. As she said herself there was much to be done and the time was short. A few lines to the King of France were dated two hours after midnight. They were to insist for the last time that she was innocent of the conspiracy, that she was dying for religion, and for having asserted her right to the crown; and to beg that out of the sum which he owed her, her servants' wages might be paid, and masses provided for her soul. After this she slept for three or four hours, and then rose and with the most elaborate care prepared to encounter the end.

<sup>2</sup> The Spanish ambassador to England, who by reason of his intrigues against the government, had been sent out of England by Elizabeth in 1584.

<sup>2</sup> Philip II, King of Spain (1556-1598).

At eight in the morning the Provost-marshal knocked at the outer door which communicated with her suite of apartments. It was locked and no one answered, and he went back in some trepidation lest the fears might prove true which had been entertained the preceding evening. On his returning with the Sheriff, however, a few minutes later, the door was open, and they were confronted with the tall majestic figure of Mary Stuart standing before them in splendour. The plain grey dress had been exchanged for a robe of black satin; her jacket was of black satin also, looped and slashed and trimmed with velvet. Her false hair was arranged studiously with a coif, and over her head and falling down over her back was a white veil of delicate lawn. A crucifix of gold hung from her neck. In her hand she held a crucifix of ivory, and a number of jewelled Paternosters was attached to her girdle. Led by two of Paulet's gentlemen, the Sheriff walking before her, she passed to the chamber of presence in which she had been tried, where Shrewsbury, Kent, Paulet, Drury and others were waiting to receive her. Andrew Melville, Sir Robert's brother, who had been master of her household, was kneeling in tears. "Melville," she said, "you should rather rejoice than weep that the end of my troubles is come. Tell my friends I die a true Catholic. Commend me to my son. Tell him I have done nothing to prejudice his kingdom of Scotland, and so, good Melville, farewell." She kissed him, and turning asked for her chaplain Du Preau. He was not present. There had been a fear of some religious melodrama which it was thought well to avoid. Her ladies, who had attempted to follow her, had been kept back also. She could not afford to leave the account of her death to be reported by enemies and Puritans, and she required assistance for the scene which she meditated. Missing them she asked the reason of their absence, and said she wished them to see her die. Kent said he feared they might scream or faint, or attempt perhaps to dip their handkerchiefs in her blood. She undertook that they should be quiet and obedient. "The Queen," she said, "would never deny her so slight a request," and when Kent still hesitated, she added with tears, "You know I am cousin to your Queen, of the blood of Henry the Seventh, a married Queen of France, and anointed Queen of Scotland."

It was impossible to refuse. She was allowed to take six of her own people with her, and select them herself. She chose her physician Burgoyne, Andrew Melville, the apothecary Gorion, and her surgeon, with two ladies, Elizabeth Kennedy and Curle's young wife Barbara Mowbray, whose child she had baptised.

"Allons donc," she then said—"Let us go," and passing out attended by the Earls, and leaning on the arm of an officer of the guard, she descended the great staircase to the hall. The news had spread far through the country. Thousands of people were collected outside the walls. About three hundred knights and gentlemen of the county had been admitted to witness the execution. The tables and forms had been removed, and a great wood fire was blazing in the chimney. At the upper end of the hall, above the fire-place, but near it, stood the scaffold, twelve feet square and two feet and a half high. It was covered with black cloth; a low rail ran round it covered with black cloth also, and the Sheriff's guard of halberdiers were ranged on the floor below on the four sides to keep off the crowd. On the scaffold was the block, black like the rest; a square black cushion was placed behind it, and behind the cushion a black chair; on the right were two other chairs for the Earls. The axe leant against the rail, and two masked figures stood like mutes on either side at the back. The Queen of Scots as she swept in seemed as if coming to take a part in some solemn pageant. Not a muscle of her face could be seen to quiver; she ascended the scaffold with absolute composure, looked round her smiling, and sat down. Shrewsbury and Kent followed and took their places, the Sheriff stood at her left hand, and Beale then mounted a platform and read the warrant aloud.

In all the assembly Mary Stuart appeared the person least interested in the words which were consigning her to death.

"Madam," said Lord Shrewsbury to her, when the reading was ended, "you hear what we are commanded to do."

"You will do your duty," she answered, and rose as if to kneel and pray.

The Dean of Peterborough, Dr. Fletcher, approached the rail. "Madam," he began, with a low obeisance, "the Queen's most excellent Majesty;" "Madam, the Queen's most excellent Majesty"—thrice he commenced his sentence, wanting words to pursue it. When he repeated the words a fourth time, she cut him short.

"Mr. Dean," she said, "I am a Catholic, and must die a Catholic. It is useless to attempt to move me, and your prayers will avail me but little."

"Change your opinion, Madam," he cried, his tongue being loosed at last; "repent of your sins, settle your faith in Christ, by Him to be saved."

"Trouble not yourself further, Mr. Dean," she answered; "I am settled in my own faith, for which I mean to shed my blood."

"I am sorry, Madam," said Shrewsbury, "to see you so addicted to Popery."

"That image of Christ you hold there," said Kent, "will not profit you if he be not engraved in your heart."

She did not reply, and turning her back on Fletcher knelt for her own devotions.

He had been evidently instructed to impair the Catholic complexion of the scene, and the Queen of Scots was determined that he should not succeed. When she knelt he commenced an extempore prayer in which the assembly joined. As his voice sounded out in the hall she raised her own, reciting with powerful deep-chested tones the penitential Psalms in Latin, introducing English sentences at intervals, that the audience might know what she was saying, and praying with especial distinctness for her holy father the Pope.

From time to time, with conspicuous vehemence, she struck the crucifix against her bosom, and then, as the Dean gave up the struggle, leaving her Latin, she prayed in English wholly, still clear and loud. She prayed for the Church which she had been ready to betray, for her son, whom she had disinherited, for the Queen, whom she had endeavoured to murder. She prayed God to avert his wrath from England, that England which she had sent Philip a last message to beseech him to invade. She forgave her enemies, whom she had invited Philip not to forget, and then, praying to the saints to intercede for her with Christ, and kissing the crucifix and crossing her own breast, "Even as thy arms, O Jesus," she cried, "were spread upon the cross, so receive me into thy mercy and forgive my sins."

With these words she rose; the black mutes stepped forward, and in the usual form begged her forgiveness.

"I forgive you," she said, "for now I hope you shall end all my troubles." They offered their help in arranging her dress. "Truly, my lords," she said with a smile to the Earls, "I never had such grooms waiting on me before." Her ladies were allowed to come up upon the scaffold to assist her; for the work to be done was considerable, and had been prepared with no common thought.

She laid her crucifix on her chair. The chief executioner took it as a perquisite; but was ordered instantly to lay it down. The lawn veil was lifted carefully off, not to disturb the hair, and was hung upon the rail. The black robe was next removed. Below it was a petticoat of crimson velvet. The black jacket followed, and under the jacket, was a body of crimson satin. One of her ladies handed her a pair of crimson sleeves, with which she hastily covered her arms; and thus she stood on the black scaffold with the black figures all around her, blood-red from head to foot.

Her reasons for adopting so extraordinary a costume must be left to conjecture. It is only certain that it must have been carefully studied, and that the pictorial effect must have been appalling.

The women, whose firmness had hitherto borne the trial, began now to give way, spasmodic sobs bursting from them which they could not check. "Ne criez vous,"<sup>4</sup> she said, "j'ai promis pour vous." Struggling bravely, they crossed their breasts again and again, she crossing them in turn and bidding them pray for her. Then she knelt on the cushion. Barbara Mowbray bound her eyes with a handkerchief. "Adieu," she said, smiling for the last time and waving her hand to them, "Adieu, au revoir." They stepped back from off the scaffold and left her alone. On her knees she repeated the Psalm, In te, Domine, confido,<sup>5</sup> "In thee, O Lord, have I put my trust." Her shoulders being exposed, two scars became visible, one on either side, and the Earls being now a little behind her, Kent pointed to them with his white wand and looked enquiringly at his companion. Shrewsbury whispered that they were the remains of two abscesses from which she had suffered while living with him at Sheffield.

When the Psalm was finished she felt for the block, and laying down her head muttered: "In manus, Domine, tuas, commendo animam meam."<sup>6</sup> The hard wood seemed to hurt her, for she placed her hands under her neck. The executioners gently removed them, lest they should deaden the blow, and then one of them holding her slightly, the other raised the axe and struck. The scene had been too trying even for the practised headsman of the Tower. His arm wandered. The blow fell on the knot of the handkerchief, and scarcely broke the skin. She neither spoke nor moved. He struck again, this time effectively. The head hung by a shred of skin, which he divided without withdrawing the axe; and at once a metamorphosis was witnessed, strange as was ever wrought by wand of fabled enchanter. The coil fell off, and the false plaits. The laboured illusion vanished. The lady who had knelt before the block was in the maturity of grace and loveliness. The executioner, when he raised the head, as usual, to shew it to the crowd, exposed the withered features of a grizzled, wrinkled old woman.

<sup>4</sup> Do not weep; I have promised that you would not.

<sup>5</sup> "In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust." Ps., xxxi. 1.

<sup>6</sup> "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." St. Luke, xxxiii. 46.

"So perish all enemies of the Queen," said the Dean of Peterborough. A loud Amen rose over the hall. "Such end," said the Earl of Kent, rising and standing over the body, "to the Queen's and the Gospel's enemies."

JOHN DAVIS<sup>1</sup>

AN EXAMPLE OF THE TRUE HERO

(From Short Studies on Great Subjects, 1867-77)

For the present, however, we are forced to content ourselves with a few sketches out of the north-west voyages. Here is one, for instance, which shows how an Englishman could deal with the Indians. Davis had landed at Gilbert Sound, and gone up the country exploring. On his return he found his crew loud in complaints of the thievish propensities of the natives, and urgent to have an example made of some of them. On the next occasion he fired a gun at them with blank cartridge; but their nature was still too strong for them.

"Seeing iron (he says), they could in no case forbear stealing; which, when I perceived, it did but minister to me occasion of laughter to see their simplicity, and I willed that they should not be hardly used, but that our company should be more diligent to keep their things, supposing it to be very hard in so short a time to make them know their evils. . . ."

Leaving Gilbert's Sound, Davis went on to the northwest, and in lat. 63° fell in with a barrier of ice, which he coasted for thirteen days without finding an opening. The very sight of an iceberg was new to all his crew; and the ropes and shrouds, though it was midsummer, becoming compassed with ice,—

<sup>1</sup> John Davis (c. 1550-1605), was an English navigator chiefly famous for three voyages he made in search of a north-west passage. In the first of these voyages he discovered the strait which bears his name.

"The people began to fall sick and faint-hearted—whereupon, very orderly, with good discretion, they entreated me to regard the safety of mine own life, as well as the preservation of theirs; and that I should not, through over-boldness, leave their widows and fatherless children to give me bitter curses.

"Whereupon seeking counsel of God, it pleased His Divine Majesty to move my heart to prosecute that which I hope shall be to His glory, and to the contentation<sup>2</sup> of every Christian mind."

He had two vessels—one of some burthen, the other a pinnace<sup>3</sup> of thirty tons. The result of the counsel which he had sought was, that he made over his own large vessel to such as wished to return, and himself, "thinking it better to die with honour than to return with infamy," went on, with such volunteers as would follow him, in a poor leaky cutter, up the sea now in commemoration of that adventure called Davis's Straits. He ascended<sup>4</sup> North of the furthest known point, among storms and icebergs, when the long days and twilight nights alone saved him from being destroyed, and, coasting back along the American shore, he discovered Hudson's Straits, supposed then to be the long-desired entrance into the Pacific. This exploit drew the attention of Walsingham,<sup>4</sup> and by him Davis was presented to Burleigh,<sup>5</sup> "who was also pleased to show him great encouragement." If either these statesmen or Elizabeth had been twenty years younger, his name would have filled a larger space in history than a small corner of the map of the world; but if he was employed at all in the last years of the century, no vates sacer<sup>6</sup> has been found to celebrate his work, and no clue is left to guide us. He disappears; a cloud falls over him. He is known to have commanded trading vessels in the Eastern seas, and to have returned five times from India. But the details are all lost, and accident has only parted the clouds for a moment to show us the mournful setting with which he, too, went down upon the sea.

In taking out Sir Edward Michellthorne to India, in 1604, he fell in with a crew of Japanese, whose ship had been burnt, drifting at sea, without provisions, in a leaky junk. He supposed them to be pirates, but he did not choose to leave them to so wretched a death, and took them on board; and in a few hours,

<sup>2</sup> Contenting.

<sup>3</sup> A small sailing ship capable of being propelled by oars.

<sup>4</sup> A member of the Privy Council and, after Burleigh, Queen Elizabeth's most important minister.

<sup>5</sup> Lord Burleigh, who as Secretary of State under Elizabeth originated the policy that made her reign famous.

<sup>6</sup> Holy prophet.

watching their opportunity, they murdered him.

As the fool dieth, so dieth the wise, and there is no difference; it was the chance of the sea, and the ill reward of a humane action—a melancholy end for such a man—like the end of a warrior, not dying Epaminondas-like<sup>7</sup> on the field of victory, but cut off in some poor brawl or ambushade. But so it was with all these men. They were cut off in the flower of their days, and few of them laid their bones in the sepulchres of their fathers. They knew the service which they had chosen, and they did not ask the wages for which they had not laboured. Life with them was no summer holiday, but a holy sacrifice offered up to duty, and what their Master sent was welcome. Beautiful is old age—beautiful as the slow-dropping mellow autumn of a rich glorious summer. In the old man, Nature has fulfilled her work; she loads him with her blessings; she fills him with the fruits of a well-spent life; and surrounded by his children and his children's children, she rocks him softly away to a grave, to which he is followed with blessings. God forbid we should not call it beautiful. It is beautiful, but not the most beautiful. There is another life, hard, rough, and thorny, trodden with bleeding feet and aching brow; the life of which the cross is the symbol; a battle which no peace follows, this side the grave; which the grave gapes to finish, before the victory is won; and—strange that it should be so—this is the highest life of man. Look back along the great names of history; there is none whose life has been other than this. They to whom it has been given to do the really highest work in this earth—whoever they are, Jew or Gentile, Pagan or Christian, warriors, legislators, philosophers, priests, poets, kings, slaves—one and all, their fate has been the same—the same bitter cup has been given to them to drink. And so it was with the servants of England in the sixteenth century. Their life was a long battle, either with the elements or with men; and it was enough for them to fulfil their work, and to pass away in the hour when God had nothing more to bid them do. They did not complain, and why should we complain for them? Peaceful life was not what they desired, and an honourable death had no terrors for them. . . .

"Seeing," in Gilbert's<sup>8</sup> own brave words, "that death is inevitable, and the fame of virtue is immortal; wherefore in this behalf mutare vel timere sperno."<sup>9</sup>

<sup>7</sup> A great general and statesman of Thebes.

<sup>8</sup> Sir Humphrey Gilbert the great explorer, who was lost in a storm off the Azores in 1583. V. p. 179, and n. 1. supra.

<sup>9</sup> I scorn either to change or to fear.

John Ruskin

1819-1900

SOME SEA PICTURES OF TURNER

(From Modern Painters,<sup>1</sup> Part I, 1843)

Few people, comparatively, have ever seen the effect on the sea of a powerful gale continued without intermission for three or four days and nights, and to those who have not, I believe it must be unimaginable, not from the mere force or size of surge, but from the complete annihilation of the limit between sea and air. The water from its prolonged agitation is beaten, not into mere creaming foam, but into masses of accumulated yeast, which hang in ropes and wreaths from wave to wave, and where one curls over to break, form a festoon like a drapery, from its edge; these are taken up in wind, not in dissipating dust, but bodily, in writhing, hanging, coiling masses, which make the air white and thick as with snow, only the flakes are a foot or two long each; the surges themselves are full of foam in their very bodies, underneath, making them white all through, as the water is under a great cataract; and their masses, being thus half water and half air, are torn to pieces by the wind whenever they rise, and carried away in roaring smoke, which chokes and strangles like actual water. Add to this that when the air has been exhausted of its moisture by long rain, the spray of the sea is caught by it as described above (Section III. chap. vi., § 13), and covers its surface not merely with the smoke of finely divided water, but with boiling mist; imagine also the low rain-clouds brought down to the very level of the sea, as I have often seen them, whirling and flying in rags and fragments from wave to wave; and finally, conceive the surges themselves in their utmost pitch of power, velocity, vastness, and madness, lifting themselves in precipices and peaks, furrowed with the whirl of ascent, through all this chaos; and you will understand that there is indeed no distinction left between the sea and air; that no object, nor horizon, nor any landmark or natural evidence of position is left; that the heaven is all spray, and the ocean all cloud, and that you can see no farther in any direction than you could see through a cataract. Suppose the effect of the first sunbeam sent from above to shew this annihilation to itself, and you have the sea picture of the Academy, 1842—the Snowstorm, one of the very grandest statements of sea-motion, mist, and light, that has ever been put on canvas, even by Turner.<sup>2</sup> Of course it was not understood; his finest works never are; but there was some apology for the public's not comprehending this, for few people have had the opportunity of seeing the sea at such a time, and when they have, cannot face it. To hold by a mast or a rock, and watch it, is a prolonged endurance of drowning which few people have the courage to go through. To those who have, it is one of the noblest lessons of nature.

<sup>1</sup> Modern Painters, a book in five volumes, was undertaken as an answer to the critics of Turner's paintings, in it Ruskin desired to demonstrate Turner's essential truth to nature.

But I think the noblest sea that Turner has ever painted, and, if so, the noblest certainly ever painted by man, is that of the Slave Ship, the chief Academy picture of the exhibition of 1840. It is a sunset on the Atlantic after prolonged storm; but the storm is partially lulled, and the torn and streaming rain-clouds are partially moving in scarlet lines to lose themselves in the hollow of the night. The whole surface of sea included in the picture is divided into two ridges of enormous swell, not high, nor local, but a low, broad heaving of the whole ocean, like the lifting of its bosom by deep-drawn breath after the torture of the storm. Between these two ridges, the fire of the sunset falls along the trough of the sea, dyeing it with an awful but glorious light, the intense and lurid splendor which burns like gold and bathes like blood. Along this fiery path and valley, the tossing waves by which the swell of the sea is restlessly divided, lift themselves in dark, indefinite, fantastic forms, each casting a faint and ghastly shadow behind it along the illumined foam. They do not rise everywhere, but three or four together in wild groups, fitfully and furiously, as the under strength of the swell compels or permits them; leaving between them treacherous spaces of level and whirling water, now lighted with green and lamplike fire, now flashing back the gold of the declining sun, now fearfully dyed from above with the indistinguishable images of the burning clouds, which fall upon them in flakes of crimson and scarlet, and give to the reckless waves the added motion of their own fiery flying. Purple and blue, the lurid shadows of the hollow breakers are cast upon the mist of the night, which gathers cold and low, advancing like the shadow of death upon the guilty ship<sup>3</sup> as it labors amidst the lightning of the sea, its thin masts written upon the sky in lines of blood, girded with condemnation in that fearful hue which signs the sky with horror, and mixes its flaming flood with the sunlight,—and cast far along the desolate heave of the sepulchral waves, incarnadines the multitudinous sea.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>2</sup> J. M. W. Turner (1775-1851), an English landscape painter.

<sup>3</sup> "She is a slaver, throwing her slaves overboard. The near sea is encumbered with corpses."—Ruskin.

I believe, if I were reduced to rest Turner's immortality upon any single work, I should choose this. Its daring conception—ideal in the highest sense of the word—is based on the purest truth, and wrought out with the concentrated knowledge of a life; its color is absolutely perfect, not one false or morbid hue in any part or line, and so modulated that every square inch of canvas is a perfect composition; its drawing as accurate as fearless; the ship buoyant, bending, and full of motion; its tones as true as they are wonderful; and the whole picture dedicated to the most sublime of subjects and impressions—(completing the perfect system of all truth, which we have shown to be formed by Turner's works)—the power, majesty, and deathfulness of the open, deep, illimitable sea.

THE LAMP OF MEMORY

(From The Seven Lamps of Architecture, 1849)

I. Among the hours of his life to which the writer looks back with peculiar gratitude, as having been marked by more than ordinary fullness of joy or clearness of teaching, is one passed, now some years ago, near time of sunset, among the broken masses of pine forest which skirt the course of the Ain,<sup>1</sup> above the village of Champagnole,<sup>2</sup> in the Jura. It is a spot which has all the solemnity, with none of the savageness, of the Alps; where there is the sense of a great power beginning to be manifested in the earth, and of a deep and majestic concord in the rise of the long low lines of piny hills; the first utterance of those mighty mountain symphonies, soon to be more loudly lifted and wildly broken along the battlements of the Alps. But their strength is as yet restrained; and the far reaching ridges of pastoral mountain succeed each other, like the long and sighing swell which moves over quiet waters from some far off stormy sea. And there is a deep tenderness pervading that vast monotony. The destructive forces and the stern expression of the central ranges are alike withdrawn. No frost-ploughed, dust-encumbered paths of ancient glacier fret the soft Jura pastures; no splintered heaps of ruin break the fair ranks of her forest; no pale, defiled, or furious rivers send their rude and changeable ways among her rocks. Patiently, eddy by eddy, the clear green streams wind along their well-known beds; and under the dark quietness of the undisturbed pines, there spring up, year by year, such company of joyful flowers as I know not the like of among all the blessings of the earth. It was spring time, too; and all were coming forth in clusters crowded for very love; there was room enough for all, but they crushed their leaves into all manner of strange shapes only to be nearer each other. There was the wood anemone, star after star, closing every now and then into nebule; and there was the oxalis, troop by troop, like virginal processions of the Mois de Marie,<sup>3</sup> the dark vertical clefts in the limestone choked up with them as with heavy snow, and touched with ivy on the edges—ivy as light and lovely as the vine; and, ever and anon, a blue gush of violets, and cowslip bells in sunny places; and in the more open ground, the vetch, and comfrey,<sup>4</sup> and mezezon,<sup>5</sup> and the small sapphire buds of the Polygala Alpina, and the wild strawberry, just a blossom or two, all showered amidst the golden softness of deep, warm, amber-coloured moss. I came out presently on the edge of the ravine: the solemn murmur of its waters rose suddenly from beneath, mixed with the singing of the thrushes among the pine boughs; and, on the opposite side of the valley, walled all along as it was by grey cliffs of limestone, there was a hawk sailing slowly off their brow, touching them nearly with his wings, and with the shadows of the pines flickering upon his plumage from above; but with the fall of a hundred fathoms under his breast, and the curling pools of the green river gliding and glittering dizzily beneath him, their foam globes moving with him as he flew. It would be difficult to conceive a scene less dependent upon any other interest than that of its own secluded and serious beauty; but the writer well remembers the sudden blankness and chill which were cast upon it when he endeavoured, in order more strictly to arrive at the sources of its impressiveness, to imagine it, for a moment, a scene in some aboriginal forest of the New Continent. The flowers in an instant lost their light, the river its music; the hills became oppressively desolate; a heaviness in the boughs of the darkened forest showed how much of their former power had been dependent upon a life which was not theirs, how much of the glory of the imperishable, or continually renewed, creation is reflected from things more precious in their memories than it, in its renewing. Those ever springing flowers and ever flowing streams had been dyed by the deep colours of human endurance, valour, and virtue; and the crests of the sable hills that rose against the evening sky received a deeper worship, because their far shadows fell eastward over the iron wall of Joux,<sup>6</sup> and the four-square keep of Granson.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> "The multitudinous seas incarnadine." Macb. II. ii.

<sup>2</sup> A river in the eastern part of France, rising in the Jura mountains.

<sup>3</sup> A small town on the river Ain.

II. It is as the centralisation and protectress of this sacred influence, that Architecture is to be regarded by us with the most serious thought. We may live without her, and worship without her, but we cannot remember without her. How cold is all history, how lifeless all imagery, compared to that which the living nation writes, and the uncorrupted marble bears!—how many pages of doubtful record might we not often spare, for a few stones left one upon another! The ambition of the old Babel builders<sup>8</sup> was well directed for this world: there are but two strong conquerors of the forgetfulness of man, Poetry and Architecture; and the latter in some sort includes the former, and is mightier in its reality: it is well to have, not only what men have thought and felt, but what their hands have handled, and their strength wrought, and their eyes beheld, all the days of their life. The age of Homer is surrounded with darkness, his very personality with doubt. Not so that of Pericles:<sup>9</sup> and the day is coming when we shall confess, that we have learned more of Greece out of the crumbled fragments of her sculpture than even from her sweet singers or soldier historians. And if indeed there be any profit in our knowledge of the past, or any joy in the thought of being remembered hereafter, which can give strength to present exertion, or patience to present endurance, there are two duties respecting national architecture whose importance it is impossible to overrate: the first, to render the architecture of the day, historical; and, the second, to preserve, as the most precious of inheritances, that of past ages.

SCIENCE AND MODERN PROGRESS

(From Modern Painters, Part IV, 1856)

The great mechanical impulses of the age, of which most of us are so proud, are a mere <sup>6</sup> The fort of Joux in the Jura, near the boundary of Switzerland.

<sup>7</sup> An ancient village on the Lake of Neuchâtel in Switzerland.

<sup>8</sup> Gen., xi. 4. "And they said one to another, Go to, let us build us a city and a tower whose top may reach unto heaven, and let us make us a name; lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth."

<sup>9</sup> Pericles became the ruler of Athens after he had ostracized Cimon. The Age of Pericles is noted for the adornment of the city and for its brilliant culture.

<sup>3</sup> May (Month of Mary) held sacred to the Virgin.

<sup>4</sup> A plant of the Borage family.

<sup>5</sup> A shrub bearing fragrant flowers.

passing fever, half-speculative, half-childish. People will discover at last that royal roads to anything can no more be laid in iron than they can in dust; that there are, in fact, no royal roads to anywhere worth going to, that if there were, it would that instant cease to be worth going to,—I mean so far as the things to be obtained are in any way estimable in terms of price. For there are two classes of precious things in the world: those that God gives us for nothing—sun, air, and life (both mortal life and immortal); and the secondarily precious things, worldly wine and milk, can only be bought for definite money; they can never be cheapened. No cheating nor bargaining will ever get a single thing out of nature's "establishment" at half price. Do we want to be strong?—we must work. Do we hungry?—we must starve. To be happy?—we must be kind. To be wise?—we must look and think. No changing of place at a hundred miles an hour, nor making of stuffs a thousand yards a minute, will make us one whit stronger, happier, or wiser. There was always more in the world than men could see, walked they ever so slowly; they will see it no better for going fast. And they will at last, and soon too, find out that their grand inventions for conquering (as they think) space and time, do, in reality, conquer nothing; for space and time are, in their own essence, unconquerable, and besides did not want any sort of conquering; they wanted using. A fool always wants to shorten space and time; a wise man wants to lengthen both. A fool wants to kill space and kill time: a wise man, first to gain them, then to animate them. Your railroad, when you come to understand it, is only a device for making the world smaller: and as for being able to talk from place to place, that is, indeed, well and convenient; but suppose you have originally nothing to say. We shall be obliged at last to confess, what we should long ago have known, that the really precious things are thought and sight, not pace. It does a bullet no good to go fast; and a man, if he be truly a man, no harm to go slow; for his glory is not at all in going, but in being.

"Well; but railroads and telegraphs are so useful for communicating knowledge to savage nations." Yes, if you have any to give them. If you know nothing but railroads, and can communicate nothing but aqueous vapor and gunpowder,—what then? But if you have any other thing than those to give, then the railroad is of use only because it communicates that other thing, and the question is,—what that other thing may be. Is it religion? I believe if we had really wanted to communicate that, we could have done it in less than 1800 years, without steam. Most of the good religious communication that I remember has been done on foot; and it cannot easily be done faster than at foot pace. Is it science? But what science—of motion, meat, and medicine? Well; when you have moved your savage, and dressed your savage, fed him with white bread, and shown him how to set a limb,—what next? Follow out that question. Suppose every obstacle overcome; give your savage every advantage of civilization to the full: suppose that you have put the Red Indian in tight shoes; taught the Chinese how to make Wedgewood's ware, and to paint it with colors that will rub off; and persuaded all Hindoo women that it is more pious to torment husbands into graves than to burn themselves at the burial,—what next? Gradually, thinking on from point to point, we shall come to perceive that all true happiness and nobleness are near us, and yet neglected by us; and that till we have learned how to be happy and noble, we have not much to tell, even to Red Indians. The delights of horse-racing and hunting, of assemblies in the night instead of the day, of costly and wearisome music, of costly and burdensome dress, of chagrined contention for place or power, or wealth, or the eyes of the multitude; and all the endless occupation without purpose, and idleness without rest, of our vulgar world, are not, it seems to me, enjoyments we need be ambitious to communicate. And all real and wholesome enjoyments possible to man have been just as possible to him, since first he was made of the earth, as they are now; and they are possible to him chiefly in peace. To watch the corn grow, and the blossoms set; to draw hard breath over ploughshare or spade; to read, to think, to love, to hope, to pray,—these are the things that make men happy; they have always had the power of doing these, they never will have power to do more. The world's prosperity or adversity depends upon our knowing and teaching these few things: but upon iron, or glass, or electricity, or steam, in no wise.

And I am Utopian and enthusiastic enough to believe, that the time will come when the world will discover this. It has now made its experiments in every possible direction but the right one; and it seems that it must, at last, try the right one, in a mathematical necessity. It has tried fighting, and preaching, and fasting, buying and selling, pomp and parsimony, pride and humiliation,—every possible manner of existence in which it could conjecture there was any happiness or dignity; and all the while, as it bought, sold, and fought, and fasted, and wearied itself with policies, and ambitions, and self-denials, God had placed its real happiness in the keeping of the little mosses of the wayside, and of the clouds of the firmament. Now and then a weary king, or a tormented slave, found out where the true kingdoms of the world were, and possessed himself, in a furrow or two of garden ground, of a truly infinite dominion. But the world would not believe their report, and went on trampling down the mosses, and forgetting the clouds, and seeking happiness in its own way, until, at last, blundering and late, came natural science; and in natural science not only the observation of things, but the finding out of new uses for them. Of course the world, having a choice left to it, went wrong as usual, and thought that these mere material uses were to be the sources of its happiness. It got the clouds packed into iron cylinders, and made it carry its wise self at their own cloud pace. It got weaveable fibres out of the mosses, and made clothes for itself, cheap and fine,—here was happiness at last. To go as fast as the clouds, and manufacture everything out of anything,—here was paradise, indeed!

And now, when in a little while it is unparadised again, if there were any other mistake that the world could make, it would of course make it. But I see not that there is any other; and, standing fairly well at its wits' end, having found that going fast, when it is used to it, is no more paradisiacal than going slow; and that all the prints and cottons in Manchester cannot make it comfortable in its mind, I do verily believe it will come, finally to understand that God paints the clouds and shapes the moss-fibres, that men may be happy in seeing Him at His work, and that in resting quietly beside Him, and watching His working, and—according to the power He has communicated to ourselves, and the guidance He grants,—in carrying out His purposes of peace and charity among all His creatures, are the only real happinesses that ever were, or will be, possible to mankind.

MONEY

(From The Crown of Wild Olive, 1866)

The lawful basis of wealth is, that a man who works should be paid the fair value of his work; and that if he does not choose to spend it today, he should have free leave to keep it, and spend it tomorrow. Thus, an industrious man working daily, attains at last the possession of an accumulated sum of wealth, to which he has absolute right. The idle person who will not work, and the wasteful person who lays nothing by, at the end of the same time will be doubly poor—poor in possession, and dissolute in moral habit; and he will then naturally covet the money which the other has saved. And if he is then allowed to attack the other, and rob him of his well earned wealth, there is no more any motive for saving, or any reward for good conduct; and all society is thereupon dissolved, or exists only in systems of rapine. Therefore the first necessity of social life is the clearness of national conscience in enforcing the law—that he should keep who has Justly Earned.

That law I say, is the proper basis of distinction between rich and poor. But there is also a false basis of distinction; namely, the power held over those who are earning wealth by those who already possess it, and only use it to gain more. There will be always a number of men who would fain set themselves to the accumulation of wealth as the sole object of their lives. Necessarily that class of men is an uneducated class, inferior in intellect, and more or less cowardly. It is physically impossible for a well-educated, intellectual, or brave man to make money the chief object of his thoughts; just as it is for him to make his dinner the principal object of them. All healthy people like their dinners, but their dinner is not the main object of their lives. So all healthily-minded people, like making money—ought to like it, and to enjoy the sensation of winning it; but the main object of their life is not money; it is something better than money. A good soldier, for instance, mainly wishes to do his fighting well. He is glad of his pay—very properly so, and justly grumbles when you keep him ten years without it—still, his main notion of life is to win battles, not to be paid for winning them. So of clergymen. They like pew-rents, and baptismal fees, of course; but yet, if they are brave and well-educated, the pew-rent is not the sole object of their lives, and the baptismal fee is not the sole purpose of the baptism; the clergyman's object is essentially to baptize and preach, not to be paid for preaching. So of doctors. They like fees no doubt,—ought to like them; yet if they are brave and well-educated the entire object of their lives is not fees. They, on the whole, desire to cure the sick; and,—if they are good doctors, and the choice were fairly put to them—would rather cure their patient, and lose their fee, than kill him, and get it. And so with all other brave and rightly trained men; their work is first, their fee second—very important always, but still, second. But in every nation, as I said, there are a vast class who are ill-educated, cowardly, and more or less stupid. And with these people, just as certainly the fee is first, and the work second, as with the brave people the work is first, and the fee second. And this is no small distinction. It is between life and death in a man; between heaven and hell for him. You cannot serve two masters:—you must serve one or other. If your work is first with you, and your fee second, work is your master, and the lord of work, who is God. But if your fee is first with you, and your work second, fee is your master, and the lord of fee, who is the Devil; and not only the Devil, but the lowest of devils—the “least erected fiend that fell.”<sup>1</sup> So there you have it in brief terms; Work first—you are God’s servants; Fee first—you are the Fiend’s. And it makes a difference, now and ever, believe me, whether you serve him who has on His vesture and thigh written, “King of Kings,”<sup>2</sup> and whose service is perfect freedom; or him on whose vesture and thigh the name is written, “Slave of Slaves,” and whose service is perfect slavery.

However in every nation there are, and must always be, a certain number of these Fiend’s servants, who have it principally for the object of their life to make money. They are always, as I said, more or less stupid, and cannot conceive of anything else so nice as money. Stupidity is always the basis of the Judas bargain. We do great injustice to Iscariot, in thinking him wicked above all common wickedness. He was only a common money-lover, and, like all money-lovers, did not understand Christ;—could not make out the worth of Him, or meaning of Him. He never thought he would be killed. He was horror-struck when he found that Christ would be killed; threw his money away instantly, and hanged himself. How many of our present money-seekers, think you, would have the grace to hang themselves, whoever was killed? But Judas was a common, selfish, muddle-headed, pilfering fellow; his hand always in the bag of the poor, not caring for them. Helpless to understand Christ, he yet believed in Him, much more than most of us do; had seen Him do miracles, thought he was quite strong enough to shift for Himself, and he, Judas, might as well make his own little bye-perquisites out of the affair. Christ would come out of it well enough, and he have his thirty pieces. Now, that is the money-seeker’s idea, all over the world. He doesn’t hate Christ, but can’t understand Him—doesn’t care for Him—sees no good in that benevolent business; makes his own little job out of it at all events, come what will. And thus, out of every mass of men, you have a certain number of bagmen—your “fee-first” men, whose main object is to make money. And they do make it—make it in all sorts of unfair ways, chiefly by the force and weight of money itself, or what is called the power of capital; that is to say, the power which money, once obtained, has over the labour of the poor, so that the capitalist can take all its produce to himself, except the labourer’s food. That is the modern Judas’s way of “carrying the bag,” and “bearing what is put therein.”

Nay, but (it is asked) how is that an unfair advantage? Has not the man who has worked for the money a right to use it as he best can? No, in this respect, money is now exactly what mountain promontories over public roads were in old times. The barons fought for them fairly;—the strongest and cunningest got them; then fortified them, and made every one who passed below pay toll. Well, capital now is exactly what crags were then. Men fight fairly (we will, at least, grant so much, though it is more than we ought) for their money; but, once having got it, the fortified millionaire can make everybody who passes below pay toll to his million, and build another tower of his money castle. And I can tell you, the poor vagrants by the roadside suffer quite as much from the bag-baron, as ever they did from the crag-baron. Bags and crags have just the same result on rags. I have no time however, tonight, to show you in how many ways the power of capital is unjust; but remember this one great principle—you will find it unfailing—that whenever money is the principal object of life with either man or nation, it is both got ill, and spent ill; and does harm both in the getting and spending; but when it is not the principal object, it and all other things will be well got, and well spent.

TASTE

(From the same)

Now pardon me for telling you<sup>1</sup> frankly you cannot have good architecture merely by asking people’s advice on occasion. All good architecture is the expression of national life and character; and it is produced by a prevalent and eager national taste, or desire for beauty. And I want you to think a little of the deep significance of this word "taste;" for no statement of mine has been more earnestly or oftener controverted than that good taste is essentially a moral quality. "No," say many of my antagonists, "taste is one thing, morality is another. Tell us what is pretty: we shall be glad to know that; but we need no sermons, even were you able to preach them, which may be doubted."

<sup>1</sup> This selection is from an address delivered in the Town Hall at Bradford, a prosperous manufacturing city of Yorkshire. Ruskin had been invited to lecture there on an Exchange which the city proposed to build. He said little of the Exchange, but spoke of the relation of industrial civilization to art. The address was afterwards included in The Crown of Wild Olive.

<sup>1</sup> “Mammon, the least erected spirit that fell.” Milton, Par. Lost, l. 679.

<sup>2</sup> Rev., xix. 16.

Permit me, therefore, to fortify this old dogma of mine somewhat. Taste is not only a part and an index of morality;—it is the ONLY morality. The first, and last, and closest trial question to any living creature is, "What do you like?" Tell me what you like and I'll tell you what you are. Go out into the street, and ask the first man or woman you meet, what their "taste" is; and if they answer candidly, you know them, body and soul. "You, my friend in the rags, with the unsteady gait, what do you like?" "A pipe and a quarter of gin." I know you. "You, good woman, with the quick step and tidy bonnet, what do you like?" "A swept hearth, and a 20 clean tea-table; and my husband opposite me, and a baby at my breast." Good, I know you also. "You, little girl with the golden hair and the soft eyes, what do you like?" "My canary, and a run among the wood hyacinths." "You, little boy with the dirty hands, and the low forehead, what do you like?" "A shy at the sparrows, and a game at pitch farthing." Good; we know them all now. What more need we ask?

"Nay," perhaps you answer; "we need rather to ask what these people and children do, than what they like. If they do right, it is no matter that they like what is wrong; and if they do wrong, it is no matter that they like 40 what is right. Doing is the great thing; and it does not matter that the man likes drinking, so that he does not drink; nor that the little girl likes to be kind to her canary, if she will not learn her lessons; nor that the little boy 45 likes throwing stones at the sparrows, if he goes to the Sunday school." Indeed for a short time, and in a provisional sense, this is true. For if, resolutely, people do what is right, in time to come they like doing it. But 50 they only are in a right moral state when they have come to like doing it; and as long as they don't like it, they are still in a vicious state. The man is not in health of body who is always thinking of the bottle in the cupboard, though 55 he bravely bears his thirst; but the man who heartily enjoys water in the morning, and wine in the evening, each in its own proper time. And the entire object of true education is to make people not merely do the right things, but enjoy the right things:—not merely industrious, but to love industry—not merely learned, but to love knowledge—not merely 5 pure, but to love purity—not merely just, but to hunger and thirst after justice.

But you may answer or think, "Is the liking for outside ornaments,—for pictures, or statues, or furniture, or architecture, a moral quality?"

10 Yes, most surely, if a rightly set liking. Taste for any pictures or statues is not a moral quality, but taste for good ones is. Only here again we have to define the word "good," clever—or learned—or difficult in the doing. Take a 15 picture by Teniers, of sots quarreling over their dice; it is an entirely clever picture; so clever that nothing in its kind has ever been done equal to it; but it is also an entirely base and evil picture. It is an expression of delight in the prolonged contemplation of a vile thing, and delight in that is an "unmannered," or "immoral" quality. It is "bad taste" in the profoundest sense—it is the taste of the devils. On the other hand, a picture of Titian's, or a 20 Greek statue, or a Greek coin, or a Turner landscape, expresses delight in the perpetual contemplation of a good and perfect thing. That is an entirely moral quality—it is the taste of the angels. And all delight in fine art, and all love of it, resolve themselves into simple 30 love of that which deserves love. That deserving is the quality which we call "loveliness" (we ought to have an opposite word, hateliness, to be said of the things which 35 serve to be hated); and it is not an indifferent nor optional thing whether we love this or that; but it is just the vital function of all our being. What we like determines what we are, and is the sign of what we are; and to teach taste is to inevitably form character.

As I was thinking over this, in walking up Fleet Street the other day, my eye caught the title of a book standing open in a bookseller's window. It was—"On the necessity of the diffusion of taste among all classes." "Ah," I thought to myself, "my classifying friend, when you have diffused your taste, where will your classes be? The man who likes what you like, belongs to the same class with you, I think. Inevitably so. You may put him to 50 other work if you choose; but, by the condition you have brought him into, he will dislike the work as much as you would yourself. You get hold of a scavenger or a costermonger, who enjoyed the Newgate Calendar<sup>2</sup> for literature, and "Pop goes the weasel" for music. You think you can make him like Dante and Beethoven? I wish you joy of your lessons; but if you do, you have made a gentleman of him: he won't like to go back to his costermongering."

<sup>2</sup> An account of famous criminals who had served terms in Newgate prison.

ART AND CHARACTER

(From The Queen of the Air, 1869)

I have now only a few words to say, bearing on what seems to me present need, respecting the third function of Athena, conceived as the directress of human passion, resolution, and labour.

Few words, for I am not yet prepared to give an accurate distinction between the intellectual rule of Athena and that of the Muses: but, broadly, the Muses, with their king, preside over meditative, historical, and poetic arts, whose end is the discovery of light or truth, and the creation of beauty: but Athena rules over moral passion, and practically useful art. She does not make men learned, but prudent and subtle: she does not teach them to make their work beautiful, but to make it right.

In different places of my writings, and through many years of endeavour to define the laws of art, I have insisted on this rightness in work, and on its connection with virtue of character, in so many partial ways, that the impression left on the reader's mind—if, indeed, it was ever impressed at all—has been confused and uncertain. In beginning the series of my corrected works, I wish this principle (in my own mind the foundation of every other) to be made plain, if nothing else is: and will try, therefore, to make it so, as far as, by any effort, I can put it into unmistakable words. And, first, here is a very simple statement of it, given lately in a lecture on the Architecture of the Valley of the Somme, which will be better read in this place than in its incidental connection with my account of the porches of Abbeville.

I had used, in a preceding part of the lecture, the expression, "by what faults" this Gothic architecture fell. We continually speak thus of works of art. We talk of their faults and merits, as of virtues and vices. What do we mean by talking of the faults of a picture, or the merits of a piece of stone?

The faults of a work of art are the faults of its workman, and its virtues his virtues.

Great art is the expression of the mind of a great man, and mean art, that of the want of mind of a weak man. A foolish person builds foolishly, and a wise one, sensibly; a virtuous one, beautifully; and a vicious one, basely.

If stone work is well put together, it means that a thoughtful man planned it, and a careful man cut it, and an honest man cemented it. If it has too much ornament, it means that its carver was too greedy of pleasure; if too little, that he was rude, or insensitive, or stupid, and the like. So that when once you have learned how to spell these most precious of all legends,—pictures and buildings,—you may read the characters of men, and of nations, in their art, as in a mirror;—nay, as in a microscope, and magnified a hundredfold; for the character becomes passionate in the art, and intensifies itself in all its noblest or meanest delights.

Nay, not only as in a microscope, but as under a scalpel, and in dissection; for a man may hide himself from you, or misrepresent himself to you, every other way; but he cannot in his work: there, be sure, you have him to the inmost. All that he likes, all that he sees,—all that he can do,—his imaginations, his affections, his perseverance, his impatience, his clumsiness, cleverness, everything is there. If the work is a cobweb, you know it was made by a spider; if a honeycomb, by a bee; a worm-cast is thrown up by a worm, and a nest wreathed by a bird; and a house built by a man, worthily, if he be worthy, and ignobly, if he is ignoble.

And always, from the least to the greatest, as the made thing is good or bad, so is the maker of it.

You all use this faculty of judgment more or less, whether you theoretically admit the principle or not. Take that floral gable; you don't suppose the man who built Stonehenge could have built that, or that the man who built that, would have built Stonehenge? Do you think an old Roman would have liked such a piece of filagree work? or that Michael Angelo would have spent his time in twisting these stems of roses in and out? Or, of modern hand-craftsmen, do you think a burglar, or a brute, or a pickpocket, could have carved it? Could Bill Sykes have done it? or the Dodger,<sup>1</sup> dexterous with finger and tool? You will find in the end, that no man could have done it but exactly the man who did it; and by looking close at it, you may, if you know your letters, read precisely the manner of man he was.

Now I must insist on this matter, for a grave reason. Of all facts concerning art, this is the one most necessary to be known, that, while manufacture is the work of hands only, art is the work of the whole spirit of man; and as that spirit is, so is the deed of it: and by whatever power of vice or virtue any art is produced, the same vice or virtue it reproduces and teaches. That which is born of evil begets evil; and that which is born of valour and honour, teaches valour and honour. All art is either infection or education. It must be one or other of these.

<sup>1</sup> Criminal characters in Dickens' Oliver Twist.

This, I repeat, of all truths respecting art, is the one of which understanding is the most precious, and denial the most deadly. And I assert it the more, because it has of late been repeatedly, expressly, and with contumely denied; and that by high authority: and I hold it one of the most sorrowful facts connected with the decline of the arts among us, that English gentlemen, of high standing as scholars and artists, should have been blinded into the acceptance, and been betrayed into the assertion, of a fallacy which only authority such as theirs could have rendered for an instant credible. For the contrary of it is written in the history of all great nations; it is the one sentence always inscribed on the steps of their thrones; the one concordant voice in which they speak to us out of the dust.

All such nations first manifest themselves as a pure and beautiful animal race, with intense energy and imagination. They live lives of hardship by choice, and by grand instinct of manly discipline: they become fierce and irresistible soldiers; the nation is always its own army, and their king, or chief head of government, is always their first soldier. Pharaoh, or David, or Leonidas, or Valerius, or Barbarossa, or Cœur de Lion, or St. Louis, or Dandolo, or Frederick the Great;—Egyptian, Jew, Greek, Roman, German, English, French, Venetian,—that is inviolable law for them all; their king must be their first soldier, or they cannot be in progressive power. Then, after their great military period; in which, without betraying the discipline of war, they add to their great soldiery the delights and possessions of a delicate and tender home-life; and then, for all nations, is the time of their perfect art, which is the fruit, the evidence, the reward of their national ideal of character, developed by the finished care of the occupations of peace. That is the history of all true art that ever was, or can be: palpably the history of it,—unmistakably,—written on the forehead of it in letters of light,—in tongues of fire, by which the seal of virtue is branded as deep as ever iron burnt into a convict's flesh the seal of crime. But always, hitherto, after the great period, has followed the day of luxury, and pursuit of the arts for pleasure only. And all has so ended.

Thus far of Abbeville building. Now I have here asserted two things,—first, the foundation of art in moral character; next, the foundation of moral character in war. I must make both these assertions clearer, and prove them.

First, of the foundation of art in moral character. Of course art-gift and amiability of disposition are two different things; a good man is not necessarily a painter, nor does an eye for colour necessarily imply an honest mind. But great art implies the union of both powers: it is the expression, by an art-gift, of a pure soul. If the gift is not there, we can have no art at all; and if the soul—and a right soul too—is not there, the art is bad, however dextrous.

But also, remember, that the art-gift itself is only the result of the moral character of generations. A bad woman may have a sweet voice; but that sweetness of voice comes of the past morality of her race. That she can sing with it at all, she owes to the determination of laws of music by the morality of the past. Every act, every impulse, of virtue and vice, affects in any creature, face, voice, nervous power, and vigour and harmony of invention, at once. Perseverance in rightness of human conduct, renders, after a certain number of generations, human art possible; every sin clouds it, be it ever so little a one; and persistent vicious living and following of pleasure render, after a certain number of generations, all art impossible. Men are deceived by the long-suffering of the laws of nature; and mistake in a nation, the reward of the virtue of its sires for the issue of its own sins. The time of their visitation will come, and that inevitably; for, it is always true, that if the fathers have eaten sour grapes, the children's teeth are set on edge. And for the individual, as soon as you have learned to read, you may, as I have said, know him to the heart's core, through his art. Let his art-gift be never so great, and cultivated to the height by the schools of a great race of men; and it is still but a tapestry thrown over his own being and inner soul; and the bearing of it will show, infallibly, whether it hangs on a man, or on a skeleton. If you are dim-eyed, you may not see the difference in the fall of the folds at first, but learn how to look, and the folds themselves will become transparent, and you shall see through them the death's shape, or the divine one, making the tissue above it as a cloud of light, or as a winding sheet.

Then farther, observe, I have said (and you will find it true, and that to the uttermost) that, as all lovely art is rooted in virtue, so it bears fruit of virtue, and is didactic in its own nature. It is often didactic also in actually expressed thought, as Giotto's, Michael Angelo's, Dürer's, and hundreds more; but that is not its special function,—it is didactic chiefly by being beautiful; but beautiful with haunting thought, no less than with form, and full of myths that can be read only with the heart.

For instance, there is at this moment open beside me as I write, a page of Persian manuscript, wrought with wreathed azure and gold, and soft green, and violet, and ruby and scarlet, into one field of pure resplendence. It is wrought to delight the eyes only; and it does delight them; and the man who did it surely had eyes in his head; but not much more. It is not didactic art, but its author was happy; and it will do the good, and the harm, that mere pleasure can do. But, opposite me, is an early Turner drawing of the lake of Geneva, taken about two miles from Geneva, on the Lausanne road, with Mont Blanc in the distance. The old city is seen lying beyond the waveless waters, veiled with a sweet misty veil of Athena's weaving: a faint light of morning, peaceful exceedingly, and almost colourless, shed from behind the Voirons, increases into soft amber along the slopes of the Salève, and is just seen, and no more, on the fair warm fields of its summit, between the folds of a white cloud that rests upon the grass, but rises, high and towerlike, into the zenith of dawn above.

There is not as much colour in that low amber light upon the hillside as there is in the palest dead leaf. The lake is not blue, but grey in mist, passing into deep shadow beneath the Voirons' pines; a few dark clusters of leaves, a single white flower—scarcely seen—are all the gladness given to the rocks of the shore. One of the ruby spots of the eastern manuscript would give colour enough for all the red that is in Turner's entire drawing. For the mere pleasure of the eye, there is not so much in all those lines of his, throughout the entire landscape, as in half an inch square of the Persian's page. What made him take pleasure in the low colour that is only like the brown of a dead leaf? in the cold grey of dawn—in the one white flower among the rocks—in these—and no more than these?

He took pleasure in them because he had been bred among English fields and hills; because the gentleness of a great race was in his heart, and its power of thought in his brain; because he knew the stories of the Alps, and of the cities at their feet; because he had read the Homeric legends of the clouds, and beheld the clouds of dawn, and the givers of dew to the fields; because he knew the face of the crags, and the imagery of the passionate mountains, as a man knows the face of his friend; because he had in him the wonder and sorrow concerning life and death, which are the inheritance of the Gothic soul from the days of its first sea kings; and also the compassion and the joy that are woven into the innermost fabric of every great imaginative spirit, born now in countries that have lived by the Christian faith with any courage or truth. And the picture contains also, for us, just this which its maker had in him to give; and can convey it to us, just so far as we are of the temper in which it must be received. It is didactic, if we are worthy to be taught, no otherwise. The pure heart, it will make more pure; the thoughtful, more thoughtful. It has in it no words for the reckless or the base.

As I myself look at it, there is no fault nor folly of my life,—and both have been many and great,—that does not rise up against me, and take away my joy, and shorten my power of possession, of sight, of understanding. And every past effort of my life, every gleam of rightness or good in it, is with me now, to help me in my grasp of this heart, and its vision. So far as I can rejoice in, or interpret either, my power is owing to what of right there is in me. I dare to say it, that, because through all my life I have desired good, and not evil; because I have been kind to many; have wished to be kind to all; have willfully injured none; and because I have loved much, and not selfishly;—therefore, the morning light is yet visible to me on those hills, and you, who read, may trust my thought and word in such work as I have to do for you; and you will be glad afterwards that you have trusted them.

LIBERTY AND RESTRAINT

(From the same)

Next to Modesty, and her delight in measures, let us reflect a little on the character of her adversary, the Goddess of Liberty, and her delight in absence of measures, or in false ones. It is true that there are liberties and liberties. Yonder torrent, crystal-clear, and arrow-swift, with its spray leaping into the air like white troops of fawns, is free enough. Lost, presently, amidst bankless, boundless marsh—soaking in slow shallowness, as it will, hither and thither, listless, among the poisonous reeds and unresisting slime—it is free also. We may choose which liberty we like,—the restraint of voiceful rock, or the dumb and edgeless shore of darkened sand. Of that evil liberty, which men are now glorifying, and proclaiming as essence of gospel to all the earth, and will presently, I suppose, proclaim also to the stars, with invitation to them out of their courses,—and of its opposite continence, which is the clasp and χρυσή περόνη<sup>1</sup> of Aglaia's cestus, we must try to find out something true. For no quality of art has been more powerful in its influence on public mind; none is more frequently the subject of popular praise, or the end of vulgar effort, than what we call "Freedom." It is necessary to determine the justice or injustice of this popular praise.

I said, a little while ago, that the practical teaching of the masters of Art was summed up by the O of Giotto.<sup>2</sup> "You may judge my masterhood of craft," Giotto tells us, "by seeing that I can draw a circle unerringly." And we may safely believe him, understanding him to mean, that—though more may be necessary to an artist than such a power—at least this power is necessary. The qualities of hand and eye needful to do this are the first conditions of artistic craft.

Try to draw a circle yourself with the "free" hand, and with a single line. You cannot do it if your hand trembles, nor if it hesitates, nor if it is unmanageable, nor if it is in the common sense of the word "free." So far from being free, it must be under a control as absolute and accurate as if it were fastened to an inflexible bar of steel. And yet it must move under this necessary control, with perfect untormented serenity of ease.

That is the condition of all good work whatsoever. All freedom is error. Every line you lay down is either right or wrong: it may be timidly and awkwardly wrong, or fearlessly and impudently wrong; the aspect of the impudent wrongness is pleasurable to vulgar persons; and it is what they commonly call "free" execution: the timid, tottering, hesitating wrongness is rarely so attractive; yet sometimes, if accompanied with good qualities, and right aims in other directions, it becomes in a manner charming, like the inarticulateness of a child: but, whatever the charm or manner of the error, there is but one question ultimately to be asked respecting every line you draw, Is it right or wrong? If right, it most assuredly is not a "free" line, but an intensely continent, restrained, and considered line; and the action of the hand in laying it is just as decisive, and just as "free" as the hand of a first-rate surgeon in a critical incision. A great operator told me that his hand could check itself within about the two-hundredth of an inch, in penetrating a membrane, and this, of course, without the help of sight, by sensation only. With help of right, and in action on a substance which does not quiver nor yield, a fine artist's line is measurable in its purposed direction to considerably less than the thousandth of an inch.

<sup>1</sup> Golden buckle. Aglaia (splendor) was one of the Graces. Cestus is a girdle.

<sup>2</sup> The Pope once sent a messenger to obtain specimens of the work of the chief artists of Italy. Giotto simply drew a circle and gave it to the amazed messenger, who asked if that was all. "Send it," said Giotto, "and we shall see if his Holiness understands the hint."

A wide freedom truly!

The conditions of popular art which most foster the common ideas about freedom, are merely results of irregularly energetic effort by men imperfectly educated; these conditions being variously mingled with cruder mannerisms resulting from timidity, or actual imperfection of body. Northern hands and eyes are, of course, never so subtle as Southern; and in very cold countries, artistic execution is palsied. The effort to break through this timidity, or to refine the bluntness, may lead to a licentious impetuosity, or an ostentatious minuteness. Every man's manner has this kind of relation to some defect in his physical powers or modes of thought; so that in the greatest work there is no manner visible. It is at first uninteresting from its quietness; the majesty of restrained power only dawns gradually upon us, as we walk towards its horizon.

There is, indeed, often great delightfulness in the innocent manners of artists who have real power and honesty, and draw, in this way or that, as best they can, under such and such untoward circumstances of life. But the greater part of the looseness, flimsiness, or audacity of modern work is the expression of an inner spirit of license in mind and heart, connected, as I said, with the peculiar folly of this age, its hope of, and trust in, "liberty." Of which we must reason a little in more general terms.

I believe we can nowhere find a better type of a perfectly free creature than in the common house fly. Nor free only, but brave; and irreverent to a degree which I think no human republican could by any philosophy exalt himself to. There is no courtesy in him; he does not care whether it is king or clown whom he teases; and in every step of his swift mechanical march, and in every pause of his resolute observation, there is one and the same expression of perfect egotism, perfect independence and self-confidence, and conviction of the world's having been made for flies. Strike at him with your hand; and to him, the mechanical fact and external aspect of the matter is, what to you it would be, if an acre of red clay, ten feet thick, tore itself up from the ground in one massive field, hovered over you in the air for a second, and came crashing down with an aim. That is the external aspect of it; the inner aspect, to his fly's mind, is of a quite natural and unimportant occurrence—

one of the momentary conditions of his active life. He steps out of the way of your hand, and alights on the back of it. You cannot terrify him, nor govern him, nor persuade him, nor convince him. He has his own positive opinion on all matters; not an unwise one, usually, for his own ends; and will ask no advice of yours. He has no work to do—no tyrannical instinct to obey. The earthworm has his digging, the bee her gathering and building; the spider her cunning network; the ant her treasury and accounts. All these are comparatively slaves, or people of vulgar business. But your fly, free in the air, free in the chamber—a black incarnation of caprice—wandering, investigating, flitting, flirting, feasting at his will, with rich variety of choice in feast, from the heaped sweets in the grocer's window to those of the butcher's back-yard, and from the galled place on your cab-horse's back, to the brown spot in the road, from which, as the hoof disturbs him, he rises with angry republican buzz—what freedom is like his?

For captivity, again, perhaps your poor watch-dog is as sorrowful a type as you will easily find. Mine certainly is. The day is lovely, but I must write this, and cannot go out with him. He is chained in the yard, because I do not like dogs in rooms, and the gardener does not like dogs in gardens. He has no books,—nothing but his own weary thoughts for company, and a group of those free flies whom he snaps at, with sullen ill success. Such dim hope as he may have that I may yet take him out with me, will be, by hour, wearily disappointed; or, worse, darkened at once into a leaden despair by an authoritative “No”—too well understood. His fidelity only seals his fate; if he would not watch for me, he would be sent away, and go hunting with some happier master: but he watches, and is wise and faithful, and miserable; and his high animal intellect only gives him the wistful powers of wonder, and sorrow, and desire, and affection, which embitter his captivity. Yet of the two would we rather be watch-dog, or fly?

Indeed the first point we have all to determine is not how free we are, but what kind of creatures we are. It is of small importance to any of us whether we get liberty; but of the greatest that we deserve it. Whether we can win it, fate must determine; but that we will be worthy of it, we may ourselves determine; and the sorrowfullest fate, of all that we can suffer, is to have it, without deserving it.

I have hardly patience to hold my pen and go on writing, as I remember (I would that it were possible for a few consecutive instants to forget) the infinite follies of modern thought in this matter, centred in the notion that liberty is good for a man, irrespectively of the use he is likely to make of it. Folly unfathomable! unspeakable! unendurable to look in the full face of, as the laugh of a cretin. You will send your child, will you, into a room, where a table is loaded with sweet wine and fruit—some poisoned, some not?—you will say to him, “Choose freely, my little child! it is so good for you to have freedom of choice; it forms your character—your individuality! If you take the wrong cup, or the wrong berry, you will die before the day is over, but you will have acquired the dignity of a Free child?”

You think that puts the case too sharply? I tell you, lover of liberty, there is no choice offered to you, but it is similarly between life and death. There is no act, nor option of act, possible, but the wrong deed or option has poison in it, which will stay in your veins thereafter for ever. Never more to all eternity can you be as you might have been, had you not done that—chosen that. You have “formed your character,” forsooth! No! if you have chosen ill, you have Deformed it, and that for ever! In some choices, it had been better for you that a red-hot iron bar struck you aside, scarred and helpless, than that you had so chosen. “You will know better next time!” No. Next time will never come. Next time the choice will be in quite another aspect—between quite different things,—you, weaker than you were by the evil into which you have fallen; it, more doubtful than it was, by the increased dimness of your sight. No one ever gets wiser by doing wrong, nor stronger. You will get wiser and stronger only by doing right, whether forced or not; that prime, the one need is to do that, under whatever compulsion, until you can do it without compulsion. And then you are a Man.

SCIENCE AND LIFE

(From Fors Clavigera, 1871–1878)

And all true science—which my Savoyard guide rightly scorned me when he thought I had not,—all true science is “savoir vivre.” But all your modern science is the contrary of that. It is “savoir mourir.”

And of its very discoveries, such as they are, it cannot make use.

That telegraphic signalling was a discovery; and conceivably, some day, may be a useful one. And there was some excuse for your being a little proud when, about last sixth of April (Cœur de Lion's death-day, and Albert Dürer's), you knotted a copper wire all the way to Bombay, and flashed a message along it, and back.

But what was the message, and what the answer? Is India the better for what you said to her? Are you the better for what she replied?

If not, you have only wasted an all-round-the-world's length of copper wire,—which is, indeed, about the sum of your doing. If you had had, perchance, two words of common sense to say, though you had taken wearisome time and trouble to send them;—though you had written them slowly in gold, and sealed them with a hundred seals, and sent a squadron of ships of the line to carry the scroll, and the squadron had fought its way round the Cape of Good Hope, through a year of storms, with loss of all its ships but one,—the two words of common sense would have been worth the 20 carriage, and more. But you have not anything like so much as that, to say, either to India or to any other place.

You think it a great triumph to make the sun draw brown landscapes for you.

That was also a discovery, and some day may be useful. But the sun had drawn landscapes before for you, not in brown, but in green, and blue, and all imaginable colours, here in England. Not one of you ever looked at them then; not one of you cares for the loss of them now, when you have shut the sun out with smoke, so that he can draw nothing more, except brown blots through a hole in a box. There was a rocky valley between Buxton and Bakewell, once upon a time, divine as the Vale of Tempe; you might have seen the Gods there morning and evening—Apollo and all the sweet Muses of the Light—walking in fair processions on the lawns of it, and to and fro among the pinnacles of its crags. You cared neither for Gods nor grass, but for cash (which you did not know the way to get); you thought you could get it by what the Times calls "Railroad Enterprise." You Enterprised a Railroad 40 through the valley—you blasted its rocks away, heaped thousands of tons of shale into its lovely stream. The valley is gone, and the Gods with it; and now, every fool in Buxton can be at Bakewell in half an hour, and every fool in Bakewell at Buxton; which you think a lucrative process of exchange—you Fools Everywhere.

To talk at a distance, when you have nothing to say, though you were ever so near; to go fast 55 from this place to that, with nothing to do either at one or the other: these are powers certainly. Much more, power of increased Production, if you, indeed, had got it, would be something to boast of. But are you so entirely sure that you have got it—that the mortal disease of plenty, and afflictive affluence of good things, are all you have to dread?

Observe. A man and a woman, with their children properly trained, are able easily to cultivate as much ground as will feed them to build as much wall and roof as will lodge 10 them, and to spin and weave as much cloth as will clothe them. They can all be perfectly happy and healthy in doing this. Supposing that they invent machinery which will build, plough, thresh, cook, and weave, and that they have none of these things any more to do, but may read, or play croquet, or cricket, all day long, I believe myself that they will neither be so good nor so happy as without the machines. But I waive my belief in this matter for the time. I will assume that they become more refined and moral persons, and that idleness in future is to be the mother of all good. But observe, I repeat, the power of your machine is only in enabling them to be idle. It will not 25 enable them to live better than they did before, nor to live in greater numbers. Get your heads quite clear on this matter. Out of so much ground, only so much living is to be got, with or without machinery. You may set a million of steam-ploughs to work on an acre, if you like—out of that acre only a given number of grains of corn will grow, scratch, or scorch it as you will. So that the question is not at all whether, by having more machines, 35 more of you can live. No machines will increase the possibilities of life. They only increase the possibilities of idleness. Suppose, for instance, you could get the oxen in your plough driven by a goblin, who would ask for no pay, not even a cream bowl,—(you have nearly managed to get it driven by an iron goblin, as it is);—Well, your furrow will take no more seeds than if you had held the stilts yourself. But, instead of holding them, you 45 sit, I presume, on a bank beside the field, under an eglantine;—watch the goblin at his work, and read poetry. Meantime, your wife in the house has also got a goblin to weave and wash for her. And she is lying on the sofa, 50 reading poetry.

Now, as I said, I don't believe you would be happier so, but I am willing to believe it; only, since you are already such brave mechanists, show me at least one or two places where you are happier. Let me see one small example of approach to this seraphic condition. I can show you examples, millions of them, of happy people, made happy by their own industry. Farm after farm I can show you in Bavaria, Switzerland, the Tyrol, and such other places, where men and women are perfectly happy and good, without any iron servants. Show me, therefore, some English family, with its fiery familiar, happier than these. Or bring me—for I am not unconvinced by any kind of evidence,—bring me the testimony of an English family or two to their increased felicity. Or if you cannot do so much as that, can you convince even themselves of it? They are perhaps happy, if only they knew how happy they were; Virgil thought so,<sup>1</sup> long ago, of simple rustics; but you hear at present your steam-propelled rustics are crying out that they are anything else than happy, and that they regard their boasted progress “in the light of a monstrous Sham.” I must tell you one little thing however, which greatly perplexes my imagination of the relieved ploughman sitting under his rose bower, reading poetry. I have told it you before, indeed, but I forget where. There was really a great festivity, and expression of satisfaction in the new order of things, down in Cumberland, a little while ago; some first of May, I think it was, a country festival, such as the old heathens, who had no iron servants, used to keep with piping and dancing. So I thought from the liberated country people—their work all done for them by goblins—we should have some extraordinary piping and dancing. But there was no dancing at all, and they could not even provide their own piping. They had their goblin to Pipe for them. They walked in procession after their steam plough, and their steam plough whistled to them occasionally in the most melodious manner it could. Which seemed to me, indeed, a return to more than Arcadian simplicity; for in old Arcadia, ploughboys truly whistled as they went, for want of thought; whereas, here was verily a large company walking without thought, but not having any more even the capacity of doing their own Whistling.

But next, as to the inside of the house. Be-fore you got your power-loom, a woman could always make herself a chemise and petticoat of bright and pretty appearance. I have seen a Bavarian peasant-woman at church in Munich, looking a much grander creature, and more beautifully dressed, than any of the crossed and embroidered angels in Hesse’s high-art frescoes; (which happened to be just above her, so that I could look from one to the other). Well, here you are, in England, served by household demons, with five hundred fingers, at least, weaving, for one that used to weave in the days of Minerva. You ought to be able to show me five hundred dresses for one that used to be; tidiness ought to have become five hundred fold tidier; tapestry should be increased in cinque-cento-fold<sup>2</sup> iridescence of tapestry. Not only your peasant girl ought to be lying on the sofa reading poetry, but she ought to have in her wardrobe five hundred petticoats instead of one. Is that, indeed, your issue? or are you only on a curiously crooked way to it?

It is just possible, indeed, that you may not have been allowed to get the use of the goblin’s work—that other people may have got the use of it, and you none; because, perhaps, you have not been able to evoke goblins wholly for your own personal service; but have been borrowing goblins from the capitalist, and paying interest, in the “position of William,” on ghostly self-going planes, but suppose you had laid by capital enough, yourselves, to hire all the demons in the world,—nay,—all that are inside of it; are you quite sure you know what you might best set them to work at? and what “useful things” you should command them to make for you? I told you, last month, that no economist going (whether by steam, or ghost,) knew what are useful things and what are not. Very few of you know, yourselves, except by bitter experience of the want of them. And no demons, either of iron or spirit, can ever make them.

There are three Material things, not only useful, but essential to Life. No one “knows how to live” till he has got them.

These are, Pure Air, Water, and Earth.

There are three Immaterial things, not only useful, but essential to Life. No one knows how to live till he has got them also.

These are, Admiration, Hope, and Love.<sup>3</sup>

Admiration—the power of discerning and taking delight in what is beautiful in visible form, and lovely in human Character; and, necessarily, striving to produce what is beautiful in form, and to become what is lovely in character.

Hope, the recognition, by true Foresight, of better things to be reached hereafter, whether by ourselves or others; necessarily issuing in the straightforward and undisappointable effort to advance, according to our proper power, the gaining of them.

Love, both of family and neighbour, faithful, and satisfied.

These are the six chiefly useful things to be got by Political Economy, when it has become a science. I will briefly tell you what Modern

<sup>2</sup> Five hundred fold.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Wordsworth’s Excursion, Bk. 4. “We live by admiration, hope and love.”

<sup>1</sup> Georgics, II. 458. V. Fortunati Ninium, p. 172, supra.

Political Economy—the great “savour mourir”—is doing with them.

The first three, I said, are Pure Air, Water, and Earth.

Heaven gives you the main elements of these. You can destroy them at your pleasure, or increase, almost without limit, the available quantities of them.

You can vitiate the air by your manner of life, and of death, to any extent. You might easily vitiate it so as to bring such a pestilence on the globe as would end all of you. You or your fellows, German and French, are at present vitiating it to the best of your power in every direction;—chiefly at this moment with corpses, and animal and vegetable ruin in war: changing men, horses, and garden-stuff into noxious gas. But everywhere, and all day long, you are vitiating it with foul chemical exhalations; and the horrible nests, which you call towns, are little more than laboratories for the distillation into leven of venomous smokes and smells, mixed with effluvia from decaying animal matter, and infectious miasmata from purulent disease.

On the other hand, your power of purifying the air, by dealing properly and swiftly with all substances in corruption; by absolutely forbidding noxious manufactures; and by planting in all soils the trees which cleanse and invigorate earth and atmosphere,—is literally infinite. You might make every breath of air you draw, food.

Secondly, your power over the rain and rivers of the earth is infinite. You can bring rain where you will, by planting wisely and tending carefully;—drought, where you will, by ravage of woods and neglect of the soil. You might have the rivers of England as pure as the crystal of the rock,—beautiful in falls, in lakes, in living pools;—so full of fish that you might take them out with your hands instead of nets. Or you may do always as you have done now, turn every river of England into a common sewer, so that you cannot so much as baptize an English baby but with filth, unless you hold its face out in the rain; and even that falls dirty.

Then for the third, Earth,—meant to be nourishing for you, and blossoming. You have learned, about it, that there is no such thing as a flower; and as far as your scientific hands and scientific brains, inventive of explosive and deathful, instead of blossoming and life-giving, Dust, can contrive, you have turned the Mother-Earth, Demeter, into the Avenger-

Earth, Tisiphone<sup>4</sup>—with the voice of your brother's blood crying out of it, in one wild harmony round all its murderous sphere.

That is what you have done for the Three Material Useful Things.

Then for the Three Immaterial Useful Things. For Admiration you have learned contempt and conceit. There is no lovely thing ever yet done by man that you care for, or can understand; but you are persuaded that you are able to do much finer things yourselves. You gather and exhibit together, as if equally instructive, what is infinitely bad, with what is infinitely good. You do not know which is which; you instinctively prefer the Bad, and do more of it. You instinctively hate the Good, and destroy it.

Then secondly, for Hope. You have not so much spirit of it in you as to begin any plan which will not pay for ten years; nor so much intelligence of it in you, (either politicians or workmen), as to be able to form one clear idea of what you would like your country to become.

Then, thirdly, for Love. You were ordered by the Founder of your religion to love your neighbour as yourselves.

You have founded an entire science of Political Economy, on what you have stated to be the constant instinct of man—the desire to defraud his neighbour.

And you have driven your women mad, so that they ask no more for Love, nor for fellowship with you; but stand against you, and ask for “justice.”

Are there any of you who are tired of all this? Any of you, Landlords or Tenants? Employers, or Workmen?

Are there any Landlords—any masters,—who would like better to be served by men than by iron devils?

Any tenants, any workmen, who can be true to their leaders and to each other? who can vow to work and to live faithfully, for the sake of the joy of their homes?

Will any such give the tenth of what they have; and of what they earn,—not to emigrate with, but to stay in England with; and do what is in their hands and hearts to make her a happy England?

<sup>4</sup> One of the Furies, the “blood-avenger.” Cf. Shakespeare, I Henry IV, Act I. sc. iii.

“And it was great pity, so it was.
That villainous saltpetre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly.”

Charles Kingsley

1819-1875

ST. GUTHLAC

(From The Hermits, 1867)

Hermits dwelling in the wilderness, as far as I am aware, were to be seen only in the northern and western parts of the island, where not only did the forest afford concealment, but the crags and caves shelter. The southern and eastern English seldom possess the vivid imagination of the Briton, the Northumbrian, and the Scot; while the rich lowlands of central, southern, and eastern England, well peopled and well tilled, offered few spots lonely enough for the hermit's cell.

One district only was desolate enough to attract those who wished to be free from the world,—namely, the great fens north of Cambridge; and there, accordingly, as early as the seventh century, hermits settled in morasses now so utterly transformed that it is difficult to restore in one's imagination the original scenery.

The fens in the seventh century were probably very like the forests at the mouth of the Mississippi, or the swampy shores of the Carolinas. Their vast plain is now, in summer, one sea of golden corn; in winter, a black dreary fallow, cut into squares by stagnant dykes, and broken only by unsightly pumping mills, and doleful lines of poplar trees. Of old it was a labyrinth of black wandering streams; broad lagoons; morasses submerged every springtide; vast beds of reed and sedge and fern; vast copses of willow, alder, and gray poplar, rooted in the floating peat, which was swallowing up slowly, all-devouring, yet all-preserving, the forests of fir and oak, ash and poplar, hazel and yew, which had once grown on that low rank soil, sinking slowly (so geologists assure us) beneath the sea from age to age. Trees, torn down by flood and storm, floated and lodged in rafts, damming the waters back upon the land. Streams, bewildered in the flats, changed their channels, mingling silt and sand with the peat-moss. Nature, left to herself, ran into wild riot and chaos more and more, till the whole fen became one "Dismal Swamp," in which at the time of the Norman Conquest, the "Last of the English," like Dred in Mrs. Stowe's tale, took refuge from their tyrants, and lived, like him, a free and joyous life awhile.

<sup>1</sup> In Mrs. Stowe's novel Dred, the hero, a runaway slave, lives in the Dismal Swamp.

<sup>2</sup> Hereward the Wake, one of the last to resist William the Conqueror.

For there are islands in the sea which have escaped the destroying deluge of peat-moss,—out-crops of firm and fertile land, which in the early Middle Age were so many natural parks, covered with richest grass and stateliest trees, swarming with deer and roe, goat and boar, as the streams around swarmed with otter and beaver, and with fowl of every feather, and fish of every scale.

Beautiful after their kind were those far isles in the eyes of the monks who were the first settlers in the wilderness. The author of the "History of Ramsey," grows enthusiastic, and somewhat bombastic also, as he describes the lovely isle, which got its name from the solitary ram which had wandered thither, either in extreme drought or over the winter ice, and never able to return, was found feeding among the wild deer, fat beyond the wont of rams. He tells of the stately ashes, most of them cut in his time, to furnish mighty beams for the church roof; of the rich pastures painted with all gay flowers in spring; of the "green crown" or reed and alder which encircled the isle; of the fair wide mere (now drained) with its "sandy beach" along the forest side, "a delight," he says, "to all who look thereon."

In like humour William of Malmesbury, writing in the first half of the twelfth century, speaks of Thorney Abbey and its isle. "It represents," says he, "a very paradise; for that in pleasure and delight it resembles heaven itself. These marshes abound in trees, whose length, without a knot, doth emulate the stars. The plain there is as level as the sea, alluring the eye with its green grass, and so smooth that there is naught to trip the foot of him who runs through it. Neither is there any waste place; for in some parts are apples, in others vines, which are either spread on the ground, or raised on poles. A mutual strife there is between Nature and Art; so that what one produces not the other supplies. What shall I say of those fair buildings, which 'tis so wonderful to see the ground among those fens unpeep?"

So wrote William of Malmesbury, after the wisdom and industry of the monks, for more than four centuries, had been at work to civilize and cultivate the wilderness. Yet even then there was another side to the picture; and Thorney, Ramsey, or Crowland would have seemed, for nine months every year, sad places enough to us comfortable folk of the nineteenth century. But men lived hard in those days, even the most high-born, and luxurious nobles and ladies; under dark skies, in houses which we should think, from darkness, draught, and want of space, unfit for felons' cells. Hardly they lived; and easily were they pleased; and thanked God for the least gleam of sunshine, the least patch of green, after the terrible and long winters of the Middle Ages. And ugly enough those winters must have been, what with snow and darkness, flood and ice, ague and rheumatism; while through the dreary winter's night the whistle of the wind and the wild cries of the waterfowl were translated into the howls of witches and demons; and (as in St. Guthlac's case) the delirious fancies of marsh fever made those fiends take hideous shapes before the inner eye, and act fantastic horrors round the fen-man's bed of sedge.

<sup>3</sup> Ramsey Abbey, near Peterborough in the Fen Country.

<sup>4</sup> V. p. 45, supra.

<sup>5</sup> Thorney Abbey and Crowland Abbey (mentioned later) are short distances from Peterborough.

Concerning this St. Guthlac<sup>6</sup> full details remain, both in Latin and Anglo-Saxon; the author of the original document professing to be one Felix, a monk of Ramsey, near by, who wrote possibly as early as the eighth century.

There we may read how the young warrior—noble Guthlac ("The Battle-Play," the "Sport of War,") tired of slaying and sinning, bethought him to fulfil the prodigies seen at his birth; how he wandered into the fen, where one Tatwin (who after became a saint likewise) took him in his canoe to a spot so lonely as to be almost unknown, buried in reeds and alders and how he found among the trees naught but an old "law," as the Scots still call a mound, which men of old had broken into, seeking for treasure, and a little pond; and how he built himself a hermit's cell thereon, and saw visions and wrought miracles; and how men came to him, as to a fakir or shaman<sup>7</sup> of the East; notably one Beccel, who acted as his servant; and how as Beccel was shaving the saint one day there fell on him a great temptation: Why should he not cut St. Guthlac's throat, and instal himself in his cell, that he might have the honour and glory of sainthood? But St. Guthlac perceived the inward temptation (which is told with the naive honesty of those half savage times), and rebuked the offender into confession, and all went well to the end.

There we may read too a detailed account of the Fauna now happily extinct in the fens; of the creatures who used to hale St. Guthlac out of his hut, drag him through the bogs, carry him aloft through frost and fire—"Develin and luther gastes"—such as tormented in likewise St. Botolph (from whom Botulfston—Boston, has its name), and who were supposed to haunt moors and fens, and to have an especial fondness for old heathen barrows with their fancied treasure-hoards; how they "filled the house with their coming, and poured in on every side, from above, and from beneath, and everywhere. They were in countenance horrible, and they had great heads, and a long neck, and a lean visage; they were filthy and squalid in their beards, and they had rough ears, and crooked "nebs," and fierce eyes, and foul mouths; and their teeth were like horses' tusks; and their throats were filled with flame, and they were grating in their voice; they had crooked shanks, and knees big and great behind, and distorted toes, and cried hoarsely with their voices. . . . And they tugged and led him out of the cot, and led him to the swart fen, and threw and sunk him in the muddy waters. After that they brought him into the wild places of the wilderness, among the thick beds of brambles that all his body was torn. . . . After that they took him and beat him with iron whips, and after that they brought him on their creaking wings between the cold regions of the air."

But there are gentler and more human touches in that old legend. You may read in it how all the wild birds of the fen came to St. Guthlac, and he fed them after their kind; how the ravens tormented him, stealing letters, gloves, and what not, from his visitors; and then, seized with compunction at his reproofs, brought them back, or hanged them on the reeds; and how, as Wilfred, a holy visitant, was sitting with him, discoursing of the contemplative life, two swallows came flying in, and lifted up their song, sitting now on the saint's hand, now on his shoulder, now on his knee; and how, when Wilfrid wondered thereat, Guthlac made answer, "Know you not that he who hath led his life according to God's will, to him the wild beasts and the wild birds draw the more near?"

After fifteen years of such a life, in fever, ague, and starvation, no wonder St. Guthlac died. They buried him in a leaden coffin (a grand and expensive luxury in the seventh century) which had been sent to him during his life by a Saxon princess; and then over his sacred and wonder-working corpse, as over that of a Buddhist saint, there arose a chapel, with a community of monks, companies of pilgrims who came to worship, sick who came to be healed; till at last, founded on great piles driven into the bog, arose the lofty wooden Abbey of Crowland; in "sanctuary of the four rivers," with its dykes, parks, vineyards, orchards, rich ploughlands, from which in time of famine, the monks of Crowland fed all people of the neighbouring fens; with its tower with seven bells, which had not their like in England: its twelve altars rich with the gifts of the Danish vikings and princes, and even with twelve white bear-skins, the gift of Canute's self; while all around were the cottages of the corrodiers, or folk, who for corrody, or life pittance from the abbey, had given away their lands, to the wrong and detriment of their heirs.

<sup>6</sup> One of the early Saints of England (c. 673-714).

<sup>7</sup> A fakir is a religious mendicant, especially among the Mohammedans. A shaman is a medicine-man or sorcerer, found among rude tribes.

But within those four rivers, at least, were 10 neither tyranny nor slavery. Those who took refuge in St. Guthlac's place from cruel lords must keep his peace toward each other, and earn their living like honest men, safe while they so did: for between those four rivers 15 St. Guthlac and his abbot were the only lords; and neither summoner, nor sheriff of the king, nor armed forces of knight or earl, could enter—"the inheritance of the Lord, the soil of St. Mary and St. Bartholomew, the most holy 20 sanctuary of St. Guthlac and his monks; the minister free from worldly servitude; the special almshouse of most illustrious kings; the sole refuge of anyone in worldly tribulation; the perpetual abode of the saints; the possession 25 of religious men, especially set apart by the common council of the realm; by reason of the frequent miracles of the holy confessor St. Guthlac, an ever fruitful mother of camphire in the vineyards of Engadi;<sup>3</sup> and, by reason 30 of the privileges granted by the kings, a city of grace and safety to all who repent."

Does not all this sound like a voice from another planet? It is all gone; and it was 35 good and right that it should go when it had done its work, and that the civilisation of the fen should be taken up and carried out by men like the good knight, Richard of Rulos, who two generations after the Conquest, marrying Hereward's granddaughter, and becoming 40 Lord of Deeping (the deep meadow), thought that he could do the same work from the hall of Bourne as the monks did from their cloisters; got permission from the Crowland monks, for twenty marks of silver, to drain as 45 much as he could of the common marshes; and then shut out the Welland by strong dykes, built cottages, marked out gardens, and tilled fields, till "out of slough and bogs accursed, he made a garden of pleasure."

Yet one lasting work those monks of Crowland seem to have done besides those firm dykes and rich cornlands of Porsand which endure unto this day. For within two generations of the Norman conquest, while the old 55 wooden abbey, destroyed by fire, was being replaced by that noble pile of stone whose ruins are still standing, the French Abbot of Crowland (so runs the legend) sent French monks to open a school under the new French donjon, in the little Roman town of Grantebrigg; whereby—so does all earnest work, however mistaken, grow and spread in this world, infinitely and for ever—St. Guthlac, by his canoe voyage into Crowland Island, became the spiritual father of the University of Cambridge in the old world; and therefore of her noble daughter, the University of Cambridge, in the new world, which fen-men sailing from Boston deeps colonized and Christianized 800 years after St. Guthlac's death.

Matthew Arnold

1822-1888

THE GRAND STYLE

(From On Translating Homer, 1861)

So deeply seated is the difference between the ballad-manner and Homer's that even a man of the highest powers, even a man of the greatest vigour of spirit and of true genius,—the Coryphæus<sup>1</sup> of balladists, Sir Walter Scott,—fails with a manner of this kind to produce an effect at all like the effect of Homer. "I am not so rash," declares Mr. Newman, "as to say that if freedom be given to rhyme as in Walter Scott's poetry,"—Walter Scott, "by far the most Homeric of our poets," as in another place he calls him,—"a genius may not arise who will translate Homer into the melodies of Marmion." "The truly classical and the truly romantic," says Dr. Maginn, "are one; the moss-trooping Nestor reappears in the moss-trooping heroes of Percy's Reliques;" and a description by Scott, which he quotes, he calls "graphic, and therefore Homeric." He forgets our fourth axiom,—that Homer is not only graphic; he is also noble, and has the grand style. Human nature under like circumstances is probably in all ages much the same; and so far it may be said that "the truly classical, and the truly romantic are one;" 50 but it is of little use to tell us this, because we know the human nature of other ages only through the representations of them which have come down to us, and the classical and romantic modes of representation are so far from being "one," that they remain eternally distinct, and have created for us a separation between the two worlds which they respectively

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Song of Solomon, i. 14: "My beloved is unto me as a cluster of camphire in the vineyards of Eng-gedi." The vineyards of Eng-gedi were watered by a spring, the region about being desolate, on the west shore of the Dead Sea.

<sup>1</sup> The leader and speaker of the chorus in Greek drama. The phrase is analogous to "prince of balladists."

represent. Therefore to call Nestor the "moss-trooping<sup>2</sup> Nestor" is absurd, because, though Nestor may possibly have been much the same sort of man as many a moss-trooper, he has yet come to us through a mode of representation so unlike that of Percy's Reliques, that instead of "reappearing in the moss-trooping heroes" of these poems, he exists in our imagination as something utterly unlike them, and as belonging to another world. So the Greeks in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida are no longer the Greeks whom we have known in Homer, because they come to us through a mode of representation of the romantic world. But I must not forget Scott.

I suppose that when Scott is in what may be called full ballad swing, no one will hesitate to pronounce his manner neither Homeric nor the grand manner. When he says, for instance,

"I do not rhyme to that dull elf<sup>3</sup>
Who cannot image to himself," and so on, any scholar will feel that this is not Homer's manner. But let us take Scott's<sup>25</sup> poetry at its best; and when it is at its best, it is undoubtedly very good indeed:—

"Tunstall lies dead upon the field,<sup>4</sup>
His life-blood stains the spotless shield;
Edmund is down,—my life is reft,—
The Admiral alone is left.
Let Stanley charge with spur of fire,—
With Chester charge, and Lancashire,
Full upon Scotland's central host,
Or victory and England's lost."

That is, no doubt, as vigorous as possible, as spirited as possible; it is exceedingly fine poetry. Now, how shall I make him who doubts this feel that I say true; that these lines of Scott are essentially neither in Homer's style<sup>40</sup> nor in the grand style? I may point out to him that the movement of Scott's lines, while it is rapid, is also at the same time what the French call saccade, its rapidity is "jerky;" whereas Homer's rapidity is a flowing rapidity.<sup>45</sup> But this is something external and material; it is but the outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual diversity. I may discuss what, in the abstract, constitutes the grand style; but that sort of general discussion never<sup>50</sup> much helps our judgment of particular instances. I may say that the presence or absence of the grand style can only be spiritually discerned; and this is true, but to plead this looks like evading the difficulty. My best<sup>55</sup> way is to take eminent specimens of the grand style, and to put them side by side with this of Scott. For example, when Homer says:—

ἄλλα φίλος, θάνε καὶ σὺ· τίη δλυφύρεαι οὕτως;<sup>5</sup> κάτθανε καὶ Πάτροκλος, ὅπερσέο πολλὸν ἀμείνων, that is in the grand style. When Virgil says:<sup>6</sup>—

"Disce, puer, virtutem ex me verumque laborem, Fortunam ex aliis,"

that is in the grand style. When Dante says:—

"Lascio lo fele, et vo pei dolci pomi<sup>7</sup>
Promessi a me per lo verace Duca;
Ma fino al centro pria convien ch' io tomi," that is in the grand style. When Milton says:—

"His form had yet not lost
All her original brightness, nor appeared
Less than an archangel ruined, and the excess<sup>20</sup>
Of glory obscured,"

that, finally is in the grand style. Now let any one, after repeating to himself these four passages, repeat again the passage of Scott, and he will perceive that there is something in style which the four first have in common, and which the last is without; and this something is precisely the grand manner. It is no disrespect to Scott to say that he does not attain<sup>30</sup> to this manner in his poetry; to say so, is merely to say that he is not among the five or six supreme poets of the world. Among these he is not; but, being a man of far greater powers than the ballad-poets, he has tried to<sup>35</sup> give to their instrument a compass and an elevation which it does not naturally possess, in order to enable him to come nearer to the effects of the instrument used by the great epic poets,—an instrument which he felt he could not truly use,—and in this attempt he has but imperfectly succeeded. The poetic style of Scott is—(it becomes necessary to say so when it is proposed to "translate Homer into the melodies of Marmion")—it is, tried by the highest standards, a bastard epic style; and that is why, out of his own powerful hands, it has had so little success. It is a less natural, and therefore a less good style, than the original ballad style; while it shares with the ballad style the inherent incapacity of rising into the grand style, of adequately rendering Homer. Scott is certainly at his best in his

<sup>5</sup> "Be content, good friend, die also thou! why lamentest thou thyself on this wise? Patroclus, too, die who was a far better than thou." Iliad, xii. 106.

<sup>6</sup> "From me, young man, learn nobleness of soul and true effort: learn success from others." Aeneid, xii. 435.

<sup>7</sup> "I leave the gall of bitterness, and I go for the apples of sweetness promised unto me by my faithful Guide: but far as the centre it behoves me first to fall." Hell, xvi. 61.

<sup>2</sup> The marauders between England and Scotland were called moss-troopers because of their constant riding over the moss or bogs.

<sup>3</sup> Marmion, c. vi. 38.

<sup>4</sup> Marmion, c. vi. 29.

battles. Of Homer you could not say this; he is not better in his battles than elsewhere; but even between the battle-pieces of the two there exists all the difference which there is between an able work and a masterpiece.

"Tunstall lies dead upon the field,
His life-blood stains the spotless shield;
Edmund is down,—my life is left,—
The Admiral alone is left."

"For not in the hands of Diomedes the son of Tydeus rages the spear, to ward off destruction from the Danaans; neither as yet have I heard the voice of the son of Atreus, shouting out of his hated mouth; but the voice of Hector the slayer of men bursts round me, as he cheers on the Trojans; and they with their yellings fill all the plain, overcoming the Achæians in the battle."—I protest that, to my feeling, Homer's performance, even through that pale and far-off shadow of a prose translation, still has a hundred times more of the grand manner about it, than the original poetry of Scott.

Well, then, the ballad manner and the ballad-measure, whether in the hands of the old ballad poets, or arranged by Chapman, or arranged by Mr. Newman, or, even arranged by Sir Walter Scott, cannot worthily render Homer. And for one reason: Homer is plain, so are they; Homer is natural, so are they; but Homer is sustainably noble, and they are not. Homer and they are both of them natural, and therefore touching and stirring; but the grand style, which is Homer's, is something more than touching and stirring; it can form the character, it is edifying. The old English balladist may stir Sir Philip Sidney's heart like a trumpet, and this is much; but Homer, at the few artists in the grand style, can do more; they can refine the raw natural man, they can transmute him.

OXFORD

From Preface to Essays in Criticism, First Series, 1865)

No, we are all seekers still! seekers often make mistakes and I wish mine to redound to my own discredit only, and not to touch Oxford. Beautiful city! so venerable, so lovely, so unravaged by the fierce intellectual life of our century, so serene!

"There are our young barbarians, all at play!"

And yet, steeped in sentiment as she lies, spreading her gardens to the moonlight, and whispering from her towers the last enchant-

<sup>1</sup> Byron, Childe Harold, c. iv. st. 141.

ments of the Middle Age, who will deny that Oxford, by her ineffable charm, keeps ever calling us nearer to the true goal of all of us, to the ideal, to perfection,—to beauty, in a word, which is only truth seen from another side?—nearer, perhaps, than all the science of Tübingen.<sup>2</sup> Adorable dreamer, whose heart has been so romantic! who hast given thyself so prodigally, given thyself to sides and to heroes not mine; only never to the Philistines! home of lost causes, and forsaken beliefs, and unpopular names, and impossible loyalties! what example could ever so inspire us to keep down the Philistine<sup>3</sup> in ourselves, what teacher could ever so save us from that bondage which Goethe, in his incomparable lines on the death of Schiller, makes it his friend's highest praise (and nobly did Schiller deserve the praise) to have left miles out of sight behind him;—the bondage of "was uns alle bändigt,"<sup>4</sup> das Gemeine!" She will forgive me, even if I have unwittingly drawn upon her a shot or two aimed at her unworthy son; for she is generous, and the cause in which I fight is, after all, hers. Apparitions of a day, what is our puny warfare which this queen of romance has been waging against them for centuries, and will wage after we are gone?

THE CELTIC SPIRIT

(From The Study of Celtic Literature, 1867)

Let me repeat what I have often said of the characteristics which mark the English spirit, the English genius. This spirit, this genius, judged to be sure, rather from a friend's than an enemy's point of view, yet judged on the whole fairly, is characterised, I have repeatedly said, by energy with honesty. Take away some of the energy which comes to us, as I believe, in part from Celtic and Roman sources; instead of energy, say rather steadiness; and you have the Germanic genius: steadiness with honesty. It is evident how nearly the two characterisations approach one another; and yet they leave, as we shall see, a great deal of room for difference. Steadiness with honesty; the danger for a national spirit thus composed is the humdrum, the plain and ugly, the ignoble: in a word, das Gemeine, die Gemeinheit,<sup>1</sup> that curse of Germany, against which Goethe was all his life fighting. The excellence of a national spirit thus composed is freedom from

<sup>2</sup> Tübingen University, which had a faculty on natural science.

<sup>3</sup> The enemies of the children of light; hence, those opposed to culture.

<sup>4</sup> "That which binds us all, the commonplace."

<sup>1</sup> The ordinary, the commonplace.

whim, flightiness, perverseness; patient fidelity to Nature,—in a word, science,—leading it at last, though slowly, and not by the most brilliant road, out of the bondage of the humdrum and common, into the better life. The universal dead-level of plainness and homeliness, the lack of all beauty and distinction in form and feature, the slowness and clumsiness of the language, the eternal beer, sausages, and bad tobacco, the blank commonness everywhere, pressing at last like a weight on the spirits of the traveller in Northern Germany, and making him impatient to be gone,—this is the weak side; the industry, the well-doing, the patient steady elaboration of things, the idea of science governing all departments of human activity,—this is the strong side; and through this side of her genius, Germany has already obtained excellent results, and is destined, we may depend upon it, however her pedantry, her slowness, her fumbling, her ineffectiveness, her bad government, may at times make us cry out, to an immense development.

For dulness, the creeping Saxons,—says an old Irish poem, assigning the characteristics for which different nations are celebrated:—

For acuteness and valour, the Greeks,
For excessive pride, the Romans,
For dulness, the creeping Saxons,
For beauty and amorousness, the Gaedhils.

We have seen in what sense, and with what explanation, this characterisation of the German may be allowed to stand; now let us come to the beautiful and amorous Gaedhil. Or rather, let us find a definition which may suit both branches of the Celtic family, the Cymri as well as the Gael. It is clear that special circumstances may have developed some one side in the national character of the Cymri or Gael, Welshman or Irishman, so that the observer's notice shall be readily caught by this side, and yet it may be impossible to adopt it as characteristic of the Celtic nature generally. For instance, in his beautiful essay on the poetry of the Celtic races, M. Renan,<sup>2</sup> with his eyes fixed on the Bretons and the Welsh, is struck with the timidity, the shyness, the delicacy of the Celtic nature, its preference for a retired life, its embarrassment at having to deal with the great world. He talks of the douce petite race naturellement chrétienne,<sup>3</sup> his race fière et timide, à l'extérieur gauche et embarrassée.<sup>4</sup> It is evident that this description, however well it may do for the Cymri, will never do for the Gael, never do for the typical Irishman of Donnybrook fair. Again, M. Renan's infinie délicatesse de sentiment qui caractérise la race Celtique;<sup>5</sup> how little that accords with the popular conception of an Irishman who wants to borrow money. Sentiment is, however, the word which marks where the Celtic races really touch and are one; sentimental, if the Celtic nature is to be characterised by a single term, is the best term to take. An organisation quick to feel impressions, and feeling them very strongly; a lively personality therefore, keenly sensitive to joy and to sorrow; this is the main point. If the downs of life too much outnumber the ups, this temperament, just because it is so quickly and nearly conscious of all impressions, may no doubt be seen shy and wounded; it may be seen in wistful regret, it may be seen in passionate, penetrating melancholy; but its essence is to aspire ardently after life, light, and emotion, to be expansive, adventurous, and gay. Our word gay, it is said, is itself Celtic. It is not from gaudium, but from the Celtic gair, to laugh, and the impressionable Celt, soon up and soon down, is the more down because it is so; his nature to be up—to be sociable, hospitable, eloquent, admired, figuring away brilliantly. He loves bright colours, he easily becomes audacious, overcrowing, full of fanfaronade. The German, say the physiologists, has the larger volume of intestines (and who that has ever seen a German at a table-d'hôte will not readily believe this?), the Frenchman has the more developed organs of respiration. That is just the expansive, eager, Celtic nature, the head in the air, snuffing and snorting; a proud look and a high stomach,<sup>6</sup> as the Psalmist says, but without any such settled savage temper as the Psalmist seems to impute by those words. For good and for bad, the Celtic genius is more airy and unsubstantial, goes less near the ground, than the German. The Celt is often called sensual; but it is not so much the vulgar satisfactions of sense that attract him as emotion and excitement; he is truly, as I began by saying, sentimental.

Sentimental,—always ready to react against the despotism of fact; that is the description a great friend of the Celt<sup>7</sup> gives of him; and it is not a bad description of the sentimental temperament; it lets us into the secret of its dangers and of its habitual want of success. Balance

<sup>5</sup> Infinite delicacy of sentiment which characterizes the Celtic race.

<sup>6</sup> Psalms, ci. 7. (Prayer-Book version) "Whose hat; also a proud look and high stomach, I will not suffer him."

<sup>7</sup> "Monsieur Henri Martin, whose chapters on the Celts in his Histoire de France, are full of information and interest." Arnold.

<sup>2</sup> A religious historian of France. His essay on The Poetry of the Celtic Races was Arnold's chief inspiration for his Study of Celtic Literature.

<sup>3</sup> Gentle little race, naturally Christian.

<sup>4</sup> Proud and shy, outwardly awkward and embarrassed.

ance, measure, and patience, these are the eternal conditions, even supposing the happiest temperament to start with, of high success; and balance, measure, and patience are just what the Celt has never had. Even in the world of spiritual creation, he has never, in spite of his admirable gifts of quick perception and warm emotion, succeeded perfectly, because he has never had steadiness, patience, sanity enough to comply with the conditions under which alone can expression be given to the finest perceptions and emotions. The Greek has the same perceptive, emotional temperament as the Celt; but he adds to this temperament the sense of measure; hence his admirable success in the plastic arts, in which the Celtic genius, with its chafing against the despotism of fact, its perpetual straining after mere emotion, has accomplished nothing. In the comparatively petty art of ornamentation, in rings, brooches, crosiers, relic-cases, and so on, he has done just enough to show his delicacy of taste, his happy temperament; but the grand difficulties of painting and sculpture, the prolonged dealings of spirit with matter, he has never had patience for. Take the more spiritual arts of music and poetry. All that emotion alone can do in music the Celt has done; the very soul of emotion breathes in the Scotch and Irish airs; but with all this power of musical feeling, what has the Celt, so eager for emotion that he has not patience for science, effected in music, to be compared with what the less emotional German, steadily developing his musical feeling with the science of a Sebastian Bach or a Beethoven, has effected? In poetry, again,—poetry which the Celt has so passionately, so nobly loved; poetry where emotion counts for so much, but where reason, too, reason, measure, sanity, also count for so much,—the Celt has shown genius; but even here his faults have clung to him, and hindered him from producing great works, such as other nations with a genius for poetry, —the Greeks, say, or the Italians,—have produced. The Celt has not produced great poetical works, he has only produced poetry with an air of greatness investing it all, and sometimes giving moreover, to short pieces, or to passages, lines, and snatches of long pieces, singular beauty and power. And yet he loved poetry so much that he grudged no pains to it; but the true art, the architectonic which shapes great works, such as the Agamemnon or the Divine Comedy, comes only after a steady, deep-searching survey, a firm conception of the facts of human life, which the Celt has not patience for. So he runs off into technic where he employs the utmost elaboration, and attains astonishing skill; but in the contents of his poetry you have only so much interpretation of the world as the first dash of a quick, strong perception, and then sentiment, infinite sentiment, can bring you. Here, too, his want of sanity and steadfastness has kept the Celt back from the highest success.

If his rebellion against fact has thus lamed the Celt even in spiritual work, how much more must it have lamed him in the world of business and politics! The skilful and resolute application of means to ends which is needed both to make progress in material civilisation, and also to form powerful states, is just what the Celt has least turn for. He is sensual, as I have said, or at least sensuous; and here he is like the Greek and Latin races; but compare the talent the Greek and Latin (or Latinised) races have shown for gratifying their senses, for procuring an outward life, rich, luxurious, splendid, with the Celt's failure to reach any material civilisation sound and satisfying, and not out at elbows, poor, slovenly, and half-barbarous. The sensuousness of the Greek made Sybaris and Corinth, the sensuousness of the Latin made Rome and Baix; the sensuousness of the Latinised Frenchman makes Paris; the sensuousness of the Celt proper has made Ireland. Even in his ideal, heroic times, his gay and sensuous nature cannot carry him, in the appliances of his favorite life of sociability and pleasure, beyond the gross and creeping Saxon whom he despises; the regent Breas, we are told in the Battle of Moytura of the Fomorians, became unpopular because "the knives of his people were not greased at his table, nor did their breath smell of ale at the banquet." In its grossness and barbarousness is not that Saxon, as Saxon as it can be? just what the Latinised Norman, sensuous and sociable like the Celt, but with the talent to make this bent of his serve to a practical embellishment of his mode of living, found so disgusting in the Saxon.

And as in material civilisation he has been ineffectual, so has the Celt been ineffectual in politics. The colossal, impetuous, adventurous wanderer, the Titan of the early world, who in primitive times fills so large a place on earth's scene, dwindles and dwindles as history goes on, and at last is shrunk to what we now see him. For ages and ages the world has been constantly slipping, ever more and more, out of the Celt's grasp. "They went forth to war," Ossian says most truly, "but they always fell."

* The art of the master-builder which enables him to plan and execute great works.

CULTURE

(From Culture and Anarchy, 1869)

If culture, then, is a study of perfection, and of harmonious perfection, general perfection and perfection which consists in becoming something rather than in having something, in an inward condition of the mind and spirit, not in an outward set of circumstances,—it is clear that culture, instead of being the frivolous and useless thing which Mr. Bright, and Mr. Frederic Harrison, and many other Liberals are apt to call it, has a very important function to fulfil for mankind. And this function is particularly important in our modern world, of which the whole civilisation is, to a much greater degree than the civilisation of Greece and Rome, mechanical and external, and tends constantly to become more and more so. But above all in our own country has culture a weighty part to perform, because here that mechanical character, which civilisation tends to take everywhere, is shown in the most eminent degree. Indeed nearly all the characters of perfection, as culture teaches us to fix them, meet in this country with some powerful tendency which thwarts them and sets them at defiance. The idea of perfection as an inward condition of the mind and spirit is at variance with the mechanical and material civilisation in esteem with us. The idea of perfection as a general expansion of the human family is at variance with our strong individualism, our hatred of all limits to the unrestrained swing of the individual's personality, our maxim of "every man for himself." Above all, the idea of perfection as a harmonious expansion of human nature is at variance with our want of flexibility, with our inaptitude for seeing more than one side of a thing, with our intense energetic absorption in the particular pursuit we happen to be following. So culture has a rough task to achieve in this country. Its preachers have, and are likely long to have, a hard time of it, and they will much oftener be regarded, for a great while to come, as elegant or spurious Jeremiahs than as friends and benefactors. That, however, will not prevent their doing in the end good service if they persevere. And, meanwhile, the mode of action that they have to pursue, and the sort of habits they must fight against, ought to be made quite clear for everyone to see, who may be willing to look at the matter attentively and dispassionately.

Faith in machinery is, I said, our besetting danger; often in machinery most absurdly disproportioned to the end which this machinery, if it is to do any good at all, is to serve;

but always in machinery, as if it had a value in and for itself. What is freedom but machinery? what is population but machinery? what is coal but machinery? what are railroads but machinery? what is wealth but machinery? what are, even, religious organisations but machinery? Now almost every voice in England is accustomed to speak of these things as if they were precious ends in themselves, and therefore had some of the characters of perfection indisputably joined to them. I have before now noticed Mr. Roebuck's stock argument for proving the greatness and happiness of England as she is, and for quite stopping the mouths of all gainsayers. Mr. Roebuck is never weary of reiterating this argument of his, so I do not know why I should be weary of noticing it. "May not every man in England say what he likes?"—Mr. Roebuck perpetually asks; and that, he thinks, is quite sufficient, and when every man may say what he likes, our aspirations ought to be satisfied. But the aspirations of culture, which is the study of perfection, are not satisfied, unless what men say, when they may say what they like, is worth saying,—has good in it, and more good than bad. In the same way the Times, replying to some foreign strictures on the dress, looks, and behaviour of the English abroad, urges that the English ideal is that everyone should be free to do and to look just as he likes. But culture indefatigably tries, not to make what each raw person may like, the rule by which he fashions himself; but to draw ever nearer to a sense of what is indeed beautiful, graceful, and becoming, and to get the raw person to like that.

And in the same way with respect to railroads and coal. Everyone must have observed the strange language current during the late discussions as to the possible failures of our supplies of coal. Our coal, thousands of people were saying, is the real basis of our national greatness; if our coal runs short, there is an end of the greatness of England. But what is greatness?—culture makes us ask. Greatness is a spiritual condition worthy to excite love, interest, and admiration; and the outward proof of possessing greatness is that we excite love, interest and admiration. If England were swallowed up by the sea to-morrow, which of the two, a hundred years hence, would most excite the love, interest, and admiration of mankind,—would most, therefore, show the evidences of having possessed greatness,—the England of the last twenty years, or the England of Elizabeth, of a time of splendid spiritual effort, but when our coal, and our industrial operations depending on coal, were very little developed? Well, then, what an unsound habit of mind it must be which makes us talk of things like coal or iron as constituting the greatness of England, and how salutary a friend is culture, bent on seeing things as they are, and thus dissipating delusions of this kind and fixing standards of perfection that are real!

Wealth, again, that end to which our prodigious works for material advantage are directed,—the commonest of commonplace tells us how men are always apt to regard wealth as a precious end in itself; and certainly they have never been so apt thus to regard it as they are in England at the present time. Never did people believe anything more firmly than nine Englishmen out of ten at the present day believe that our greatness and welfare are proved by our being so very rich. Now, the use of culture is that it helps us, by means of its spiritual standard of perfection, to regard wealth as but machinery, and not only to say as a matter of words that we regard wealth as but machinery, but really to perceive and feel that it is so. If it were not for this purging effect wrought upon our minds by culture, the whole world, the future as well as the present, would inevitably belong to the Philistines. The people who believe most that our greatness and welfare are proved by our being very rich, and who most give their lives and thoughts to becoming rich, are just the very people whom we call Philistines. Culture says: "Consider these people, then, their way of life, their habits, their manners, the very tones of voice; look at them attentively; observe the literature they read, the things which give them pleasure, the words which come forth out of their mouths, the thoughts which make the furniture of their minds; would any amount of wealth be worth having with the condition that one was to become just like these people by having it?" And thus culture begets a dissatisfaction which is of the highest possible value in stemming the common tide of men's thoughts in a wealthy and industrial community, and which saves the future, as one may hope, from being vulgarised, even if it cannot save the present.

THE VOICES OF YOUTH

(From "Emerson," in Discourses in America, 1885)

Forty years ago, when I was an undergraduate at Oxford, voices were in the air there which haunt my memory still. Happy the man who in that susceptible season of youth hears such voices! they are a possession to him forever. No such voices as those which we heard in our youth at Oxford are sounding there now. Oxford has more criticism now, more knowledge, more light; but such voices as those of our youth it has no longer. The name of Cardinal Newman<sup>1</sup> is a great name to the imagination still; his genius and his style are still things of power. But he is over eighty years old, he is in the Oratory at Birmingham; he has adopted, for the doubts and difficulties which beset men's minds to-day, a solution which, to speak frankly, is impossible. Forty years ago he was in the very prime of life; he was close at hand to us at Oxford; he was preaching in St. Mary's pulpit<sup>2</sup> every Sunday; he seemed about to transform and to renew what was for us the most national and natural institution in the world, the Church of England. Who could resist the charm of that spiritual apparition, gliding in the dim afternoon light through the aisles of St. Mary's, rising into the pulpit, and then, in the most entrancing of voices, breaking the silence with words and thoughts which were a religious music,—subtle, sweet, mournful? I seem to hear him still, saying: "After the fever of life, after wearinesses and sicknesses, fightings and despondings, languor and fretfulness, struggling and succeeding; after all the changes and chances of this troubled, unhealthy state,—at length comes death, at length the white throne of God, at length the beatific vision." Or, if we followed him back to his seclusion at Littlemore,<sup>3</sup> that dreary village by the London road, and to the house of retreat and the church which he built there,—a mean house such as Paul might have lived in when he was tent-making at Ephesus, a church plain and thinly sown with worshippers,—who could resist him there either, welcoming back to the severe joys of church-fellowship, and of daily worship and prayer, the firstlings of a generation which had well-nigh forgot them? Again I seem to hear him: "The season is chill and dark, and the breath of the morning is damp, and worshippers are few; but all this befits those who are by their profession penitents and mourners, watchers and pilgrims. More dear to them that loneliness, more cheerful that severity, and more bright that gloom, than all those aids and appliances of luxury by which men nowadays attempt to make prayer less disagreeable to them. True faith does not covet comforts; they who realise that awful day, when they shall see Him face to face whose eyes are as a flame of fire, will as little bargain to pray pleasantly now, as they will think of doing so then."

<sup>1</sup> One of the great leaders of the Oxford movement. Newman became a convert to the Roman Catholic Church in 1845, and thereafter spent the greater part of his life at the Oratory at Birmingham. He died in 1890.

<sup>2</sup> The University Church at Oxford.

<sup>3</sup> Newman's residence just outside of Oxford.

Somewhere or other I have spoken of those "last enchantments of the Middle Age"<sup>4</sup> which Oxford sheds around us, and here they were! But there were other voices sounding in our ear besides Newman's. There was the puissant voice of Carlyle; so sorely strained, over-used, and misused since, but then fresh, comparatively sound, and reaching our hearts with true, pathetic eloquence. Who can forget the emotion of receiving in its first freshness such a sentence as that sentence of Carlyle upon Edward Irving, then just dead: "Scotland sent him forth a herculean man; our mad Babylon wore and wasted him with all her engines,—and it took her twelve years!" A greater voice still,—the greatest voice of that century,—came to us in those youthful years through Carlyle: the voice of Goethe. To this day,—such is the force of youthful associations,—I read the Wilhelm Meister with more pleasure in Carlyle's translation than in the original. The large, liberal view of human life in Wilhelm Meister, how novel it was to the Englishman in those days! and it was salutary, too, and educative for him, doubtless, as well as novel. But what moved us most in Wilhelm Meister was that which, after all, will always move the young most,—the poetry, the eloquence. Never, surely, was Carlyle's prose so beautiful and pure as in the rendering of the Youth's dirge over Mignon!—"Well is our treasure now laid up, the fair image of the past. Here sleeps it in the marble, undecaying; in your hearts, also, it lives, it works. Travel, travel, back into life! Take along with you this holy earnestness, for earnestness alone makes life eternity." Here we had the voice of the great Goethe;—not the stiff, and hindered, and frigid, and factitious Goethe who speaks to us too often from those sixty volumes of his, but of the great Goethe, and the true one.

And besides those voices, there came to us in that old Oxford time a voice also from this side of the Atlantic,—a clear and pure voice, which for my ear, at any rate, brought a strain as new, and moving, and unforgettable, as the strain of Newman, or Carlyle, or Goethe. Mr. Lowell has well described the apparition of Emerson to your young generation here, in that distant time of which I am speaking, and of his workings upon them. He was your Newman, your man of soul and genius visible to you in the flesh, speaking to your bodily ears, a present object for your heart and imagination. That is surely the most potent of influences! nothing can come up to it. To us at Oxford Emerson was but a voice speaking from three thousand miles away. But so we he spoke, that from that time forth Boston Bay and Concord were names invested in my ear with a sentiment akin to that which invests for me the names of Oxford and Weimar; and snatches of Emerson's strangled themselves in my mind as imperishable as any of the eloquent words which I have been just now quoting. "Then dies the man in you; then once more perish the buds of art, poetry, and science, as they have died already in a thousand thousand men." "What Plato has thought, he may think; what a saint has felt, he may feel; what at any time has been fallen any man, he can understand." "Trust thyself! every heart vibrates to that iron string. Accept the place the Divine Providence has found for you, the society of your contemporaries, the connexion of events. Great men have always done so, and confided themselves childlike to the genius of their age; betraying their perception that the Eternal was stirring at their heart, working through their hands predominating in all their being. And we are now men, and must accept in the highest spirit the same transcendent destiny; and not pinched in a corner, not cowards fleeing before a revolution, but redeemers and benefactors, pious aspirants to be noble clay plastic under the Almighty effort, let us advance and advance on chaos and the dark!" These lofty sentences of Emerson, and a hundred others of like strain, I have never lost out of my memory; I never can lose them.

WORDSWORTH

(From Essays in Criticism, Second Series, 1888)

Long ago, in speaking of Homer, I said that the noble and profound application of ideas to life is the most essential part of poetic greatness. I said that a great poet receives his distinctive character of superiority from his application, under the conditions immutably fixed by the laws of poetic beauty and poetic truth, from his application, I say, to his subject, whatever it may be, of the ideas

"On man, on nature, and on human life," which he has acquired for himself. The line quoted is Wordsworth's own; and his superiority arises from his powerful use; in his best pieces, his powerful application to his bject, of ideas "on man, on nature, and on man life."

Voltaire with his signal acuteness, most fully remarked that "no nation has treated poetry moral ideas with more energy and pathos than the English nation." And he adds: "There, it seems to me, is the great merit of the English poets." Voltaire does not mean, "treating in poetry moral ideas," the composing moral and didactic poems;—that brings us but a very little way in poetry. He means just the same thing as was meant when he spoke above "of the noble and profound application of ideas to life;" and he means the application of these ideas under the conditions exacted for us by the laws of poetic beauty and poetic truth. If it is said to call these ideas moral ideas is to introduce a strong and inartificial limitation, I answer that it is to do nothing of the kind, because moral ideas are really so main a part of human life. The question, how to live, is itself a moral idea; and it is the question which most interests every man, and with which, in some way or other, he is perpetually occupied. A large sense is of course to be given to the term moral. Whatever bears upon the question, "how to live," comes under

"Nor love thy life, nor hate; but, what thou liv'st, live well; how long or short, permit to heaven."

In those fine lines Milton utters, as every one at once perceives, a moral idea. Yes, but so too, when Keats consoles the forward-bending lover on the Grecian Urn, the lover arrested and presented in immortal relief by the sculptor's hand before he can kiss, with the line,

"For ever wilt thou love, and she be fair!"—

he utters a moral idea. When Shakespeare says, that

"We are such stuff
As dreams are made of, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep,"

he utters a moral idea.

Voltaire was right in thinking that the energetic and profound treatment of moral ideas, in this large sense, is what distinguishes the English poetry. He sincerely meant praise, not dispraise or hint of limitation; and they err who suppose that poetic limitation is a necessary consequence of the fact, the fact being granted as Voltaire states it. If what distinguishes the greatest poets is their powerful and profound application of ideas to life, which surely no good critic will deny, then to prefix to the term ideas here the term moral makes hardly any difference, because human life itself is in so preponderating a degree moral.

It is important, therefore, to hold fast to this: that poetry is at bottom a criticism of life; that the greatness of a poet lies in his powerful and beautiful application of ideas to life,—to the question: How to live. Morals are often treated in a narrow and false fashion; they are bound up with systems of thought and belief which have had their day; they are fallen into the hands of pedants and professional dealers; they grow tiresome to some of us. We find attraction, at times, even in a poetry of revolt against them; in a poetry which might take for its motto Omar Khayyám's words: "Let us make up in the tavern for the time which we have wasted in the mosque." Or we find attractions in a poetry indifferent to them; in a poetry where the contents may be what they will, but where the form is studied and exquisite. We delude ourselves in either case; and the best cure for our delusion is to let our minds rest upon that great and inexhaustible word life, until we learn to enter into its meaning. A poetry of revolt against moral ideas is a poetry of revolt against life; of indifference towards moral ideas is a poetry of indifference towards life.

Epictetus had a happy figure for things like the play of the senses, or literary form and finish, or argumentative ingenuity, in comparison with "the best and master thing" for us, as he called it, the concern, how to live. Some people were afraid of them, he said, or they disliked and undervalued them. Such people were wrong; they were unthankful or cowardly. But the things might also be over-prized, and treated as final when they are not. They bear to life the relation which inns bear to home. "As if a man, journeying home, and finding a nice inn on the road, and liking it, were to stay for ever at the inn! Man, thou hast forgotten thine object; thy journey was not to this, but through this. 'But this inn is taking.' And how many other inns, too, are taking, and how many fields and meadows! but as places of passage merely. You have an object, which is this: to get home, to do your duty to your family, friends, and fellow-countrymen, to attain inward freedom, serenity, happiness, contentment. Style takes your fancy, arguing takes your fancy, and you forget your home and want to make your abode with them and to stay with them, on the plea that they are taking. Who denies that they are taking? but as places of passage, as inns. And when I say this, you suppose me to be attacking the care for style, the care for argument. I am not; I attack the resting in them, the not looking to the end which is beyond them."

Now, when we come across a poet like Théophile Gautier, we have a poet who has taken up his abode at an inn, and never got farther. There may be inducements to this or to that one of us, at this or that moment, to find delight in him, to cleave to him,—we only stay ourselves in his inn along with him. And when we come across a poet like Wordsworth, who

"Of truth, of grandeur, beauty, love and hope,
And melancholy fear subdued by faith,
Of blessed consolations in distress,
Of moral strength and intellectual power,
Of joy in widest commonalty spread"—

Then we have a poet intent on "the best and master thing," and who prosecutes his journey home. We say, for brevity's sake, that he deals with life, because he deals with that in which life really consists. This is what Voltaire means to praise in the English poets,—this dealing with what is really life. But always it is the mark of the greatest poets that they deal with it; and to say that the English poets are remarkable for dealing with it, is only another way of saying, what is true, that in poetry, the English genius has especially shown its power.

Wordsworth deals with it, and his greatness lies in his dealing with it so powerfully. I have named a number of celebrated poets above all of whom he, in my opinion, deserves to be placed. He is to be placed above poets like Voltaire, Dryden, Pope, Lessing, Schiller, because these famous personages with a thousand gifts and merits, never, or scarcely ever, attain the distinctive accent and utterance of the high and genuine poets—

"Quique pii vates et Phoebo digna locuti,"<sup>1</sup>

at all. Burns, Keats, Heine, not to speak of others in our list, have this accent;—who can doubt it? And at the same time they have treasures of humour, felicity, passion, for which in Wordsworth we shall look in vain. Where, then, is Wordsworth's superiority? It is here; he deals with more of life than they do; he deals with life, as a whole, more powerfully.

No Wordsworthian will doubt this. Nay, the fervent Wordsworthian will add, as Mr. Leslie Stephen does, that Wordsworth's poetry is precious because his philosophy is sound; that his "ethical system is as distinctive and capable of exposition as Bishop Butler's;"

<sup>1</sup> "All the holy poet-prophets, who spoke things worthy of Apollo."

that his poetry is informed by ideas which "fall spontaneously into a scientific system of thought." But we must be on our guard against the Wordsworthians, if we want to secure for Wordsworth his due rank as a poet. The Wordsworthians are apt to praise him for the wrong things, and to lay far too much stress upon what they call his philosophy. His poetry is the reality, his philosophy,—so far, at least, as it may put on the form and habit of "a scientific system of thought," and the more that it puts them on,—is the illusion. Perhaps we shall one day learn to make this proposition general, and to say: Poetry is the reality, philosophy the illusion. But in Wordsworth's case, at any rate, we cannot do him justice until we dismiss his formal philosophy.

The Excursion abounds with philosophy, and therefore the Excursion is to the Wordsworthian what it can never be to the disinterested lover of poetry,—a satisfactory work. "Duty exists," says Wordsworth, in the Excursion; and then he proceeds thus—

"Immutably survive,
For our support, the measures and the forms,
Which an abstract Intelligence supplies,
Whose Kingdom is, where time and space are not."

And the Wordsworthian is delighted, and thinks that here is a sweet union of philosophy and poetry. But the disinterested lover of poetry will feel that the lines carry us really not a step farther than the proposition which they would interpret; that they are a tissue of elevated but abstract verbiage, alien to the very nature of poetry.

Or let us come direct to the centre of Wordsworth's philosophy, as "an ethical system, as distinctive and capable of systematical exposition as Bishop Butler's"—

" . . . One adequate support
For the calamities of mortal life
Exists, one only;—an assured belief
That the procession of our fate, however Sad or disturbed, is ordered by a Being
Of infinite benevolence and power;
Whose everlasting purposes embrace
All accidents, converting them to good."

That is doctrine such as we hear in church, too, religious and philosophic doctrine; and the attached Wordsworthian loves passages of such doctrine, and brings them forward in proof of his poet's excellence. But however true the doctrine may be, it has, as here presented, none of the characters of poetic truth, the kind of truth which we require from a poet, and in which Wordsworth is really strong.

Even the "intimations" of the famous Ode,<sup>2</sup> those corner-stones of the supposed philosophic system of Wordsworth,—the idea of the high instincts and affections coming out in childhood, testifying of a divine home recently left, and fading away as our life proceeds,—this idea, of undeniable beauty as a play of fancy, has itself not the character of poetic truth of the best kind; it has no real solidity. (The instinct of delight in Nature and her beauty had no doubt extraordinary strength in Wordsworth himself as a child. But to say that universally this instinct is mighty in childhood, and tends to die away afterwards, is to say what is extremely doubtful. In many people, perhaps with the majority of educated persons, the love of nature is nearly imperceptible at ten years old, but strong and operative at thirty. In general we may say of these high instincts of early childhood, the base of the alleged systematic philosophy of Wordsworth, what Thucydides says of the earliest achievements of the Greek race: "It is impossible to speak with certainty of what is so remote; but from all that we can really investigate, I should say that they were no very great things.")

Finally, the "scientific system of thought" in Wordsworth gives us at last such poetry as this, which the devout Wordsworthian accepts:

"O for the coming of that glorious time
When prizing knowledge as her noblest wealth
And best protection, this Imperial Realm,
While she exacts allegiance, shall admit
An obligation, on her part, to teach
Them who are born to serve her and obey;
Binding herself by statute to secure,
For all the children whom her soil maintains,
The rudiments of letters, and inform
The mind with moral and religious truth."

Wordsworth calls Voltaire dull, and surely the production of these unVoltarian lines must have been imposed on him as a judgment! One can hear them being quoted at a Social Science Congress; one can call up the whole scene. A great room in one of our dismal provincial towns; dusty air and jaded afternoon daylight; benches full of men with bald heads and women in spectacles; an orator lifting up his face from a manuscript written within and without to declaim these lines of Wordsworth; and in the soul of any poor child of nature who may have wandered in thither, an unutterable sense of lamentation, and mourning, and woe!

"But turn we," as Wordsworth says, "from these bold, bad men," the haunters of Social Science Congresses. And let us be on our guard, too, against the exhibitors and extollers of a "scientific system of thought" in Wordsworth's poetry. The poetry will never be seen aright while they thus exhibit it. The cause of its greatness is simple, and may be told quite simply. Wordsworth's poetry is great because of the extraordinary power with which Wordsworth feels the joy offered to us in nature, the joy offered to us in the simple primary affections and duties; and because of the extraordinary power with which, in case after case, he shows us this joy, and renders it so as to make us share it.

Thomas Henry Huxley

1825-1895

ON THE ADVISABLENESS OF IMPROVING NATURAL KNOWLEDGE

(From Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews, 1870)

This time two hundred years ago<sup>1</sup> in the beginning of January, 1666—those of our forefathers who inhabited this great and ancient city, took breath between the shocks of two fearful calamities: one not quite past, although its fury had abated; the other to come.

Within a few yards of the very spot<sup>2</sup> on which we are assembled, so the tradition runs, that painful and deadly malady, the plague, appeared in the latter months of 1664; and, though no new visitor, smote the people of England and especially of her capital, with a violence unknown before, in the course of the following year. The hand of a master has pictured what happened in those dismal months; and in the truest of fictions, "The History of the Plague Year,"<sup>3</sup> Defoe shows death, with every accompaniment of pain and terror, stalking through the narrow streets of old London, and changing their busy hum into a silence broken only by the wailing of the mourners of fifty thousand dead; by the woful denunciations and mad prayers of fanatics; and by the madder yells of despairing profligates.

But, about this time in 1666, the death-rate had sunk to nearly its ordinary amount; a case of plague occurred only here and there, and the richer citizens who had flown from the pest had returned to their dwellings. The remnant of the people began to toil at the accustomed round of duty, or of pleasure; and the stream of city life bid fair to flow back along its old bed, with renewed and uninterrupted vigour.

<sup>1</sup> Huxley's Address was delivered in 1866.

<sup>2</sup> St. Martin's Borough Hall and Public Library, near Trafalgar Square, London.

<sup>3</sup> V. p. 316, supra.

<sup>2</sup> V. p. 478, supra.

The newly kindled hope was deceitful. The great plague, indeed, returned no more; but what it had done for the Londoners, the great fire, which broke out in the autumn of 1666, did for London; and, in September of that year, a heap of ashes and the indestructible energy of the people were all that remained of the glory of five-sixths of the city within the walls.

Our forefathers had their own ways of accounting for each of these calamities. They submitted to the plague in humility and in penitence, for they believed it to be the judgment of God. But, towards the fire they were furiously indignant, interpreting it as the effect of the malice of man,—as the work of the Republicans, or of the Papists, according as their prepossessions ran in favour of loyalty or Puritanism.

It would, I fancy, have fared but ill with one who, standing where I now stand, in what was then a thickly peopled and fashionable part of London, should have broached to our ancestors the doctrine which I now propound to you—that all their hypotheses were alike wrong; that the plague was no more, in their sense, Divine judgment, than the fire was the work of any political, or of any religious, sect; but that they were themselves the authors of both plague and fire, and that they must look to themselves to prevent the recurrence of calamities, to all appearance so peculiarly beyond the reach of human control—so evidently the result of the wrath of God, or of the craft and subtlety of an enemy.

And one may picture to oneself how harmoniously the holy cursing of the Puritan of that day would have chimed in with the unholy cursing and the crackling wit of the Rochesters and Sedleys,<sup>4</sup> and with the revilings of the political fanatics, if my imaginary plain dealer had gone on to say that, if the return of such misfortunes were ever rendered impossible, it would not be in virtue of the victory of the faith of Laud,<sup>5</sup> or of that of Milton; and, as little, by the triumph of republicanism, as by that of monarchy. But that the one thing needful for the compassing this end was, that the people of England should second the efforts of an insignificant corporation, the establishment of which, a few years before the epoch of the great plague and the great fire, had been as little noticed, as they were conspicuous.

Some twenty years before the outbreak of the plague a few calm and thoughtful students banded themselves together for the purpose, as they phrased it, of “improving natural knowledge.” The ends they proposed to attain cannot be stated more clearly than in the words of one of the founders of the organization:—

“Our business was (precluding matters of theology and state affairs) to discourse and consider of philosophical enquiries, and such as related thereunto:—as Physic, Anatomy, Geometry, Astronomy, Navigation, Staticks, Magneticks, Chymicks, Mechanicks, and Natural Experiments; with the state of these studies and their cultivation at home and abroad. We then discoursed of the circulation of the blood, the valves in the veins, the venæ lacteæ, the lymphatic vessels, the Copernican hypothesis, the nature of comets and new stars, the satellites of Jupiter, the oval shape (as it then appeared) of Saturn, the spots on the sun and its turning on its own axis, the inequalities and selenography<sup>6</sup> of the moon, the several phases of Venus and Mercury, the improvement of telescopes and grinding of glasses for that purpose, the weight of air, the possibility or impossibility of vacuities and nature’s abhorrence thereof, the Torricellian experiment<sup>7</sup> in quicksilver, the descent of heavy bodies and the degree of acceleration therein, with divers other things of like nature, some of which were then new discoveries, and others not so generally known and embraced as now they are; with other things appertaining to what hath been called the New Philosophy, which, from the times of Galileo at Florence, and Sir Francis Bacon (Lord Verulam) in England, hath been much cultivated in Italy, France, Germany, and other parts abroad, as well as with us in England.”

The learned Dr. Wallis,<sup>8</sup> writing in 1696, narrates, in these words, what happened half a century before, or about 1645. The associates met at Oxford, in the rooms of Dr. Wilkins, who was destined to become a bishop; and subsequently coming together in London, they attracted the notice of the king. And it is a strange evidence of the taste for knowledge which the most obviously worthless of the Stuarts shared with his father and grandfather, that Charles the Second was not content with saying witty things about his philosophers, but did wise things with regard to them. For he not only bestowed upon them such attention as he could spare from his poodles and his mistresses, but, being in his usual state of impecuniosity, begged for them of the Duke of Ormond; and, that step being without

<sup>4</sup> Courtiers of Charles II’s time, noted for their wit and profligacy.

<sup>5</sup> Archbishop of Canterbury.

<sup>6</sup> The study of the physical condition of the moon.

<sup>7</sup> Torricelli, an Italian, discoverer of the principle of the barometer in 1643.

<sup>8</sup> The greatest of Newton’s predecessors in the field of mathematics (1616–1703).

fect, gave them Chelsea College, a charter, and a mace; crowning his favours in the best way they could be crowned, by burdening them no further with royal patronage or state interference.

Thus it was that the half-dozen young men, studious of the "New Philosophy,"<sup>9</sup> who met in one another's lodgings in Oxford or in London, in the middle of the seventeenth century, grew in numerical and in real strength, until, in its latter part, the "Royal Society for the Improvement of Natural Knowledge" had already become famous, and had acquired a claim upon the veneration of Englishmen, which it has ever since retained, as the principal focus of scientific activity in our islands, and the chief champion of the cause it was formed to support.

It was by the aid of the Royal Society that Newton<sup>10</sup> published his "Principia." If all the books in the world, except the Philosophical Transactions,<sup>11</sup> were destroyed, it is safe to say that the foundations of physical science would remain unshaken, and the vast intellectual progress of the last two centuries would be largely, though incompletely, recorded. Nor have any signs of halting or of decrepitude manifested themselves in our own times. As in Dr. Wallis's days, so in these, "our business is, precluding theology and state affairs, to discourse and consider of philosophical enquiries." But our "Mathematick" is one which Newton would have to go to school to learn; our "Statics, Mechanicks, Magneticks, Chymicks, and Natural Experiments" constitute a mass of physical and chemical knowledge, a glimpse at which would compensate Galileo for the doings of a score of inquisitorial cardinals;<sup>12</sup> our "Physick" and "Anatomy" have embraced such infinite varieties of being, have laid open such new worlds in time and space, have grappled, not unsuccessfully, with such complex problems, that the eyes of Vesalius<sup>13</sup> and of Harvey<sup>14</sup> might be dazzled by the sight of the tree that has grown out of their grain of mustard seed.

The fact is perhaps rather too much, than too little, forced upon one's notice, nowadays, that all this marvellous intellectual growth has a no less wonderful expression in practical life; and that, in this respect, if in no other, the movement symbolized by the progress of the Royal Society stands without a parallel in the history of mankind.

A series of volumes as bulky as the Transactions of the Royal Society might possibly be filled with the speculations of the Schoolmen; not improbably, the obtaining a mastery over the products of mediæval thought might necessitate an even greater expenditure of time and of energy than the acquirement of the "New Philosophy;" but though such work engrossed the best intellects of Europe for a longer time than has elapsed since the great fire, its effects were "writ in water," so far as our social state is concerned.

On the other hand, if the noble first President<sup>15</sup> of the Royal Society could revisit the upper air and once more gladden his eyes with the sight of the familiar mace, he would find himself in the midst of a material civilization more different from that of his day, than that of the seventeenth, was from that of the first, century. And if Lord Brouncker's native sagacity had not deserted his ghost, he would need no long reflection to discover that all these great ships, these railways, these telegraphs, these factories, these printing-presses, without which the whole fabric of modern English society would collapse into a mass of stagnant and starving pauperism,—that all these pillars of our State are but the ripples and the bubbles upon the surface of that great spiritual stream, the springs of which, only, he and his fellows were privileged to see; and seeing, to recognise as that which it behoved them above all things to keep pure and undefiled.

It may not be too great a flight of imagination to conceive our noble revenant<sup>16</sup> not forgetful of the troubles of his own day, and anxious to know how often London had been burned down since his time, and how often the plague had carried off its thousands. He would have to learn that, although London contains tenfold the inflammable matter that it did in 1666; though, not content with filling our rooms with woodwork and light draperies, we must needs lead inflammable and explosive gases into every corner of our streets and houses, we never allow even a street to burn down. And if he asked how this had come about, we should have to explain that the improvement of natural knowledge has furnished us with dozens of machines for throwing water upon fires, any one of which would have furnished the ingenious Mr. Hooke, the first "curator and experimenter" of the Royal

<sup>9</sup> The principles set forth in Bacon's Novum Organum.

<sup>10</sup> Sir Isaac Newton, who was elected to the Royal Society in 1672.

<sup>11</sup> The publications of the Royal Society.

<sup>12</sup> Galileo's views of the Copernican theory were condemned by the Pope.

<sup>13</sup> A famous Belgian anatomist (1514–1564).

<sup>14</sup> An English physiologist, noted for discovering the circulation of the blood.

<sup>15</sup> Lord Brouncker, the first president of the Royal Society after its incorporation.

<sup>16</sup> Ghostly visitor.

Society, with ample materials for discourse before half a dozen meetings of that body; and that, to say truth, except for the progress of natural knowledge, we should not have been able to make even the tools by which these machines are constructed. And, further, it would be necessary to add, that although severe fires sometimes occur and inflict great damage, the loss is very generally compensated by societies, the operations of which have been rendered possible only by the progress of natural knowledge in the direction of mathematics, and the accumulation of wealth in virtue of other natural knowledge.

But the plague? My Lord Brouncker's observation would not, I fear, lead him to think that Englishmen of the nineteenth century are purer in life, or more fervent in religious faith, than the generation which could produce a Boyle,<sup>17</sup> an Evelyn,<sup>18</sup> and a Milton. He might find the mud of society at the bottom, instead of at the top, but I fear that the sum total would be as deserving of swift judgment as at the time of the Restoration. And it would be our duty to explain once more, and this time not without shame, that we have no reason to believe that it is the improvement of our faith, nor that of our morals, which keeps the plague from our city; but, again, that it is the improvement of our natural knowledge.

We have learned that pestilences will only take up their abode among those who have prepared unswept and ungarnished residences for them. Their cities must have narrow, unwatered streets, foul with accumulated garbage. Their houses must be ill-drained, ill-lighted, ill-ventilated. Their subjects must be ill-washed, ill-fed, ill-clothed. The London of 1665 was such a city. The cities of the East, where plague has an enduring dwelling, are such cities. We, in later time, have learned somewhat of nature, and partly obey her. Because of this partial improvement of our natural knowledge and of that fractional obedience, we have no plague; because that knowledge is still very imperfect and that obedience yet incomplete, typhus is our companion and cholera our visitor. But it is not presumptuous to express the belief that, when our knowledge is more complete and our obedience the expression of our knowledge, London will count her centuries of freedom from typhus and cholera, as she now gratefully reckons her two hundred years of ignorance of that plague which swooped upon her thrice in the first half of the seventeenth century.

Surely, there is nothing in these explanations which is not fully borne out by the facts?

<sup>17</sup> Robert Boyle, an English chemist. <sup>18</sup> V. p. 280, supra.

Surely, the principles involved in them are now admitted among the fixed beliefs of all thinking men? Surely, it is true that our countrymen are less subject to fire, famine, pestilence, and all the evils which result from a want of command over and due anticipation of the course of Nature, than were the countrymen of Milton; and health, wealth, and well-being are more abundant with us than with them? But no less certainly is the difference due to the improvement of our knowledge of Nature, and the extent to which that improved knowledge has been incorporated with the household words of men, and has supplied the springs of their daily actions.

Granting for a moment, then, the truth of that which the depreciators of natural knowledge are so fond of urging, that its improvement can only add to the resources of our material civilization; admitting it to be possible that the founders of the Royal Society themselves looked for no other reward than this, I cannot confess that I was so guilty of exaggeration when I hinted, that to him who had the gift of distinguishing between prominent events and important events, the origin of a combined effort on the part of mankind to improve natural knowledge might have loomed larger than the Plague and have outshone the glare of the Fire; as a something fraught with the wealth of beneficence to mankind, in comparison with which the damage done by those ghastly evils would shrink into insignificance.

It is very certain that for every victim slain by the plague, hundreds of mankind exist and find a fair share of happiness in the world, by the aid of the spinning jenny. And the great fire, at its worst, could not have burned the supply of coal, the daily working of which, in the bowels of the earth, made possible by the steam pump, gives rise to an amount of wealth to which the millions lost in old London are but as an old song.

But spinning jenny and steam pump are, after all, but toys, possessing an accidental value; and natural knowledge creates multitudes of more subtle contrivances, the praises of which do not happen to be sung because they are not directly convertible into instruments for creating wealth. When I contemplate natural knowledge squandering such gifts among men, the only appropriate comparison I can find for her is, to liken her to such a peasant woman as one sees in the Alps, striding ever upward, heavily burdened, and with mind bent only on her home; but yet, without effort and without thought, knitting for her children. Now stockings are good and comfortable things, and the children will undoubtedly be much the better for them; but surely it would be short-sighted, to say the least of it, to depreciate this toiling mother as a mere stocking-machine—a mere provider of physical comforts?

However, there are blind leaders of the blind, and not a few of them, who take this view of natural knowledge, and can see nothing in the bountiful mother of humanity but a sort of comfort-grinding machine. According to them, the improvement in natural knowledge always has been, and always must be, synonymous with no more than the improvement of the material resources and the increase of the gratifications of men.

Natural knowledge is, in their eyes, no real mother of mankind, bringing them up with kindness, and, if need be, with sternness, in the way they should go, and instructing them in all things needful for their welfare; but a sort of fairy godmother, ready to furnish her pets with shoes of swiftness, swords of sharpness, and omnipotent Aladdin's lamps, so that they may have telegraphs to Saturn, and see the other side of the moon, and thank God they are better than their benighted ancestors.

If this talk were true, I, for one, should not greatly care to toil in the service of natural knowledge. I think I would just as soon be quietly chipping my own flint axe, after the manner of my forefathers a few thousand years back, as be troubled with the endless malady of thought which now infests us all, for such reward. But I venture to say that such views are contrary alike to reason and to fact. Those who discourse in such fashion seem to me to be so intent upon trying to see what is above Nature, or what is behind her, that they are blind to what stares them in the face of her.

I should not venture to speak thus strongly if my justification were not to be found in the simplest and most obvious facts,—if it needed more than an appeal to the most notorious truths to justify my assertion, that the improvement of natural knowledge, whatever direction it has taken, and however low the aims of those who may have commenced it—has not only conferred practical benefits on men, but in so doing, has effected a revolution in their conceptions of the universe and of themselves, and has profoundly altered their modes of thinking and their views of right and wrong. I say that natural knowledge, seeking to satisfy natural wants, has found the ideas which can alone still spiritual cravings. I say that natural knowledge, in desiring to ascertain the laws of comfort, has been driven to discover those of conduct, and to lay foundations of a new morality.

Let us take these points separately; and, first, what great ideas has natural knowledge introduced into men's minds?

I cannot but think that the foundations of all natural knowledge were laid when the reason of man first came face to face with the facts of Nature; when the savage first learned that the fingers of one hand are fewer than those of both; that it is shorter to cross a stream than to head it; that a stone stops where it is unless it be moved, and that it drops from the hand which lets it go; that light and heat come and go with the sun; that sticks burn away in a fire; that plants and animals grow and die; that if he struck his fellow-savage a blow he would make him angry, and perhaps get a blow in return, while if he offered him a fruit he would please him, and perhaps receive a fish in exchange. When men had acquired this much knowledge, the outlines, rude though they were, of mathematics, of physics, of chemistry, of biology, of moral, economical, and political science, were sketched. Nor did the germ of religion fail when science began to bud. Listen to words which, though new, are yet three thousand years old:—

“ . . . When in heaven the stars about the moon

Look beautiful, when all the winds are laid,
And every height comes out, and jutting peak
And valley, and the immeasurable heavens
Break open to their highest, and all the stars
Shine, and the shepherd gladdens in his heart.”<sup>19</sup>

If the half-savage Greek could share our feelings thus far, is it irrational to doubt that he went further, to find, as we do, that upon that brief gladness there follows a certain sorrow,—the little light of awakened human intelligence shines so mere a spark amidst the abyss of the unknown and unknowable; seems so insufficient to do more than illuminate the imperfections that cannot be remedied, the aspirations that cannot be realized, of man's own nature. But in this sadness, this consciousness of the limitation of man, this sense of an open secret which he cannot penetrate, lies the essence of all religion; and the attempt to embody it in the forms furnished by the intellect is the origin of the higher theologies.

Thus it seems impossible to imagine but that the foundations of all knowledge—secular or sacred—were laid when intelligence dawned, though the superstructure remained for long ages so slight and feeble as to be compatible with the existence of almost any general view respecting the mode of governance of the universe. No doubt, from the first, there were certain phenomena which, to the rudest mind, presented a constancy of occurrence, and suggested that a fixed order ruled, at any rate, among them. I doubt if the grossest of Fetish worshippers ever imagined that a stone must have a god within it to make it fall, or that a fruit had a god within it to make it taste sweet. With regard to such matters as these, it is hardly questionable that mankind from the first took strictly positive and scientific views.

<sup>19</sup> From Tennyson's Specimens of a Translation of the Iliad in Blank Verse.

But, with respect to all the less familiar occurrences which present themselves, uncultured man, no doubt, has always taken himself as the standard of comparison, as the centre and measure of the world; nor could he well avoid doing so. And finding that his apparently uncaused will has a powerful effect in giving rise to many occurrences, he naturally enough ascribed other and greater events to other and greater volitions, and came to look upon the world and all that therein is, as the product of the volitions of persons like himself, but stronger, and capable of being appeased or angered, as he himself might be soothed or irritated. Through such conceptions of the plan and working of the universe all mankind have passed, or are passing. And we may now consider, what has been the effect of the improvement of natural knowledge on the views of men who have reached this stage, and who have begun to cultivate natural knowledge with no desire but that of "increasing God's honour and bettering man's estate."

For example: what could seem wiser, from a mere material point of view, more innocent, from a theological one, to an ancient people, than that they should learn the exact succession of the seasons, as warnings for their husbandmen; or the position of the stars, as guides to their rude navigators? But what has grown out of this search for natural knowledge of so merely useful a character? You all know the reply. Astronomy,—which of all sciences has filled men's minds with general ideas of a character most foreign to their daily experience, and has, more than any other, rendered it impossible for them to accept the beliefs of their fathers. Astronomy,—which tells them that this so vast and seemingly solid earth is but an atom among atoms, whirling, no man knows whither, through illimitable space; which demonstrates that what we call the peaceful heaven above us, is but that space, filled by an infinitely subtle matter whose particles are seething and surging, like the waves of an angry sea; which opens up to us infinite regions where nothing is known, but matter and force, operating according to rigid rules; which leads us to contemplate phenomena the very nature of which demonstrates that they must have had a beginning, and that they must have an end, but the very nature of which also proves that the beginning was, to our conceptions of time, infinitely remote, and that the end is as immeasurably distant.

But it is not alone those who pursue astronomy who ask for bread and receive ideas. What more harmless than the attempt to lift and distribute water by pumping it; what more absolutely and grossly utilitarian? But out of pumps grew the discussions about Nature's abhorrence of a vacuum; and then it was discovered that Nature does not abhor a vacuum, but that air has weight; and that notion paved the way for the doctrine that all matter has weight, and that the force which produces weight is co-extensive with the universe,—in short, to the theory of universal gravitation and endless force. While learning how to handle gases led to the discovery of oxygen, and to modern chemistry, and to the notion of the indestructibility of matter.

Again, what simpler, or more absolutely practical, than the attempt to keep the axle of a wheel from heating when the wheel turns round very fast? How useful for carters and gig drivers to know something about this; and how good were it, if any ingenious person would find out the cause of such phenomena, and thence educe a general remedy for them. Such an ingenious person was Count Rumford; and he and his successors have landed us in the theory of the persistence, or indestructibility, of force. And in the infinitely minute, as in the infinitely great, the seekers after natural knowledge, of the kinds called physical and chemical, have everywhere found a definite order and succession of events which never seemed to be infringed.

And how has it fared with "Physick" and Anatomy? Have the anatomist, the physiologist, or the physician, whose business it has been to devote themselves assiduously to that eminently practical and direct end, the alleviation of the sufferings of mankind,—have they been able to confine their vision more absolutely to the strictly useful? I fear that they are the worst offenders of all. For if the astronomer has set before us the infinite magnitude of space, and the practical eternity of the duration of the universe; if the physical and chemical philosophers have demonstrated the infinite minuteness of its constituent parts, and the practical eternity of matter and of force; and if both have alike proclaimed the universality of a definite and predicable order and succession of events, the workers in biology have not only accepted all these, but have added more startling theses of their own. For, as the astronomers discover in the earth no centre of the universe, but an eccentric speck, so the naturalists find man to be no centre of the living world, but one amidst endless modifications of life; and as the astronomer observes the mark of practically endless time set upon the arrangements of the solar system so the student of life finds the records of ancient forms of existence peopling the world for ages, which, in relation to human experience, are infinite.

<sup>20</sup> A distinguished scientist of American birth, chiefly remembered for his experiments on the nature of heat.

Furthermore, the physiologist finds life to be as dependent for its manifestation on particular molecular arrangements as any physical or chemical phenomenon; and, wherever he extends his researches, fixed order and unchanging causation reveal themselves, as plainly as in the rest of Nature.

Nor can I find that any other fate has awaited the germ of Religion. Arising, like all other kinds of knowledge, out of the action and interaction of man's mind, with that which is not man's mind, it has taken the intellectual coverings of Fetishism or Polytheism; of Theism or Atheism; of Superstition or Rationalism. With these, and their relative merits and demerits, I have nothing to do; but this it is needful for my purpose to say, that if the religion of the present differs from that of the past, it is because the theology of the present has become more scientific than that of the past; because it has not only renounced idols of wood and idols of stone, but begins to see the necessity of breaking in pieces the idols built up of books and traditions and fine-spun ecclesiastical cobwebs: and of cherishing the noblest and most human of man's emotions, by worship "for the most part of the silent sort" at the altar of the Unknown and Unknowable.

Such are a few of the new conceptions implanted in our minds by the improvement of natural knowledge. Men have acquired the ideas of the practically infinite extent of the universe and of its practical eternity; they are familiar with the conception that our earth is but an infinitesimal fragment of that part of the universe which can be seen; and that, nevertheless, its duration is, as compared with our standards of time, infinite. They have further acquired the idea that man is but one of innumerable forms of life now existing in the globe, and that the present existences are but the last of an immeasurable series of predecessors. Moreover, every step they have made in natural knowledge has tended to extend and rivet in their minds the conception of a definite order of the universe—which is embodied in what are called, by an unhappy metaphor, the laws of Nature—and to narrow the range and loosen the force of men's belief in spontaneity, or in changes other than such as arise out of that definite order itself.

Whether these ideas are well or ill founded is not the question. No one can deny that they exist, and have been the inevitable outgrowth of the improvement of natural knowledge. And if so, it cannot be doubted that they are changing the form of men's most cherished and most important convictions.

And as regards the second point—the extent to which the improvement of natural knowledge has remodelled and altered what may be termed the intellectual ethics of men,—what are among the moral convictions most fondly held by barbarous and semi-barbarous people?

They are the convictions that authority is the soundest basis of belief; that merit attaches to a readiness to believe; that the doubting disposition is a bad one, and scepticism a sin; that when good authority has pronounced what is to be believed, and faith has accepted it, reason has no further duty. There are many excellent persons who yet hold by these principles, and it is not my present business, or intention, to discuss their views. All I wish clearly to bring before your mind is the unquestionable fact, that the improvement of natural knowledge is effected by methods which directly give the lie to all these convictions, and assume the exact reverse of each to be true.

The improver of natural knowledge absolutely refuses to acknowledge authority, as such. For him, scepticism is the highest of duties; blind faith the one unpardonable sin. And it cannot be otherwise, for every great advance in natural knowledge has involved the absolute rejection of authority, the cherishing of the keenest scepticism, the annihilation of the spirit of blind faith; and the most ardent votary of science holds his firmest convictions, not because the men he most venerates hold them; not because their verity is tested by portents and wonders; but because his experience teaches him that whenever he chooses to bring these convictions into contact with their primary sources, Nature—whenever he thinks fit to test them by appealing to experiment and to observation—Nature will confirm them. The man of science has learned to believe in justification, not by faith, but by verification.

Thus, without for a moment pretending to despise the practical results of the improvement of natural knowledge, and its beneficial influence on material civilization it must, I think, be admitted that the great ideas, some of which I have indicated, and the ethical spirit which I have endeavoured to sketch, in the few moments which remained at my disposal, constitute the real and permanent significance of natural knowledge.

If these ideas be destined, as I believe they are, to be more and more firmly established as the world grows older; if that spirit be fated, as I believe it is, to extend itself into all departments of human thought, and to become co-extensive with the range of knowledge; if, as our race approaches its maturity, it discovers, as I believe it will, that there is but one kind of knowledge and but one method of acquiring it; then we, who are still children, may justly feel it our highest duty to recognize the advisableness of improving natural knowledge, and so to aid ourselves and our successors in their course towards the noble goal which lies before mankind.

Frederick Harrison

1831-

WALTER SCOTT

(From The Choice of Books, 1880)

In Europe, as in England, Walter Scott remains as yet the last in the series of the great creative spirits of the human race. No one of his successors, however clear be the genius and the partial success of some of them, belongs to the same grand type of mind, or has now a lasting place in the roll of the immortals. It should make us sad to reflect that a generation, which already has begun to treat Scott with the indifference that is the lot of a "classic," should be ready to fill its insatiable maw with the ephemeral wares of the booksellers, and the reeking garbage of the boulevard.

We all read Scott's romances, as we have all read Hume's History of England; but how often do we read them, how zealously, with what sympathy and understanding? I am told that the last discovery of modern culture is that Scott's prose is commonplace; that the young men at our universities are far too critical to care for his artless sentences and flowing descriptions. They prefer Mr. Swinburne, Mr. Mallock, and the Euphuism of young Oxford, just as some people prefer a Dresden Shepherdess to the Caryatides of the Ere-theum,<sup>1</sup> pronounce Fielding to be low, and Mozart to be passé. As boys love lollipops, so these juvenile fops love to roll phrases about under the tongue, as if phrases in themselves had a value apart from thoughts, feelings, great conceptions, or human sympathy. For Scott is just one of the poets (we may call poets all the great creators in prose or in verse) of whom one never wearies, just as one can listen to Beethoven, or watch the sunrise or the sunset day by day with new delight. I think I can read the Antiquary, or the Bride of Lammermoor, Ivanhoe, Quentin Durward, and Old Mortality, at least once a year afresh.

Scott is a perfect library in himself. A constant reader of romances would find that it needed months to go through even the best pieces of the inexhaustible painter of eight full centuries and every type of man; and he might repeat the process of reading him ten times in a lifetime without a sense of fatigue or sameness. The poetic beauty of Scott's creations is almost the least of his great qualities. It is the universality of his sympathy that is so truly great, the justice of his estimates, the insight into the spirit of each age, his intense absorption of self in the vast epic of human civilisation. What are the old almanacs that they so often give us as histories beside these living pictures of the ordered succession of ages? As in Homer himself, we see in this prose Iliad of modern history, the battle of the old and the new, the heroic defence of ancient strongholds, the long impendence and inevitable doom of mediæval life. Strong men and proud women struggle against the destiny of modern society, unconsciously working out its ways, undauntedly defying its power. How just is our island Homer! Neither Greek nor Trojan sways him; Achilles is his hero; Hector is his favorite; he loves the councils of chiefs, and the palace of Priam; but the swine-herd, the charioteer, the slave-girl, the hound, the beggar, and the herds-man, all glow alike in the harmonious colouring of his peopled epic. We see the dawn of our English nation, the defence of Christendom against the Koran, the grace and terror of feudalism, the rise of monarchy out of baronies, the rise of parliaments out of monarchy, the rise of industry out of serfage, the pathetic ruin of chivalry, the splendid death-struggle of Catholicism, the sylvan tribes of the mountain (remnants of our pre-historic forefathers) beating themselves to pieces against the hard advance of modern industry; we see the grim heroism of the Bible-martyrs, the catastrophe of feudalism overwhelmed by a practical age which knew little of its graces, and almost nothing of its virtues. Such is Scott, who, we may say, has done for the various phases of modern history, what Shakespeare has done for the manifold types of human character. And this glorious and most human and most historical of poets, without whom our very conception of human development would have ever been imperfect, this manliest, and truest, and widest of romancers we neglect for some hothouse hybrid of psychological analysis, for the wretched imitators of Balzac, and the jackanapes phrasemongering of some Osric<sup>2</sup> of the day, who assures us that Scott is an absolute Philistine.

<sup>1</sup> A temple in Athens, (so named because it contained the bust of Erectheus), generally regarded as one of the finest specimens of Greek architecture. The Caryatides are six robed female figures which support the Eretheum, and are choice examples of architectural sculpture.

ON READING

(From the same)

Collecting rare books and forgotten authors is perhaps of all the collecting manias the most foolish in our day. There is much to be said for rare china and curious beetles. The china is occasionally beautiful; and the beetles at least are droll. But rare books now are, by the nature of the case, worthless books; and their rarity usually consists in this, that the printer made a blunder in the text, or that they contain something exceptionally nasty or silly. To affect a profound interest in neglected authors and uncommon books, is a sign for the most part—not that a man has exhausted the resources of ordinary literature—but that he has no real respect for the greatest productions of the greatest men of the world. This bibliomania seizes hold of rational beings and so perverts them, that in the sufferer's mind the human race exists for the sake of the books, and not the books for the sake of the human race. There is one book they might read to good purpose, the doings of a great book collector—who once lived in La Mancha.<sup>1</sup> To the collector, and sometimes to the scholar, the book becomes a fetch or idol, and is worthy of the worship of mankind, even if it be not of the slightest use to anybody. As the book exists, it must have the compliment paid it of being invited to the shelves. The "library is imperfect without it," although the library will, so to speak stink, when it is there. The great books are of course the common books; and these are treated by collectors and librarians with sovereign contempt. The more dreadful an abortion of a book the rare volume may be, the more desperate is the struggle of libraries to possess it. Civilisation in fact has evolved a complete apparatus, an order of men, and a code of ideas, for the express purpose one may say of degrading the great books, and gives the place of honour to that which is plainly literary carrion.

Now I suppose, at the bottom of all this lies that rattle and restlessness of life which belongs to the industrial Maelstrom wherein we ever revolve. And connected therewith comes also that literary dandyism, which results from the pursuit of letters without any social purpose or any systematic faith. To read from the pricking of some cerebral itch rather than from a desire of forming judgments; to get, like an Alpine club stripling, to the top of some unsealed pinnacle of culture; to use books as a sedative, as a means of exciting a mild intellectual titillation, instead of as a means of elevating the nature; to dribble on in a perpetual literary gossip, in order to avoid the effort of bracing the mind to think—such is our habit in an age of utterly chaotic education. We read, as the bereaved poet made rhymes—

"For the unquiet heart and brain,
A use in measured language lies;
The sad mechanic exercise,
Like dull narcotics numbing pain."<sup>2</sup>

We, to whom steam and electricity have given almost everything excepting bigger brains and hearts, who have a new invention ready for every meeting of the Royal Institution,<sup>3</sup> who want new things to talk about faster than children want new toys to break, we cannot take up the books we have seen about us since our childhood: Milton, or Molière, or Scott. It feels like donning knee-breeches and buckles, to read what everybody has read, what everybody can read, and which our very fathers thought good entertainment scores of years ago. Hard-worked men and overwrought women crave an occupation which shall free them from their thoughts and yet not take them from their world. And thus it comes that we need at least a thousand new books every season, whilst we have rarely a spare hour left for the greatest of all. But I am getting into a vein too serious for our purpose; education is a long and thorny topic. I will cite but the words on this head of the great Bishop Butler. "The great number of books and papers of amusement which, of one kind or another, daily come in one's way, have in

<sup>2</sup> An affected courtier in Hamlet, noted for his high flown phrases.

<sup>1</sup> Don Quixote in the romance of Cervantes.

<sup>3</sup> Tennyson's In Memoriam, v. 5.

<sup>2</sup> Founded by Count Rumford and others in 1799, for the furthering of mechanical inventions and the teaching of applied science.

part occasioned, and most perfectly fall in with, and humour this idle way of reading and considering things. By this means time, even in solitude, is happily got rid of, without the pain of attention; neither is any part of it more put to the account of idleness, one can scarce forbear saying is spent with less thought, than great part of that which is spent in reading." But this was written a century and a half ago, in 1729; since which date, let us trust, the multiplicity of print and the habits of desultory reading have considerably abated. . . .

We need to be reminded every day, how many are the books of inimitable glory, which, with all our eagerness after reading, we have never taken in our hands. It will astonish most of us to find how much of our very industry is given to the books which leave no mark, how often we rake in the litter of the printing-press, whilst a crown of gold and rubies is offered us in vain.

Sir Leslie Stephen

1832-1904

SWIFT AND THE SPIRIT OF HIS TIME

(From History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century, 1876)

A hatred for enthusiasm was as strongly impressed upon the whole character of contemporary thought as a hatred of scepticism. And thus the literary expression of the feeling is rather a dislike to all speculation than a dislike to a particular school of speculatists. The whole subject was dangerous, and should be avoided by reasonable men. A good common-sense religion should be taken for granted, and no questions asked. If the philosophy of the time was unfitted for poetry, it was, for the same reason, unfitted to stimulate the emotions, and therefore for practical life. With Shakespeare or Sir Thomas Browne, or Jeremy Taylor, or Milton, man is contemplated in his relations to the universe; he is in presence of eternity and infinity; life is a brief dream; we are ephemeral actors in a vast drama; heaven and hell are behind the veil of phenomena; at every step our friends vanish into the vast abyss of ever-present mystery. To all such thoughts the writers of the eighteenth century seemed to close their eyes as absolutely as possible. They do not, like Sir Thomas Browne, delight to lose themselves in an Oh! Altitudino! or to snatch a solemn joy from the giddiness which follows a steady gaze into the infinite.

<sup>1</sup> V. p. 244, and n. 1.

The greatest men amongst them, Swift or a Johnson, have indeed a sense—perhaps a really stronger sense than Browne or Taylor—of the pettiness of our lives and the narrow limits of our knowledge. No great man could ever be without it. But the awe of the infinite and the unseen does not induce them to brood over the mysterious, and find utterance for bewildered musings on the inscrutable enigma.

It is only felt in a certain habitual sadness which clouds their whole tone of thought. They turn their backs upon the infinite and abandon the effort at a solution. Their eyes are fixed upon the world around them, and they regard as foolish and presumptuous any one who dares to contemplate the great darkness. The expression of this sentiment in literature is a marked disposition to turn aside from pure speculation, combined with a deep interest in social and moral laws. The absence of any deeper speculative ground makes the immediate practical questions of life all the more interesting. We know not what we are, nor whither we are going, nor whence we come; but we can, by the help of common sense, discover a sufficient share of moral maxims for our guidance in life; and we can analyse human passions, and discover what are the moving forces of society, without going back to first principles. Knowledge of human nature, as it actually presented itself in the shifting scene before them, and a vivid appreciation of the importance of the moral law, are the staple of the best literature of the time. As ethical speculation was prominent in the philosophy, the enforcement of ethical principles is the task of those who were inclined to despise philosophy. When a creed is dying, the importance of preserving the moral law naturally becomes a pressing consideration with all strong natures.

I have coupled Swift and Johnson as the two most vigorous representatives of this tendency. Between them there is a curious analogy as well as a striking contrast. They are alike in that shrewd humorous common sense which seems to be the special endowment of the English race. They are alike, too, in this; that they express the reaction against the complacent optimism of the Pope-Shaftesbury variety. They illustrate the incapacity of that system of thought to satisfy men of powerful emotional nature. The writings of each might be summed up in a phrase embodying the most uncompromising protest against the optimistic philosophy. Swift says, with unrivalled intensity, that the natural man is not, as theorists would maintain, a reasonable and virtuous animal; but, for the most part, a knave and a fool. Johnson denies, with equal emphasis, though with inferior literary power, that the business of life can be carried on by help of rose-coloured sentiments and general complacency. The world is, at best, but a melancholy place, full of gloom, of misery, of wasted purpose, and disappointed hopes. "Whatever is, is right," say the philosophers. Make up the heavy account of suffering, of disease, vice, cruelty, of envy, hatred, and malice, of corruption in high places, of starvation and nakedness amongst the low, of wars, and pestilences, and famines, of selfish ambition trampling on thousands, and wasted heroism strengthening oppression by its failure, of petty domestic tyranny, of lying, hypocrisy, and treachery, which run through all the social organism like a malignant ulcer, and see how far your specious maxim will take you.

That is the melancholy burden of the teaching of each of these great men; and it was echoed in various tones by many who felt that the grain of a sham philosophy consisted chiefly of unprofitable husks. Between Swift and Johnson, indeed, there was a wide difference; and the sturdy moralist had a hearty dislike for the misanthropist whose teaching was so far at one with his own. The strong sense of evil which, in Johnson's generous nature, produced rather sadness than anger, had driven Swift to moody hatred of his species. He is the most tragic figure in our literature. Beside the deep agony of his soul, all other suffering, and especially that which takes a morbid delight in contemplating itself, is pale and colourless. He resembles a victim tied to the stake and slowly tortured to madness and death; whilst from his proudly compressed lips there issue no weak lamentations but the deep curses of which one syllable is more effective than a volume of shrieks. Through the more petty feelings of mere personal spite and disappointed ambition we feel the glow of generous passions doomed to express themselves only in the language of defiant hatred. The total impression made by Swift's writings is unique and almost appalling; for even the sheer brutality suggests some strange disease, and the elaborate triflings remind us of a statesman amusing himself with spiders in a Bastille. If we ask what were the genuine creeds of this singular intellect, the answer must be a blank. The "Tale of a Tub" is the keenest of satire against all theologians; "Gulliver's Travels" expresses the concentrated essence of contempt for all other classes of mankind; the sermons and tracts defend the Church of England in good set terms, and prove beyond all question his scorn of dissenters, deists, and papists; but it would be an insult to that fiery intellect to suppose that his official defence of the Thirty-nine Articles<sup>2</sup> represents any very vivid belief. He could express himself in very different fashion when he was in earnest. Jove's address, in the "Day of Judgment,"<sup>3</sup> shows the true Swift:—

Offending race of human kind,
By nature, learning, reason blind;
You who through frailty slept aside,
And you who never fell—from pride;
You who in different sects were sham'd,
And come to see each other damn'd
(So some folks told you, but they knew
No more of Jove's designs than you—)
The world's mad business now is o'er,
And I resent these pranks no more—
I to such blockheads set my wit!
I damn such fools! Go, go, you're bit.

That is genuine feeling. The orthodox phrases are no more part of Swift than his bands and cassock.

Swift's idiosyncrasy would doubtless have made itself felt at any time. The special direction of his haughty passions and intense intellect is determined by the conditions of the time. In a time of strong beliefs he would have been a vehement partisan. . . . He felt to the depths of his soul the want of any of the principles which in trying times take concrete shape in heroic natures; and he assumed that the whole race of the courtiers of kings and mobs in all ages were such vile crawling creatures as could sell England or starve Ireland to put a few thousands in their pockets. He felt the want of some religion, and therefore scalped poor Collins,<sup>4</sup> and argued with his marvellous ingenuity of irony against "the abolition of Christianity;"<sup>5</sup> but the dogmas of theologians were mere matter for the Homeric laughter of the "Tale of a Tub." He had not the unselfish qualities or the indomitable belief in the potential excellence of human nature to become a reformer of manners, or the speculative power to endeavour to remould the ancient creeds. He stands in fierce isolation amongst the calmer or shallower intellects of his time, with insight enough to see the hollowness of their beliefs, with moral depth enough to give such forcible utterance to his feelings as has scarcely been rivalled in our literature. But he had not the power or the

<sup>2</sup> i. e. the thirty-nine articles in the Prayer-book.

<sup>3</sup> V. p. 295, supra.

<sup>4</sup> Anthony Collins, published in 1713, a Discourse of Freethinking, in which he ridiculed the clergy, the Mosaic Law, and the evidences of revealed religion. Swift attacked this in his tract.

<sup>5</sup> An allusion to Swift's Argument Against the Abolishing of Christianity, 1708.

nobility of nature to become a true poet or philosopher, or reformer. When a shallow optimism is the most living creed, a man of strong nature becomes a scornful pessimist.

John Richard Green

1837-1883

THE DEATH OF QUEEN ELIZABETH

(From History of the English People, 1877-1880)

The triumph of Mountjoy<sup>1</sup> flung its lustre 15 over the last days of Elizabeth, but no outer triumph could break the gloom which gathered round the dying Queen. Lonely as she had always been, her loneliness deepened as she drew towards the grave. The statesmen and warriors of her earlier days had dropped one 20 by one from her Council board. Leicester<sup>2</sup> had died in the year of the Armada; two years later Walsingham<sup>3</sup> followed him to the grave; in 1598 Burleigh<sup>4</sup> himself passed away. Their 25 successors were watching her last moments, and intriguing for favour in the coming reign. Her favourite, Lord Essex, not only courted favour with James of Scotland,<sup>5</sup> but brought him to suspect Robert Cecil,<sup>6</sup> who had suc- 30 ceeded his father at the Queen's Council-board, of designs against his succession. The rivalry between the two ministers hurried Essex into fatal projects which led to his failure in Ireland and to an insane outbreak of revolt 35 which brought him in 1601 to the block. But Cecil had no sooner proved the victor in this struggle at court than he himself entered into a secret correspondence with the King of Scots. His action was wise; it brought James again 40 into friendly relations with the Queen; and paved the way for a peaceful transfer of the crown. But hidden as this correspondence was from Elizabeth, the suspicion of it only added to her distrust. The troubles of the 45 war in Ireland brought fresh cares to the aged Queen. It drained her treasury. The old splendour of her Court waned and disappeared. Only officials remained about her, "the other of the Council and nobility estranged them- 50 selves by all occasions." The love and reverence of the people itself lessened as they felt the pressure and taxation of the war. Of old, men had pressed to see the Queen as if it were a glimpse of heaven. "In the year 1588," a 5 Bishop tells us who was then a country boy fresh come to town, "I did live at the upper end of the Strand near St. Clement's Church, when suddenly there came a report to us (it was in December, much about five o'clock of 10 the night, very dark) that the Queen was gone to Council, "and if you would see the Queen you must come quickly. Then we all ran, when the Court gates were set open, and no man did hinder us from coming in. There we came, where there was a far greater company than 15 was usually at Lenten sermons; and when we had staid there an hour and that the yard was full, there being a number of torches, the queen came out in great state. When we cried 'God save your Majesty! God save 20 your Majesty!' Then the Queen turned to us and said, 'God bless you all, my good people!' Then we cried again, 'God bless your Majesty! God bless your Majesty!' 25 Then the Queen said again to us, 'You may well have a greater prince, but you shall never have a more loving prince.' And so looking one upon another a while, the Queen departed. This wrought such an impression on us, for 30 shows and pageantry are ever best seen by torchlight, that all the way long we did nothing but talk what an admirable Queen she was, and how we would adventure our lives to do her service." But now, as Elizabeth passed 35 along in her progresses, the people whose applause she courted remained cold and silent. The temper of the age in fact was changing, and isolating her as it changed. Her own Eng- 40 land, the England which had grown up around her, serious, moral, prosaic, shrank coldly from this brilliant, fanciful, unscrupulous child of earth and the Renaissance.

But if ministers and courtiers were counting on her death, Elizabeth had no mind to die. She had enjoyed life as men of her day enjoyed it, and now that they were gone she clung to it with a fierce tenacity. She hunted, she danced, she jested with her young favourites, she coquetted and scolded and frolicked at 50 sixty-seven as she had done at thirty. "The Queen," wrote a courtier a few months before her death, "was never so gallant these many years nor so set upon jollity." She persisted in spite of opposition, in her gorgeous progresses 55 from country-house to country-house. She clung to business as of old, and rated in her usual fashion "one who minded not to giving up some matter of account." But death crept on. Her face became haggard, and her

<sup>1</sup> Lord Mountjoy, the Queen's Lieutenant in Ireland, had just succeeded, after three years of ruthless warfare, in putting down a rebellion in Ireland led by Hugh O'Neill, the Earl of Tyrone, and the Earl of Desmond. This brought the work of conquering Ireland to a close.

<sup>2</sup> Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester (died 1588) known as one of Elizabeth's favorite councillors.

<sup>3</sup> ibid. p. 178, n. 1, and p. 725, n. 4. <sup>4</sup> ibid. p. 725, n. 5.

<sup>5</sup> James VI of Scotland, who on Elizabeth's death (1603) became King James I of England.

<sup>6</sup> The son of Lord Burleigh.

frame shrank almost to a skeleton. At last her taste for finery disappeared, and she refused to change her dresses for a week together. A strange melancholy settled down on her. "She held in her hand," says one who saw her in her last days "a golden cup which she often put to her lips, but in truth her heart seemed too full to need more filling." Gradually her mind gave way. She lost her memory, the violence of her temper became unbearable, her very courage seemed to forsake her. She called for a sword to lie constantly beside her and thrust it from time to time through the arras, as if she heard murderers stirring there. Food and rest became alike distasteful. She sate day and night propped up with pillows on a stool, her finger on her lip, her eyes fixed on the floor, without a word. If once she broke the silence, it was with a flash of her old queenliness. When Robert Cecil declared that she "must" go to bed, the word roused her like a trumpet. "Must!" she exclaimed; "is must a word to be addressed to princes? Little man, little man! thy father, if he had been alive, durst not have used that word." Then, as her anger spent itself, she sank into her old dejection. "Thou art so presumptuous," she said, "because thou knowest I shall die." She rallied once more when the ministers beside her bed named Lord Beauchamp, the heir to the Suffolk claim,<sup>7</sup> as a possible successor. "I will have no rogue's son," she cried hoarsely, "in my seat." But she gave no sign save a motion of the head, at the mention of the King of Scots. She was in fact fast becoming insensible; and early the next morning on the twenty-fourth of March, 1603, the life of Elizabeth, a life so great, so strange and lonely in its greatness, ebbed quietly away.

RELIGION AND THE BIBLE IN 16TH AND 17TH CENTURY ENGLAND

(From the same)

The immense advance of the people as a whole in knowledge and in intelligence throughout the reign of Elizabeth was in itself a revolution. The hold of tradition, the unquestioning awe which formed the main strength of the Tudor throne, had been sapped and weakened by the intellectual activity of the Renaissance, by its endless questionings, its historic research, its philosophic scepticism. Writers and statesmen were alike discussing the claims of government and the wisest and most lasting forms of rule, travellers turned aside from the frescoes of Giorgione to study the aristocratic polity of Venice, and Jesuits borrowed from the schoolmen of the middle ages a doctrine of popular rights which still forms the theory of modern democracy. On the other hand the nation was learning to rely on itself, to believe in its own strength and vigour, to crave for a share in the guidance of its own life. . . .

The nation which gave itself to the rule of the Stewarts was another nation from the panic-struck people that gave itself in the crash of social and religious order to the guidance of the Tudors. It was plain that a new age of our history must open when the lofty patriotism, the dauntless energy, the overpowering sense of effort and triumph, which rose into their full grandeur through the war with Spain, turned from the strife with Philip to seek a new sphere of activity at home.

What had hindered this force from telling as yet fully on national affairs was the breadth and largeness which characterized the temper of the Renaissance. Through the past half century the aims of Englishmen had been drawn far over the narrow bounds of England itself to every land and every sea; while their mental activity spent itself as freely on poetry and science as on religion and politics. But at the moment which we have reached the whole of this energy was seized upon and concentrated by a single force. For a hundred years past men had been living in the midst of a spiritual revolution. Not only the world about them but the world of thought and feeling within every breast had been utterly transformed. The work of the sixteenth century had wrecked that tradition of religion, of political and social order, which had been accepted without question by the Middle Ages. The sudden freedom of the mind from these older bonds brought a consciousness of power such as had never been felt before; and the restless energy, the universal activity of the Renaissance were but outer expressions of the pride, the joy, the amazing self-confidence, with which man welcomed this revelation of the energies which had lain slumbering within him. But his pride and self-reliance were soon dashed by a feeling of dread. With the deepening sense of human individuality came a deepening conviction of the boundless capacities of the human soul. Not as a theological dogma, but as a human fact man knew himself to be an all but infinite power, whether for good or for ill. The drama towered into sublimity as it painted the strife of mighty forces within the breasts of Othello and Macbeth.

<sup>7</sup> Edward Seymour, Lord Beauchamp was descended from Henry VII. through Mary, the sister of Henry VIII who married the Duke of Suffolk. There was, however, doubt as to the legitimacy of the marriage of Lord Beauchamp's parents.

Poets passed into metaphysicians as they strove to unravel the workings of conscience within the soul. From that hour one dominant influence told on human action: and all the various energies that had been called into life by the age that was passing away were seized, concentrated, and steadied to a definite aim by the spirit of religion.

The whole temper of the nation felt the change: "Theology rules there;" said Grotius<sup>1</sup> of England only two years after Elizabeth's death; and when Casaubon<sup>2</sup> was invited by her successor to his court he found both king and people indifferent to pure letters. "There is a great abundance of theologians in England," he says; "all point their studies in that direction." Even a country gentleman, like Colonel Hutchinson,<sup>3</sup> felt the theological impulse. "As soon as he had improved his natural understanding with the acquisition of a little learning, the first studies he exercised himself in were the principles of religion." It was natural that literature should reflect the tendency of the time; and the dumpy little quartos of controversy and piety which still crowd our older libraries drove before them the classical translations and Italian novelettes of the age of the Renaissance. But their influence was small beside that of the Bible. The popularity of the Bible had been growing fast from the day when Bishop Bonner<sup>4</sup> set up the first six copies in St. Paul's. Even then, we are told, "many well-disposed people used much to resort to the hearing thereof, especially when they could get any that had an audible voice to read to them." . . . "One John Porter used sometimes to be occupied in that goodly exercise, to the edifying of himself as well as others. This Porter was a fresh young man and of a big stature; and great multitudes would resort thither to hear him, because he could read well and had an audible voice." But the "goodly exercise" of readers such as Porter was soon superseded by the continued recitation of both Old Testament and New in the public services of the Church; while the small Geneva Bibles<sup>5</sup> carried the Scripture into every home, and wove it into the life of every English family.

Religion indeed was only one of the causes for this sudden popularity of the Bible. The book was equally important in its bearing on the intellectual development of the people. All the prose literature of England, save the forgotten tracts of Wyclif, has grown up since the translation of the Scriptures by Tyndale and Coverdale.<sup>6</sup> So far as the nation at large was concerned, no history, no romance, hardly any poetry save the little-known verse of Chaucer, existed in the English tongue when the Bible was ordered to be set up in the Churches. Sunday after Sunday, day after day, the crowds that gathered round the Bible in the nave of St. Paul's, or the family group that hung on its words in the devotional exercises at home, were leavened with a new literature. Legend and annal, war song and psalm, State roll and biography, and the mighty voices of prophets, the parables of Evangelists, stories of mission journeys, of perils by the sea and among the heathen, philosophic arguments, apocalyptic visions, all were flung broadcast over minds unoccupied for the most part by any rival learning. The disclosure of the stories of Greek literature had wrought the revolution of the Renaissance. The disclosure of the older mass of Hebrew literature wrought the revolution of the Reformation. But one revolution was far deeper and wider in its effects than the other. No version could transfer to another tongue the peculiar charm of language which gave their value to the authors of Greece and Rome. Classical letters therefore remained in the possession of the learned, that is, of the few; and among these, with the exception of Colet and More,<sup>7</sup> or of the pedants who revived a Pagan worship in the gardens of the Florentine Academy,<sup>8</sup> their direct influence was purely intellectual. But the language of the Hebrew, the idiom of the Hellenistic Greek, lent themselves with a curious felicity to the purposes of translation. As a mere literary monument the English version of the Bible remains the noblest example of

<sup>1</sup> Hugo Grotius, a famous Dutch theologian, statesman, jurist and historian.

<sup>2</sup> Isaac Casaubon, a French theologian and student of the classics. On coming to England in 1610 he was appointed prebendary to Canterbury and Westminster by James I. He is buried in Westminster Abbey.

<sup>3</sup> Col. John Hutchinson (1616-64), one of the Commissioners who signed the death warrant of Charles I. is remembered as an example of the nobler and more liberal type of Puritanism. He combined an intense religious earnestness, with a love of music and beauty, and his disposition was at once serious and free from a narrow fanaticism. The quotation is from his wife's Memoirs of Colonel Hutchinson.

<sup>4</sup> Edmund Bonner, Bishop of London, procured six copies of the Great Bible and set them in convenient places in St. Paul's cathedral, shortly after the King's proclamation of 1538, ordering a copy to be put in every church.

<sup>5</sup> Copies of the Bible prepared at Geneva, 1557-60, by English refugees who had fled there in Mary's reign. They were in plain type, divided into chapters and verses, with marginal notes.

<sup>6</sup> William Tyndale published a New Testament at Worms, 1525, and in 1530 translations of parts of the Old Testament. Miles Coverdale published the first complete English Bible, including the Apocrypha.

<sup>7</sup> John Colet, Dean of St. Paul's, and Sir Thomas More, Chancellor under Henry VIII, were not only learned students but popular preachers and teachers as well.

<sup>8</sup> Some of the enthusiasts of the new learning formed a Platonic Academy at Florence in the 15th century, and attempted to harmonise mythology and philosophy with Christianity.

the English tongue, while its perpetual use made it from the instant of its appearance the standard of our language.

For the moment however its literary effect was less than its social. The power of the book over the mass of Englishmen showed itself in a thousand superficial ways, and in none more conspicuously than in the influence it exerted on ordinary speech. It formed, we must repeat, the whole literature which was practically accessible to ordinary Englishmen; and when we recall the number of common phrases which we owe to great authors, the bits of Shakespeare or Milton, or Dickens, or Thackeray, which unconsciously interweave themselves in our ordinary talk, we shall better understand the strange mosaic of Biblical words and phrases which coloured English talk two hundred years ago. The mass of picturesque allusion and illustration which we borrow from a thousand books, our fathers were forced to borrow from one; and the borrowing was the easier and the more natural that the range of the Hebrew literature fitted it for the expression of every phase of feeling. When Spenser poured forth his warmest love-<sup>5</sup>notes in the "Epithalamion," he adopted the very words of the Psalmist,<sup>9</sup> as he bade the gates open for the entrance of his bride. When Cromwell saw the mists break over the hills of Dunbar, he hailed the sunburst with the cry of David: "Let God arise, and let His enemies be scattered. Like as the smoke vanisheth, so shalt Thou drive them away!"<sup>10</sup> Even to common minds this familiarity with grand poetic imagery in prophet and apocalypse gave a loftiness and ardour of expression that with all its tendency to exaggeration and bombast we may prefer to the slipshod vulgarisms of to-day.

But far greater than its effect on literature or social phrase was the effect of the Bible on the character of the people at large. The Bible was as yet the one book which was familiar to every Englishman; and everywhere its words, as they fell on ears which custom had not deadened to their force and beauty, kindled a startling enthusiasm. The whole moral effect which is produced now-a-days by the religious newspaper, the tract, the essay, the missionary report, the sermon, was then produced by the Bible alone; and its effect in this way however dispassionately we examine it was simply amazing. The whole nation became a church. The problems of life and death, whose questionings found no answer in the higher minds of Shakespeare's day, pressed for an answer not only from noble and scholar but from farmer and shopkeeper in the age that followed him. The answer they found was almost of necessity a Calvinistic answer. Unlike as the spirit of Calvinism seemed to the spirit of the Renaissance, both found a point of union in their exaltation of the individual man. The mighty strife of good and evil within the soul itself which had overawed the imagination of dramatist and poet became the one spiritual conception in the mind of the Puritan. The Calvinist looked on churches and communions as convenient groupings of pious Christians; it might be as even indispensable parts of a Christian order. But religion in its deepest and innermost sense had to do not with churches but with the individual soul. It was each Christian man who held in his power the issues of life and death. It was in each Christian conscience that the strife was waged between Heaven and Hell. Not as one of a body, but as a single soul, could each Christian claim his part in the mystery of redemption. In the outer world of worship and discipline the Calvinist might call himself one of many brethren, but at every moment of his inner existence, in the hour of temptation and of struggle, in his dark and troubled wrestling with sin, in the glory of conversion, in the peace of acceptance with God, he stood utterly alone. With such a conception of human life Puritanism offered the natural form for English religion at a time when the feeling with which religion could most easily ally itself was the sense of individuality. The 'prentice who sate awed in the pit of the theatre as the storm in the mind of Lear outdid the storm among the elements passed easily into the Calvinist who saw himself day by day the theatre of a yet mightier struggle between the powers of light and the powers of darkness, and his soul the prize of an eternal conflict between Heaven and Hell.

Walter Pater

1839-1894

THE PERCEPTION OF BEAUTY

(From the Preface to The Renaissance, 1873)

Many attempts have been made by writers on art and poetry to define beauty in the abstract, to express it in the most general terms, to find a universal formula for it. The value of such attempts has most often been in the suggestive and penetrating things said by the way. Such discussions help us very little to enjoy what has been well done in art or poetry, to discriminate between what is more and what is less excellent in them, or to use words like beauty, excellence, art, poetry, with more meaning than they would otherwise have. Beauty, like all other qualities presented to human experience, is relative; and the definition of it becomes unmeaning and useless in proportion to its abstractness. To define beauty, not in the most abstract, but in the most concrete terms possible, to find, not a universal formula for it, but the formula which expresses most adequately this or that special manifestation of it, is the aim of the true student of æsthetics.

<sup>9</sup> If, as appears probable, Green had in mind Psalm xiv. 7, Spenser's language is similar, but not identical.

<sup>10</sup> Psalms, lxxviii. 1-2.

"To see the object as in itself it really is,"<sup>1</sup> has been justly said to be the aim of all true criticism whatever; and in æsthetic criticism the first step towards seeing one's object as it really is, is to know one's own impression as it really is, to discriminate, to realize it distinctly. The objects with which æsthetic criticism deals, music, poetry, artistic and accomplished forms of human life, are indeed receptacles of so many powers or forces; they possess, like natural elements so many virtues or qualities. What is this song or picture, this engaging personality presented in life or in a book, to me? What effect does it really produce on me? Does it give me pleasure? and if so, what sort or degree of pleasure? How is my nature modified by its presence, and under its influence? The answers to these questions are the original facts with which the æsthetic critic has to do; and, as in the study of light, of morals, of number, one must realise such primary data for one's self, or not at all. And he who experiences these impressions strongly, and drives directly at the discrimination and analysis of them, need not trouble himself with the abstract question what beauty is in itself, or what its exact relation to truth or experience—metaphysical questions, as unprofitable as metaphysical questions elsewhere. He may pass them all by as being, answerable or not, of no interest to him.

The æsthetic critic, then, regards all the objects with which he has to do, all works of art, and the fairer forms of nature and human life, as powers or forces producing pleasurable sensations, each of a more or less peculiar and unique kind. This influence he feels, and wishes to explain, analysing it, and reducing it to its elements. To him, the picture, the landscape, the engaging personality in life or in a book, La

Gioconda,<sup>2</sup> The hills of Carrara,<sup>3</sup> Pico of Mirandola,<sup>4</sup> are valuable for their virtues, as we say in speaking of a herb, a wine, a gem; for the property each has of affecting one with a special unique impression of pleasure. Our education becomes complete in proportion as our susceptibility to these impressions increases in depth and variety. And the function of the æsthetic critic is to distinguish, analyse, and separate from its adjuncts, the virtue by which a picture, a landscape, a fair personality in life or in a book, produces this special impression of beauty or pleasure, to indicate what the source of that impression is, and under what conditions it is experienced. His end is reached when he has disengaged that virtue, and noted it, as a chemist notes some natural element, for himself and others; and the rule for those who would reach this end is stated with great exactness in the words of a recent critic of Sainte-Beuve:—De se borner à connaître de près les belles choses, et à s'en nourrir en exquis amateurs, en humanistes accomplis.<sup>5</sup>

What is important, then, is not that the critic should possess a correct abstract definition of beauty for the intellect, but a certain kind of temperament, the power of being deeply moved by the presence of beautiful objects. He will remember always that beauty exists in many forms. To him all periods, types, schools of taste, are in themselves equal. In all ages there have been some excellent workmen, and some excellent work done. The question he asks is always—In whom did the stir, the genius, the sentiment of the period find itself? who was the receptacle of its refinement, its elevation, its taste? "The ages are all equal," says William Blake, "but genius is always above its age."

Often it will require great nicety to disengage this virtue from the commoner elements with which it may be found in combination. Few artists, not Goethe or Byron even, work quite cleanly, casting off all débris, and leaving us only what the heat of their imagination has wholly fused and transformed. Take for instance the writings of Wordsworth. The heat of his genius, entering into the substance of his work, has crystallised a part, but only a part, of it; and in that great mass of verse there is much which might well be forgotten. But scattered up and down it, sometimes fusing and transforming entire compositions, like the

<sup>2</sup> La Gioconda, the famous painting by Leonardo da Vinci, better known as Mona Lisa.

<sup>3</sup> Carrara in northern Italy is famous for its marble.

<sup>4</sup> An Italian philosopher and theologian (1463-94), one of the most astonishingly facile scholars of the renaissance.

<sup>5</sup> "To satisfy one's self with beautiful things, and to nourish one's self as an exquisite amateur and accomplished humanist."

<sup>1</sup> Matthew Arnold in his essay "On the Function of Criticism at the Present Time," in Essays in Criticism, First Series.

Stanzas on Resolution and Independence and the Ode on the Recollections of Childhood,<sup>6</sup> sometimes, as if at random, turning a fine crystal here and there, in a matter it does not wholly search through and transform, we trace the action of his unique, incommunicable faculty, that strange, mystical sense of life in natural things, and of man's life as a part of nature, drawing strength and colour and character from local influences, from the hills and streams, and from natural sights and sounds. Well! that is the virtue, the active principle in Wordsworth's poetry; and then the function of the critic of Wordsworth is to trace that active principle, to disengage it, to mark the degree in which it penetrates his verse.

WORDSWORTH

(From "Wordsworth" in Appreciations, 1889)

Nowhere is there so perplexed a mixture as in Wordsworth's own poetry, of work touched with intense and individual power, with work of almost no character at all. He has much conventional sentiment, and some of that insincere poetic diction, against which his most serious critical efforts were directed: the reaction in his political ideas, consequent on the excesses of 1795,<sup>1</sup> makes him, at times, a mere declaimer on moral and social topics; and he seems, sometimes, to force an unwilling pen, and write by rule. By making the most of these blemishes it is possible to obscure the true æsthetic value of his work, just as his life also, a life of much quiet delicacy and independence, might easily be placed in a false focus, and made to appear a somewhat tame theme in illustration of the more obvious parochial virtues. And those who wish to understand his influence, and experience his peculiar savour, must bear with patience the presence of an alien element in Wordsworth's work, which never coalesced with what is really delightful in it, nor underwent his special power. Who that values his writings most has not felt the intrusion there, from time to time, of something tedious and prosaic? Of all poets equally great, he would gain most by a skillfully made anthology. Such a selection would show, in truth, not so much what he was, or to himself or others seemed to be, as what, by the more energetic and fertile quality in his writings, he was ever tending to become.

<sup>6</sup> V. pp. 478, and 481, supra.

<sup>1</sup> The great reaction in Wordsworth's sentiments began in 1793, when, at the time of the Reign of Terror, England declared war against France. Wordsworth describes the effect as being a revolution in his whole moral nature.

And the mixture in his work, as it actually stands, is so perplexed, that one fears to miss the least promising composition, lest some precious morsel should be lying hidden within the few perfect lines, the phrase, the single word perhaps, to which he often works up mechanically through a poem, almost the whole of which may be tame enough. He who thought that in all creative work the larger part was given passively, to the recipient mind, who waited so dutifully upon the gift, to whom so large a measure was sometimes given, had his times also of desertion and relapse; and he has permitted the impress of these too to remain in his work. And this duality there—the fitfulness with which the higher qualities manifest themselves in it, gives the effect in his poetry of a power not altogether his own, or under his control, which comes and goes when it will, lifting or lowering a matter, poor in itself; so that that old fancy which made the poet's art an enthusiasm, a form of divine possession, seems almost literally true of him. . . .

But although the necessity of selecting these precious morsels for oneself is an opportunity for the exercise of Wordsworth's peculiar influence, and induces a kind of just criticism and true estimate of it, yet the purely literary product would have been more excellent, had the writer himself purged away that alien element. How perfect would have been the little treasury, shut between the covers of how thin a book! Let us suppose the desired separation made, the electric thread untwined, the golden pieces, great and small, lying apart together. What are the peculiarities of this residue? What special sense does Wordsworth exercise, and what instincts does he satisfy? What are the subjects and the motives which in him excite the imaginative faculty? What are the qualities in things and persons which he values, the impression and sense of which he can convey to others in an extraordinary way?

An intimate consciousness of the expression of natural things, which weighs, listens, penetrates, where the earlier mind passed roughly by, is a large element in the complexion of modern poetry. It has been remarked as a fact in mental history again and again. It reveals itself in many forms; but is strongest and most attractive in what is strongest and most attractive in modern literature. . . .

It has doubtless some latent connection with those pantheistic theories<sup>2</sup> which locate an intelligent soul in material things, and have largely exercised men's minds in some modern systems of philosophy: it is traceable even in the graver writings of historians: it makes as much difference between ancient and modern landscape art, as there is between the rough masks of an early mosaic and a portrait by Reynolds or Gainsborough. Of this new sense, the writings of Wordsworth are the central and elementary expression: he is more simply and entirely occupied with it than any other poet, though there are fine expressions of precisely the same thing in so different a poet as Shelley. There was in his own character a certain contentment, a sort of inborn religious placidity, seldom found united with a sensibility so mobile as his, which was favourable to the quiet, habitual observation of inanimate or imperfectly animate, existence. His life of eighty years is divided by no very profoundly felt incidents: its changes are almost wholly inward, and it falls into broad, untroubled, perhaps somewhat monotonous spaces. What it most resembles is the life of one of those early Italian or Flemish painters, who, just because their minds were full of heavenly visions, passed some of them, the better part of sixty years in quiet, systematic industry. This placid life matured a quite unusual sensibility, really innate in him, to the sights and sounds of the natural world—the flower and its shadow on the stone, the cuckoo and its echo. The poem of Resolution and Independence is a storehouse of such records: for its fulness of imagery it may be compared to Keats's St. Agnes' Eve.<sup>3</sup> To read one of his longer pastoral poems for the first time, is like a day spent in a new country: the memory is crowded for awhile with its precise and vivid incidents—

<sup>2</sup> i. e. theories of the all-pervading presence and influence of spirit or soul; the theory that the Divine Spirit is in all inanimate, as well as in animate creation.

"The pliant harebell swinging in the breeze
On some grey rock;"—<sup>4</sup>

"The single sheep and the one blasted tree,
And the bleak music from that old stone wall;"<sup>5</sup>

"In the meadows and the lower ground
Was all the sweetness of a common dawn;"<sup>6</sup>

"And that green corn all day is rustling in thine ears."<sup>7</sup>

Clear and delicate at once, as he is in the outlining of visible imagery, he is more clear and delicate still, and finely scrupulous, in the noting of sounds; so that he conceives of noble sound as even moulding the human countenance to nobler types, and as something actually "profaned" by colour, by visible form, or image. He has a power likewise of realising, and conveying to the consciousness of the reader, abstract and elementary impressions—silence, darkness, absolute motionlessness: or, again, the whole complex sentiment of a particular place, the abstract expression of desolation in the long white road, of peacefulness in a particular folding of the hills. In the airy building of the brain, a special day or hour even, comes to have for him a sort of personal identity, a spirit or angel given to it, by which, for its exceptional insight, or the happy light upon it, it has a presence in one's history, and acts there, as a separate power or accomplishment; and he has celebrated in many of his poems the "efficacious spirit," which, as he says, resides in these "particular spots" of time.

It is to such a world, and to a world of congruous meditation thereon, that we see him retiring in his but lately published poem of The Recluse—taking leave, without much count of costs, of the world of business, of action and ambition, as also of all that for the majority of mankind counts as sensuous enjoyment.

And so it came about that this sense of a life in natural objects which in most poetry is but a rhetorical artifice; is with Wordsworth the assertion of what for him is almost literal fact. To him every natural object seemed to possess more or less of a moral or spiritual life, to be capable of a companionship with man, full of expression, of inexplicable affinities and delicacies of intercourse. An emanation, a particular spirit, belonged, not to the moving leaves or water only, but to the distant peak of the hills arising suddenly, by some change of perspective, above the nearer horizon, to the passing space of light across the plain, to the lichen-druoid stone even, for a certain weird fellowship in it with the moods of men. It was like a "survival," in the peculiar intellectual temperament of a man of letters at the end of the eighteenth century, of that primitive condition, which some philosophers have traced in the general history of human culture, wherein all outward objects alike, including even the works of men's hands, were believed to be endowed with animation, and the world was "full of souls"—that mood in which the old Greek gods were first begotten, and which had many strange aftergrowths.

<sup>3</sup> V. p. 530, supra.

<sup>4</sup> The Prelude, Bk. X. 277-8.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid., Bk. X. 319-20. <sup>6</sup> Ibid., Bk. IV. 332-3.

<sup>7</sup> The Pet Lamb.

Frederick W. H. Myers

1843-1901

POETRY

(From "Virgil" in Essays Classical and Modern, 1883)

The range of human thoughts and emotions greatly transcends the range of such symbols as man has invented to express them; and it becomes therefore, the business of Art to use these symbols in a double way. They must be used for the direct representation of thought and feeling; but they must also be combined by so subtle an imagination as to suggest much which there is no means of directly expressing. And this can be done; for experience shows that it is possible so to arrange forms, colours, and sounds as to stimulate the imagination in a new and inexplicable way. This power makes the painter's art an imaginative as well as an imitative one; and gives birth to the art of the musician, whose symbols are hardly imitative at all, but express emotions which, till music suggests them, have been not only unknown but unimaginable. Poetry is both an imitative and an imaginative art. As a choice and condensed form of emotional speech it possesses the reality which depends on its directly recalling our previous thoughts and feelings. But as a system of rhythmical and melodious effects—not indebted for their potency to their associated ideas alone—it appeals also to that mysterious power by which mere arrangements of sound can convey an emotion which no one could have predicted beforehand, and which no known laws can explain.

It is true that the limits of melody within which poetry works are very narrow. Between an exquisite and a worthless line there is no difference of sound in any way noticeable to an unintelligent ear. For the mere volume of sound—the actual sonority of the passage—is a quite subordinate element in the effect which is produced mainly by relations and sequences of vowels and consonants, too varying and delicate to be reproducible by rule although far more widely similar, among European languages at least, than is commonly perceived. But this limitation of the means employed, which may itself be an added source of pleasure from the sense which it may give of difficulty overcome, is by no means without analogies in other forms of art. The poet thrills us with delight by a collocation of consonants, much as the etcher suggests infinity by a scratch of the needle.

And, indeed, in poetry of the first order, almost every word (to use a mathematical metaphor) is raised to a higher power. It continues to be an articulate sound and a logical step in the argument; but it becomes also a musical sound and a centre of emotional force. It becomes a musical sound;—that is to say, its consonants and vowels are arranged to bear a relation to the consonants and vowels near it,—a relation of which accent, quantity, rhyme, assonance, and alliteration are specialized forms, but which may be of a character more subtle than any of these. And it becomes a centre of emotional force; that is to say, the complex associations which it evokes modify the associations evoked by other words in the same passage in a way quite distinct from grammatical or logical connection. The poet therefore must avoid two opposite dangers. If he thinks too exclusively of the music and the colouring of his verse—of the imaginative means of suggesting thought and feeling—what he writes will lack reality and sense. But if he cares only to communicate definite thought and feeling according to the ordinary laws of eloquent speech, his verse is likely to be deficient in magical and suggestive power.

And what is meant by the vague praise so often bestowed on Virgil's unequalled style is practically this, that he has been, perhaps, more successful than any other poet in fusing together the expressed and the suggested emotion, that he has discovered the hidden music which can give to every shade of feeling its distinction, its permanence, and its charm; that his thoughts seem to come to us on the wings of melodies prepared for them from the foundation of the world. But in treating of so airy and abstract a matter it is well to have frequent recourse to concrete illustration. Before we attempt further description of Virgil's style, or his habitual mood of mind, let us clear our conceptions by a careful examination of some few passages from his poems. As we turn the leaves of the book we find it hard to know on what passages it were best to dwell. What varied memories are stirred by one line after another as we read! What associations of all dates, from Virgil's own lifetime down to the political debates of today! On this line<sup>2</sup> the poet's own voice faltered as he read. At this<sup>3</sup> Augustus and Octavia melted into passionate weeping. Here is the verse<sup>4</sup> which Augustine quotes as typical in its majestic rhythm of all the pathos and the glory of pagan art, from which the Christian was bound to flee. This is the couplet<sup>5</sup> which Fenelon could never read without admiring tears. This line Filippo Strozzi scrawled on his prison wall, when he slew himself to avoid worse ill.<sup>6</sup> These are the words<sup>7</sup> which, like a trumpet-call, roused Savonarola to seek the things that are above. And this line<sup>8</sup> Dante heard on the lips of the Church Triumphant, at the opening of the Paradise of God. Here, too, are the long roll of prophecies, sought tremblingly in the monk's secret cell, or echoing in the ears of emperors<sup>9</sup> from Apollo's shrine, which have answered the appeal made by so many an eager heart to the Virgilian Lots—that strange invocation which has been addressed, I believe, to Homer, Virgil, and the Bible alone; the offspring of men's passionate desire to bring to bear on their own lives the wisdom and the beauty which they revered in the past, to make their prophets in such wise as they might—

<sup>1</sup> F. W. H. Myers, the son of an English clergyman and author, was born at Keswick, in the "Lake Country," in 1843. He graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1864, and was made Fellow and Classical lecturer in 1865. From 1872 to 1900, he was inspector of schools. He became deeply interested in the scientific investigation of the problems of the spiritual life, and he was one of the founders of the Society for Psychical Research in 1882. Myers wrote little. A few slender volumes of verse, some essays, an admirable life of Wordsworth, and a book on personal immortality in the light of psychical research, practically complete the list. But he was a scholar and the son of a scholar; and while he lacked those popular qualities which seem necessary in our democratic age to win the applause of the crowd, his work is distinguished by that refinement and delicacy of feeling, that purity and elevation of tone, which are the rewards of true culture. A recent critic has pronounced Myers' Virgil and Francis Thompson's Shelley (p. 779) "the two best English Essays on Poetry of our day."

"Speak from those lips of immemorial speech,
If but one word for each."

Such references might be multiplied indefinitely. But there is not at any rate need to prove the estimation in which Virgil has been held in the past. The force of that tradition would only be weakened by specification. 40 "The chastest poet," in Bacon's words, "and royalist, Virgilius Maro, that to the memory of man is known," has lacked in no age until our own the concordant testimony of the civi-

<sup>2</sup> Hoc solum nomen quoniam de conjugio restat. Since this notice (i. e. of quest), is all that remains of our union. Æn. Bk. IV. 324.

<sup>3</sup> Tu Marcellus eris, etc. You will be a Marcellus indeed. Æn. Bk. VI. 883.

<sup>4</sup> Infelix simulacrum atque ipsius umbra Creusæ. Unhappy image and shade of Creusæ herself. Æn., Bk. II. 772.

<sup>5</sup> Aude, hospes, contemnere opes, et te quoque dignum Finge deo, relinque tibi non asper ægenus. Dare, O Guest, to despise wealth and to render yourself also worthy of a god, and do not come harshly into the surroundings of poverty. Æn., Bk. VIII. 364.

<sup>6</sup> Reverere aliquis nostris ex ossibus ultor. May some avenger arise from my ashes. Æn., Bk. IV. 625.

<sup>7</sup> Non fuge crudelis terras, fuge litus ævum. Alas! fly the cruel region, fly the rapacious shore. Æn., Bk. III. 44.

<sup>8</sup> Manibus date lilia plenis. Bring lilies with generous hands. Æn., Bk. VI. 884.

<sup>9</sup> Claudius, Hadrian, Severus, etc. "in templo Apollinaris Cumani." In the temple of the Cumæan oracle.

lized world. No poet has lain so close to so many hearts; no words so often as his have sprung to men's lips in moments of excitement and self-revelation, from the one fierce line retained and chanted by the untameable boy who was to be Emperor of Rome,<sup>10</sup> to the impassioned prophecy of the great English statesman<sup>11</sup> as he pleaded till morning's light for the freedom of a continent of slaves.

And those who have followed by more secret ways the influence which these utterances have exercised on mankind know well, perhaps themselves have shared, the mass of emotion which has slowly gathered round certain lines of Virgil's as it has round certain texts of the Bible, till they come to us charged with more than an individual passion and with a meaning wider than their own—with the cry of the despair of all generations,<sup>12</sup> with the yearning of all loves unappeased,<sup>13</sup> with the anguish of all partings,<sup>14</sup> "beneath the pressure of separate eternities."

Robert Louis Stevenson

1845-1894

ÆS TRIPLEX<sup>1</sup>

(From Virginibus Puerisque, 1881)

The changes wrought by death are in themselves so sharp and final, and so terrible and melancholy in their consequences, that the 35 thing stands alone in man's experience, and has no parallel upon earth. It outdoes all other accidents because it is last of them. Sometimes it leaps suddenly upon its victims, like a Thug; sometimes it lays a regular siege <sup>10</sup> Clodius Albinus. Arma amens capio; nec sat rationis in armis. Frenzied I take arms, not that there is any reason in taking arms. Æn. II. 315.

<sup>11</sup> Pitt.

<sup>12</sup> Nosque ubi primus equis Oriens adflavit anhelis, Illic sera rubens accendit lumina Vesper.

Aurora returns to them when she leaves us, and brings them back the day, and as among us the rising day first breathes her panting steeds, etc. Georg., i. 250.

<sup>13</sup> Quo res summa loco, Panthus? quam prendimus arcem? How is it with the state Panthus? How do we defend the citadel? Æn., Bk. II. 322.

<sup>14</sup> Illum absens absentem audilque videtque. Him absent she both sees and hears. Æn., iv. 83.

<sup>15</sup> Quem fugias? extremum falo, quod te adloquitur, hoc est. Whom would you fly from? This is the last word which fate allows me to address to you. Æn., vi. 466.

<sup>1</sup> Æs Triplex. (Lat., threefold brass.) The title of the essay is taken from Horace:

*Ille robur et æs triplex
Circa pectus erat, qui fragiliter truci
Commisit fulguri ratem.*

"Oak and brass of triple fold
Encompassed sure that heart, which first made bold
To the raging sea to trust
A fragile bark."

Odes, I. iii. 9-11.

and creeps upon their citadel during a score of years. And when the business is done, there is sore havoc made in other people's lives, and a pin knocked out by which many subsidiary friendships hung together. There are empty chairs, solitary walks, and single beds at night. Again, in taking away our friends, death does not take them away utterly, but leaves behind a mocking, tragical, and soon intolerable residue, which must be hurriedly concealed. Hence a whole chapter of sights and customs striking to the mind, from the pyramids of Egypt to the gibbets and dule<sup>2</sup> trees of mediæval Europe. The poorest persons have a bit of pageant going towards the tomb; memorial stones are set up over the least memorable; and, in order to preserve some show of respect for what remains of our old loves and friendships, we must accompany it with much grimly ludicrous ceremonial, and the hired undertaker parades before the door. All this, and much more of the same sort, accompanied by the eloquence of poets, has gone a great way to put humanity in error; nay, in many philosophies the error has been embodied and laid down with every circumstance of logic; although in real life the bustle and swiftness, in leaving people little time to think, have not left them time enough to go dangerously wrong in practice.

As a matter of fact, although few things are spoken of with more fearful whisperings than this prospect of death, few have less influence on conduct under healthy circumstances. We have all heard of cities in South America built upon the side of fiery mountains, and how, even in this tremendous neighbourhood, the inhabitants are not a jot more impressed by the solemnity of mortal conditions than if they were delving gardens in the greenest corner of England. There are serenades and suppers and much gallantry among the myrtles overhead; and meanwhile the foundation shudders underfoot, the bowels of the mountain growl, and at any moment living ruin may leap sky-high into the moonlight, and tumble man and his merry-making in the dust. In the eyes of very young people, and very dull old ones, there is something indescribably reckless and desperate in such a picture. It seems not credible that respectable married people, with umbrellas, should find appetite for a bit of supper within quite a long distance of a fiery mountain; ordinary life begins to smell of high-handed debauch when it is carried on so close to a catastrophe; and even cheese and salad, it seems, could hardly be relished in such circumstances without something like a defiance of the Creator. It should be a place for nobody but hermits dwelling in prayer and maceration, or mere born-devils drowning care in a perpetual carouse.

And yet, when one comes to think upon it calmly, the situation of these South American citizens<sup>3</sup> forms only a very pale figure for the state of ordinary mankind. This world itself, travelling blindly and swiftly in overcrowded space, among a million other worlds travelling blindly and swiftly in contrary directions, may very well come by a knock that would set it into explosion like a penny squib. And what, pathologically looked at, is the human body with all its organs, but a mere bagful of pe-tards?<sup>4</sup> The least of these is as dangerous to the whole economy as the ship's powder-magazine to the ship; and with every breath we breathe, and every meal we eat, we are putting one or more of them in peril. If we clung as devotedly as some philosophers pretend we do to the abstract idea of life, or were half as frightened as they make out we are, for the subversive accident that ends it all, the trumpets might sound by the hour and no one would follow them into battle—the blue-peter<sup>5</sup> might fly at the truck, but who would climb into a sea-going ship? Think (if these philosophers were right) with what a preparation of spirit we should affront the daily peril of the dinner-table: a deadlier spot than any battle-field in history, where the far greater proportion of our ancestors have miserably left their bones! What woman would ever be lured into marriage, so much more dangerous than the wildest sea? And what would it be to grow old? For, after a certain distance, every step we take in life we find the ice growing thinner below our feet, and all around us and behind us we see our contemporaries going through. By the time a man gets well into the seventies, his continued existence is a mere miracle; and when he lays his old bones in bed for the night, there is an overwhelming probability that he will never see the day. Do the old men mind it, as a matter of fact? Why, no. They were never merrier; they have their grog at night, and tell the raciest stories; they hear of the death of people about their own age, or even younger, not as if it were a grisly

<sup>2</sup> Trees of mourning; a name given in Scotland to trees under which the clan gathered to bewail its dead. Spelled also dool-trees. (Lat. dolor, grief, lamentation.)

<sup>3</sup> The fate of St. Pierre (1902) affords a striking illustration of Stevenson's statement, and in the light of that recent catastrophe the whole passage becomes eloquent with a new meaning.

<sup>4</sup> A kind of bomb formerly used to blow up gates and walls.

<sup>5</sup> A blue flag with a white square in the centre, flown in the merchant marine as a signal that the vessel is ready to depart.

warning, but with a simple childlike pleasure at having outlived some one else; and when a draft might puff them out like a guttering candle, or a bit of a stumble shatter them like so much glass, their old hearts keep sound and unafrighted, and they go on, huddling with laughter, through years of man's age compared to which the valley at Balaklava<sup>6</sup> was as safe and peaceful as a village cricket-green on Sunday. It may fairly be questioned (if we look to the peril only) whether it was a much more daring feat for Curtius<sup>7</sup> to plunge into the gulf, than for any old gentleman of ninety to doff his clothes and clamber into bed.

Indeed, it is a memorable subject for consideration, with what unconcern and gaiety mankind pricks on along the Valley of the Shadow of Death. The whole way is one wilderness of snares, and the end of it, for those who fear the last pinch, is irrevocable ruin. And yet we go spinning through it all, like a party for the Derby.<sup>8</sup> Perhaps the reader remembers one of the humorous devices of the deified Caligula,<sup>9</sup> how he encouraged a vast concourse of holidaymakers on to his bridge over Baie bay; and when they were in the height of their enjoyment, turned loose the Prætorian guards among the company, and had them tossed into the sea. This is no bad miniature of the dealings of nature with the transitory race of man. Only, what a chequered picnic we have of it, even while it lasts! and into what great waters, not to be crossed by any swimmer, God's pale Prætorian throws us over in the end!

We live the time that a match flickers; we pop the cork of a ginger-beer bottle, and the earthquake swallows us on the instant. Is it not odd, is it not incongruous, is it not, in the highest sense of the human speech, incredible, that we should think so highly of the ginger-beer, and regard so little the devouring earthquake? The love of Life and the fear of Death are two famous phrases that grow harder to understand the more we think about them. It is a well-known fact that an immense proportion of boat accidents would never happen if people held the sheet in their hands instead of making it fast; and yet, unless it be some martinet of a professional mariner or some landman with shattered nerves, every one of God's creatures makes it fast. A strange instance of man's unconcern and brazen boldness in the face of death!

We confound ourselves with metaphysical phrases, which we import into daily talk with noble inappropriateness. We have no idea of what death is, apart from its circumstances and some of its consequences to others; and although we have some experience of living, there is not a man on earth who has flown so high into abstraction as to have any practical guess at the meaning of the word life. All literature, from Job and Omar Khayyám<sup>10</sup> to Thomas Carlyle or Walt Whitman, is but an attempt to look upon the human state with such largeness of view as shall enable us to rise from the consideration of living to the Definition of Life. And our sages give us about the best satisfaction in their power when they say it is a vapour, or a show, or made out of the same stuff with dreams. Philosophy, in its more rigid sense, has been at the same work for ages; and after a myriad bald heads have wagged over the problem, and piles of words have been heaped one upon another into dry and cloudy volumes without end, philosophy has the honour of laying before us, with modest pride, her contribution towards the subject: that life is a Permanent Possibility of Sensation. Truly a fine result! A man may very well love beef, or hunting, or a woman; but surely, surely, not a Permanent Possibility of Sensation! He may be afraid of a precipice, or a dentist, or a large enemy with a club, or even an undertaker's man; but not certainly of abstract death. We may trick with the word life in its dozen senses until we are weary of tricking; we may argue in terms of all the philosophies on earth, but one fact remains true throughout—that we do not love life, in the sense that we are greatly preoccupied about its conservation; that we do not, properly speaking, love life at all, but living. Into the views of the least careful there will enter some degree of providence; no man's eyes are fixed entirely on the passing hour; but although we have some anticipation of good health, good weather, wine, active employment, love, and self-approval, the sum of these anticipations

<sup>6</sup> In the Crimea; the scene of the famous charge of the Light Brigade. Through a mistaken order, a brigade of light English cavalry was sent against three Russian batteries, and of 670, only 198 returned.

<sup>7</sup> According to tradition a chasm appeared in the forum of Rome (B. C. 362), which the soothsayers declared could be closed only by casting into it Rome's greatest treasure. Thereupon Marcus Curtius, a young noble, declaring that Rome's greatest treasure was a brave citizen, mounted his horse and leaped into the gulf, which immediately closed over him.

<sup>8</sup> A celebrated horse-race, held annually about the end of May, at Epsom, near London. It is one of the great English sporting events, and is said to be attended by about 300,000 people.

<sup>9</sup> Emperor of Rome, 37–41 A. D., and noted for his insane cruelty and extravagance. He caused himself to be worshipped as a god, and had his horse made consul. The bridge he built from Puteoli to Baie was three miles long. When it was finished he gave a banquet in the midst of it, which ended as Stevenson describes.

<sup>10</sup> A Persian poet of the end of the eleventh century, made familiar to English readers by Edward Fitzgerald's translation. V. p. 658, supra.

does not amount to anything like a general view of life's possibilities and issues; nor are those who cherish them most vividly, at all the most scrupulous of their personal safety. To be deeply interested in the accidents of our existence, to enjoy keenly the mixed texture of human experience, rather leads a man to disregard precautions, and risk his neck against a straw. For surely the love of living is stronger in an Alpine climber roping over a peril, or a hunter riding merrily at a stiff fence, than in a creature who lives upon a diet and walks a measured distance in the interest of his constitution.

There is a great deal of very vile nonsense talked upon both sides of the matter: tearing divines reducing life to the dimensions of a mere funeral procession, so short as to be hardly decent; and melancholy unbelievers yearning for the tomb as if it were a world too far away. Both sides must feel a little ashamed of their performances now and again when they draw in their chairs to dinner. Indeed, a good meal and a bottle of wine is an answer to most standard works upon the question. When a man's heart warms to his viands, he forgets a great deal of sophistry, and soars into a rosy zone of contemplation. Death may be knocking at the door, like the Commander's statue;<sup>11</sup> we have something else in hand, thank God, and let him knock. Passing bells are ringing all the world over. All the world over, and every hour, some one is parting company with all his aches and ecstasies. For us also the trap is laid. But we are so fond of life that we have no leisure to entertain the terror of death. It is a honeymoon with us all through, and none of the longest. Small blame to us if we give our whole hearts to this glowing bride of ours, to the appetites, to honour, to the hungry curiosity of the mind, to the pleasure of the eyes in nature, and the pride of our own nimble bodies.

We all of us appreciate the sensations; but as for caring about the Permanence of the Possibility, a man's head is generally very bald, and his senses very dull, before he comes to that. Whether we regard life as a lane leading to a dead wall—a mere bag's end,<sup>12</sup> as the French say—or whether we think of it as a vestibule or gymnasium, where we wait our turn and prepare our faculties for some more noble destiny; whether we thunder in a pulpit, or pule in little atheistic poetry-books, about its vanity and brevity; whether we look justly for years of health and vigour, or are about to mount into a bath-chair, as a step towards the hearse; in each and all of these views and situations there is but one conclusion possible: that a man should stop his ears against paralysing terror, and run the race that is set before him with a single mind. No one surely could have recoiled with more heartache and terror from the thought of death than our respected lexicographer;<sup>13</sup> and yet we know how little it affected his conduct, how wisely and boldly he walked, and in what a fresh and lively vein he spoke of life. Already an old man, he ventured on his Highland tour<sup>14</sup> and his heart, bound with triple brass,<sup>15</sup> did not recoil before twenty-seven individual cups of tea. As courage and intelligence are the two qualities best worth a good man's cultivation, so it is the first part of intelligence to recognise our precarious estate in life, and the first part of courage to be not at all abashed before the fact. A frank and somewhat headlong carriage, not looking too anxiously before, not dallying in maudlin regret over the past, stamps the man who is well armoured for this world.

And not only well armoured for himself, but a good friend and a good citizen to boot. We do not go to cowards for tender dealing; there is nothing so cruel as panic; the man who has least fear for his own carcase, has most time to consider others. That eminent chemist<sup>16</sup> who took his walks abroad in tin shoes, and subsisted wholly upon tepid milk, had all his work cut out for him in considerate dealings with his own digestion. So soon as prudence has begun to grow up in the brain, like a dismal fungus, it finds its first expression in a paralysis of generous acts. The victim begins to shrink spiritually; he develops a fancy for parlours with a regulated temperature, and takes his morality on the principle of tin shoes and tepid milk. The care of one important body or soul becomes so engrossing, that all the noises of the outer world begin to come thin and faint into the parlour with the regulated temperature; and the tin shoes go equably forward over blood and rain. To be overwise is to ossify; and the scruple-monger ends by standing stockstill. Now the man who has his heart on his sleeve, and a good whirling weathercock of a brain, who reckons his life as a thing to be dashingly used and cheerfully hazarded, makes a very different acquaintance of the

<sup>11</sup> In Spanish legend, Don Juan, after he had murdered the Commandant of Ulloa, was enticed to a certain monastery, and there killed by the monks, who asserted that the statue of the Commandant (erected there) had come down from its pedestal and dragged Juan off to Hell.

<sup>12</sup> The French expression is cul de sac.

<sup>13</sup> Dr. Samuel Johnson.

<sup>14</sup> In 1773, Dr. Johnson, aged 64, accompanied by his faithful Boswell, made his celebrated tour to Scotland and the Hebrides.

<sup>15</sup> V, p. 772, n. 1.

<sup>16</sup> Dr. Joseph Black (1728-1799), professor of chemistry at Edinburgh.

world, keeps all his pulses going true and fast, and gathers impetus as he runs, until, if he be running towards anything better than a wildfire, he may shoot up and become a constellation in the end. Lord look after his health, Lord have a care of his soul, says he; and he has at the key of the position, and swashes through incongruity and peril towards his aim. Death is on all sides of him with pointed batteries, as he is on all sides of all of us; unfortunate surprises gird him round; mim-mouthed<sup>17</sup> friends and relations hold up their hands in quite a little elegiacal synod about his path; and what cares he for all this? Being a true lover of living, a fellow with something pushing and spontaneous in his inside, he must, like any other soldier, in any other stirring, deadly warfare, push on at his best pace until he touch the goal. "A peerage or Westminster Abbey!"<sup>18</sup> cried Nelson in his 20 bright, boyish, heroic manner. These are great incentives; not for any of these, but for the plain satisfaction of living, of being about their business in some sort or other, do the brave, serviceable men of every nation tread down 25 the nettle danger, and pass flyingly over all the stumbling-blocks of prudence. Think of the heroism of Johnson, think of that superb indifference to mortal limitation that set him upon his dictionary, and carried him through 30 triumphantly until the end! Who, if he were wisely considerate of things at large, would ever embark upon any work much more considerable than a halfpenny post card? Who would project a serial novel, after Thackeray 35 and Dickens had each fallen in mid-course?<sup>19</sup> Who would find heart enough to begin to live if he dallied with the consideration of death?

And, after all, what sorry and pitiful quibbling all this is! To forego all the issues of 40 living in a parlour with a regulated temperature—as if that were not to die a hundred times over, and for ten years at a stretch! As if it were not to die in one's own lifetime, and without even the sad immunities of death! As if it were not to die, and yet be the patient spectators of our own pitiable change! The Permanent Possibility is preserved, but the sensations carefully held at arm's length, as if one kept a photographic plate in a dark chamber. 50 It is better to lose health like a spendthrift than to waste it like a miser. It is better to live and be done with it, than to die daily in the sickroom. By all means begin your folio; even if the doctor does not give you a year, even if he hesitates about a month, make one brave push and see what can be accomplished 5 in a week. It is not only in finished undertakings that we ought to honour useful labour. A spirit goes out of the man who means execution, which outlives the most untimely ending. All who have meant good work with their whole hearts, have done good work, although they may die before they have the time to sign it. Every heart that has beat strong and cheerfully has left a hopeful impulse behind it in the world, and bettered the tradition of 15 mankind. And even if death catch people, like an open pitfall, and in mid-career, laying out vast projects, and planning monstrous foundations, flushed with hope, and their mouths full of boastful language, they should be at once tripped up and silenced: is there not something brave and spirited in such a termination? and does not life go down with a better grace, foaming in full body over a precipice, than miserably straggling to an end in sandy deltas? When the Greeks made their fine saying that those 20 whom the gods love die young,<sup>20</sup> I cannot help believing they had this sort of death also in their eye. For surely, at whatever age it overtake the man, this is to die young. Death has not been suffered to take so much as an illusion from his heart. In the hot-fit of life, a tip-toe on the highest point of being, he passes at a bound on to the other side. The noise of the mallet and chisel is scarcely quenched; the trumpets are hardly done blowing, when, 25 trailing with him clouds of glory,<sup>21</sup> this happy-starred, full-blooded spirit shoots into the spiritual land.

PULVIS ET UMBRA<sup>1</sup>

(From Across the Plains, 1892)

We look for some reward of our endeavours 45 and are disappointed; not success, not happiness, not even peace of conscience, crowns our ineffectual efforts to do well. Our frailties are invincible, our virtues barren; the battle goes sore against us to the going down of the

<sup>17</sup> Attributed to Menander. Cf. Plautus, Bacchides, iv. 7, 18.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. Wordsworth's Ode on the Intimations of Immortality, etc.

<sup>19</sup> "But trailing clouds of glory do we come From God, who is our home."

<sup>20</sup> Dust and a shade.

*Nox, ubi decidimus,
Quo pater Aeneas, quo dives Tullus et Ancus, Pulvis et umbra sumus.*

Hor., Od. IV. 7. 14.

(We, when we go down whither the father Aeneas, whither the rich Tullus and Ancus [have gone], we shall become dust and a shade.)

<sup>17</sup> Mim, is a Scotch form of mum. "Reserved in discourse, implying an affectation of modesty." Cent. Dict.

<sup>18</sup> Commonly stated to have been Nelson's exclamation before the Battle of the Nile.

<sup>19</sup> Thackeray left Diana Duval unfinished, and Dickens The Mystery of Edwin Drood. Stevenson himself "fell in mid-course," leaving St. Ives to be completed, and that remarkable fragment, Weir of Hermiston.

sun. The canting moralist tells us of right and wrong; and we look abroad, even on the face of our small earth, and find them change with every climate, and no country where some action is not honoured for a virtue and none where it is not branded for a vice; and we look in our experience, and find no vital congruity in the wisest rules, but at the best a municipal fitness. It is not strange if we are tempted to despair of good. We ask too much. Our religions and moralities have been trimmed to flatter us, till they are all emasculate and sentimentalised, and only please and weaken. Truth is of a rougher strain. In the harsh face of life, faith can read a bracing gospel. The human race is a thing more ancient than the ten commandments; and the bones and revolutions of the Kosmos, in whose joints we are but moss and fungus, more ancient still.

I

Of the Kosmos in the last resort, science reports many doubtful things and all of them appalling. There seems no substance to this solid globe on which we stamp: nothing but symbols and ratios. Symbols and ratios carry us and bring us forth and beat us down; gravity that swings the incommensurable suns and worlds through space, is but a figment varying inversely as the squares of distances; and the suns and worlds themselves, imponderable figures of abstraction,  $NH_3$  and  $H_2O$ .<sup>2</sup> Consideration dares not dwell upon this view; that way madness lies;<sup>3</sup> science carries us into zones of speculation, where there is no habitable city for the mind of man.

But take the Kosmos with a grosser faith, as our senses give it us. We behold space sown with rotatory islands, suns and worlds and the shards and wrecks of systems: some, like the sun, still blazing; some rotting, like the earth; others, like the moon, stable in desolation. All of these we take to be made of something we call matter: a thing which no analysis can help us to conceive; to whose incredible properties no familiarities can reconcile our minds. This stuff, when not purified by the lustration of fire, rots uncleanly into something we call life; seized through all its atoms with a pediculous malady; swelling in tumours that become independent, sometimes even (by an abhorrent prodigy) locomoting; one splitting into millions, millions cohering into one, as the malady proceeds through varying stages. This vital putrescence of the dust, used as we are to it, yet strikes us with occasional disgust, and the profusion of worms in a piece of ancient turf, or the air of a marsh darkened with insects, will sometimes check our breathing so that we aspire for cleaner places. But none is clean: the moving sand is infected with lice; the pure spring, where it bursts out of the mountain, is a mere issue of worms; even in the hard rock the crystal is forming.

In two main shapes this eruption covers the countenance of the earth: the animal and the vegetable: one in some degree the inversion of the other: the second rooted to the spot; the first coming detached out of its natal mud, and scurrying abroad with the myriad feet of insects or towering into the heavens on the wings of birds: a thing so inconceivable that, if it be well considered, the heart stops. To what passes with the anchored vermin, we have little clue; doubtless they have their joys and sorrows, their delights and killing agonies: it appears not how. But of the locomotory, to which we ourselves belong, we can tell more. These share with us a thousand miracles: the miracles of sight, of hearing, of the projection of sound, things that bridge space; the miracles of memory and reason, by which the present is conceived, and when it is gone, its image kept living in the brains of man and brute; the miracle of reproduction, with its imperious desires and staggering consequences. And to put the last touch upon this mountain mass of the revolting and the inconceivable, all these prey upon each other, lives tearing other lives in pieces, cramming them inside themselves, and by that summary process, growing fat: the vegetarian, the whale, perhaps the tree, not less than the lion of the desert; for the vegetarian is only the eater of the dumb.

Meanwhile our rotatory island loaded with predatory life, and more drenched with blood, both animal and vegetable, than ever mutinied ship, scuds through space with unimaginable speed, and turns alternate cheeks to the reverberation of a blazing world, ninety million miles away.

II

What a monstrous spectre is this man, the disease of the agglutinated dust,<sup>4</sup> lifting alternate feet or lying drugged with slumber; killing, feeding, growing, bringing forth small copies of himself; grown upon with hair like grass, fitted with eyes that move and glitter

<sup>2</sup>  $NH_3$  and  $H_2O$ , i. e. ammonia and water.

<sup>3</sup> Oh, that way madness lies, let me shun that.

Lear, III. iv. 21.

<sup>4</sup> "What a piece of work is man! . . . and yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust!" etc. Ham., II. ii. 295. The style and rhythm of Stevenson's passage are strikingly close to the famous speech of Hamlet, from which the above lines are quoted.

in his face; a thing to set children screaming;— and yet looked at nearer, known as his fellows know him, how surprising are his attributes! Poor soul, here for so little, cast among so many hardships, filled with desires so incommensurate and so inconsistent, savagely surrounded, savagely descended, irremediably condemned to prey upon his fellow lives: who should have blamed him had he been of a piece with his destiny and a being merely barbarous? And we look and behold him instead filled with imperfect virtues: infinitely childish, often admirably valiant, often touchingly kind; sitting down, amidst his momentary life, to debate of right and wrong and the attributes of the deity; rising up to do battle for an egg<sup>5</sup> or die for an idea; singling out his friends and his mate with cordial affection; bringing forth in pain, rearing with long-suffering solicitude, his young. To touch the heart of his mystery, we find in him one thought, strange to the point of lunacy: the thought of duty; the thought of something owing to himself, to his neighbour, to his God: an ideal of decency, to which he would rise if it were possible; a limit of shame, below which, if it be possible, he will not stoop. The design in most men is one of conformity; here and there, in picked natures, it transcends itself and soars on the other side, arming martyrs with independence; but in all, in their degrees, it is a bosom thought:—Not in man alone, for we trace it in dogs and cats whom we know fairly well, and doubtless some similar point of honour sways the elephant, the oyster, and the louse, of whom we know so little:—But in man, at least, it sways with so complete an empire that merely selfish things come second, even with the selfish: that appetites are starved, fears are conquered, pains supported; that almost the dullest shrinks from the reproof of a glance, although it were a child's; and all but the most cowardly stand amid the risks of war; and the more noble having strongly conceived an act as due to their ideal, affront and embrace death. Strange enough if, with their singular origin and perverted practice, they think they are to be rewarded in some future life: stranger still, if they are persuaded of the contrary, and think this blow, which they solicit, will strike them senseless for eternity. I shall be reminded what a tragedy of misconception and misconduct man at large presents; of organised injustice, cowardly violence and treacherous crime; and of the damning imperfections of the best. They cannot be too darkly drawn. Man is indeed marked for failure in his efforts to do right. But where the best consistently miscarry, how tenfold more remarkable that all should continue to strive; and surely we should find it both touching and inspiring, that in a field from which success is banished, our race should not cease to labour.

If the first view of this creature, stalking in his rotatory isle, be a thing to shake the courage of the stoutest, on this nearer sight, he startles us with an admiring wonder. It matters not where we look, under what climate we observe him, in what stage of society, in what depth of ignorance, burthened with what erroneous morality; by camp-fires in Assiniboia, the snow powdering his shoulders, the wind plucking his blanket, as he sits, passing the ceremonial calumet and uttering his grave opinions like a Roman senator; in ships at sea, a man inured to hardship and vile pleasures, his brightest hope a fiddle in a tavern and a bedizened trull who sells herself to rob him, and he for all that simple, innocent, cheerful, kindly like a child, constant to toil, brave to drown, for others; in the slums of cities, moving among indifferent millions to mechanical employment, without hope of change in the future, with scarce a pleasure in the present, and yet true to his virtues, honest up to his lights, kind to his neighbours, tempted perhaps in vain by the bright gin-palace, perhaps long-suffering with the drunken wife that ruins him; in India (a woman this time) kneeling with broken cries and streaming tears, as she drowns her child in the sacred river; in the brothel, the discard of society, living mainly on strong drink, fed with affronts, a fool, a thief, the comrade of thieves, and even here keeping the point of honour and the touch of pity, often repaying the world's scorn with service, often standing firm upon a scruple, and at a certain cost, rejecting riches:—everywhere some decency cherished or affected, everywhere the ensign of man's ineffectual goodness:—ah! if I could show you this! If I could show you these men and women, all the world over, in every stage of history, under every abuse of error, under every circumstance of failure, without hope, without help, without thanks, still obscurely fighting the lost fight of virtue, still clinging, in the brothel or on the scaffold, to some rag of honour, the poor jewel of their souls!<sup>6</sup> They may seek to escape,

<sup>5</sup> To do battle for an egg.

Exposing what is mortal and unsure
To all that fortune, death, and danger dare,
Even for an egg-shell.

Ham., IV. iv. 51.

<sup>6</sup> Good name in man or woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls.

Othello, III. iii. 181.

and yet they cannot; it is not alone their privilege and glory, but their doom; they are condemned to some nobility; all their lives long, the desire of good is at their heels, the implacable hunter.

Of all earth's meteors, here at least is the most strange and consoling: That this ennobled lemur,<sup>7</sup> this hair-crowned bubble of the dust, this inheritor of a few years and sorrows, should yet deny himself his rare delights, and add to his frequent pains, and live for an ideal, however misconceived. Nor can we stop with man. A new doctrine, received with screams a little while ago by canting moralists, and still not properly worked into the body of our thoughts, lights us a step farther into the heart of this rough but noble universe. For nowadays the pride of man denies in vain his kinship with the original dust. He stands no longer like a thing apart. Close at his heels we see the dog, prince of another genus: and in him too, we see dumbly testified the same cultus of an unattainable ideal, the same constancy in failure. Does it stop with the dog? We look at our feet where the ground is blackened with the swarming ant: a creature so small, so far from us in the hierarchy of brutes, that we can scarce trace and scarce comprehend his doings; and here also, in his ordered politics and rigorous justice, we see confessed the law of duty and the fact of individual sin. Does it stop, then, with the ant? Rather this desire of well-doing and this doom of frailty run through all the grades of life: rather is this earth, from the frosty top of Everest<sup>8</sup> to the next margin of the internal fire, one stage of ineffectual virtues and one temple of pious tears and perseverance. The whole creation groaneth and travaileth together.<sup>9</sup> It is the common and the god-like law of life. The browsers, the biters, the barkers, the hairy coats of field and forest, the squirrel in the oak, the thousand-footed creeper in the dust, as they share with us the gift of life, share with us the love of an ideal: strive like us—like us are tempted to grow weary of the struggle—to do well; like us receive at times unmerited refreshment, visitings of support, returns of courage; and are condemned like us to be crucified between that double law of the members and the will. Are they like us, I wonder, in the timid hope of some reward, some sugar with the drug? do they, too, stand aghast at unrewarded virtues, at the sufferings of those whom, in our partiality, we take to be just, and the prosperity of such as, in our blindness we call wicked? It may be, and yet God knows what they should look for. Even while they look, even while they repent, the foot of man treads them by thousands in the dust, the yelping hounds burst upon their trail, the bullet speeds, the knives are heating in the den of the vivisectionist; or the dew falls, and the generation of a day is blotted out. For these are creatures, compared with whom our weakness is strength, our ignorance wisdom, our brief span eternity.

And as we dwell, we living things, in our isle of terror and under the imminent hand of death, God forbid it should be man the erected, the reasoner, the wise in his own eyes—God forbid it should be man that wearies in well-doing, that despairs of unrewarded effort, or utters the language of complaint. Let it be enough for faith, that the whole creation groans in mortal frailty, strives with unquerable constancy: Surely not all in vain.

Francis Thompson

1859(?)–1907

THE ETERNAL CHILD IN SHELLEY

(From Shelley, pub. 1908)

We have among us at the present day no lineal descendant, in the poetical order, of Shelley; and any such offspring of the abounding spontaneous Shelley is hardly possible, still less likely, on account of the defect by which (we think) contemporary poetry in general, as compared with the poetry of the early nineteenth century, is mildewed. That defect is the predominance of art over inspiration, of body over soul. We do not say the defect of inspiration. The warrior is there; but he is hampered by his armour. Writers of high aim in all branches of literature, even when they are not—as Mr. Swinburne, for instance, is—lavish in expression, are generally over-deliberate in expression. Mr. Henry James, delineating a fictitious writer clearly intended to be the ideal of an artist, makes him

<sup>7</sup> The lemurs belong to the highest order of mammalia, the Primates, including besides themselves, man and monkeys. They are just below the apes in the scale of evolution. In appearance they are fox-like monkeys. The name lemur (Lat. lemures, ghosts) has been given them on account of their nocturnal habits and stealthy steps.

<sup>8</sup> A mountain in the Himalayas, so far as known the highest peak on the earth (29,002 feet).

<sup>9</sup> V. Rom., vii. 23.

<sup>1</sup> Francis Thompson is remembered chiefly as one of a little group of poets who challenged attention toward the close of the Victorian era. Of a mystical and deeply religious temperament, he was obviously influenced by Crashaw, and other religious poets of the early 17th century. His Hound of Heaven (which has been greatly over-praised) is probably his best-known poem. His essay on Shelley (Dublin Review, 1903; Scribner, 1912) is a remarkable production in an age not distinguished for the eloquence or poetic enthusiasm of its prose.

regret that he has sometimes allowed himself to take the second-best word instead of searching for the best. Theoretically, of course, one ought always to try for the best word. But practically, the habit of excessive care in word selection frequently results in loss of spontaneity; and, still worse, the habit of always taking the most ornate word, the word most removed from ordinary speech. In consequence of this, poetic diction has become latterly a kaleidoscope, and one's chief curiosity is as to the precise combinations into which the pieces will be shifted. There is, in fact, a certain band of words, the Prætorian cohorts<sup>2</sup> of poetry, whose prescriptive aid is invoked by every aspirant to the poetical purple, and without whose prescriptive aid none dares aspire to the poetical purple; against these it is time some banner should be raised. Perhaps it is almost impossible for a contemporary writer quite to evade the services of the free-lances whom one encounters under so many standards. But it is at any rate curious to note that the literary revolution against the despotic diction of Pope seems issuing, like political revolutions, in a despotism of its own making.

This, then, we cannot but think, distinguishes the literary period of Shelley from our own. It distinguishes even the unquestionable treasures and masterpieces of to-day from similar treasures and masterpieces of the precedent day; even the Lotus-Eaters from Kubla-Khan; even Rossetti's ballads from Christabel. It is present in the restraint of Matthew Arnold no less than in the exuberance of Swinburne, and affects our writers who aim at simplicity no less than those who seek richness. Indeed, nothing is so artificial as our simplicity. It is the simplicity of the French stage ingénue. We are self-conscious to the finger-tips; and this inherent quality, entailing on our poetry the inevitable loss of spontaneity, ensures that whatever poets, of whatever excellence, may be born to us from the Shelleian stock, its founder's spirit can take among us no reincarnation. An age that is ceasing to produce child-like children cannot produce a Shelley. For both as poet and man he was essentially a child.

<sup>2</sup> i. e. this chosen band of words stands in the same relation to the aspirant for poetical distinction, as the Prætorian Cohort, or Guard (the special guard of the Roman emperors), stood to those who aspired to the imperial purple. The Prætorian Cohort, created by the Emperor Augustus for his especial use and protection, gained such power in later times that it made and deposed emperors at its pleasure.

Yet, just as in the effete French society before the Revolution the Queen played at Arcadia, the King played at being a mechanic, every one played at simplicity and universal philanthropy, leaving for most durable outcome of their philanthropy the guillotine, as the most durable outcome of ours may be execution by electricity;—so in our own society the talk of benevolence and the cult of childhood are the very fashion of the hour. We, of this self-conscious, incredulous generation, sentimentalize our children, analyse our children, think we are endowed with a special capacity to sympathize and identify ourselves with children; we play at being children. And the result is that we are not more child-like, but our children are less child-like. It is so tiring to stoop to the child, so much easier to lift the child up to you. Know you what it is to be a child? It is to be something very different from the man of to-day. It is to have a spirit yet streaming from the waters of baptism; it is to believe in love, to believe in loveliness, to believe in belief, it is to be so little that the elves can reach to whisper in your ear; it is to turn pumpkins into coaches, and mice into horses, lowness into loftiness, and nothing into everything, for each child has its fairy godmother in its own soul; it is to live in a nutshell and to count yourself the king of infinite space;<sup>3</sup> it is To see a world in a grain of sand,

And a heaven in a wild flower,
Hold infinity in the palm of your hand,
And eternity in an hour;<sup>4</sup>

It is to know not as yet that you are under sentence of life, nor petition that it be commuted into death. When we become conscious in dreaming that we dream, the dream is on the point of breaking; when we become conscious in living that we live, the ill dream is but just beginning. Now if Shelley was but too conscious of the dream, in other respects Dryden's false and famous line<sup>5</sup> might have been applied to him with very much less than its usual untruth. To the last, in a degree uncommon even among poets, the idiosyncrasy of childhood expanded and matured without differentiation. To the last he was the enchanted child.

<sup>3</sup> "O God, I could be bounded in a nut-shell, and count myself a king of infinite space, were it not that I have bad dreams." Ham., II. ii. 250.

<sup>4</sup> William Blake.

<sup>5</sup> The line referred to is presumably:

"Great wits are sure to madness near allied."
Asolom and Achitophel, 162.

APPENDIX

I. SELECTIONS ILLUSTRATING THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

c. 737-c. 1500

CÆDMON'S HYMN

(Translated on p. 8)

nu scylun hergan hefaenricaes uard, metudaes maecti end his modgidanc,
uerc uuldurfadur; sue he uundra gihuaes,
eci dryctin, or astelidæ.
he aerist scop aelda barnum
heben til brofe, haleg scepen.
Tha middungeard monecynnæs uard,
eci dryctin, æfter tiadæ
frum foldu frea allmectig.

BEOWULF

(Translated on p. 3)

1c þæt lond-büend, lēode mīne, sele-rædende, secgan hýrde,
þæt hīe gesāwon swylce twegen micle mearc-stapan mōras healdan, ellor-gæstas, ðæra oðer was,
þæs þe hīe gewislicost gewitan meahton,
idese onlicnes; oðer earm-sceapen on weres wæstmum wræc-lāstas træd, næfne hē was māra þonne ænig man oðer,
þone on gēar-dagum Grendel nemdon fold-büende; nō hīe fæder cunnon, hwæþer him ænig was ær æcenned dyrnra gæsta. Hīe dýgel lond warigeað, wulf-hleoðu, windige næssas, frēcne fen-gelād, ðær fyrgen-strēam
under massa genipu nīper gewiteð, flōd under foldan. Nis þæt feor heonon mil-gemearcas, þæt se mere standeð, ofer þām hongiað hringe bearwas,
wudu wyrtum fæst, wæter oferhelmað.
Þær mæg nihta gehwām nið-wundor sēon, fýr on flōde. Nō þæs frōd leofað gumena bearna, þæt þone grund wite.
Ðeah þe hīeð-stapa hundum geswenced,
heort hornum trum, holt-wudu sēce,
feorran gefýmed, ær hē feorh seleð,
aldor on oðre, ær hē in wille hafelan [hýdan]. Nis þæt hēoru stōw;
þonon fýð-geblond up āstigeð won to wolcnum, þonne wind styreþ lāð gewidru, oð ðæt lyft drysmaþ, roderas rēotað. Nū is se ræd gelang eft æt þē ānum. Eard git ne const, frēcne stōwe, ðær þū findan miht

fela-sinnigne secg; sēc gif þū dyrre.
1c þē þā fæhðe fēo lēanige, eald-gestrēonum, swā ic ær dyde,
wundnum golde, gýf þū on weg cymest.

1380

THE BATTLE OF BRUNANBURH

(Translated on p. 14)

Hēr Æðelstān cyning, eorla drihten, beorna beahgifa, and his brōðor ēac,
Eadmund æðeling, ealdorlangne tīr geslōgon æt sæcce sweorda ecgum ymb Brunanburh: bordweall clufon, hēowon heaðolinde hamora lāfum, eaforan Eadweardes; swā him geseðle was fram cnēomāgum, ðæt hī æt campe oft wið lāðra gehwæne land ealgodon, hord and hāmas. Hettend crungon, Scotta lēode and scipflotan,
fæge fēollon: feld dennode secca swāte, sibban sunne upp
on morgentīd, mære tungol, glād ofer grundas, Godes candel beorht, ēces Drihtnes, oð sio æðele gesceaft
sāh to setle. Ðær læg secc monig gārum āgēted, guma Norðerna ofer scýld scoten, swylce Scyttisc ēac wērig wiges sæd. . . .

5

5

10

15

1355

20

ALFRED'S PREFACE TO HIS TRANSLATION OF GREGORY'S PASTORAL CARE

(Translated on p. 20)

Ælfrēd kyning hāteð grētan Wærferð bisecep his wordum luflice and frēondlice; and ðe cýðan hāte ðæt me cōm swiðe oft on gemynd, hwelce wiotan iu wæron giord Angelecyne, ægðer ge godcundra hāda ge woruldcundra; and hū gesæliglica tīdā ðā wæron giord Angelecyne; and hū ðā kyningas ðe ðone onwald hæfdon ðæs folces on ðām dagum Gode and his ærendwrecum hērsumedon; and hū hīe ægðer ge hiora sibbe ge hiora siodo ge hiora onweald innanbordes gehi-oldon, and ēac ut hiora eðel gerýmdon; and hū him ðā spēow ægðer ge mid wige ge mid wisdōme; and ēac ðā godcundan hādas hū giorne hīe wæron ægðer ge ymb lāre ge ymb liornunga, ge ymb ealle ðā ðiowotdōmas ðe hīe Gode dōn

scoldon; and hū man ūtanbordes wīsdōm and lāre hieder on lond sōhte, and hū wē hie nū sceoldon ūte begietan, gif wē hie habban sceoldon. Swā clāne hio wæs oðfeallenu on Anglecynne ðæt swiðe fēawe wæron behionan Humbre ðe hiora ðēninga cūðen understandan on Englisc oððe furðum an ærendgewrit of Lādene on Englisc aſcecean; and ic wēne ðætte nōht monige begiendan Humbre nāren. Swā fēawe hiora wæron ðæt ic furðum āne ānlēpne ne mæg geðencean be sūðan Temese, ðā ðā ic tō rice fēng. Gode ælmihtegum sie ðone ðætte wē nū ænigne onstāl habbað lārēowa. And for ðon ic ðe bebiode ðæt ðū dō swā ic geliefe ðæt ðū wille, ðæt ðū ðe ðissa worulðinga tō ðām geæmetige, swā ðū oftost mæge, ðæt ðū ðone wīsdōm ðe ðe God sealde ðær ðær ðū hiene befeatan mæge, befeaste. Geðenc hwelc witu ūs ðā becōmon for ðisse worulde, ðā ðā wē hit nōhwæðer nē selfe ne lufodon, nē ēac oðrum monnum ne lēfdon: ðone naman āne wē lufodon ðætte wē Cristne wæron, and swiðe fēawe ðā ðēawas.

THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE, 1087

(Translated on p. 44)

Gif hwa gewilnigeð tō gewitane hū ge dōn mann hē wæs, oððe hwilene wurðscipe hē hæfde, oððe hū fela lande hē wære hlāford, ðonne wille wē be him awritan swā swā wē hine āgēaton ðe him lōcodan and oðre hwile on his hīrde wunodon. Sē cyng Wilhelm þe wē embe spēcað wæs swiðe wīd man and swiðe rice, and wurðfulre and strengere ðonne ænig his foregenga wære. Hē wæs milde þām gōdum mannum þe God lufedon, and ofer eall gemett stearc þām mannum þe wiðcwædon his willan. On ðam ilcan steode þe God him geuðe þæt hē mōste Engleland gegān, hē ārde mære mynster and muncas þær gesætte and wæll gegōdade. On his dagan wæs þæt mære mynster on Cantwarbyrig getymbrad and ēac swiðe manig oðder ofer eall Engla land. Eac þis land wæs swiðe āfyllt mid muncan and þā leofodan heora lif æfter sēs Benedictus regule, and sē Xpēdōm wæs swile on his dæge þæt ælc man hwæt his hāde tō belumpe folgade sē þe wolde. . . .

POEMA MORALE

(Modernized on p. 27)

Ich æm elder þen ich wæs ā wintre and ā lōre;
 Ic wælde mōre þanne ic dude, mi wit āh tō bēn mōre.
 Wēl lānge ic habbe child ibēon ā wēorde and æch ā dēde;
 Ðēh ic bēo ā wintre eald, tō yung I eom ā rāde.
 Unnut lȳf ic habb ilæd, and ȳet mē þinç ic lēde;
 Ðanne ic mē biþenche, wēl sōre ic mē adrāde.
 Mēst al þæt ic habbe yðon ys idelnesse and chilche;

Wēl late ic habbe mē biþoht, būte mē God d milce.
 Fele yðle wōrd ic habbe iquden, syððen ic spek cūpe,
 And fale yunge dēde idō þet mē ofþinchet nūpe.

ORMULUM

(Modernized on p. 28)

Nū brōþerr Wallterr, brōþerr min
 affterr þe flēsšess kinde, annd brōþerr min ī Crisstenndōm þurh fulluht and þurh trowwþe, annd brōþerr min ī Godess hūs
 æt o þe þridde wise, þurh þatt witt hafenn takenn bā
 ān rezhelbōc tō follhenn, unnderr kanunnkess hād annd lif
 swā summ Sannt Awwstin sette;
 icc hafe dōn swā summ þū hadd
 annd fōrþedd tē þin wille, icc hafe wennd inntill Engliſsh
 goddspellless halzhe lāre, affterr þatt little witt þatt mē
 min Drihtin hafeþ lēned.
 Ðu þohhtest tatt itt mihhte wēl
 till mikell frame turnenn, jiff Engliſsh folle, forr lufe off Crīst, itt wolldē jerne lērnenn
 annd follhenn itt and fillenn itt wiþþ þohht, wiþþ wōrd, wiþþ dēde;
 annd forþþ jerrndest itt þatt icc
 piss werre þe sholde wirrkenn, annd icc itt hafe fōrþedd tē,
 acc all þurh Crīstess hellpe.

DEBATE OF THE BODY AND THE SOUL

(Modernized on p. 30)

Als I lay in a winteris nyzt
 In a droupening biȳr þe day,
 Forsōþe I sauȳ a selly syȳt,
 A bodȳ on a bēre lay,
 Ðat hævede bēn a mōdy knyȳt
 And litel served God tō pay;
 Lōren hē hæved þe lives lȳȳt,
 Ðe gōȳt was oute and scholde away.

Wan þe gōȳt it scholde gō,
 It biwente and withstōd,
 Bihēld thē bodȳ þere it cam frȳ
 Sȳ serfulli with drēdlȳ mōd;
 It seide, 'Weille and walawȳ!
 Wȳ worþe þi fleȳs, þi foule blōd.
 Wreche bodȳ wȳȳ list ou sȳ,
 Ðat ȳwilene wēre sȳ wilde and wōd?

Ðou þat wēre woned tō rīde
 Heyȳe on horse in and out,
 Sȳ kweȳnte knȳȳt ikūð sȳ wīde,
 As a lȳon fērs and proud,

Swēre is al þi michele pride,
And þi lēde þat was sƿ loud ?
Swi list ou þere sƿ bære ð side
Ipricked in þat pōre schroud ?

Swēre bēn þi wurðli wēdes, 25
Ði somers with þi riċhe beddes,
Ði proude palfreys and þi stēdes ?
Ðat þou about in dester leddes ?
Ði faucouns þat wēre wont tō grēde,
And þine houndes þat þou fedde ? 30
Mē þinkeþ God is þē tō gnēde,
Ðat alle þine frēnd bēon frē þē fledde.

Swēre bēon þi castles and þi toures,
Ði chāmbres and þi riċhe halles
Ipeynted with sƿ riċhe floures, 35
And þi riċhe rōbes alle ?
Ðine cowltes and þi covertoures,
Ði cendels and þi riċhe palles ?
Wreche, ful derk is nou þi bour ;
Tōmorwe þou schalt þerinne falle.' 40

THE ANCREN RIWLE

Of Speech

(Modernized on p. 51)

Spellunge and smecchunge bēoð ine mūðe bōðe ase sihðe is I ðen eien ; auh wē schullen lēten smecchunge vort tet wē spēken of ower mēte, and spēken nū of spellunge and tērefter of her-runge, of bō imēne sume cherre ase gōð tōgederes.

On alre ġrest hwon ƿe schulen tō oure parlūres þurle, iwiteð et ower meiden hwō hit bēo þet is icumen, vor swuch hit mei bēon þet ƿe schulen asunien ou ; and hwon ƿe alles mōten vorð, ereoiseð ful ƿeorne our mūð, ġaren, and eien,
and tē brēoste ġke, and gōð forð mid Godes drēde tō preoste. On ġrest siggeð 'confiteor,' and þerefter 'benedicite' ; þet hē ouh tō siggen, hercneð his wōrdes and sitteð al stille þet, hwon hē parteð vrom ou, þet hē ne cunne ower gōd ne ower uvel nouðer, ne hē ne cunne ou nouðer blāmen ne preisen. Sum is sƿ wēl ilēred oðer tē ƿis iwōrdeð þet hēo wolde þet hē wuste hit þe sit and spēkeð touward him and ƿelt him wōrd aȝein wōrd, and bicumeð meister þe schulde bēon ancre, lēareð him þet is icumen tō lēren hire ;
wolde bi hire tāle sōne bēon mit tē wise icūd and icnowen. Icnowen hēo is wēl, vor þurh þet lke þet hēo wēneð tō bēon wīs ihōlden hē understont þet hēo is sot, vor hēo hunteð efter prið and keccheð lastunge. Vor et tē laste hwon hē is iwend aweit, 'Ðeos ancre,' hē wule siggen, 'is of muċhele spēche.'

ALYSOUN

(Modernized on p. 42)

Bytuene Mersh ant Averil,
When spray beginneth to springe,
The lutel foul hath hire wyl
On hyre lud to synge.

Ich libbe in love-longinge 5
For semlokest of alle thinge ;
He may me blisse bringe ;
Icham in hire baundoun.
An hendy hap ichabbe yhent ;
Ichot from hevене it is me sent ; 10
From alle wymmen mi love is lent
Ant lyht on Alysoun.

On heu hire her is fayr ynoh,
Hire browe broune, hire eye blake ;
With lossum chere he on me loh, 15
With middel smal ant wel ymake.
Bote he me wolle to hire take,
Forte buen hire owen make,
Longe to lyven ichulle forsake,
Ant feye fallen adoun. 20

Nihtes when I wende ant wake,
Forthi myn wonges waxeth won.
Levedi, al for thine sake
Longinge is ylent me on. 25
In world nis non so wytermon,
That al hire bounte telle con.
Hire swyre is whitore then the swon
Ant feyrest may in toune.

Icham for wowing al forwake,
Wery so water in wore. 30
Lest eny reve me my make,
Ichabbe y-yerned yore.
Betere is tholien whyle sore,
Then mournen evermore.
Geyst under gore, 35
Herke to my roun.
An hendy hap ichabbe yhent ;
Ichot from hevене it is me sent ;
From alle wymmen mi love is lent
Ant lyht on Alysoun. 40

BARBOUR'S BRUCE

(Modernized on p. 55)

A ! fredome is a noble thing ! 225
Fredome mayss man to haiff liking ;
Fredome all solace to man giffis ;
He levys at ess that frely levys !
A noble hart may haiff nane ess,
Na ellys nocht that may him pless, 230
Gyff fredome failþe ; for fre liking
Is þharnyt our all othir thing.
Na he, that ay hass levyt fre,
May nocht knaw weil the propyrte,
The angry, na the wrechyt dome, 235
That is cowplyt to foule thyrldome.
Bot gyff he had assayit it,
Than all perquer he suld it wyt ;
And suld think fredome mar to pryss
Than all the gold in warld that is. 240
Thus contrar thingis euir-mar
Discoweryngis off the tothir ar.

THE PEARL

(Modernized on p. 55)

I

Perle plesaunte to Prynces paye,
 To clanky clos in golde so clere!
 Oute of Oryent, I hardly saye,
 Ne proued I neuer her precios pere,
 So rounde, so reken in vche araye,
 So smal, so smoþe her sydeþ were.
 Queresoeuer I jugged gemmeþ gaye,
 I sette hyr sengeley in syngulere.
 Allas! I leste hyr in on erbere;
 Durþ gresse to grounde hit fro me yot.
 I dewyne, fordolkel, of luf-daungere,
 Of þat pruyy perle wythouten spot.

III

Dat spot of spyseþ mot nedeþ sprede,
 Der such rycheþ to rot is runne;
 Blomeþ blayke & blwe & rede
 Der schyneþ ful schyr agayn þe sunne;
 Flor & fryte may not be fede
 Der hit doun drof in moldeþ dunne;
 For vch gresse mot grow of grayneþ dede,
 No whete were elleþ to woneþ wonne;
 Of goud vche goude is ay bygonne;
 So semly a sede most fayly not,
 Ðat spryngande spyceþ vp ne sponne
 Of þat precios perle wythouten spotte.

VII

Dubbed wern alle þo downeþ sydeþ
 Wyth crystal klyffeþ so cler of kynde.
 Holte-wodeþ bryt aboute hem hydeþ
 Of bolleþ as blwe as ble of ynde;
 As bornyst syluer þe lef onsydeþ,
 Ðat þike con trylle on vch a tynde
 Quen glem of glode; agayn; hem glydeþ;
 Wyth schymeryng schene ful schrylle þay
 schynde. 80

Ðe grauayl þat on grounde con grynde
 Wern precious perleþ of Oryente;
 Ðe sunnebemeþ bot blo & blynde
 In respecte of þat adubblement.

VIII

The adubbemente of þo downeþ dere
 Garten my goste al greffe forþete;
 So frech flauoreþ of fryteþ were
 As fode hit con me fayre refete.
 Fowleþ þer flouen in fryth in fere,
 Of flaumbande hweþ, boþe smale & grete;
 Bot sytole-stryng & gyternere
 Her reken myrþe most not retrete;
 For, quen þose bryddeþ her wynges bete,
 Ðay songen wyth a swete asent;
 So gracios gle coupe non mon gete
 As here & se her adubblement.

SIR GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT

(Modernized on p. 58)

For-þi þis 30l ouer-þede, & þe 3ere after, 500
 & vche sesoun serlepes sued after oþer;
 After crysten-masse com þe crabbed lentoun,
 Ðat fraysteþ flesch wyth þe fysche & fode more symple;
 Bot þenne þe weder of þe worlde wyth wynter 5
 hit þrepeþ,
 Colde clengeþ adoun, cloudeþ vp-lyften, 505
 Schyre schedeþ þe rayn in schowreþ ful warne,
 Falleþ vpon fayre flat, flowreþ þere schewen,
 Boþe groundeþ & þe greueþ grene ar her wedeþ,
 10 Bryddeþ busken to bylde, & bremlych syngen,
 For solace of þe softe somer þat sues þer-after, 510
 bi bonk;
 & blossomþeþ bolne to blowe,
 Bi raweþ ryche & ronk,
 þen noteþ noble in-noþe,
 Ar herde in wod so wlonk. 515

After þe sesoun of somer wyth þe soft wyndeþ,
 Quen 3erferus syfles hym-self on sedeþ & erbeþ,
 Wela-wynne is þe wort þat woxes þer-oute,
 When þe donkande dewe dropeþ of þe leueþ,
 To bide a blysfyl blusch of þe bryzt sunne. 520
 Bot þen hyes heruest, & hardenes hym sone,
 Warneþ hym for þe wynter to wax ful rype;
 He dryues wyth droȝt þe dust for to ryse,
 Fro þe face of the folde to flyþe ful hyþe;
 35 Wroþe wynde of þe welkyn wrasteleþ with þe
 sunne, 525
 Ðe leueþ lancen fro þe lynde, & lyten on þe
 grounde,
 & al grayes þe gres, þat grene watþ ere;
 Ðenne al rypeþ & roteþ þat ros vpon fyrst,
 & þus 3irneþ þe 3ere in 3isterdayeþ mony, & wynter wyndeþ aȝayn, as þe worlde askeþ 530
 no sage.
 Til meþel-mas mone,
 Watþ cumen wyth wynter wage;
 Ðen þenkkeþ Gawain ful sone,
 Of his anious uyage. 535

William Langland

PIERS THE PLOUGHMAN

(Modernized on p. 60)

In A somer sesun whon softe was þe sonne, Ischop me in-to a schroud A sheep as I were;
 85 In Habite of an Hermite vn-holy of werkes,
 Wende I wydene in þis world wondres to here.
 Bote in a Mayes Morwynge on Maluerne
 hulleþ 5
 Me bi-fel a ferly A Feyrie me þouhte;
 90 I was weori of wandringe and wente me to reste
 Vndur a brod banke bi a Bourne syde,
 And as I lay and leonede and lokede on þe
 watres,
 95 I slumberde in A slepyng hit sownede so murie.
 Ðenne gon I Meeten A Meruelous sweuene, 11

Dat I was in A Wildernesse wuste I neuer
 where,
 And as I beo-heold in-to þe Est an-heiþ to þe
 sonne,
 I sauh a Tour on A Toft trizely I-maket;
 A Deop Dale bi-neoþe A dungun þer-Inne, 15
 With deop dich and derk and dredful of siht.
 A Feir feld ful of folk fond I er bi-twene,
 Of alle maner of men þe mene and þe riche,
 Worchinge and wondringe as þe world askep.
 Summe putten hem to þe plouþ and pleiden
 hem ful seldene, 20
 In Eringe and in Sowynge swonken ful harde, Ðat monie of þeos wasturs In Glotonye dis-truen.
 And Summe putten hem to pruide apparaylden
 hem þerafter,
 In Cuntinaunce of cloþinge queinteliche de-
 Gyset;
 To preyere and to penaunce putten heom 25
 monye,
 For loue of vr lord liueden ful harde,
 In Hope for to haue Heuene-riche blisse;
 As Ancres and Hermytes þat holdeþ hem in heore Celles,
 Coueyte not in Cuntre to carien a-boute 29
 For non likerous lyfode heore licam to plese.
 And summe chosen Chaffare to cheeuen þe
 bettere,
 As hit semeþ to vre siht þat suche men scholden;
 And summe Murþes to maken as Munstrals
 cunne,
 And gete gold wiþ here gle<sup>e</sup> giltles, I trowe.
 Bote Iapers and Iangelers Iudas Children, 35
 Founden hem Fantasyes and foolles hem
 maaden,
 And habbeþ wit at heor wille to worchen iif
 hem luste.
 Ðat Poul precheþ of hem I dar not preouen
 heere;
Qui loquitur turpiloquium Hee is Luciferes hyne.

John Wyclif

(Modernized on p. 78)

A schort reule of life for ich man in general, and for prestis and lordis and laboreris in special, how ich man schal be sayvd in his degre, if he wile hym self.

First, whanne þou risist or fulli wakist, þenk on þe goodnesse of God; for his owne goodnesse and non oper nede he made al þing of nouȝt, boþe angels and men, and alle oper creatures good in her kynde. þe seconde tyme þenk on þe gret passion and wilful deþ þat Crist suffrid for mankynde. Whan no man myȝt make satisfaccion for þe gilt of Adam and Eve, and oper moo, ne non angel owe no myȝt make aseþ þerfor, þan Crist of his endeles charite sufferid so gret passioun and peynful deþ, þat no creature myȝt suffre soo myche. And þenk þe þrid tyme, how God haþ sayvd þe fro deep and oper miscewis, and suffrid many þousyndis to be lost þat niȝt sum in watir, sume in fier, sume bi sodeyn deep, and sume to be dampnyd wiþouten ende. And for þeise goodnesis and mercies þanke þi God wiþ al þin hert, and preye hym to ȝive þe grace to spende, in þat day and evermore, all þe mistis of þi soule, as mynde, reson, witt and wille, and alle þe mistis of þi bodi, as strengþe, bewte, and þi five wittis, in his servise and his worschipe;

 and in no þing forfete æzenis his comaundementis, but redi to performe werkis of merci, and to ȝive good ensample of holi lif, boþe in word and in dede, to alle men aboute þe.

William Dunbar

DANCE OF THE SEVEN DEADLY SINS

(Modernized on p. 84)

Off Februar the fyftene nycht,
 Full lang befor the dayis lycht,
 I lay in till a trance;
 And then I saw baith hevin and hell:
 Me thoct, amangis the feyndis fell, 5
 Mahoun gart cry ane dance
 Off schrewis that wer nevir schrevin,
 Aganiss the feist of Fasternis evin,
 To mak their observance;
 He bad gallandis ga graith a gyiss, 10
 And kast vp gamountis in the skyiss,
 That last came out of France. . . . 12

"Lat se," quod he, "Now quha begynnys;" 19
 With that the fowll Sewin Deidly Synnis
 Begowth to leip at anis.
 And first of all in dance wes Pryd,
 With bair wyld bak and bonet on syd,
 Lyk to mak vaistie wanis;
 And round abowt him, as a quheill, 25
 Hang all in rumpillis to the heill
 His kethat for the nanis:
 Mony prowd trumpour with him trippit
 Throw skaldand fyre, ay as thay skippit
 Thay gyrnd with hiddouss granis. 30

Than Yre come in with sturt and stryfe;
 His hand wes ay vpoun his knyfe,
 He brandeist lyk a beir:
 Bostaris, braggaris, and barganeris,
 Eftir him passit in to pairis, 35
 All bodin in feir of weir;
 In iakkis, and stryppis and bonnettis of steill,
 Thair leggis wer chen eit to the heill,
 Ffrawart wes thair affair:
 Sum vpoun vdir with brandis beft, 40
 Sum jaggit vthiris to the heft,
 With knyvis that scherp coud scheir.

William Caxton

PREFACE TO MALORY'S LE MORTE DARTHUR

(Modernized on p. 110)

After that I had accomplysshed and fynysshed dyuers hystories as wel of contemplacyon as of other hystorial and worldly actes of grete conquerours & prynces, and also certeyn bookes of ensamples and doctryne, many noble and dyuers gentylmen of this royame of Englund camen and demaunded me many and oftymes, wherfore that I haue not do made & enprynte the noble hystorye of the saynt greal and of the moost renommed crysten kyng Arthur, whyche ought moost to be remembered emonge vs englysshe men tofore al other crysten kynges; for it is notoyrly knowen thorough the vnyuersal world that there been ix worthy & the best that euer were. That is to wete thre paynyns, thre Iewes and thre crysten men. As for the paynyns they were tofore the Incarnacyon of Cryst, whiche were named, the fyrst Hector of Troye, of whome thystorye is comen bothe in balade and in prose. The second Alysander the grete, & the thyrd Iulys Cezar Emperour of Rome of whome thystories ben wel kno and had. And as for the thre Iewes whyche also were tofore thyncarnacyon of our lord of whome the fyrst was Duc Iosue whyche brought the chyldren of Israhel in to the londe of byheste; the second Dauyd king of Iherusalem, & the thyrd Iudas Machabeus, of these thre the byble reherceth al theyr noble hystories & actes. And sythe the sayd Incarnacyon haue ben thre noble crysten men stalled and admytted thorough the vnyuersal world in to the nombre of the ix beste & worthy, of whome was fyrst the noble Arthur, whos noble actes I purpose to wryte in this present book here folowyng. The second was Charlemayn or Charles the grete, of whome thystorye is had in many places bothe in frensshe and englysshe; and the thyrd and last was Godefray of bolyon, of whos actes & lyf I made a book vnto the excellent prynce and kyng of noble memorye kyng Edward the fourth. The sayd noble Ientylmen instantly requyred me temprynte thystorye of the sayd noble kyng and conquerour kyng Arthur, and of his knyghtes wyth thystorye of the saynt greal, and of the deth and endyng of the sayd Arthur, affermyng that I oust rather tenprynte his actes and noble feates, than of godefroye of bolyne, or ony the other eyght, consyderyng that he was a man borne wythin this royame and kyng and Emperour of the same; and that there ben in frensshe dyuers and many noble volumes of his actes and also of his knyghtes.

THE HUNTING OF THE CHEVIOT

(Modernized on p. 90)

The Perse owt off Northumbarlonde, and awove to God mayd he
That he wold hunte in the mowntayns off Chyviat wythin days thre,
In the magger of doughte Dogles, 5 and all that ever with him be.

The fattiste hartes in all Cheviat
he sayd he wold kyll, and cary them away :
'Be my feth,' sayd the doughti Doglas agayn,
'I will let that hontyng yf that I may.' 10

(It must be remembered that the English language and orthography did not remain stationary after 1500; but that they have been, and, indeed, are still, subject to a continual, if unobtrusive, change. English spelling has changed since the sixteenth century and it is still changing; old words, old manners of expression, are constantly falling into disuse and being replaced by new. We sometimes forget that we commonly read our Shakespeare and Milton in a modernized spelling. But the changes in the language since 1500 have been, comparatively speaking, so trifling that it has not been thought necessary to include any examples of the original texts later than that date.)

II. ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE EARLY DRAMA

NOAH'S FLOOD

(A Miracle Play, from the Chester Plays, Early XIV Century)

God. I, God, that all this world hath wrought,
Heaven and earth, and all from naught,
I see my people in deed and thought
Are set foul in sin;
My ghost shall not linger in mon,<sup>1</sup> 5
That through flesh-liking is my son,
But till six score years be come and gone,
To look if they will blynnie.<sup>2</sup>
Man that I made I will destroy,
Beast, worm, and fowl that fly; 10
For on earth they me deny,
The folk that are thereon;
It harms me so most hurtfully
The malice that doth now multiply,

That sore it grieves me heartily 15
That ever I made mon.
Therefore, Noah, my servant free,
That righteous man art, as I see,
A ship soon shalt thou make to thee
Of trees both dry and light; 20
Little chambers therein thou make,
And binding plaster thou must take,
Within and without thou must not slake<sup>3</sup>
To anoint it with all thy might.
Three hundred cubits it shall be long, 25
And fifty broad to make it strong;
Of height fifty the meete thou fonge,<sup>4</sup>
Thus measure thou it about.
One window work in through thy wit,
A cubit of length and breadth make it, 30

<sup>1</sup> Man.    <sup>2</sup> Cease.    <sup>3</sup> Slack.    <sup>4</sup> Take thou measure.

- Upon the side a door thall sit
For to come in and out.
Eating places make thou also,
Three roofed places in a row :
For with water I mean to slow <sup>1</sup> 35
Man that I can make :
Destroyéd all the world shall be,
Save thou, thy wife, and children three,
And their wives also with thee,
Shall saved be for thy sake. 40
- NOAH. O Lord, I thank thee loud and still,
That to me art in such good will,
And spar'st me and my household to spill,<sup>2</sup>
As I now truly find.
Thy bidding Lord I shall fulfil, 45
And never more thee grieve nor grill,<sup>3</sup>
That such grace hath sent me till<sup>4</sup>
Among all mankind.
Have done, you men and women all,
Hie you, lest this water fall, 50
To build this ship, chamber and hall
As God hath bidden us do.
- SHEM. Father, I am already bowne,<sup>5</sup>
An axe I have, by my crown !
As sharp as any in all this town, 55
For to go thereto.
- HAM. I have a hatchet, wonder keen,
To bite well, as may be seen,
A better ground, as I ween,
Is not in all this town. 60
- JAPHET. And I can make well a pin,
And with this hammer knock it in :
Go we to work without more din,
And I am ready bowne.
- NOAH'S WIFE. And we shall bring timber too,
For we have nothing else to do, 66
Women be weak to undergo Any great travail.
- SHEM'S WIFE. Here is a good hacking stock,
On this one you may hew and knock, 70
None shall be idle in this flock ;
Nay, now may no man fail.
- HAM'S WIFE. And I will go and gather slyche,<sup>6</sup>
The ship for to caulk and pitch,
Anointed must be every stiche,<sup>7</sup> 75
Board, and tree, and pin.
- JAPHET'S WIFE. And I will gather chippes<sup>8</sup>
here
To make a fire for you in feare,<sup>9</sup>
For to make ready your dinner,
Against your coming in. 80
- Then Noah beginneth to build the Ark, and speaketh Noah.*
- NOAH. Now, in the name of God I will begin
To make the ship that we shall in,
That we may be ready for to swim
At the coming of the flood.
These boards here I pin<sup>1</sup> together, 85
To bear us safely from the weather,
That we may row both hither and thither
And safe be from the flood.
Of this tree will I make the mast,
Tied with cables that will last, 90
With a sail yard for each blast,
And each thing in their kind :
With top-castill<sup>2</sup> and bowsprit,
With cords and ropes I hold all meete,
To sail forth at the next weat,<sup>3</sup> 95
This ship is at an end.
Wife, in this vessel we shall be kept :
My children and thou, I would in ye leapt.
- NOAH'S WIFE. In faith, Noah, I had as lief thou slept !
For all thy good advice, 100
I will not do after thy rede.<sup>4</sup>
- NOAH. Good wife, do now as I thee bid.
- NOAH'S WIFE. By Christ ! not ere I see more
need,
Though thou stand all the day and stare.
- NOAH. Lord, that women be crabbed aye, 105
And none are meek I dare well say,
This is well seen by me to-day,
Bear witness of it each one.
Good wife, let be all this beare,<sup>5</sup>
That thou makest in this place here ; 110
For all well know that thou art master,
And so thou art, by Saint John !
- Then Noah with all his family shall make a sign as though they wrought upon the ship with divers instruments and after that God shall speak to Noah, saying :*
- GOD. Noah, take thou thy company,
And in the ship hie that you be,
For none so righteous man to me 115
Is now on earth living ;
Of clean beasts with thee thou take,
Seven and seven, before thou slake,<sup>6</sup>
He and she, make to make,<sup>7</sup>
Hasten that thou bring in. 120
Of beasts unclean, two and two,
Male and female, but no more ;
Of clean fowls seven also,
The he and she together ;
Of fowls unclean, twain, and no more, 125
As I of the beasts said before ;
That man be saved through my lore,<sup>8</sup>
Against I send this weather.
Of all meats that may be eaten,
Into the ship, look there be gotten ; 130
For that may be no way forgotten,

<sup>1</sup> Slay. <sup>2</sup> I.e. from being killed. <sup>3</sup> Grumble.
<sup>4</sup> To me. <sup>5</sup> Prepared. <sup>6</sup> Plaster. <sup>7</sup> Stick.
<sup>8</sup> Chips. <sup>9</sup> I.e. and your companions.

<sup>1</sup> Nail. <sup>2</sup> Topmast. <sup>3</sup> Wet. <sup>4</sup> Counsel.
<sup>5</sup> Noise. <sup>6</sup> Slack. <sup>7</sup> Mate to mate. <sup>8</sup> Knowledge.

- And do all this bydene,<sup>1</sup>
To sustain man and beast therein,
Till the water cease and blynnne.<sup>2</sup>
This world ye filléd full of sin,
And that is now well seen.
Seven days be yet coming,
You shall have space them in to bring;
After that it is my liking
Mankind for to annoy.
Forty days and forty nights,
Rain shall fall for their unrightes,
And that I have made through my mightes,
Now think I to destroy.
- NOAH. Lord to thy bidding I am beane,<sup>3</sup>
Seeing no other grace will gain,
It will I fulfil fayne,<sup>4</sup>
For gracious I thee find;
A hundred winter and twenty
This ship making tarried have I.
If through amendment thy mercy
Would fall to mankind,
Have done, you men and women all,
Hie you lest this water fall,
Let each beast be installed
And into the ship be brought;
Of clean beasts seven shall be,
Of unclean two, this God bade me;
The flood is nigh, you may well see,
Therefore tarry you nought.
- Then Noah shall go into the Ark with all his family, except his wife; and the Ark must be boarded round about, on the boards all the birds and beasts are painted.*
- SHEM. Sir, here are lions, leopards, in,
Horses, mares, oxen, and swine;
Goat and calf, sheep and kine;
Here sitting you may see.
- HAM. Camels, asses, man may find,
Buck and doe, hart and hinde,
And beasts of all sorts and kind,
Here be, as thinketh me.
- JAPHET. Here take cats, and dogs also,
Otter, and fox, and fulmarts too;
Hares hopping gaily can go,
Here have cabbage for to eat.
- NOAH'S WIFE. And here bears and wolves are set,
Apes, owls, and marmosette,
Weasels, squirrels, and ferret,
Here they eat their meat.
- SHEM'S WIFE. Here are beasts in this house,
Here cats do make it crousse,<sup>5</sup>
Here a rat, here a mouse,
That stand nigh together.
- HAM'S WIFE. And here are fowls lesse and more,<sup>1</sup>
Herons, cranes, and bittor,<sup>2</sup>
Swans, peacocks, and them before
Meat for this weather.
- JAPHET'S WIFE. Here are cocks, kites, crows,
Rooks, ravens, many roes,
Cuckoos, curlews, who ever knows
Each one in his kind.
Here are doves, ducks, and drakes,
Red-shanks running through the lakes,
And each bird that music makes,
In this ship you may find.
- NOAH. Wife, come in: why stand'st thou there?
Thou art ever froward, I dare will swear;
Come in, in God's name, half time it were,
For fear lest that we drown.
- NOAH'S WIFE. Yea, sir, set up your sail
And row forth with evil hail<sup>3</sup>
For withouten any fail
I will not out of this town.
But<sup>4</sup> I have my gossips every one,
One foot further I will not gone:
They shall not drown, by Saint John!
I may save their life.
They loven me full well, by Christ!
But thou let them into thy cheiste<sup>5</sup>
Else row now when thou list,
And get thee a new wife.
- NOAH. Shem, son, lo! thy mother is wrawe:<sup>6</sup>
Forsooth, such another I do not know.
- SHEM. Father, I shall fetch her in, I trowe, Withouten any fail,—
Mother, my father doth for thee send,
And bids thee into yonder ship wend
For we be ready to sail.
- NOAH'S WIFE. Shem, go again to him, I say;
I will not go therein to-day.
- NOAH. Come in, wife, in twenty devil's way!
Or else stand there without.
- HAM. Shall we fetch her in?
- NOAH. Yea, sons, in Christ's blessing and mine!
I would you hied you betime,
For of this flood I am in doubt.

THE GOOD GOSSIP'S SONG

- The flood comes fleeting in full fast,
On every side, and spreads full far;
For fear of drowning, I am aghast;
Good gossips, let us draw near.
And let us drink e'er we depart,
For oft times we have done so;
For at a draught thou drink'st a quart,
And so will I do ere I go.

<sup>1</sup> Immediately. <sup>2</sup> Decline. <sup>3</sup> Obedient.
<sup>4</sup> Gladly. <sup>5</sup> Noisy.

<sup>1</sup> Big and little. <sup>2</sup> Bittern. <sup>3</sup> Bad luck.
<sup>4</sup> Unless. <sup>5</sup> Ark. <sup>6</sup> Angry.

Here is a bottle full of Malmsey,<sup>1</sup> good and strong,
It will rejoice both heart and tongue ;
Though Noah think us never so long,
Here we will drink together. 235

JAPHET. Mother, we pray you all together,
For we are here, your own childer,<sup>2</sup>
Come into the ship for fear of the weather ;
For His love that you bought !

NOAH'S WIFE. That will I not, for all your call,
But I have my gossips all. 241

SHEM. In faith, mother, yet you shall
Whether you will or not.<sup>3</sup>

NOAH. Welcome, wife, into this boat.

NOAH'S WIFE. Have thou that, for thy note.<sup>4</sup>

NOAH. Ha-ha ! marry ! this is hot ! 246
It is good for to be still.
Ha ! children, methinks my boat remeves,<sup>5</sup>
Our tarrying here highly me grieves,
Over the land the water spreads : 250

God do as he will.
Ah ! great God that art so good ;
Who worketh not thy will is wood<sup>6</sup> —
Now all this world is in a flood.

As well I see in sight. 255
This window I will shut anon,
And into my chamber I will gone,
Till this water, so great a one,
Be slackened through thy might.

*Then shall Noah shut the window of the Ark,
and for a little space be silent, and afterwards,
looking round about, shall say :*

NOAH. Now forty days are fully gone, 260
Send a raven I will anon
If anywhere earth, tree or stone,
Be dry in any place.
And if this fowl come not again
It is a sign, sooth to sayne,<sup>7</sup> 265
That dry it is on hill or plain,
And God hath done some grace.

Then dismissing the raven, and holding the dove in his hands he says :

NOAH. Ah, Lord, wherever this raven be Somewhere is dry, well I see ;
But yet a dove, by my loyalty,<sup>8</sup> 270
After I will send.
Thou wilt turn again to me :
For of all fowls that do fly
Thou art most meek and gentle.

Then he sends forth the dove, and there shall be in the ship another dove bearing an olive twig

in its bill ; and some one shall pull this down from the mast by means of a cord into the hand of Noah ; and afterwards Noah shall say :

NOAH. Ah Lord, blessed be thou aye, 275
That me hast comforted to-day ;
By this sight, I well may say,
This flood begins to cease.

My sweet dove to me brought hase<sup>1</sup>
A branch of olive from some place, 280
This betokeneth God has done us some grace
And is a sign of peace.

Ah Lord, honoured most thou be,
All earth is drying now I see,
But yet, till thou command me, 285
Hence will I not hie.

All this water is away,
Therefore as soon as I may
Sacrifice I shall do in faye<sup>2</sup>
To thee, devoutly. 290

GOD. Noah, take thy wife anon,
And thy children, every one,
Out of the ship thou shalt be gone
And they all with thee. 295
Beasts, and all that can fly
Out anon they shall hie
On earth to grow and multiply ;
I will that it be so.

NOAH. Lord I thank thee through thy might, 300
Thy bidding shall be done in height,
And as fast as I may dighte<sup>3</sup>
I will do thee honour.
And to thee offer sacrifice,
Therefore comes in all this wise :
For of these beasts that been hise<sup>4</sup> 305
Offer I will this hour.

Then departing from the Ark with all his family, he shall receive the birds and beasts, and make offering and sacrifice.

NOAH. Lord, God in majesty,
That such grace hath granted me,
Where all was lost safe to be ;
Therefore now I am bound 310
My wife, my children, and company
With sacrifice to honor thee
Of beasts, fowls, as thou mayest see,
And full devotion.

GOD. Noah, to me thou art full able, 315
And thy sacrifice acceptable,
For I have found thee true and stable ;
On thee now must I think.
To curse the earth I will no more
For men's sins that grieve me sore, 320
For from youth man full yore
Has been inclined to sin.

You shall now grow and multiply,
And earth again to edify,
Each beast, and fowl that may fly 325
Shall be afraid of you ;
And fish in sea that may fleete<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> A kind of wine. <sup>2</sup> Children. <sup>3</sup> It is supposed that Noah's Wife is brought in by force, and that she strikes Noah. <sup>4</sup> Head. <sup>5</sup> It moves. <sup>6</sup> Foolish. <sup>7</sup> Say. <sup>8</sup> By my faith.

<sup>1</sup> Has. <sup>2</sup> Faith. <sup>3</sup> Make ready. <sup>4</sup> His. <sup>5</sup> Float.

Shall sustain you, I thee behett<sup>1</sup>
To eat of them ye ne lette<sup>2</sup>

Which clean are, you may know;
Whereas you have eaten before
Trees and roots, since you were bore<sup>3</sup>
Of clean beasts, now less and more,
I give you leave to eat.

Save blood and flesh, both in fear,
Of rouge dead carrion that is here,
Eat not of that, in no manere,

For that aye you shall leave.

Man slaughter also you shall flee,
For that is not pleasant unto me;
He that sheddeth blood, he or she,

Anywhere among mankind,
That blood foul shed shall be
And vengeance have, that men shall see;
Therefore beware now all ye,

You fall not into that sin.
A covenant, Noah, with thee I make,
And all thy seed, for thy sake,
Of such vengeance for to slake,

For now I have my will;
Here I promise thee a heiste,<sup>4</sup>
That man, woman, fowl, nor beast
With water, while this world shall last,

I will no more spill.<sup>5</sup>
My bow between you and me
In the firmament shall be,
By true token that you shall see,

That such vengeance shall cease.
That man nor woman shall never more
Be wasted with water as hath before;
But for sin that grieveth me sore

Therefore this vengeance was.
Where clouds in the welkin been,
That same bow shall be seen,
In token that my wrath and teem<sup>6</sup>
Shall never thus wreaked be.

The string is turned towards you
And toward me is bent the bow.
That such weather shall never show,
And this I promise thee.

My blessing Noah, I give thee here,
To thee, Noah, my servant dear;
For vengeance shall no more appear,
And now farewell, my darling dear.

The End. By the grace of God, by me
George Bellin 1592. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

EVERYMAN

(Morality Play, late 15th Century?)

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

|            |            |            |
|------------|------------|------------|
| MESSENGER  | COUSIN     | STRENGTH   |
| GOD        | GOODS      | DISCRETION |
| DEATH      | GOOD DEEDS | FIVE-WITS  |
| EVERYMAN   | KNOWLEDGE  | ANGEL      |
| FELLOWSHIP | CONFESSION | DOCTOR     |
| KINDRED    | BEAUTY     |            |

<sup>1</sup> Promise. <sup>2</sup> Do not hesitate. <sup>3</sup> Born.
<sup>4</sup> Promise. <sup>5</sup> Destroy. <sup>6</sup> Sorrow.

HERE BEGINNETH A TREATISE HOW THE HIGH
FATHER OF HEAVEN SENDETH DEATH TO SUMMON EVERY CREATURE TO COME AND GIVE ACCOUNT OF THEIR LIVES IN THIS WORLD, AND IS IN MANNER OF A MORAL PLAY.

MESSENGER

I pray you all give your audience,
And hear this matter with reverence,
By figure a moral play;
The Summoning of Everyman called it is,
That of our lives and ending shows,
How transitory we be all day:
This matter is wonders precious,
But the intent of it is more gracious,
And sweet to bear away.
The story saith: man, in the beginning
Look well, and take good heed to the ending,
Be you never so gay:
Ye think sin in the beginning full sweet,
Which in the end causeth thy soul to weep,
When the body lieth in clay.
Here shall you see how Fellowship and Jollity,
Both Strength, Pleasure, and Beauty
Will fade from thee as flower in May;
For ye shall hear, how our Heaven King
Calleth Everyman to a general reckoning:
Give audience, and hear what he doth say.

God speaketh

I perceive here in my Majesty
How that all creatures be to me unkind,
Living without dread in worldly prosperity:
Of ghostly sight the people be so blind,
Drowned in sin, they knew me not for their God;
In worldly riches is their mind. . . .
I see the more that I them forbear
The worse they be from year to year;
All that liveth appaireth<sup>1</sup> fast,
Therefore I will in all the haste
Have a reckoning of every man's person. . . .
They be so cumbered with worldly riches,
That needs on them I must do justice,
On every man living without fear.
Where art thou, Death, thou mighty messenger?

DEATH

Almighty God, I am here at your will,
Your commadment to fulfil.

GOD

Go thou to Everyman,
And show him in my name
A pilgrimage he must on him take,
Which he in no wise may escape;
And that he bring with him a sure reckoning
Without delay or any tarrying.

DEATH

Lord, I will in the world go run over all,
And cruelly out-search both great and small;

<sup>1</sup> Grows worse.

Every man will I beset that liveth beastly,
 Out of God's laws, and dreadeth not folly :
 He that loveth riches I will strike with my dart,
 His sight to blind, and fro heaven to depart,
 Except that alms be his good friend,
 In hell for to dwell, world without end.
 Lo, yonder I see Everyman walking :
 Full little he thinketh on my coming :
 His mind is on fleshly lusts and his treasure ;
 And great pain it shall cause him to endure
 Before the Lord, heaven's King.
 Everyman, stand still ; whither art thou going
 Thus gaily ? Hast thou thy Maker forgot ?

EVERYMAN

Why askest thou ? Wouldest thou wit ?

DEATH

Yea, sir, I will show you ; in great haste I am sent to thee
 Fro God out of his Majesty.

EVERYMAN

What ! sent to me ?

DEATH

Yea, certainly :
 Though you have forgot him here,
 He thinketh on thee in the heavenly sphere ;
 As, ere we depart, thou shalt know.

EVERYMAN

What desireth God of me ?

DEATH

That shall I show thee ;
 A reckoning he will needs have
 Without any lenger respite.

EVERYMAN

To give a reckoning longer leisure I crave ;
 This blind matter troubleth my wit.

DEATH

On thee thou must take a long journey,
 Therefore thy book of count with thee thou
 bring,
 For turn again thou cannot by no way :
 And look thou be sure of thy reckoning ;
 For before God thou shalt answer and show
 Thy many bad deeds, and good but a few,
 How thou hast spent thy life, and in what wise,
 Before the chief lord of paradise.
 Have ado that we were in that way,
 For, wit thou well, thou shalt make none attorney.

EVERYMAN

Full unready I am such reckoning to give :
 I know thee not ; what messenger art thou ?

DEATH

I am Death, that no man dreadeth ;
 For every man I 'rest, and no man spareth,
 For it is God's commandment
 That all to me should be obedient.

EVERYMAN

O Death, thou comest when I had thee least in
 mind ;
 In thy power it lieth me to save ;
 Yet of my good will I give thee, if thou will be
 kind,
 Yea, a thousand pounds shalt thou have,
 And [thou] defer this matter till another day.

DEATH

Everyman, it may not be by no way ;
 I set not by gold, silver, nor riches,
 Ne by pope, emperor, king, duke, ne princes ;
 For, and I would receive gifts great,
 All the world I might get ;
 But my custom is clean contrary ;
 I give thee no respite, come hence, and not tarry.

EVERYMAN

Alas ! shall I have no lenger respite ?
 I may say Death giveth no warning :
 To think on thee it maketh my heart sick ;
 For all unready is my book of reckoning :
 But [for] twelve year and I might have abiding,
 My counting-book I would make so clear,
 That my reckoning I should not need to fear.
 Wherefore, Death, I pray thee for God's mercy,
 Spare me, till I be provided of remedy.

DEATH

Thee availeth not to cry, weep, and pray :
 But haste thee lightly, that thou wert gone this journey ;
 And prove thy friends, if thou can ;
 For, wit thou well, the tide abideth no man,
 And in the world each living creature
 For Adam's sin must die of nature.

EVERYMAN

Death, if I should this pilgrimage take,
 And my reckoning surely make,
 Show me, for Saint Charity,
 Should I not come again shortly ?

DEATH

No, Everyman, and thou be once there.
 Thou mayest never more come here,
 Trust me verily.

EVERYMAN

O gracious God, in the high seat celestial,
Have mercy on me in this most need.
Shall I have no company from this vale terrestrial
Of mine acquaintance, that way me to lead?

DEATH

Yea, if any be so hardy,
That would go with thee, and bear thee company:
Hie thee that thou were gone to God's magnificence,
Thy reckoning to give before his presence.
What, weenest thou thy life is given thee,
And thy worldly goods also?

EVERYMAN

I had ween'd so verily.

DEATH

Nay, nay; it was but lent thee;
For, as soon as thou art gone,
Another awhile shall have it, and then go
therefro,
Even as thou hast done.
Everyman, thou art mad, thou hast thy wits five,
And here on earth will not amend thy life;
For suddenly I do come.

EVERYMAN

O wretched caitiff, whither shall I flee?
That I might escape this endless sorrow!
Now, gentle Death, spare me till to-morrow,
That I may amend me
With good advisement.

DEATH

Nay, thereto I will not consent,
Nor no man will I respite;
But to the heart suddenly I shall smite
Without any advisement.
And now out of thy sight I will me hie;
See thou make thee ready shortly,
For thou mayest say, this is the day
That no man living may 'scape away.

EVERYMAN

Alas! I may well weep with sighs deep:
Now have I no manner of company
To help me in my journey, and me to keep;
And also my writing is full unready.
How shall I do now for to excuse me!
I would to God I had never be got;
To my soul a full great profit it had be;
For now I fear pains huge and great.
The time passeth: Lord, help, that all wrought!
For though I mourn, it availeth nought:
The day passeth, and is almost ago;

I wot not well what for to do.
To whom were I best my complaint to make?
What, and I to Fellowship thereof spake,
And showed him of this sudden chance!
For in him is all mine affiance;
We have in the world so many a day
Be good friends in sport and play.
I see him yonder certainly;
I trust that he will bear me company,
Therefore to him will I speak to ease my sorrow.
Well met, good Fellowship, and good morrow. . . .

[Here Everyman (as he relates in the following speech) appeals in vain to Fellowship, to his Kinsmen, and to Goods, or Worldly Riches, who in turn refuse to accompany him on his journey.]

EVERYMAN

Oh, to whom shall I make my moan,
For to go with me in that heavy journey?
First Fellowship he said he would with me gone;
His words were very pleasant and gay,
But afterward he left me alone.
Then spake I to my kinsmen all in despair,
And also they gave me words fair,
They lacked no fair speaking;
But all forsake me in the ending.
Then went I to my Goods that I loved best,
In hope to have found comfort; but there had I least:
For my Goods sharply did me tell,
That he bringeth many in hell.
Then of myself I was ashamed,
And so I am worthy to be blamed,
Thus may I well myself hate.
Of whom shall I now counsel take?
I think that I shall never speed,
Till that I go to my Good Deed;
But, alas, she is so weak,
That she can neither go nor speak:
Yet will I venter on her now.
My Good Deeds, where be you?

GOOD DEEDS

Here I lie cold in the ground;
Thy sins have me so sore bound,
That I cannot stir.

EVERYMAN

O Good Deeds, I stand in great fear;
I must you pray of counsel,
For help now should come right well.

GOOD DEEDS

Everyman, I have understanding,
That thou art summoned account to make
Before Messias of Jerusalem King;
And you do by me, that journey with you will I take.

EVERYMAN

Therefore I come to you my moan to make
I pray you, that ye will go with me.

GOOD DEEDS

I would full fain, but I cannot stand verily.

EVERYMAN

Why, is there anything on you fall?

GOOD DEEDS

Yea, sir, I may thank you of all;
If ye had perfectly cheered me,
Your book of account full ready now had be.
Look, the books of your works and deeds eke!
Behold how they lie under the feet,
To your soul's heaviness.

EVERYMAN

Our Lord Jesus help me,
For one letter herein can I not see.

GOOD DEEDS

Here is a blind reckoning in time of distress!

EVERYMAN

Good Deeds, I pray you, help me in this need,
Or else I am for ever damned indeed;
Therefore help me to make my reckoning
Before the Redeemer of all thing,
That king is, and was, and ever shall.

GOOD DEEDS

Everyman, I am sorry of your fall,
And fain would I help you, and I were able.

EVERYMAN

Good Deeds, your counsel, I pray you, give me.

GOOD DEEDS

That shall I do verily:
Though that on my feet I may not go,
I have a sister that shall with you also,
Called Knowledge, which shall with you abide,
To help you to make that dreadful reckoning.
[Enter Knowledge.]

KNOWLEDGE

Everyman, I will go with thee, and be thy guide,
In thy most need to go by thy side.

EVERYMAN

In good condition I am now in every thing,
And am wholly content with this good thing,
Thanked be God my Creature.

GOOD DEEDS

And when he hath brought thee there,
Where thou shalt heal thee of thy smart,
Then go thou with thy reckoning and thy good deeds together,
For to make thee joyful at the heart
Before the Blessed Trinity.

EVERYMAN

My Good Deeds, I thank thee heartfully:
I am well content certainly
With your words sweet.

KNOWLEDGE

Now go we together lovingly
To Confession, that cleansing river.

EVERYMAN

For joy I weep: I would we there were;
But I pray you to instruct me by intellection,
Where dwelleth that holy virtue Confession?

KNOWLEDGE

In the house of salvation;
We shall find him in that place,
That shall us comfort by God's grace.
Lo, this is Confession: kneel down, and ask mercy;
For he is in good conceit with God Almighty.

EVERYMAN

O glorious fountain that all uncleanness doth clarify,
Wash from me the spots of vices unclean,
That on me no sin may be seen;
I come with Knowledge for my redemption,
Redempt with heart and full contrition,
For I am commanded a pilgrimage to take,
And great accounts before God to make.
Now I pray you, Shift, mother of salvation,
Help hither my good deeds for my piteous exclamation.

CONFESSION

I know your sorrow well, Everyman:
Because with Knowledge ye come to me,
I will you comfort as well as I can;
And a precious jewel I will give thee,
Called penance, voider of adversity:
Therewith shall your body chastised be
With abstinence and perseverance in God's service;
Here shall you receive that scourge of me,
Which is penance strong that ye must endure,
Remember thy Saviour was scourged for thee
With sharp scourges, and suffered it patiently:
So must thou, ere thou pass thy pilgrimage.
Knowledge, keep him in this voyage,
And by that time Good Deeds will be with thee;
But in anywise be sure of mercy,

For your time draweth fast ; and ye will saved be,
 Ask God mercy, and he will grant truly :
 When with the scourge of penance man doth him bind,
 The oil of forgiveness then shall he find.

EVERYMAN

Thanked be God for his gracious work ;
 For now I will my penance begin :
 This hath rejoiced and lighted my heart,
 Though the knots be painful and hard within.

KNOWLEDGE

Everyman, look your penance that ye fulfil,
 What pain that ever it to you be ;
 And I shall give you counsel at will,
 How your account ye shall make clearly.

EVERYMAN

O eternal God, O heavenly figure,
 O way of rightwiseness, O goodly vision,
 Which descended down in a virgin pure,
 Because he would Everyman redeem,
 Which Adam forfeited by his disobedience,
 O blessed Godhead, elect and high Divine,
 Forgive me my grievous offence ;
 Here I cry thee mercy in this presence :
 O ghostly treasure, O ransom and redeemer !
 Of all the world hope and conduyter,
 Mirror of joy, foundation of mercy,
 Which enlumineth heaven and earth thereby,
 Hear my clamorous complaint, though it late be,
 Receive my prayers of thy benignity,
 Though I be a sinner most abominable,
 Yet let my name be written in Moses' table.
 O Mary, pray to the Maker of all thing
 Me for to help at my ending,
 And save me from the power of my enemy ;
 For death assaileth me strongly :
 And, Lady, that I may by mean of thy prayer
 Of your son's glory to be partiner.
 By the mean of his passion I it crave ;
 I beseech you help me my soul to save.
 Knowledge, give me the scourge of penance,
 My flesh therewith shall give acquittance ;
 I will now begin, if God give me grace.

KNOWLEDGE

Everyman, God give you time and space !
 Thus I bequeath you in the hands of our Saviour ;
 Now may you make your reckoning sure.

EVERYMAN

In the name of all the Holy Trinity,
 My body punished sore shall be,
 Take this body for the sin of the flesh ;
 Also thou delightest to go gay and fresh ;
 And in the way of damnation thou did me bring,
 Therefore suffer now strokes and punishing :
 Now of penance I will wade the water clear,
 To save me from purgatory, that sharp fire.

GOOD DEEDS

I thank God, now I can walk and go,
 And am delivered of my sickness and woe ;
 Therefore with Everyman I will go, and not
 spare,
 His good works I will help him to declare.

KNOWLEDGE

Now, Everyman, be merry and glad ;
 Your Good Deeds cometh now, ye may not be sad :
 Now is your Good Deeds whole and sound,
 Going upright upon the ground.

EVERYMAN

My heart is light, and shall be evermore ;
 Now will I smite faster than I did before.

GOOD DEEDS

Everyman pilgrim, my special friend,
 Blessed be thou without end ;
 For thee is prepared the eternal glory :
 Ye have me made whole and sound,
 Therefore I will bide by thee in every stound.

EVERYMAN

Welcome, my Good Deeds, now I hear thy voice,
 I weep for very sweetness of love.

KNOWLEDGE

Be no more sad, but evermore rejoice,
 God seeth thy living in His throne above ;
 Put on this garment to thy behove,
 Which with your tears is now all wet,
 Lest before God it be unsweet,
 When ye to your journey's end come shall.

EVERYMAN

Gentle Knowledge, what do ye it call ?

KNOWLEDGE

It is the garment of sorrow,
 From pain it will you borrow ;
 Contrition it is,
 That getteth forgiveness,
 It pleaseth God passing well.

GOOD DEEDS

Everyman, will you wear it for your hele ?

EVERYMAN

Now blessed be Jesu, Mary's son ;
 For now have I on true contrition :
 And let us go now without tarrying.
 Good Deeds, have we clear our reckoning ?

GOOD DEEDS

Yea, indeed, I have here.

EVERYMAN

Then I trust we need not to fear ;
Now, friends, let us not depart in twain.

KNOWLEDGE

Nay, Everyman, that will we not certain.

GOOD DEEDS

Yet must thou lead with thee
Three persons of great might.

EVERYMAN

Who should they be ?

GOOD DEEDS

Discretion and Strength they hyght,
And thy Beauty may not abide behind.

KNOWLEDGE

Also ye must call to mind
Your Five Wits as for you councillors.

GOOD DEEDS

You must have them ready at all hours.

EVERYMAN

How shall I get them hither ?

KNOWLEDGE

You must call them all together,
And they will hear you incontinent.

EVERYMAN

My friends, come hither, and be present,
Discretion, Strength, my Five Wits and Beauty.

BEAUTY

Here at your will we be all ready ;
What will ye that we should do ?

GOOD DEEDS

That ye would with Everyman go,
And help him in his pilgrimage :
Advise you, will ye go with him or not in that voyage ?

STRENGTH

We will bring him all thither
To help and comfort him, ye may believe me.

DISCRETION

So will we go with him altogether.

EVERYMAN

Almighty God, loved may Thou be ;
I give thee laud that I have hither brought Strength, Discretion, Beauty, Five Wits : lack I nought :
And my Good Deeds, with Knowledge clear,
All be in my company at my will here ;
I desire no more to my business.

STRENGTH

And I Strength will by you stand in distress, Though thou wouldest in battle fight on the ground.

FIVE WITS

And though it were thorow the world round,
We will not depart for sweet ne for sour.

BEAUTY

No more will I unto Death's hour,
Whatsoever thereof befall.

DISCRETION

Everyman, advise you first of all,
Go with a good advisement and deliberation ;
We all give you virtuous monition
That all shall be well.

EVERYMAN

My friends, hark what I will you tell ;
I pray God reward you in His heavenly sphere :
Now hearken all that be here ;
For I will make my testament
Here before you all present :
In alms half my good I will give with my hands twain
In the way of charity with good intent,
And the other half still shall remain :
I it bequeath to be returned there it ought to be.
This I do in despite of the fiend of hell,
To go quit out of his peril
Ever after this day.

KNOWLEDGE

Everyman, hearken what I will say ;
Go to priesthood, I you advise,
And receive of him in any wise
The holy sacrament and ointment together,
Then shortly see ye turn again hither,
We will all abide you here.

FIVE WITS

Yea, Everyman, hie you that ye ready were :
There is no emperor, king, duke, ne baron,
That of God hath commission,
As hath the least priest in the world being ;
For of the blessed sacraments pure and benign
He beareth the keys, and thereof hath cure
For man's redemption, it is ever sure,

Which God for our soul's medicine
 Gave us out of his heart with great pain,
 Here in this transitory life for thee and me :
 The blessed sacraments seven there be,
 Baptism, confirmation, with priesthood good,
 And the sacrament of God's precious flesh and blood,
 Marriage, the holy extreme unction, and penance ;
 These seven be good to have in remembrance,
 Gracious sacraments of high divinity.

EVERYMAN

Fain would I receive that holy body,
 And meekly to my ghostly father I will go.

FIVE WITS

Everyman, that is the best that ye can do ;
 God will you to salvation bring,
 For good priesthood exceedeth all other thing ;
 To us holy scripture they do teach,
 And converteth man fro sin heaven to reach ;
 God hath to them more power given
 Than to any angel that is in heaven :
 With five words he may consecrate
 God's body in flesh and blood to take,
 And handleth his Maker between his hands.
 The priest bindeth and unbindeth all bands
 Both in earth and in heaven ;
 He ministers all the sacraments seven ;
 Though we kiss thy feet, thou wert worthy :
 Thou art the surgeon that cureth sin deadly,
 No remedy may we find under God,
 But all only priesthood.
 Everyman, God gave priest [s] that dignity,
 And setteth them in His stead among us to be ;
 Thus be they above angels in degree.

KNOWLEDGE

If priests be good, it is so surely,
 But when Jesu heng on the cross with great smart,
 There he gave us out of his blessed heart
 The same sacrament in great torment.

FIVE WITS

I trust to God, no such may we find :
 Therefore let us priesthood honour,
 And follow their doctrine for our soul's succour ;
 We be their sheep, and they [our] shepherds be,
 By whom we all be kept in surety.
 Peace ! for yonder I see Everyman come,
 Which hath made true satisfaction.

GOOD DEEDS

Methink it is he indeed.

EVERYMAN

Now Jesu Christ be your alder speed !
 I have received the sacrament for my redemption,

And then mine extreme unction ;
 Blessed be all they that counselled me to take it :
 And now, friends, let us go without longer respite ;
 I thank God that ye have tarried so long.
 Now set each of you on this rod your hand,
 And shortly follow me ;
 I go before, there I would be :
 God be our guide.

STRENGTH

Everyman, we will not fro you go,
 Till ye have gone this voyage long.

DISCRETION

I, Discretion, will bide by you also.

KNOWLEDGE

And though this pilgrimage be never so strong,
 I will never part you fro :
 Everyman, I will be as sure by thee,
 As ever I was by Judas Maccabee.

EVERYMAN

Alas ! I am so faint I may not stand,
 My limbs under me do fold :
 Friends, let us not turn again to this land,
 Not for all the world's gold ;
 For into this cave must I creep,
 And turn to the earth, and there to sleep.

BEAUTY

What, into this grave ? Alas !

EVERYMAN

Yea, there shall ye consume more and less.

BEAUTY

And what, should I smother here ?

EVERYMAN

Yea, by my faith, and never more appear ;
 In this world live no more we shall,
 But in heaven before the highest Lord of all.

BEAUTY

I cross out all this : adieu, by Saint John ;
 I take my cap in my lap, and am gone.

EVERYMAN

What, Beauty ? whither will ye ?

BEAUTY

Peace ! I am deaf, I look not behind me,
 Not, and thou wouldst give me all the gold in thy chest.

EVERYMAN

Alas ! whereto may I now trust ?
Beauty doth fast away hie :
She promised with me to live and die.

STRENGTH

Everyman, I will thee also forsake and deny,
The game liketh me not at all.

EVERYMAN

Why then ye will forsake me all :
Strength, tarry, I pray you, a little space.

STRENGTH

Nay, sir, by the rood of grace,
I will hie me from thee fast,
Though thou weep till thy heart brast.

EVERYMAN

Ye would ever bide by me, ye said.

STRENGTH

Yea, I have you far enough conveyed :
Ye be old enough, I understand,
Your pilgrimage to take on hand ;
I repent me, that I hither came.

EVERYMAN

Strength, you to displease I am to blame ;
Yet promise is debt ; this ye well wot.

STRENGTH

In faith, as for that I care not :
Thou art but a fool to complain ;
Thou spendest thy speech and wasteth thy
brain :
Go, thrist thee into the ground.

EVERYMAN

I had ween'd surer I should you have found :
But I see well, he that trusteth in his Strength,
Is greatly deceived at the length ;
Both Strength and Beauty hath forsaken me,
Yet they promised me steadfast to be.

DISCRETION

Everyman, I will after Strength be gone ;
As for me, I will leave you alone.

EVERYMAN

Why, Discretion, will ye forsake me ?

DISCRETION

Yea, in faith, I will go fro thee ;
For when Strength is gone before,
Then I follow after evermore.

EVERYMAN

Yet, I pray thee, for love of the Trinity,
Look in my grave once piteously.

DISCRETION

Nay, so nigh will I not come.
Now farewell, fellows everichone.

EVERYMAN

Oh, all thing failleth, save God alone,
Beauty, Strength, and Discretion ;
For, when Death bloweth his blast,
They all run fro me full fast.

FIVE WITS

Everyman, of thee now my leave I take ;
I will follow the other, for here I thee forsake.

EVERYMAN

Alas ! then may I both wail and weep ;
For I took you for my best friend.

FIVE WITS

I will no lenger thee keep :
Now farewell, and here an end.

EVERYMAN

Now, Jesu, help ! all hath forsaken me.

GOOD DEEDS

Nay, Everyman, I will abide with thee,
I will not forsake thee indeed ;
Thou shalt find me a good friend at need.

EVERYMAN

Gramercy, Good Deeds, now may I true friends
see,
They have forsaken me everychone ;
I loved them better than my good deeds alone :
Knowledge, will ye forsake me also ?

KNOWLEDGE

Yea, Everyman, when ye to death shall go ;
But not yet for no manner of danger.

EVERYMAN

Gramercy, Knowledge, with all my heart.

KNOWLEDGE

Nay, yet I will not from hence depart,
Till I see where ye shall be come.

EVERYMAN

Methinketh, alas ! that I must be gone
To make my reckoning, and my debts pay ;

For I see my time is nigh spent away.
Take ensample, all ye that this do hear or see,
How they that I loved best now forsake me;
Except my Good Deeds, that bideth truly.

GOOD DEEDS

All earthly things is but vanity,
Beauty, Strength, and Discretion do man
forsake,
Foolish friends and kinsmen, that fair spake;
All fleeth save Good Deeds, and that am I.

EVERYMAN

Have mercy on me, God most mighty,
And stand by me, thou mother and maid Mary.

GOOD DEEDS

Fear not, I will speak for thee.

EVERYMAN

Here I cry, God mercy !

GOOD DEEDS

Short our end and minish our pain :
Let us go, and never come again.

EVERYMAN

Into thy hands, Lord, my soul I commend,
Receive it, Lord, that it be not lost ;
As thou me boughtest, so me defend,
And save me fro the fiend's boast,
That I may appear with that blessed host

That shall be saved at the day of doom :
In manus tuas, of might most,
For ever commendo spiritum meum.
(EVERYMAN dies.)

KNOWLEDGE

Now hath he suffered that we all shall endure :
The Good Deeds shall make all sure ;
Now hath he made ending,
Methinketh that I hear angels sing,
And make great joy and melody,
Where Everyman's soul shall received be. . . .

DOCTOR

This memory all men may have in mind ;
Ye hearers, take it of worth, old and young,
And forsake pride, for he deceiveth you in the
end,
And remember Beauty, Five Wits, Strength, and Discretion,
They all at last do Everyman forsake,
Save his Good Deeds ; [them he] there doth
take :
But beware, for, and they be small,
Before God he hath no help at all ;
None excuse may be there for Everyman :
Alas ! how shall he do then ?
For after death amends may no man make,
For then mercy and pity doth him forsake ;
If his reckoning be not clear, when he doth come,
God will say, Ite, maledicti, in ignem eternum,
And he that hath his account whole and sound,
High in heaven he shall be crowned ;
Unto which place God bring us all thither,
That we may live body and soul together ;
Thereto help the Trinity :
Amen, say ye, for Saint Charity.

INDEX OF AUTHORS

Poetical selections are indicated by an asterisk

|                                        | PAGE  |      | PAGE                                     |           |
|----------------------------------------|-------|------|------------------------------------------|-----------|
| ADDISON, JOSEPH.....                   | 295*  | 332  | CRABBE, GEORGE.....                      | 452*      |
| ÆLFRIC.....                            |       | 23   | CRASHAW, RICHARD.....                    | 205*      |
| ALFRED.....                            |       | 20   | CUTHBERT.....                            | 19        |
| ARMSTRONG, JOHN.....                   |       | 370 | CYNEWULF.....                            | 9        |
| ARNOLD, MATTHEW.....                   | 636*  | 743  |                                          |           |
| ASCHAM, ROGER.....                     |       | 133  | DANIEL, SAMUEL.....                      | 155*      |
| AYTOUN, WILLIAM E.....                 |       | 660* | DEFOE, DANIEL.....                       | 312       |
|                                        |       |      | DEKKER, THOMAS.....                      | 167*      |
| BACON, FRANCIS.....                    |       | 193  | DE QUINCEY, THOMAS.....                  | 572       |
| BARBOUR, JOHN.....                     |       | 55*  | DICKENS, CHARLES.....                    | 715       |
| BARNARD, LADY ANNE.....                |       | 458* | DOBSON, HENRY AUSTIN.....                | 665*      |
| BEATTIE, JAMES.....                    |       | 441* | DONNE, JOHN.....                         | 167*      |
| BEAUMONT, FRANCIS.....                 |       | 173* | DOUGLAS, GAWAIN.....                     | 86*       |
| BEDE.....                              | 8*,   | 16   | DOYLE, SIR FRANCIS HASTINGS CHARLES..... | 659*      |
| BERKELEY, GEORGE.....                  |       | 355* | DRAYTON, MICHAEL.....                    | 157*      |
| BERNERS, see Bourchier .        |       |      | DRUMMOND, WILLIAM.....                   | 174*      |
| BLAKE, WILLIAM.....                    |       | 455* | DRYDEN, JOHN.....                        | 275*, 285 |
| BOLINGBROKE, HENRY ST. JOHN, LORD..... |       | 348  | DUNBAR, WILLIAM.....                     | 84*       |
| BOSWELL, JAMES.....                    |       | 424  | DYER, JOHN.....                          | 357*      |
| BOURCHIER, JOHN, LORD BERNERS.....     |       | 121  |                                          |           |
| BROWNE, SIR THOMAS.....                |       | 240  | EARLE, JOHN.....                         | 240       |
| BROWNE, WILLIAM.....                   |       | 201* | ELIOT, GEORGE (MARY ANN EVANS).....      | 663*, 718 |
| BROWNING, ROBERT.....                  |       | 609* | ELLIOT, JANE.....                        | 457*      |
| BROWNING, ELIZABETH BARRETT.....       |       | 634* | ELLIOTT, EBENEZER.....                   | 507*      |
| BRUNNE, see Manning .           |       |      | ELY, see Thomas of .              |           |
| BUNYAN, JOHN.....                      |       | 257  | EVANS, MARY ANN, see Eliot .      |           |
| BURKE, EDMUND.....                     |       | 403  | EVELYN, JOHN.....                        | 280       |
| BURNS, ROBERT.....                     |       | 460* |                                          |           |
| BURTON, ROBERT.....                    |       | 229  | FERGUSSON, ROBERT.....                   | 460*      |
| BUTLER, SAMUEL.....                    |       | 273* | FIELDING, HENRY.....                     | 382       |
| BYRON, GEORGE GORDON.....              |       | 508* | FITZGERALD, EDWARD.....                  | 658*      |
|                                        |       |      | FLETCHER, GILES.....                     | 200*      |
| CÆDMON.....                            | 8*    |      | FLETCHER, JOHN.....                      | 172*      |
| CAMPBELL, THOMAS.....                  |       | 504* | FLETCHER, PHINEAS.....                   | 199*      |
| CAMPION, THOMAS.....                   |       | 171* | FORTESCUE, SIR JOHN.....                 | 102       |
| CAREW, THOMAS.....                     |       | 226* | FOXE, JOHN.....                          | 135       |
| CARLYLE, THOMAS.....                   |       | 670  | FROUDE, JAMES ANTHONY.....               | 721       |
| CAXTON, WILLIAM.....                   |       | 110  | FULLER, THOMAS.....                      | 246       |
| CHAPMAN, GEORGE.....                   |       | 152* |                                          |           |
| CHATTERTON, THOMAS.....                |       | 446* | GASCOIGNE, GEORGE.....                   | 114*      |
| CHAUCER, GEOFFREY.....                 |       | 62*  | GAY, JOHN.....                           | 309*      |
| CHESTERFIELD, PHILIP DORMER STAN-      |       |      | GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH.....                | 48        |
| HOPE, LORD.....                        | 379   |      | GIBBON, EDWARD.....                      | 417       |
| CLANVOWE, SIR THOMAS.....              | 80*   |      | GLOUCESTER, see Robert of .       |           |
| CLARENDON, EDWARD HYDE, EARL OF.....   | 249   |      | GOLDSMITH, OLIVER.....                   | 374*, 397 |
| CLOUGH, ARTHUR HUGH.....               | 663*  |      | GOWER, JOHN.....                         | 59*       |
| COLERIDGE, HARTLEY.....                | 655*  |      | GRAY, THOMAS.....                        | 427*      |
| COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR.....          | 484*, | 541  | GREEN, JOHN RICHARD.....                 | 764       |
| COLLINS, WILLIAM.....                  | 431*  |      | GREENE, ROBERT.....                      | 155*, 192 |
| CORNISH, WILLIAM.....                  | 100*  |      | GUILFORD, see Nicholas .          |           |
| CORNWALL, BARRY, see Procter .  |       |      |                                          |           |
| COWLEY, ABRAHAM.....                   | 223*, | 271  | HABINGTON, WILLIAM.....                  | 204*      |
| COWPER, WILLIAM.....                   | 415,  | 435* | HAKLUYT, RICHARD.....                    | 178       |
|                                        |       |      | HALES, see Thomas of .            |           |

|                                         |           |                                              |           |
|-----------------------------------------|-----------|----------------------------------------------|-----------|
| HAMPOLE, see Rolle .             | PAGE      | OCCLEVE, see Hoccleve .               | PAGE      |
| HARRISON, FREDERICK.....                | 760       | OLIPHANT, CAROLINE (LADY NAIRN)....          | 459*      |
| HAWKER, ROBERT STEPHEN.....             | 658*      | ORM.....                                     | 28*       |
| HAZLITT, WILLIAM.....                   | 567       | OVERBURY, SIR THOMAS.....                    | 232       |
| HENRYSON, ROBERT.....                   | 82*       | PAGAN, ISABEL.....                           | 458*      |
| HERBERT, GEORGE.....                    | 202*      | PARIS, see Mathew .                   |           |
| HERRICK, ROBERT.....                    | 226*      | PARNELL, THOMAS.....                         | 352       |
| HEYWOOD, THOMAS.....                    | 172*      | PATER, WALTER.....                           | 767       |
| HOBBS, THOMAS.....                      | 233       | PEELE, GEORGE.....                           | 151*      |
| HOCCLEVE, THOMAS.....                   | 80*       | PEPYS, SAMUEL.....                           | 291       |
| HOLINSHED, RAPHAEL.....                 | 177       | PERCY, THOMAS.....                           | 433*      |
| HOOD, THOMAS.....                       | 655*      | POORE, RICHARD (?).....                      | 51        |
| HOOKER, RICHARD.....                    | 184       | POPE, ALEXANDER.....                         | 296*      |
| HUNT, JAMES HENRY LEIGH.....            | 507*      | PRIOR, MATTHEW.....                          | 294*      |
| HUXLEY, THOMAS HENRY.....               | 753       | PROCTER, BRYAN WALLER.....                   | 507*      |
| HYDE, EDWARD, see Clarendon .    |           | QUARLES, FRANCIS.....                        | 202*      |
| JAMES I OF SCOTLAND.....                | 82*       | RALEIGH, SIR WALTER.....                     | 149*, 182 |
| JOHNSON, SAMUEL.....                    | 366*, 384 | RAMSAY, ALLAN.....                           | 355*      |
| JONSON, BEN.....                        | 169*, 197 | ROBERT OF GLOUCESTER.....                    | 33*       |
| KEATS, JOHN.....                        | 529*      | ROCHESTER, JOHN WILMOT, EARL OF...           | 280*      |
| KINGSLEY, CHARLES.....                  | 662*, 741 | ROLLE, RICHARD, OF HAMPOLE.....              | 35*       |
| LAMB, CHARLES.....                      | 502*, 554 | ROPER, WILLIAM.....                          | 129       |
| LANDOR, WALTER SAVAGE.....              | 503*, 564 | ROSSETTI, CHRISTINA GEORGINA.....            | 644*      |
| LANGLAND, WILLIAM.....                  | 60*       | ROSSETTI, DANTE GABRIEL.....                 | 641*      |
| LATIMER, HUGH.....                      | 130       | RUSKIN, JOHN.....                            | 726       |
| LAYAMON.....                            | 27*       | SACKVILLE, THOMAS, LORD BUCKHURST..          | 115*      |
| LODGE, THOMAS.....                      | 151*, 190 | ST. JOHN, HENRY, see Bolingbroke .    |           |
| LOVELACE, RICHARD.....                  | 229*      | SCOTT, SIR WALTER.....                       | 496*, 539 |
| LYDGATE, JOHN.....                      | 80*       | SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM.....                    | 161*      |
| LYLY, JOHN.....                         | 150*, 185 | SHELLEY, PERCY BYSSHE.....                   | 518*      |
| LYNDSAY, SIR DAVID.....                 | 87*       | SHENSTONE, WILLIAM.....                      | 371*      |
| MACAULAY, THOMAS BABINGTON...           | 656*, 687 | SHIRLEY, JAMES.....                          | 204*      |
| MACPHERSON, JAMES.....                  | 444*      | SIDNEY, SIR PHILIP.....                      | 150*, 188 |
| MALMSBURY, see William of .      |           | SKELTON, JOHN.....                           | 100*      |
| MALORY, SIR THOMAS.....                 | 103       | SKINNER, JOHN.....                           | 457*      |
| MANDEVILLE, SIR JOHN.....               | 75        | SOMERVILLE, WILLIAM.....                     | 356*      |
| MANNING, Robert, of Brunne ..... | 33*       | SOUTHEY, ROBERT.....                         | 495*, 548 |
| MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER.....               | 158*      | SPENSER, EDMUND.....                         | 136*      |
| MARVELL, ANDREW.....                    | 224*      | STANHOPE, PHILIP DORMER, see Chester- |           |
| MATTHEW, PARIS.....                     | 53        | field .                               |           |
| MEREDITH, GEORGE.....                   | 664*      | STEELE, SIR RICHARD.....                     | 340       |
| MICKLE, WILLIAM JULIUS.....             | 441*      | STEPHEN, SIR LESLIE.....                     | 762       |
| MILTON, JOHN.....                       | 208, 260* | STERNE, LAURENCE.....                        | 394       |
| MINOT, LAWRENCE.....                    | 36*       | STEVENSON, ROBERT LOUIS.....                 | 669*, 772 |
| MONMOUTH, see Geoffrey of .      |           | STOWE, JOHN.....                             | 175       |
| MOORE, THOMAS.....                      | 506*      | SUCKLING, SIR JOHN.....                      | 228*      |
| MORE, SIR THOMAS.....                   | 125       | SURREY, HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF...             | 113*      |
| MORRIS, WILLIAM.....                    | 645*      | SWIFT, JONATHAN.....                         | 294, 320* |
| MOTHERWELL, WILLIAM.....                | 539*      | SWINBURNE, ALGERNON CHARLES.....             | 650*      |
| MYERS, FREDERICK W. H.....              | 771*      | TAYLOR, JEREMY.....                          | 253       |
| NAIRN, LADY, see Oliphant .      |           | TEMPLE, SIR WILLIAM.....                     | 282       |
| NASH, THOMAS.....                       | 166*      | TENNYSON, ALFRED.....                        | 583*      |
| NEWMAN, JOHN HENRY.....                 | 657*, 704 | THACKERAY, WILLIAM MAKEPEACE.....            | 659*, 710 |
| NICHOLAS OF GUILDFORD (?).....          | 29*       | THOMAS OF ELY.....                           | 48        |
| NORTH, SIR THOMAS.....                  | 176       |                                              |           |

|                               | PAGE |                                      | PAGE |
|-------------------------------|------|--------------------------------------|------|
| THOMAS OF HALES.....          | 28*  | WHITE, JOSEPH BLANCO.....            | 503* |
| THOMPSON, FRANCIS.....        | 779  | WILLIAM OF MALMSBURY.....            | 45   |
| THOMSON, JAMES.....           | 360* | WILMOT, JOHN, see Rochester . |      |
| TRAHERNE, THOMAS.....         | 206* | WITHER, GEORGE.....                  | 200* |
| TRENCH, RICHARD CHEVENIX..... | 658* | WOLFE, CHARLES.....                  | 538* |
| VAUGHAN, HENRY.....           | 205* | WORDSWORTH, WILLIAM.....             | 471* |
| WALLER, EDMUND.....           | 207* | WULFSTAN.....                        | 23   |
| WALTON, IZAAK.....            | 234  | WYATT, SIR THOMAS.....               | 113* |
| WEBSTER, JOHN.....            | 173* | WYCLIF, JOHN.....                    | 78   |
| WEDDERBURN, JAMES.....        | 87*  | YOUNG, EDWARD.....                   | 354* |

INDEX OF FIRST LINES

|                                                           | PAGE |                                                           | PAGE |
|-----------------------------------------------------------|------|-----------------------------------------------------------|------|
| A Chieftain to the Highlands bound.....                   | 505  | A Well there is in the west country.....                  | 495  |
| Adieu, farewell, earth's bliss.....                       | 166  | Ay, but to die, and go we know not where                  | 166  |
| Ae fond kiss, and then we sever.....                      | 466  |                                                           |      |
| After that Harvest gathered had hissheaves.....       | 80   | Beautiful Evelyn Hope is dead!.....                       | 612  |
| A good sword and a trusty hand!.....                      | 658  | Behold her, single in the field.....                      | 478  |
| "Ah! County Guy, the hour is nigh".....                   | 502  | Be it right or wrong, these men among...                  | 95   |
| Ah fading joy! how quickly art thou past!                 | 280  | Be merry, man! and tak not sair in mind..                 | 84   |
| Ah! Freedom is a noble thing.....                         | 55   | Beowulf said to them, etc.....                            | 6    |
| Ah! gentle Shepherd! thine the lot to tend                | 359  | Blessèd be simple life, withouten dreid...                | 84   |
| Ah me! full sorely is my heart forlorn....                | 371  | Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!.....                    | 609  |
| Ah! my Lord, leave me not.....                            | 87   | Break, break, break.....                                  | 597  |
| Ah! Sun flower! weary of time.....                        | 457  | Bright star, would I were steadfast asthou art.....   | 530  |
| Ah, what avails the sceptered race.....                   | 503  | Brittle beauty, that nature made so frail..               | 113  |
| Ah, what can ail thee, wretched wight....                 | 535  | But do not let us quarrel any more.....                   | 616  |
| Ah! who can tell how hard it is to climb..                | 441  | But though true worth and virtue, etc....                 | 435  |
| Alas! for Peter, not a helping hand.....                  | 454  | But welaway! so is my hearté woe.....                     | 81   |
| Allan-a-Dale has no faggots for burning..                 | 500  | By the blue taper's trembling light.....                  | 352  |
| All human things are subject to decay....                 | 275  |                                                           |      |
| All in the Downs the fleet was moored....                 | 310  | Call for the robin-redbreast and the wren                 | 173  |
| All joys are there in that countrie.....                  | 35   | Calm was the day, and through the trem-bling air..... | 147  |
| All Nature seems at work, slugs leave theirlair.....  | 494  | Can he be fair that withers at a blast?...                | 202  |
| All the flowers of the spring.....                        | 174  | Can I not sing but hoy.....                               | 99   |
| All ye woods, and trees, and bowers.....                  | 173  | Can I see another's woe.....                              | 456  |
| Although I enter not.....                                 | 659  | Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable Night                | 155  |
| A maid of Christ entreateth me.....                       | 28   | Ca' the yowes to the knowes.....                          | 458  |
| And are ye sure the news is true.....                     | 441  | Clear and cool, clear and cool.....                       | 662  |
| And if ye stand in doubt.....                             | 101  | Cold's the wind, and wet's the rain.....                  | 167  |
| And wilt thou leave me thus?.....                         | 113  | Come, fill the Cup, and in the fire of Spring             | 658  |
| Art thou consum'd with soul-afflictingcrosses?.....   | 202  | Come, gentle Spring, ethereal mildness,come.....      | 360  |
| Art thou poor, yet hast thou golden slum-bers?.....   | 167  | Come live with me, and be my love.....                    | 158  |
| As I was walking all alane.....                           | 93   | Come, Sleep! O Sleep, the certain knot ofpeace.....   | 151  |
| As once I lay in winter's night.....                      | 30   | Comrades, leave me here a little, etc.....                | 589  |
| As ships, becalmed at eve, that lay.....                  | 663  | Consider the sea's listless chime.....                    | 643  |
| As slow our ship her foamy track.....                     | 506  | Contented wi' little and cantie wi' mair..                | 470  |
| As virtuous men pass mildly away.....                     | 168  | "Courage!" he said, and pointed towardthe land.....   | 586  |
| As you came from the holy land.....                       | 150  | Crabbed age and youth.....                                | 162  |
| At Francis Allen's on the Christmas-eve..                 | 594  | Creator Spirit, by whose aid.....                         | 280  |
| Athlestan King.....                                       | 14   | Croesus, King of Lydia, dreamed that hesaw.....       | 645  |
| A thing of beauty is a joy forever.....                   | 529  | Crown'd with the sickle and the wheatensheaf.....     | 361  |
| A thousand tymes I have heard men telle                   | 62   | Cupid and my Campaspe played.....                         | 150  |
| At midnight in the silence of the sleep-time              | 634  | Cyriack, this three years' day, etc.....                  | 214  |
| At the close of the day, when the hamlet isstill..... | 444  | Cyriack, whose grandsire on the royal bench               | 214  |
| Autumn hath all the summer's fruitfultreasure.....    | 167  |                                                           |      |
| Ave Maris Stella.....                                     | 44   | Dear and great Angel, wouldst thou onlyleave.....     | 611  |
| Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints..                  | 214  | Dear Chloe, how blubbered is that prettyface.....     | 294  |
| Awake, my St. John! leave all meanerthings.....       | 306  |                                                           |      |
| "A weary lot is thine, fair maid".....                    | 499  |                                                           |      |

|                                                              | PAGE |                                                              | PAGE |
|--------------------------------------------------------------|------|--------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Dear native brook! wild streamlet of theWest.....        | 493  | Hail to thee, blithe Spirit!.....                            | 519  |
| Death, be not proud, though some havecalled thee.....    | 169  | Half a league, half a league.....                            | 601  |
| "Death have we hated, etc".....                              | 650  | Happy Insect, what can be.....                               | 224  |
| Descend from Heaven, Urania, by thatname.....            | 223  | Happy those early dayes, when I.....                         | 205  |
| Do not lift him from the bracken.....                        | 660  | Hark! hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings                  | 162  |
| Drink to me only with thine eyes.....                        | 170  | Hark, now everything is still.....                           | 174  |
| Earth has not anything to show more fair                     | 483  | Have my friends in the town, etc.....                        | 358  |
| England is a right good land, etc.....                       | 33   | He answer'd: "Helen, do not seek," etc..                     | 152  |
| Erce, Erce, Erce, Mother of Earth.....                       | 3    | He lived in that past Georgian day.....                      | 665  |
| Eternal spirit of the chainless mind.....                    | 510  | Hence all you vain delights.....                             | 173  |
| Even in a palace life may be led well .....           | 640  | Hence, loathèd Melancholy.....                               | 208  |
| Even such is time, that takes on trust....                   | 150  | Hence, vain deluding Joys.....                               | 209  |
| Fair and fair, and twice so fair.....                        | 151  | Here lies our sovereign lord the King....                    | 280  |
| Fair daffodils, we weep to see.....                          | 227  | Here, where the world is quiet.....                          | 652  |
| Father of all! in ev'ry age.....                             | 304  | He's sentenc'd, 'tis too late.....                           | 166  |
| Fear death?—to feel the fog in my throat                     | 628  | He that loves a rosy cheek.....                              | 226  |
| Fear no more the heat of the sun.....                        | 162  | He that of such a height, etc.....                           | 155  |
| First shall the heavens want starry light..                  | 151  | He who hath bent him o'er the dead....                       | 508  |
| Five years have passed; five summers, etc.                   | 471  | He who hath never war'd with misery....                      | 156  |
| Flee fro the presse, and dwelle, withsothefastnesse..... | 75   | Hie upon Hiellands.....                                      | 95   |
| Flow down, cold rivulet, to the sea.....                     | 597  | Him that was, if I shall not feign.....                      | 80   |
| Flow gently, sweet Afton, among thygreen braes.....      | 469  | His golden locks Time hath to silver turned                  | 152  |
| Forget six counties overhung with smoke                      | 645  | Holla, ye pampered jades of Asia!.....                       | 159  |
| For thee was a house built.....                              | 15   | How changed is here each spot, etc.....                      | 636  |
| For the few hours of life allotted me.....                   | 224  | How do I love thee? Let me count the ways                    | 635  |
| For the Yule-tide had yielded, etc.....                      | 58   | How like an Angel came I down!.....                          | 207  |
| For this ye know well, though I would lie..                  | 79   | How many thousands of my poorest sub-jects.....          | 165  |
| For what is life, if measured by the space..                 | 171  | "How seldom, friend! A good great maninherits.....       | 493  |
| Four years!—and didst thou stay above..                      | 640  | How soon hath Time, the subtle thief ofyouth.....        | 214  |
| From brightening fields of ether fair dis-clos'd.....    | 361  | How vainly men themselves amaze.....                         | 224  |
| From depth of dole wherein my soul dothdwell.....        | 115  | How well I know what I mean to do.....                       | 613  |
| From harmony, from heavenly harmony..                        | 277  | I am now older than I was.....                               | 27   |
| Full fathom five thy father lies.....                        | 162  | I bring fresh showers for the thirstingflowers.....      | 520  |
| Full many a glorious morning have I seen                     | 163  | I built my soul a lordly pleasure-house..                    | 583  |
| Gather ye rosebuds while ye may.....                         | 227  | If all the world and love were young....                     | 149  |
| Gentle redár, have at me na despite.....                     | 87   | If aught of oaten stop or pastoral song..                    | 431  |
| Get up, get up for shame, the bloomingmorn.....          | 226  | If childhood were not in the world.....                      | 654  |
| God that shaped both sea and sand.....                       | 37   | If from the public way you turn your steps                   | 473  |
| Go, fetch to me a pint o' wine.....                          | 466  | If I have faltered more or less.....                         | 669  |
| Go from me, yet I feel that I shall stand..                  | 635  | If I leave all for thee, wilt thou exchange..                | 635  |
| Go, lovely Rose.....                                         | 208  | I have had playmates, I have had com-panions.....        | 502  |
| Green little vaulter in the sunny grass....                  | 507  | I have heard my people, the peasant-folk..                   | 3    |
| Grow old along with me!.....                                 | 628  | I have led her home, my love, my onlyfriend.....         | 601  |
| Had we but world enough, and time....                        | 225  | I know a maid in bower bright.....                           | 42   |
| Hail, holy Light! offspring of Heavenfirst-born!.....    | 222  | I know that all beneath the moon decays..                    | 174  |
|                                                              |      | Illustrious England, ancient seat of Kings                   | 152  |
|                                                              |      | "I may sing of myself now".....                              | 12   |
|                                                              |      | I met a traveller from an antique land..                     | 521  |
|                                                              |      | I'm wearin' awa', John.....                                  | 459  |
|                                                              |      | In a coign of the cliff between lowlandand highland..... | 653  |

|                                              | PAGE |                                             | PAGE |
|----------------------------------------------|------|---------------------------------------------|------|
| In days of March and Averil.....             | 42   | Like as the waves make towards the          |      |
| Inhuman man! curse on thy barb'rous art      | 466  | pebbled shore.....                          | 163  |
| In my youth's summer I did sing of one...    | 510  | Like to the falling of a star.....          | 173  |
| In the land lived a priest, who was Laya-    |      | Like unto these unmeasurable mountains...   | 113  |
| mon called.....                              | 27   | Listen, Lordings, if you will.....          | 36   |
| In the season of summer, when soft was       |      | Little lamb, who made thee?.....            | 455  |
| the sunnè.....                               | 60   | Lo! I, the man whose Muse whylome           |      |
| In this fair stranger's eyes of grey.....    | 639  | did maske.....                              | 136  |
| In this lone open glade I lie.....           | 641  | Look in my face; my name is Might-have-     |      |
| In vain, in vain, the all-composing Hour...  | 306  | been.....                                   | 644  |
| In vain to me the smiling mornings shine...  | 428  | Look up to Pentland's tow'ring top.....     | 355  |
| In Virginè the sultry Sun 'gan sheene...     | 446  | Lo! on a sudden, and all unlooked for....   | 9    |
| In Xanadu did Kubla Khan.....                | 493  | Lords, knights, and 'squires the numerous   |      |
| I saw Eternity the other night.....          | 206  | band.....                                   | 294  |
| I sing of brooks, of blossoms, birds and     |      | Lord, thou hast given me a cell.....        | 228  |
| bowers.....                                  | 226  | Lovely, lasting peace of mind.....          | 352  |
| I sprang to the stirrup, and Joris and he... | 610  | Lo, when we wade the tangled wood.....      | 650  |
| Is there a whim-inspired fool.....           | 465  | Lullay, lullay, little child!.....          | 44   |
| Is there for honest Poverty.....             | 470  |                                             |      |
| I struck the board, and cry'd, etc.....      | 203  | Maidens of Engèlande sore may ye mourn      | 43   |
| It fortifies my soul to know.....            | 663  | Make we merry in hall and bour.....         | 99   |
| I that in health was and gladness.....       | 85   | Man is the world, and death the ocean...    | 167  |
| I think we are too ready with complaint...   | 634  | Man yearneth rimés for to hear.....         | 34   |
| I thought once how Theocritus had sung...    | 635  | "March, march, Ettrick and Teviotdale"      | 501  |
| It is a beauteous evening, calm and free...  | 483  | Mark when she smiles with amiable cheare    | 149  |
| It is an ancient Mariner.....                | 484  | Merry it is in the good greenwood.....      | 498  |
| It keeps eternal whisperings round.....      | 530  | Methinks we do as fretful children do...    | 635  |
| It little profits that an idle king.....     | 593  | Midst of a cloister, painted on a wall....  | 80   |
| It must be so—Plato, thou reason'st well!    | 295  | Mild is the parting year and sweet.....     | 503  |
| It was a friar of orders gray.....           | 433  | Milton! thou shouldst be living at this     |      |
| It was a summer evening.....                 | 495  | hour.....                                   | 483  |
| I've heard them lilting, at our ewe-milking  | 457  | Most miserable man, whom wicked fate...     | 147  |
| I've wandered east, I've wandered west...    | 539  | Much have I travell'd in the realms of      |      |
| I wandered lonely as a cloud.....            | 480  | gold.....                                   | 529  |
| I watched a rosebud very long.....           | 644  | Music, when soft voices die.....            | 528  |
| I weep for Adonais—he is dead!.....          | 521  | My bonny man, the world, it's true.....     | 669  |
| I wish I were where Helen lies.....          | 98   | My days among the Dead are past.....        | 496  |
|                                              |      | My dear companion, and my faithful          |      |
| Jack and Joan, they think no ill.....        | 172  | friend!.....                                | 357  |
|                                              |      | My good blade carves the casques of men     | 593  |
| Karshish, the picker-up of learning's        |      | My grandfather says he remembers he saw,    |      |
| crumbs.....                                  | 619  | etc.....                                    | 631  |
| King Charles, and who'll do him right now?   | 609  | My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness       |      |
|                                              |      | pains.....                                  | 536  |
| Last night, among his fellow roughs.....     | 659  | My heart is high above, etc.....            | 100  |
| "Late, late, so late! and dark the night     |      | My heart leaps up when I behold.....        | 478  |
| and chill!".....                             | 602  | My Peggy is a young thing.....              | 356  |
| Late, my grandson! half the morning, etc.    | 603  | My Phillis hath the morning sun.....        | 151  |
| Lead kindly Light, amid the encircling       |      | My spirit is too weak—mortality.....        | 529  |
| gloom.....                                   | 657  | Mysterious Night! when our first parent     |      |
| Leave me, O Love! which reachest but to      |      | knew.....                                   | 503  |
| dust.....                                    | 151  | My sweetest Lesbia, let us live and love... | 171  |
| Lest men suspect your tale untrue.....       | 309  |                                             |      |
| Let me not to the marriage of true minds     | 164  | Nature that framed us four elements.....    | 159  |
| "Let not Ambition mock their useful          |      | Nobly, nobly, Cape Saint Vincent, etc....   | 611  |
| toil".....                                   | 460  | No man becomes, before death calls him...   | 8    |
| Let others trust the seas, dare death and    |      | No, no, go not to Lethe, neither twist....  | 538  |
| Hell.....                                    | 199  | Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note    | 538  |

|                                             | PAGE |                                               | PAGE |
|---------------------------------------------|------|-----------------------------------------------|------|
| Nothing is to man so dear.....              | 33   | Our revels now are ended, etc.....            | 166  |
| No! those days are gone away.....           | 535  | Over hill, over dale.....                     | 161  |
| Not marble, nor the gilded monuments...     | 163  | O wert thou in the cauld blast.....           | 470  |
| Now, brother Walter, brother mine.....      | 28   | O wild West Wind, thou breath of Au-          |      |
| Now glory to the Lord of Hosts, etc.....    | 656  | turnn's being.....                            | 518  |
| Now haud your tongue, baith wife and        |      | O world! O life! O time!.....                 | 528  |
| carle.....                                  | 501  | O, young Lochinvar is come out of the west    | 497  |
| Now mirk December's dowie face.....         | 460  |                                               |      |
| Now shall we hymn high heaven's Ward.       | 8    | Pack, clouds, away, and welcome day....       | 172  |
| Now the days are all gone over.....         | 653  | Pearl, princes prize, and men essay.....      | 55   |
| Now the hungry lion roars.....              | 161  | Piping down the valleys wild.....             | 455  |
| Now wends he his way through the wild       |      | Pitch here the tent, while the old horse      |      |
| tracts of Logrès.....                       | 58   | grazes.....                                   | 664  |
|                                             |      | Pla ce bo .....                        | 100  |
| O, Brignall banks are wild and fair.....    | 499  | Pleasure it is.....                           | 100  |
| Obscurest night involved the sky.....       | 440  | Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth...   | 164  |
| O Death, rock me to sleep.....              | 100  | Power above powers! O heavenly Elo-           |      |
| Of a' the airts the wind can blow.....      | 466  | quence!.....                                  | 155  |
| Of Februar the fifteenth night.....         | 84   | "Proud Maisie is in the wood".....            | 501  |
| Of Heaven or Hell I have no power to sing   | 645  |                                               |      |
| Of Man's first disobedience, and the fruit  | 215  | Queen and huntress, chaste and fair....       | 170  |
| Of Nelson and the North.....                | 504  |                                               |      |
| Of old sat Freedom on the heights.....      | 588  | Row us out from Desenzano, etc.....           | 603  |
| O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide    | 164  | "Ruin seize thee, ruthless King!".....        | 430  |
| O Friend! I know not which way I must       |      |                                               |      |
| look.....                                   | 483  | Sabrina fair.....                             | 211  |
| Of such is the kingdom of heaven.....       | 654  | Said Abner, "At last thou art come," etc.     | 623  |
| Of these the false Achitophel was first...  | 277  | Say not the struggle nought availleth....     | 663  |
| Of this fair volume which we world do       |      | Scots wha hae wi' Wallace bled.....           | 469  |
| name.....                                   | 174  | Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness...    | 537  |
| Oft in the stilly night.....                | 507  | See the chariot at hand here of Love....      | 170  |
| O, Galuppi, Baldassaro, this is very sad to |      | See, the flowery spring is blown.....         | 360  |
| find.....                                   | 622  | See, the star that leads the day.....         | 353  |
| Oh, Faustus!.....                           | 159  | See, Winter comes to rule the varied year     | 362  |
| Oh! snatch'd away in beauty's bloom...      | 509  | Seventeen hundred and thirty-nine.....        | 666  |
| Oh! that we two were Maying.....            | 662  | Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?..     | 163  |
| Oh, to be in England now that April's       |      | Shall I, wasting in despaire.....             | 200  |
| there.....                                  | 611  | She dwelt among the untrodden ways....        | 473  |
| O listen, listen, ladies gay!.....          | 496  | She is far from the land where her young      |      |
| O lyric Love, half angel and half bird...   | 633  | Hero sleeps.....                              | 507  |
| "O Mary, go and call the cattle home"...    | 662  | She is not fair to outward view.....          | 655  |
| O may I join the choir invisible.....       | 663  | Shepherds all and maidens fair.....           | 172  |
| O mistress mine, where are you roaming?..   | 162  | She wakes in beauty, like the night.....      | 510  |
| O mortal man, who livest here by toil....   | 364  | She was a Phantom of delight.....             | 480  |
| O my Luve's like a red, red Rose.....       | 470  | Should auld acquaintance be forgot.....       | 465  |
| On a starred night Prince Lucifer uprose..  | 665  | Shut, shut the door, good John! etc.....      | 304  |
| Once more unto the breach, dear friends..   | 165  | Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor        |      |
| Once within a summer's dale.....            | 29   | boundless sea.....                            | 164  |
| One day I wrote her name upon the strand    | 149  | Since there's no help, come let us kiss and   |      |
| One more Unfortunate.....                   | 655  | part.....                                     | 157  |
| One word is too often profaned.....         | 528  | Since through virtue increases dignity....    | 82   |
| On Linden when the sun was low.....         | 504  | Sing his praises that doth keep.....          | 172  |
| O noble worthy king, Henry the ferthé...    | 59   | Sing lullaby, as women do.....                | 114  |
| O sing unto my roundelay.....               | 446  | Sing me a song of a lad that is gone.....     | 670  |
| O that those lips had language!.....        | 439  | Sleep, Silence' child, sweet father of soft   |      |
| Others abide our question. Thou art free.   | 640  | rest.....                                     | 174  |
| O Thou Great Being! what thou art.....      | 465  | So all day long the noise of battle roll'd... | 594  |
| Our life is likest a long sea-voyage.....   | 9    | Some murmur when their sky is clear....       | 658  |

|                                                           | PAGE |                                                            | PAGE |
|-----------------------------------------------------------|------|------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| So now is come our joyful feast.....                      | 200  | The play is done; the curtain drops.....                   | 660  |
| Spring is come to town with love.....                     | 42   | The poetry of earth is never dead.....                     | 529  |
| St. Agnes' Eve—Ah, bitter chill it was!.....              | 530  | There is an awful quiet in the air.....                    | 655  |
| Star that bringest home the bee.....                      | 505  | There is delight in singing, tho' none hear.....           | 503  |
| Stern Daughter of the Voice of God!.....                  | 481  | There is sweet music here that softer falls.....           | 587  |
| "Still the lone one and desolate," etc.....               | 11   | There's a maid in a bower, etc.....                        | 43   |
| Still to be neat, still to be drest.....                  | 170  | There's not a joy the world can give, etc.....             | 509  |
| Stop, Mortal! Here thy brother lies.....                  | 507  | There was a roaring in the wind all night.....             | 481  |
| "Summer is coming, summer is coming".....                 | 608  | There was a time when meadow, grove,and stream.....    | 478  |
| Summer is ieuinen in.....                                 | 41   | There were twa sisters sat in a bow'r.....                 | 94   |
| Sunset and evening star.....                              | 609  | The sea is calm to-night.....                              | 639  |
| Sweet are the thoughts that savour of content.....        | 155  | The Sea! the Sea! the open Sea!.....                       | 508  |
| Sweet Auburn! loveliest village of the plain.....         | 374  | The sootè season that bud and bloom forthbrings.....   | 113  |
| Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright.....               | 202  | The spacious firmament on high.....                        | 295  |
| Sweet Echo, sweetest nymph, that liv'stunseen.....    | 211  | The stars are forth, the moon above the tops.....          | 515  |
| Sweetest Love, I do not go.....                           | 168  | The sun descending in the west.....                        | 455  |
| Swiftly walk over the western wave.....                   | 528  | The sun, the moon, the stars, etc.....                     | 602  |
| Take feverfew, and plantain, and the rednettle.....   | 3    | The Village Life, and every care that reigns.....          | 452  |
| Take, oh, take those lips away.....                       | 162  | The world is too much with us, etc.....                    | 483  |
| Teach me, my God and King.....                            | 203  | The wrathful winter, 'proaching on apace.....              | 115  |
| "Tears, idle tears, I know not what theymean".....    | 598  | They are all gone into the world of light!.....            | 205  |
| Tell me not, sweet, I am unkind.....                      | 229  | The year's at the spring.....                              | 609  |
| Tell, said the mighty Fingal.....                         | 444  | This æ night, this æ night.....                            | 98   |
| That childish thoughts such joy inspire.....              | 206  | This battle fares like to the morning's war.....           | 164  |
| That's my last Duchess painted on the wall.....           | 609  | Thise rôtoursè thre, of whiche I telle.....                | 72   |
| That time of year thou may'st in me be-hold.....      | 164  | This life, which seems so fair.....                        | 174  |
| That which her slender waist confin'd.....                | 207  | This only grant me, that my means maylie.....          | 271  |
| The Assyrian came down like a wolf on thefold.....    | 509  | This royal throne of kings, this scepter'disle.....    | 165  |
| The blessed damozel leaned out.....                       | 641  | Thou fair-haired angel of the evening.....                 | 455  |
| The changing guests, each in a differentmood.....     | 644  | Thou clock.....                                            | 228  |
| The curfew tolls the knell of parting day.....            | 428  | Though grief and fondness in my breastrebel.....       | 366  |
| The days grow old, the low-pitch'd camphath made..... | 202  | Thou still unravished bride of quietness.....              | 537  |
| The feathered songster Chanticleer.....                   | 448  | Thou Who didst make, etc.....                              | 644  |
| The gauger walked with willing foot.....                  | 669  | Three fishers went sailing away to theWest.....        | 662  |
| The glories of our blood and state.....                   | 204  | Three poets, in three distant ages born.....               | 280  |
| The god of love, ah, benedicite.....                      | 80   | Three years she grew in sun and shower.....                | 473  |
| The hag is astride.....                                   | 227  | Through winter streets to steer your coursearight..... | 310  |
| The harp that once through Tara's halls.....              | 506  | Thus came, lo Engèland into Normandy'shand.....        | 33   |
| The host was harrowed, with horror ofdrowning.....    | 8    | Thus charged he: nor Argicides denied.....                 | 154  |
| The hunt is up, the hunt is up.....                       | 99   | Tiger, tiger, burning bright.....                          | 456  |
| The isles of Greece! the isles of Greece!.....            | 516  | Tir'd Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep!.....           | 354  |
| The king sits in Dumferling town.....                     | 93   | Tired with all these, for restful death I cry.....         | 164  |
| The man of life upright.....                              | 171  | 'Tis instinct that directs the jealous hare.....           | 356  |
| The men of wealthy Sestos every year.....                 | 160  | 'Tis time this heart should be unmoved.....                | 518  |
| The Muse, disgusted at an age and clime.....              | 355  | 'Tis true—then why should I repine.....                    | 294  |
| Then shame to manhood, and opprobriousmore.....       | 438  | To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thyname.....          | 169  |
| The Percy out of Northumberland.....                      | 90   | To fair Fidele's grassy tomb.....                          | 433  |
|                                                           |      | To Farmer Moss, in Langar Vale, camedown.....          | 454  |

|                                             | PAGE |                                             | PAGE |
|---------------------------------------------|------|---------------------------------------------|------|
| Toll for the brave!                         | 440  | When I have borne in memory what has        |      |
| To mercy, pity, peace, and love.            | 456  | tamed                                       | 483  |
| To one who has been long in city pent.      | 529  | When I have fears that I may cease to be    | 530  |
| To thee, fair Freedom! I retire.            | 374  | When, in disgrace with fortune and men's    |      |
| To these whom death again did wed.          | 204  | eyes                                        | 163  |
| Touch us gently, Time!                      | 507  | When I survey the bright                    | 204  |
| To you, my purse, and to noon other wyght   | 74   | When Learning's triumph, o'er her bar-      |      |
| "Turn, gentle Hermit of the dale"           | 378  | b'rous foe                                  | 369  |
| 'Twas at the royal feast, for Persia won.   | 278  | When Love with unconfined wings             | 229  |
| 'Twas on a Monday morning.                  | 459  | When maidens such as Hester die.            | 502  |
| Two souls diverse out of our human sight    | 654  | When man was born to this world's light     | 35   |
|                                             |      | When music, heavenly maid, was young        | 432  |
| Under the arch of Life, where love and      |      | When shaws be sheen, and shradds full fair  | 88   |
| death                                       | 643  | When the hounds of spring, etc.             | 650  |
| Under the greenwood tree                    | 161  | When the Nightingale sings, etc.            | 43   |
| Under the wide and starry sky               | 670  | When the Sheep are in the fault             | 458  |
| Under yonder beech-tree on the green-       |      | When to the sessions of sweet silent        |      |
| sward                                       | 665  | thought                                     | 163  |
| Unfathomable Sea! whose waves are years     | 528  | When we for age could neither read nor      |      |
| Upon a time, as Æsop could report           | 82   | write                                       | 208  |
| Up! up! my Friend, and quit your books      | 472  | Where are they that lived before            | 41   |
| Us caitiffs then a far more dreadful chance | 114  | Where the bee sucks there suck I            | 162  |
|                                             |      | Where the remote Bermudas ride              | 225  |
| Verse, a breeze mid blossoms straying       | 494  | Whether on Ida's shady brow                 | 455  |
|                                             |      | While briars and woodbines budding green    | 463  |
| Waken, lords and ladies gay                 | 497  | While the dawn on the mountain was          |      |
| Was this the face that launched a thousand  |      | misty, etc.                                 | 500  |
| ships                                       | 159  | Who'er she be                               | 204  |
| Weary of myself, and sick of asking         | 639  | Who is Silvia? What is she                  | 161  |
| Wee, modest, crimson-tippèd flow'r          | 464  | Why did I laugh to-night? etc.              | 530  |
| Weep no more, nor sigh, nor groan           | 172  | Why do ye weep, sweet babes? can tears      | 227  |
| Wee, sleekit, cowrin', tim'rous beastie     | 464  | Why so pale and wan, fond lover?            | 228  |
| We have seen thee, O Love, thou art fair,   |      | "Why weep ye by the tide, ladie?"           | 500  |
| etc.                                        | 651  | "Why, William, on that old gray stone"      | 472  |
| Welcome, the lord of light, and lamp of day | 86   | Wilt Thou forgive that sin where I begun    | 169  |
| Well! If the Bard was weather-wise, etc.    | 492  | With a whirl of thought oppress'd           | 295  |
| Well then! I now do plainly see             | 223  | With how sad steps, O Moon, etc.            | 150  |
| We read full oft and find y-writ            | 37   | Wondrous is its wall of stone               | 10   |
| We watched her breathing thro' the night    | 655  |                                             |      |
| When that Aprille with his shourés soote    | 65   | Ye banks and braes and streams around       | 469  |
| What are we set on earth for? Say, to toil  | 635  | Ye clouds! that far above me float and      |      |
| What beck'ning ghost, along the moon-       |      | pause                                       | 490  |
| light shade                                 | 303  | Ye distant spires, ye antique towers        | 427  |
| What dire offence from am'rous causes       |      | Ye mariners of England                      | 504  |
| springs                                     | 296  | Yes! in the sea of life enisled             | 639  |
| What hath man done, that man shall not      |      | Yes; I write verses now and then            | 503  |
| undo                                        | 200  | Yet once more, O ye laurels, and once more  | 211  |
| Wha the deil hae we got for a king          | 459  | Ye, who amid this feverish world would      |      |
| When Britain first at Heaven's command      | 363  | wear                                        | 370  |
| When cats run home and light is come        | 583  | You ask me, why, tho' ill at ease           | 588  |
| When chapman billies leave the street       | 467  | You brave heroic minds                      | 158  |
| When civil dudgeon first grew high          | 273  | Your eyes two wol slee me sodenly           | 79   |
| When God at first made man                  | 203  | Your ghost will walk, you lover of trees    | 616  |
| When I consider everything that grows       | 163  | Your hands lie open in the long fresh grass | 643  |
| When I consider how my light is spent       | 214  | You spotted snakes with double tongue       | 161  |

INDEX OF TITLES

|                                                                      | PAGE |                                                                        | PAGE |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Absence.....                                                         | 639  | Battle of Ivry, The.....                                               | 656  |
| Accomplishment of the First of Mr.Bickerstaff's Predictions..... | 324  | Battle of The Baltic.....                                              | 504  |
| Achitophel.....                                                      | 277  | Battle of Trafalgar, The.....                                          | 548  |
| Address to the Author's Elbow Chair New-Clothed.....             | 357  | Bede's Account of Himself.....                                         | 18   |
| Adonais.....                                                         | 521  | Bede's Death Song.....                                                 | 8    |
| Æs Triplex ( Virginibus Puerisque ).....                      | 772  | Beowulf (Selections).....                                              | 3    |
| Afton Water.....                                                     | 469  | Bermudas.....                                                          | 225  |
| Agincourt.....                                                       | 157  | Better Answer, A.....                                                  | 294  |
| Ah! Sunflower.....                                                   | 457  | Black Eyed Susan.....                                                  | 310  |
| Ah What Avails the Sceptered Race.....                               | 503  | Blessed Damozel, The.....                                              | 641  |
| Aim of a University Course, The.....                                 | 709  | Blow, Northern Wind.....                                               | 42   |
| A Lad that is Gone.....                                              | 670  | Boethius.....                                                          | 418  |
| Alexander's Feast, or the Power of Music                             | 278  | Bonnie George Campbell.....                                            | 95   |
| Alysoun.....                                                         | 42   | Border Ballad.....                                                     | 501  |
| Ambition.....                                                        | 159  | Boswell ( Review of Croker's Boswell'sJohnson )..... | 687  |
| An Apology for Writing in the Vulgar andMaternal Language.....   | 87   | Boswell's First Meeting with Dr. Johnson                               | 424  |
| Ancren Riwele (Selections).....                                      | 51   | Boswell the Hero-Worshipper.....                                       | 676  |
| Andrea Del Sarto.....                                                | 616  | Bread and Liberty.....                                                 | 224  |
| And Wilt thou Leave Me Thus?.....                                    | 113  | Break, Break, Break.....                                               | 597  |
| Anglo-Saxon Chronicle.....                                           | 23   | Bridge of Sighs, The.....                                              | 655  |
| An Ode to Ph—.....                                                   | 355  | Bristowe Tragedy; or the Death of SirCharles Bawdin.....           | 448  |
| Apelles' Song.....                                                   | 150  | Britannia's Pastorals.....                                             | 201  |
| Apology, An.....                                                     | 645  | Bruce's Address to his Army at Bannock-burn.....                   | 469  |
| Approach, The.....                                                   | 206  | Burial of Sir John Moore at Corunna, The                               | 538  |
| Areopagitica.....                                                    | 266  | Burns.....                                                             | 683  |
| Argument to Hesperides.....                                          | 226  | Burton tells why he Writes Under theName of Democritus Junior..... | 229  |
| Ariel's Song.....                                                    | 162  | By the Fireside.....                                                   | 613  |
| Armour of Innocence, The.....                                        | 171  |                                                                        |      |
| Art and Character ( Queen of the Air ).....                   | 733  | Cædmon's Hymn.....                                                     | 8    |
| Art of Preserving Health, The.....                                   | 370  | Canterbury Tales, The (Selections).....                                | 64   |
| As Slow our Ship.....                                                | 506  | Canute and the Monks of Ely.....                                       | 48   |
| At the Church Gate.....                                              | 659  | Carol.....                                                             | 99   |
| Auld Lang Syne.....                                                  | 465  | Carthon: A Poem.....                                                   | 444  |
| Auld Robin Gray.....                                                 | 458  | Cast-Away, The.....                                                    | 440  |
| Author's Resolution in a Sonnet, The....                             | 200  | Castle of Indolence, The (Selections)....                              | 364  |
| Autumn.....                                                          | 361  | Ca' the Yowes.....                                                     | 458  |
| Ave Maria.....                                                       | 44   | Cato's Soliloquy.....                                                  | 295  |
|                                                                      |      | Causes of the Ruin of Rome, The.....                                   | 420  |
| Balade of Charitie.....                                              | 446  | Cavalier Tunes (Give a Rouse, Boot andSaddle).....                 | 609  |
| Ballad, Alice Brand.....                                             | 498  | Celestial Surgeon, The.....                                            | 669  |
| Ballad of Beau Brocade.....                                          | 666  | Celtic Spirit, The.....                                                | 745  |
| Ballad of Good Counsel, A.....                                       | 82   | Characteristics of Shakespeare's Dramas                                | 544  |
| Ballad of Good Counsel or Truth, The....                             | 75   | Character of Pope, The.....                                            | 388  |
| Bard's Epitaph, A.....                                               | 465  | Charge of the Light Brigade.....                                       | 601  |
| Bard, The.....                                                       | 430  | Charles I Sets up his Standard at Not-tingham.....                 | 249  |
| Bastille, The ( The Task ).....                               | 438  | Charlie is My Darling.....                                             | 456  |
| Battle of Blenheim, The.....                                         | 495  | Charm for Bewitched Land, A.....                                       | 3    |
| Battle of Brunanburh.....                                            | 14   | Charm for a Sudden Stitch.....                                         | 3    |
| Battle of Halidon Hill.....                                          | 36   |                                                                        |      |
| Battle of Hastings and the Effect of theConquest, The.....       | 46   |                                                                        |      |

|                                                                            | PAGE |                                                    | PAGE |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|----------------------------------------------------|------|
| Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.....                                            | 510  | "De Gustibus".....                                 | 616  |
| Choric Song.....                                                           | 587  | Dejection: An Ode.....                             | 492  |
| Chorus (Atalanta in Calydon).....                                          | 650  | Departed Friends.....                              | 205  |
| Chorus (Atalanta in Calydon).....                                          | 651  | De Profundis.....                                  | 115  |
| Christmas Carol, A.....                                                    | 200  | Description of His Father (Latimer).....           | 133  |
| Christ's Victory and Triumph.....                                          | 200  | Description of Spring.....                         | 113  |
| Chronicles of Sir John Froissart (Selec-tions).....                    | 121  | Description of Urania, A.....                      | 189  |
| Claius Describes Urania.....                                               | 189  | Description of William the Conqueror, A.....       | 44   |
| Clear and Cool.....                                                        | 662  | Deserted Village, The.....                         | 374  |
| Cloud, The.....                                                            | 520  | Destruction of Sennacherib, The.....               | 509  |
| Coffee House, The ( History of England ).....                       | 702  | Detached Thoughts on Books and Reading.....        | 556  |
| Colin Clout.....                                                           | 101  | Dirge.....                                         | 162  |
| Coliseum at Night, The.....                                                | 515  | Dirge, A.....                                      | 173  |
| Collar, The.....                                                           | 203  | Dirge, A.....                                      | 204  |
| Collins.....                                                               | 386  | Dirge Before Death.....                            | 174  |
| Coming of Winter, The.....                                                 | 167  | Dirge for Philip Sparrow, A.....                   | 100  |
| Complaynt of Chaucer to his Purse, The.....                                | 74   | Dirge in Cymbeline.....                            | 433  |
| Consideration of the Vanity and Shortnessof Man's Life.....            | 254  | Disdain Returned.....                              | 226  |
| Consolation of Beothius, The (Selections).....                             | 21   | Divine Image, To the.....                          | 456  |
| Content.....                                                               | 84   | Divine Source of Law, The.....                     | 185  |
| Content.....                                                               | 155  | Divinity in Man, The.....                          | 245  |
| Corinna's Going A-Maying.....                                              | 226  | Don Juan.....                                      | 516  |
| Cotter's Saturday Night, The.....                                          | 460  | Dover Beach.....                                   | 639  |
| Counterblast, The.....                                                     | 669  | Drawing near the Light.....                        | 650  |
| County Guy.....                                                            | 502  | Dream Children; a Reverie.....                     | 554  |
| Courtier, The.....                                                         | 147  | Drowning of the Egyptians, The.....                | 8    |
| Coy Mistress, To His.....                                                  | 225  | Edmund's Song ( Rokeby ).....               | 499  |
| Crabbed Age and Youth.....                                                 | 162  | Elegy to the Memory of an UnfortunateLady..... | 303  |
| Crist, The (The Voyage of Life, Doomsday).....                             | 9    | Elegy upon the Death of Lady Markham,An.....   | 167  |
| Critic, A.....                                                             | 240  | Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard.....         | 428  |
| Crossing the Bar.....                                                      | 609  | Elixir, The.....                                   | 203  |
| Cuckoo and the Nightingale, The.....                                       | 80   | End of the Play, The.....                          | 660  |
| Cuckoo Song.....                                                           | 41   | Endymion.....                                      | 529  |
| Culture ( Culture and Anarchy ).....                                | 748  | England.....                                       | 165  |
| Cursor Mundi.....                                                          | 34   | English Mail Coach, The.....                       | 576  |
| Cuthbert's Letter on the Death of Bede.....                                | 19   | Epic, The (Morte D'Arthur).....                    | 594  |
| Cyriack Skinner, To.....                                                   | 214  | Epigramme 3.....                                   | 202  |
| Cyriack Skinner, XXI, To.....                                              | 214  | Epilogue.....                                      | 634  |
| Daft Days, The.....                                                        | 460  | Epistle, An.....                                   | 358  |
| Daily Miracle, The.....                                                    | 23   | Epistle of Karshish, An.....                       | 619  |
| Dance of the Seven Deadly Sins, The.....                                   | 84   | Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot.....                      | 304  |
| Day of Judgment, The.....                                                  | 295  | Epistle to John Lapraik.....                       | 463  |
| Death.....                                                                 | 100  | Epitaph on Charles II.....                         | 280  |
| Death and Hereafter.....                                                   | 166  | Epitaph upon Husband and Wife, An.....             | 204  |
| Death and Immortality.....                                                 | 240  | Essay on Man, An.....                              | 306  |
| Death-Bed, The.....                                                        | 655  | Essex and Spenser.....                             | 564  |
| Death of Cæsar, The.....                                                   | 176  | Eternal Child in Shelley, The.....                 | 779  |
| Death of Laocoön, The ( Æneid ).....                                | 114  | Euphues' Glass for Europe.....                     | 187  |
| Death of Queen Elizabeth ( History of theEnglish People )..... | 764  | Evelyn Hope.....                                   | 612  |
| Death's Summons.....                                                       | 166  | Evening Star, To the.....                          | 455  |
| Debate of the Body and Soul, The.....                                      | 30   | Eve of St. Agnes, The.....                         | 530  |
| Dedication to Sir Francis Walsingham.....                                  | 178  | Execution of Lady Jane Grey, The.....              | 135  |
| Dedicatory Epistle ( Monmouth's Historyof Britain ).....       | 48   | Execution of Mary Queen of Scots.....              | 721  |
|                                                                            |      | Execution of Sir Thomas More, The.....             | 129  |
|                                                                            |      | Expostulation and Reply.....                       | 472  |

|                                                                 | PAGE |                                                                  | PAGE |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------|------|------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Faerie Queene.....                                              | 136  | Henry Vith's Soliloquy at the Battle ofTowton.....           | 164  |
| Fair and Happy Milkmaid, A.....                                 | 232  | Henry Wriothesly, Earl of Southampton,To.....                | 156  |
| Fairies Song.....                                               | 161  | Hermit, The.....                                                 | 378  |
| Fairy Song.....                                                 | 161  | Hermit, The.....                                                 | 444  |
| Faith.....                                                      | 244  | Hero, The.....                                                   | 680  |
| Fame and Death.....                                             | 183  | He Who Hath Bent Him O'er the Dead..                             | 508  |
| Farewell, A.....                                                | 151  | Higher Pantheism, The.....                                       | 602  |
| Farewell, A.....                                                | 597  | Highland Mary.....                                               | 469  |
| Farmer Moss's Daughter.....                                     | 454  | Hills of Gold and the Terrestrial Paradise,The.....          | 77   |
| Faustus Fulfils his Compact with the Devil                      | 159  | His Golden Locks Time Hath to SilverTurned.....              | 152  |
| Faustus' Vision of Helen ( Dr. Faustus )...              | 159  | His Grange, or Private Wealth.....                               | 228  |
| Field-Sports.....                                               | 356  | Hohenlinden.....                                                 | 504  |
| Fight with Apollyon, The.....                                   | 257  | Home Thoughts from Abroad.....                                   | 611  |
| Fine Lady's Journal, The.....                                   | 337  | Home Thoughts from the Sea.....                                  | 611  |
| Fleece, The (Selections).....                                   | 359  | How Gulliver Conquered the Fleet of theBlefusudians.....     | 326  |
| Flowers of the Forest, The.....                                 | 457  | How Layamon Wrote his Book.....                                  | 27   |
| Forsaken Garden, A.....                                         | 653  | How they Brought the Good News fromGhent to Aix.....         | 610  |
| Fortunati Numium.....                                           | 172  | Hunting Song.....                                                | 497  |
| Frailty of Beauty, The.....                                     | 113  | Hunt is Up, The.....                                             | 99   |
| France: An Ode.....                                             | 490  | Hunting of the Cheviot, The.....                                 | 90   |
| "Fratres Ave Atque Vale".....                                   | 603  | Hymn for Morning, A.....                                         | 353  |
| Freedom.....                                                    | 55   | Hymn to Contentment, A.....                                      | 352  |
| French and English Tragic Writers.....                          | 285  | Hymn to God the Father, A.....                                   | 169  |
| Friar of Orders Gray, The.....                                  | 433  | Illustrious England, Ancient Seat ofKings.....               | 152  |
| Garden, The.....                                                | 224  | Il Penseroso.....                                                | 209  |
| Garden of Proserpine, The.....                                  | 652  | Impressions of a Chinese Traveller.....                          | 397  |
| Geist's Grave.....                                              | 640  | Induction to a Mirror for Magistrates..                          | 115  |
| Gentleman of the Old School, A.....                             | 665  | Infant, The.....                                                 | 35   |
| Gibbon is Inspired to Write his History..                       | 417  | In Memoriam (Selections).....                                    | 598  |
| God's Care for Man.....                                         | 100  | In Praise of Chaucer.....                                        | 80   |
| God's Wisdom and Eternity.....                                  | 245  | In Praise of England.....                                        | 33   |
| Good Great Man, The.....                                        | 493  | In Sicknes.....                                                  | 294  |
| Good Morrow.....                                                | 172  | Intimations of Immortality.....                                  | 478  |
| Good Schoolmaster, A.....                                       | 185  | Introduction to the Last Fruit Off an OldTree.....           | 503  |
| Good Schoolmaster, The.....                                     | 246  | Introduction ( Songs of Innocence ).....                  | 455  |
| Gospel of Work, The.....                                        | 686  | "In Vain, in Vain" ( Dunciad ).....                       | 306  |
| Grasshopper, The.....                                           | 224  | Invidiosa Senectus.....                                          | 202  |
| Grave, The.....                                                 | 15   | Irruption of the Tartars, An.....                                | 53   |
| Great Fire, The.....                                            | 280  | Isabella's Plea for Mercy.....                                   | 166  |
| Great Fire of London, The.....                                  | 292  | Is There, For Honest Poverty.....                                | 470  |
| Greene's Farewell to his Fellow Play-wrights.....           | 192  | "I Wandered Lonely as a Cloud".....                              | 480  |
| Guardian Angel, The.....                                        | 611  | Jeanie Morrison.....                                             | 539  |
| Gulliver Among the Lilliputians.....                            | 325  | Joan.....                                                        | 43   |
| Hag, The.....                                                   | 227  | Jock of Hazeldean.....                                           | 500  |
| Hamlet (Hazlitt).....                                           | 567  | John Davis ( Short Studies on Great Sub-jects )..... | 725  |
| Hark, Hark the Lark.....                                        | 162  | Jolly Shepherd, The.....                                         | 99   |
| Harlaw ( Antiquary ).....                                | 501  | Juggling Jerry.....                                              | 664  |
| Harold's Song to Rosabelle.....                                 | 496  |                                                                  |      |
| Harp that Once Through Tara's Halls, The                        | 506  |                                                                  |      |
| Hawking, Hunting, and Fishing (Walton'sAngler )..... | 234  |                                                                  |      |
| Hector and Andromache ( Iliad ).....                     | 152  |                                                                  |      |
| Helen of Kirconnell.....                                        | 98   |                                                                  |      |
| Henry Vth's Address to his Soldiers atHarfleurs.....        | 165  |                                                                  |      |

|                                                   | PAGE |                                                    | PAGE |
|---------------------------------------------------|------|----------------------------------------------------|------|
| King Alexander and the Isle of Bragaman           | 76   | Manners Makyth Man                                 | 379  |
| King Arthur                                       | 110  | Martin Relph                                       | 631  |
| King Edwin Considers Adopting Christianity        | 16   | Maud                                               | 601  |
| King Lear                                         | 563  | Meditation Upon a Broomstick                       | 320  |
| Knowledge and Character                           | 704  | Melancholy                                         | 173  |
| Kubla Khan: Or a Vision in a Dream                | 493  | Merciles Beaute                                    | 79   |
| La Belle Dame Sans Merci                          | 535  | Merits of Sir Hudibras, The                        | 273  |
| Lady Margaret, Countess of Cumberland,To the  | 155  | Michael                                            | 473  |
| Lady's Misery in a Summer Retirement              | 384  | Mild is the Parting Year and Sweet                 | 503  |
| L'Allegro                                         | 208  | Minstrel, The                                      | 441  |
| Lamb, The                                         | 455  | Minstrel's Roundelay                               | 446  |
| Lament, A                                         | 528  | Modern Pastoral, The                               | 452  |
| Lament for Chaucer, A                             | 81   | Money ( Crown of Wild Olive )               | 730  |
| Lament for the Makers, The                        | 85   | Mors Tua                                           | 202  |
| Lamp of Memory, The                               | 727  | Morte D'Arthur (Tennyson)                          | 594  |
| Land of the Leal, The                             | 459  | Morte D'Arthur (Selections from Malory )    | 103  |
| Last Entry in Pepys' Diary, The                   | 293  | Mr. Shandy on His Son's Death                      | 394  |
| Lead, Kindly Light                                | 657  | Musical Instrument, A                              | 634  |
| Leander Sees Hero at the Feast of Sestos          | 160  | My Bonie Mary                                      | 466  |
| Leave Me Not                                      | 87   | My Days Among the Dead are Past                    | 496  |
| Legend of Good Women, From the (Selection)        | 62   | My Heart is High Above                             | 100  |
| L'Envoi ( Earthly Paradise )               | 650  | My Heart Leaps up                                  | 478  |
| Letters from Olney                                | 415  | My Last Duchess                                    | 609  |
| Letter to a Noble Lord                            | 408  | Natural Supernaturalism                            | 672  |
| Letter to Lord Chesterfield                       | 385  | Ned Softly, The Poet                               | 332  |
| Levana and Our Ladies of Sorrow                   | 572  | New Invention of Printing, The                     | 110  |
| Liberty and Restraint ( Queen of the Air ) | 735  | Night ( Æneid )                             | 114  |
| Life of Hooker                                    | 239  | Night                                              | 455  |
| Life's True Measure                               | 171  | Night-Piece on Death, A                            | 352  |
| Lines Written in Kensington Gardens               | 641  | Nil Nisi Bonum ( Roundabout Papers )        | 711  |
| Lines Written the Night Before hisDeath       | 150  | Norman and English                                 | 33   |
| Lochinvar                                         | 497  | No Treasure without Gladness                       | 84   |
| Locksley Hall                                     | 589  | Nox Nocti Indicat Scientiam                        | 204  |
| Locksley Hall Sixty Years After                   | 603  | Nymph's Reply to the Passionate Shepherd, The      | 149  |
| London: A Poem                                    | 366  | Object of the Spectator, The                       | 334  |
| Lord Falkland                                     | 251  | Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College          | 427  |
| Lord Ullin's Daughter                             | 505  | Ode on a Grecian Urn                               | 537  |
| Loss of Sir Humphrey Gilbert, The                 | 179  | Ode on Melancholy                                  | 538  |
| Lotus Eaters, The                                 | 586  | Ode to a Nightingale                               | 536  |
| Love in the Valley                                | 665  | Ode to Duty                                        | 481  |
| Lover's Life Compared to the Alps, The            | 113  | Ode to Evening                                     | 431  |
| Love Rune, A                                      | 28   | Ode to the West Wind                               | 518  |
| Lucifer in Starlight                              | 665  | Of Adversity                                       | 194  |
| Lullaby                                           | 44   | Of an Unusual Swelling and Commotionof the Sea | 54   |
| Lullaby of a Lover, The                           | 114  | Of Books                                           | 248  |
| Lycidas                                           | 211  | Of Contentedness in all Estates and Accidents      | 253  |
| Lyke-Wake Dirge, A                                | 98   | Of Death                                           | 193  |
| Macbeth's Meeting with the Weird Sisters          | 177  | Of Health and Long Life                            | 282  |
| Mac-Flecknoe                                      | 275  | Of Myself                                          | 271  |
| Madge Wildfire's Song                             | 501  | Of old Sat Freedom on the Heights                  | 588  |
| Madrigal                                          | 174  | Of Riches                                          | 195  |
| Malmsbury's Account of Himself                    | 45   | Of Self-Praising                                   | 247  |
|                                                   |      | Of Studies                                         | 196  |

|                                                            | PAGE |                                                              | PAGE |
|------------------------------------------------------------|------|--------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Oft in the Stilly night.....                               | 507  | Partridge at the Play.....                                   | 382  |
| Of Wisdom for a Man's Self.....                            | 194  | Passionate Shepherd to his Love.....                         | 158  |
| Oh! Snatch'd Away in Beauty's Bloom...                     | 509  | Passions, The.....                                           | 432  |
| Old Coach Roads of England, The ( Felix Holt )..... | 718  | Pastiche.....                                                | 653  |
| Old Familiar Faces, The.....                               | 502  | Pearl, The.....                                              | 55   |
| Oliver Goldsmith.....                                      | 426  | People are urged to choose Richard for their King, The.....  | 125  |
| Oliver Goldsmith.....                                      | 693  | Perception of Beauty, The ( The Renaissance ).....    | 767  |
| O Lyric Love ( Ring and the Book ).....             | 633  | Peter Grimes.....                                            | 454  |
| "O May I Join the Choir Invisible".....                    | 663  | Petition to Time, A.....                                     | 507  |
| O Mistress Mine, where are you Roaming.                    | 162  | Phillis.....                                                 | 151  |
| On a Girdle.....                                           | 207  | Philosophy of Clothes, The.....                              | 670  |
| On Another's Sorrow.....                                   | 456  | Piers the Ploughman.....                                     | 60   |
| On his Blindness.....                                      | 214  | Pilgrim to Pilgrim.....                                      | 150  |
| On His having arrived at the Age of Twenty-three.....      | 214  | Plague in London, The.....                                   | 316  |
| On Life, Death, and Immortality.....                       | 354  | Plea for Charity in Controversies and for Sincerity, A.....  | 184  |
| On Reading ( Choice of Books ).....                 | 761  | Plowers, The.....                                            | 130  |
| On Seeing the Elgin Marbles for the First Time.....        | 529  | Poema Morale.....                                            | 27   |
| On Sleep.....                                              | 174  | Poetry ( Essays Classical and Modern ).....           | 771  |
| On Sleep XXXIX. ( Astrophel and Stella )            | 151  | Poet's Epitaph, A.....                                       | 507  |
| On Testimonials.....                                       | 346  | Postscript to the Reader.....                                | 289  |
| On the Advisableness of Improving Natural Knowledge.....   | 753  | Praise of Peace, The.....                                    | 59   |
| On the Death of Coleridge.....                             | 562  | Praise of Woman, In.....                                     | 33   |
| On the Deaths of Thomas Carlyle and George Eliot.....      | 654  | Praise of Women, From a.....                                 | 79   |
| On the Feeling of Immortality in Youth..                   | 569  | Praises of Pan, The.....                                     | 172  |
| On the Foregoing Divine Poems.....                         | 208  | Prayer for King Edward.....                                  | 37   |
| On the Funeral of Betterton.....                           | 341  | Prayer under the Pressure of Violent Anguish, A.....         | 465  |
| On the Grasshopper and Cricket.....                        | 529  | Predictions for the Year 1708.....                           | 321  |
| On the Late Massacre in Piedmont.....                      | 214  | Preëminence of Poetry, The.....                              | 188  |
| On the Life of Man.....                                    | 173  | Primroses filled with Morning Dew, To..                      | 227  |
| On the Loss of the Royal George.....                       | 440  | Private of the Buffs, The.....                               | 659  |
| On the Receipt of My Mother's Picture out of Norfolk.....  | 439  | Prologue, at the Opening of the Drury Lane Theatre.....      | 369  |
| On the Sea.....                                            | 530  | Prologue ( Earthly Paradise ).....                    | 645  |
| On this Day I complete my Thirty-Sixth Year.....           | 518  | Prophecy of Literature in America.....                       | 155  |
| On True Distinction.....                                   | 340  | Prospero's Soliloquy.....                                    | 166  |
| Origin of the Lyrical Ballads.....                         | 543  | Prosperice.....                                              | 628  |
| Ormulum.....                                               | 28   | Protestation, A.....                                         | 151  |
| Orsames' Song.....                                         | 228  | Prothalamion.....                                            | 147  |
| O Sweet Content.....                                       | 167  | Pulley, The.....                                             | 203  |
| Our School.....                                            | 715  | Pulvis et Umbra.....                                         | 776  |
| O, Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast.....                       | 470  |                                                              |      |
| Owl and the Nightingale, The.....                          | 29   | Qua Cursum Ventus.....                                       | 663  |
| Oxford ( Essays in Criticism , 1st Series)...       | 745  |                                                              |      |
| Ozymandias.....                                            | 521  | Rabbi Ben Ezra.....                                          | 628  |
|                                                            |      | Raleigh's Account of his Book.....                           | 182  |
| Painter who pleased Nobody and Every-body, The.....        | 309  | Rape of the Lock, The.....                                   | 296  |
| Palace of Art, The.....                                    | 598  | Recollections.....                                           | 342  |
| Paradise Lost, Book I.....                                 | 215  | Red, Red Rose, A.....                                        | 470  |
| Paradise Lost, Book III.....                               | 222  | Reflections on the Revolution in France..                    | 406  |
| Paradise Lost, Book VII.....                               | 223  | Reflections upon Exile, From.....                            | 348  |
| Pardoner's Tale.....                                       | 72   | Religion and the Bible in 16th and 17th Century England..... | 765  |
|                                                            |      | Remedies for Discontent, The.....                            | 231  |
|                                                            |      | Requiem.....                                                 | 670  |

|                                                                        | PAGE |                                                                                                                             | PAGE |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Resolution and Independence.....                                       | 481  | Song, A Weary Lot is Thine.....                                                                                             | 499  |
| Restoration Drama, The.....                                            | 710  | Song for St. Cecilia's Day, 22nd Novem-ber, A.....                                                                      | 277  |
| Retreat, The.....                                                      | 205  | Song, Go Lovely Rose.....                                                                                                   | 208  |
| Return of Charles II, The.....                                         | 291  | Song, in "The Indian Emperor".....                                                                                          | 280  |
| Rime of the Ancient Mariner.....                                       | 484  | Song—"Late, Late, So Late".....                                                                                             | 602  |
| River Otter, To the.....                                               | 493  | Song, "My Peggy is a Young Thing".....                                                                                      | 356  |
| Robert Browning, To.....                                               | 503  | Song of the Priest of Pan.....                                                                                              | 172  |
| Robin Hood.....                                                        | 535  | Song of the Road, A.....                                                                                                    | 669  |
| Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne.....                                    | 88   | Song of the Scottish Maidens after theBattle of Bannockburn.....                                                        | 43   |
| Royal Power in France and England, The                                 | 102  | Song of the Western Men, The.....                                                                                           | 658  |
| Rubaiyat, The (Selections).....                                        | 658  | Song ( Pippa Passes ).....                                                                                           | 609  |
| Ruin, The.....                                                         | 10   | Song, Sabrina Fair.....                                                                                                     | 211  |
| Rule Britannia.....                                                    | 363  | Song ( Saints' Tragedy ).....                                                                                        | 662  |
| Saint Hugh.....                                                        | 167  | Song, She is not Fair, etc.....                                                                                             | 655  |
| Saladin and Rosader.....                                               | 190  | Song, Sweet Echo.....                                                                                                       | 211  |
| Salt of the Earth, The.....                                            | 654  | Song, The Cavalier.....                                                                                                     | 500  |
| Sands of Dee, The.....                                                 | 662  | Song, The Owl.....                                                                                                          | 583  |
| Saul.....                                                              | 623  | Song to Celia.....                                                                                                          | 170  |
| Say Not, The Struggle Nought Availeth..                                | 663  | Song—To Cynthia.....                                                                                                        | 170  |
| Schoolmaster, The (Selections).....                                    | 133  | Song to Pan.....                                                                                                            | 173  |
| Schoolmistress, The.....                                               | 371  | Song to the Evening Star.....                                                                                               | 505  |
| Science and Life ( Fors Clavigera ).....                        | 737  | Sonnet (Drummond).....                                                                                                      | 174  |
| Science and Modern Progress ( ModernPainters ).....        | 728  | Sonnet (Drummond).....                                                                                                      | 174  |
| Scott's Journal.....                                                   | 539  | Sonnets XV., XVIII., XXIX., XXX.,XXXIII., LV., LX., LXV., LXVI.,LXXIII., CXI., CXVI., CXLVI.,(Shakespeare)..... | 163  |
| Sea, The.....                                                          | 508  | Sonnets XL., LXXV., ( Amoretti ).....                                                                                | 149  |
| Sea Dirge, A.....                                                      | 162  | Sonnet XXXI. ( Astrophel and Stella ).....                                                                           | 150  |
| Seafarer, The.....                                                     | 12   | Sonnet LI. ( Delia ).....                                                                                            | 155  |
| Sea-Limits, The.....                                                   | 643  | Sonnet, Cheerfulness taught by Reason..                                                                                     | 634  |
| Seasons, The.....                                                      | 58   | Sonnet Composed upon the Beach nearCalais.....                                                                          | 483  |
| Self-Dependence.....                                                   | 639  | Sonnet Composed upon WestminsterBridge.....                                                                             | 483  |
| Seventeenth Century Squire, The ( Historyof England )..... | 701  | Sonnet LXI. ( Idea's Mirror ).....                                                                                   | 157  |
| Shakespeare.....                                                       | 287  | Sonnet, Inclusiveness.....                                                                                                  | 644  |
| Shakespeare.....                                                       | 640  | Sonnet, June, 1816.....                                                                                                     | 529  |
| She Dwelt among the Untrodden Ways..                                   | 473  | Sonnet (Last Sonnet).....                                                                                                   | 530  |
| She is far from the Land.....                                          | 507  | Sonnet, London, 1802.....                                                                                                   | 483  |
| Shepherd's Life, The.....                                              | 199  | Sonnet on Chillon.....                                                                                                      | 510  |
| She walks in Beauty.....                                               | 510  | Sonnet X. On death.....                                                                                                     | 169  |
| "She was a Phantom of Delight".....                                    | 480  | Sonnet, on First Looking into Chapman'sHomer.....                                                                       | 529  |
| Short Rule of Life, A.....                                             | 78   | Sonnet on Prayer.....                                                                                                       | 655  |
| Silvia.....                                                            | 161  | Sonnet on the Death of Mr. Richard West                                                                                     | 428  |
| Simplex Munditiis.....                                                 | 170  | Sonnets I., VI., XXXV., XLIII. ( Fromthe Portuguese ).....                                                      | 635  |
| Sir Gawayne's Journey.....                                             | 58   | Sonnet, Prospect, The.....                                                                                                  | 635  |
| Sir Orpheo.....                                                        | 37   | Sonnet, Sibylla Palmifera.....                                                                                              | 643  |
| Sir Patrick Spens.....                                                 | 93   | Sonnet, Silent Noon.....                                                                                                    | 643  |
| Sir Roger at Church.....                                               | 339  | Sonnet, Superscription, A.....                                                                                              | 644  |
| Site of a University.....                                              | 707  | Sonnet, "Thou who didst make," etc.....                                                                                     | 644  |
| Sleep.....                                                             | 165  | Sonnet, To Night.....                                                                                                       | 503  |
| Solitary Reaper.....                                                   | 478  | Sonnet, "When I have Borne in Memory"                                                                                       | 483  |
| Some Murmur When their Sky is Clear..                                  | 658  | Sonnet, "When I have fears," etc.....                                                                                       | 530  |
| Some Sea Pictures of Turner ( ModernPainters ).....        | 726  |                                                                                                                             |      |
| Song.....                                                              | 163  |                                                                                                                             |      |
| Song, Allan-A-Dale.....                                                | 500  |                                                                                                                             |      |
| Song, "All the Flowers of the Spring"....                              | 174  |                                                                                                                             |      |
| Song, ( Arraignment of Paris ).....                             | 151  |                                                                                                                             |      |

|                                                  | PAGE |                                                                       | PAGE |
|--------------------------------------------------|------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Sonnet, "Why did I laugh," etc. ....             | 530  | To Lesbia. ....                                                       | 171  |
| Sonnet, Work. ....                               | 635  | To Lucasta, on going to the Wars. ....                                | 229  |
| Sonnet, Written in London, September, 1802. .... | 483  | To Marguerite. ....                                                   | 633  |
| Son of Croesus, The. ....                        | 645  | Tombs in Westminster Abbey, On the. ....                              | 173  |
| Spacious Firmament, The. ....                    | 295  | To Night, (Shelley). ....                                             | 528  |
| Spectator Club, The. ....                        | 344  | To the Grasshopper and the Cricket. ....                              | 507  |
| Sports and Pastimes of Old London. ....          | 175  | To the Memory of My Beloved Master, William Shakespeare. ....         | 169  |
| Spring. ....                                     | 360  | To the Muses. ....                                                    | 455  |
| Spring Song. ....                                | 42   | To the Virgins, to make much of Time. ....                            | 227  |
| Stanzas for Music. ....                          | 509  | Tractate on Education, Letter to Hartlib. ....                        | 260  |
| Starling, The. ....                              | 396  | Triumph of Charis, The. ....                                          | 170  |
| State of England in 1685, The. ....              | 699  | Trivia, or the Art of Walking the Streets of London. ....             | 310  |
| State of Learning in England, The. ....          | 20   | True Relation of the Apparition of Mrs. Veal. ....                    | 312  |
| St. Guthlac. ....                                | 741  | Twa Corbies, The. ....                                                | 93   |
| Story of King Leir, The. ....                    | 49   | Twa Sisters o' Binnorie, The. ....                                    | 94   |
| Style. ....                                      | 380  | Ubi Sunt Qui Ante Nos Fuerunt. ....                                   | 41   |
| Summer. ....                                     | 361  | Ulysses. ....                                                         | 593  |
| Superannuated Man, The. ....                     | 559  | Under Mr. Milton's Picture. ....                                      | 280  |
| Swift and the Spirit of His Time. ....           | 762  | Under the Greenwood Tree. ....                                        | 161  |
| Symbols. ....                                    | 644  | Universal Prayer. ....                                                | 304  |
| Tables Turned, The. ....                         | 472  | Upon a Child. ....                                                    | 654  |
| Take, Oh, Take those Lips Away. ....             | 162  | Utopia and Europe Contrasted. ....                                    | 126  |
| Tale of the Paddock and the Mouse, The. ....     | 82   | Valediction forbidding Mourning, A. ....                              | 168  |
| Tamburlaine to the Subject Kings. ....           | 159  | Veni Creator Spiritus. ....                                           | 280  |
| Tam O'Shanter. ....                              | 467  | Verses on the Prospect of Planting Arts and Learning in America. .... | 355  |
| Task, The (Selections). ....                     | 435  | Vertue. ....                                                          | 202  |
| Taste ( Crown of Wild Olive ). ....       | 731  | Virginian Voyage, From the. ....                                      | 158  |
| Tears, Idle Tears. ....                          | 598  | Vision of Cædmon, The. ....                                           | 17   |
| Testament of John Lydgate, The. ....             | 80   | Visit to Westminster Abbey, A. ....                                   | 400  |
| Thanksgiving to God, for his House, A. ....      | 228  | Voices of Youth, The ( Discourses in America ). ....           | 749  |
| The English and their Literature. ....           | 569  | Voyages and Travels of Sir John Mandeville, The. ....                 | 75   |
| The Grand Style. ....                            | 743  | Voyage to Brobdingnag. ....                                           | 327  |
| "The World is too Much With. ....                | 483  | Walter Scott ( Choice of Books ). ....                         | 760  |
| "There's nae luck about the house." ....         | 441  | Wanderer, The. ....                                                   | 11   |
| Thomas Hoccleve's Complaint. ....                | 80   | Wanderings of Cain, The. ....                                         | 541  |
| Thoughts in Westminster Abbey. ....              | 336  | War. ....                                                             | 233  |
| Three Fishers, The. ....                         | 662  | Warren Hastings. ....                                                 | 403  |
| Three Years She Grew. ....                       | 473  | Warren Hastings, The Trial of. ....                                   | 390  |
| Throstle, The. ....                              | 608  | Weep no More. ....                                                    | 172  |
| Thyrsis. ....                                    | 636  | Wee, Wee German Lairdie, The. ....                                    | 459  |
| Tiger, The. ....                                 | 456  | Welcome to the Summer Sun. ....                                       | 86   |
| Timber, or Discoveries, From. ....               | 197  | Well of St. Keyne, The. ....                                          | 495  |
| Time. ....                                       | 528  | When the Nightingale Sings. ....                                      | 43   |
| Tintern Abbey, Lines Composed on. ....           | 471  | Widow of Glencoe, The. ....                                           | 660  |
| To — (Shelley). ....                             | 528  | Winter. ....                                                          | 362  |
| To — (Shelley). ....                             | 528  | Wish, The. ....                                                       | 223  |
| To a Child of Quality Five Years Old. ....       | 294  | Wishes to His Supposed Mistress. ....                                 | 204  |
| To Althea, from Prison. ....                     | 229  | "With Whom is no Variableness, Neither Shadow of Turning". ....       | 663  |
| To a Mountain Daisy. ....                        | 464  |                                                                       |      |
| To a Mouse. ....                                 | 464  |                                                                       |      |
| To a Skylark. ....                               | 519  |                                                                       |      |
| To Aurelia. ....                                 | 360  |                                                                       |      |
| To Autumn. ....                                  | 537  |                                                                       |      |
| Toccata of Galuppi's, A. ....                    | 622  |                                                                       |      |
| To Daffodils. ....                               | 227  |                                                                       |      |
| To Hester. ....                                  | 502  |                                                                       |      |

|                                                               | PAGE |                                                   | PAGE |
|---------------------------------------------------------------|------|---------------------------------------------------|------|
| Wonder.....                                                   | 207  | Written at an Inn at Henley.....                  | 374  |
| Wonders of the Isles about Java.....                          | 76   | Ye Mariners of England.....                       | 504  |
| Wordsworth ( Appreciations ).....                      | 769  | Yes; I write Verses.....                          | 503  |
| Wordsworth ( Essays in Criticism , 2ndSeries)..... | 750  | You ask me why though ill at Ease.....            | 588  |
| Work Without Hope.....                                        | 494  | "You Spotted Snakes with DoubleTongue".....   | 161  |
| World, The.....                                               | 206  | Youth and Age.....                                | 494  |
| Worldly Place.....                                            | 640  | Zeus sends Hermes to Calypso ( Odyssey ).. | 154  |
| Wounded Hare, The.....                                        | 466  |                                                   |      |
| Wulfstan's Sermon to the English.....                         | 23   |                                                   |      |

